Mok. Yea, yes; he teaches boys the horn-book.
Shak., I. L. L., v. 1. 48.

2. Of or pertaining to learning; marked by or devoted to literary culture: as, lettered ease or retirement.

And he, who to the lettered wealth
(X) ages adds the lore unpriced.
Whittier, Last Walk in Autumn.

3. In cool. and bot., marked as if with letters; having spots which look like letters, or make the surface seem to be written over: as, the lettered tortoise (Emys scripta); the lettered chinamark (Diosemia literalis, a small brown British moth).

letterer (let'er-er), n. One who letters; one who marks or cuts the letters of an inscription, a title, or the like: as, a book-letterer.

letter-file (let'er-fil), n. A device for holding letters for reference. It may be a rod or pointed hook of metal mounted on a stand, or a clip, case, box, or folio, with or without some arrangement to facilitate reference.

letter-founder (let'er-foun'dér), n. Same as type-founder.

Our printing-house often wanted sorts, and there was no letter-founder in America. Franklin, Autobiog., p. 128.

letter-founding (let'er-foun'ding), n. Same as type-founding.

letter-foundry (let'er-foun'dri), n. Same as type-foundry.

letter-head (let'er-hed), n. 1. A printed form of address or advertisement at the head of a sheet of letter-paper. Also called letter-heading.

—2. A sheet of letter-paper so headed.

He drew up a note upon the "tavern" letter-head.
Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 618.

letter-heading (let'er-hed'ing), n. Same as letter-head, 1.

lettering (let'er-ing), n. [Verbal n. of letter, v.] 1. The act of stamping or marking with letters. —2. The letters impressed or marked upon anything; any inscription, as on a sign-board, coin, or tombstone.

lettering-box (let'er-ing-boks), n. A small case in which are kept the types used by bookbinders for lettering books.

lettering-tool (let'er-ing-tûl), n. In bookbinding, a small box of brass mounted on a handle of wood, in which types are fastened by means of a side-screw, used by the finisher in the lettering of books.

letterize (let'er-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. letterized, ppr. letterizing. [< letter + -ize.] To write letters or epistles. Lamb. [Rare.]

letterleaf (let'er-léf), n. An orchid of the genus Grammatophyllum: so named from its figured leaves. Also called letter-plant.

letterless (let'er-less), a. [< letter + -less.] Unlettered; illiterate; not learned.

A meek daring letterless commander can, in a rational way, promise himself no more success in his enterprise than a mastiff can in his contest with a lion.

Waterhouse, Apology (1653), p. 125.

There was an illiterate generation, and a letterless race to be educated.

The Century, XXVIII, 157.

letter-lichen (let'er-lí-ken), n. A lichen of the genus Opographa. The apothecium assumes irregularly stellate or radiate forms, suggesting written characters. Also called scripture-work.

letterling (let'er-ling), n. [< letter + -ling.] A little letter. Imp. Dict.

letter-lock (let'er-lok), n. A form of permutation-lock, in which the combinations are indicated by particular arrangements of pieces marked with letters.

letternet (let'ern), n. See lectern.

letter-name (let'er-nám), n. In musical notation, the alphabetic name or symbol of tones, of keys of the keyboard, of degrees of the staff, or of notes placed upon such degrees and representing such tones or keys. See keyboard, notation, staff. Also letter.

letter-office (let'er-of'is), n. A place for the deposit and distribution of letters; a post-office.

letteroni, n. An obsolete form of lectern.

letter-ornament (let'er-ór-na-mént), n. A decoration made up of the forms of letters. In some letter-ornaments the letters are complete and legible, and usually, though not necessarily, forming words, as is common in Russian art and in modern art of the Levant, as on metal-work. In others the letters are modified or wholly changed for decorative effect, or parts only of the letters are given, as sometimes in Byzantine art and in European imitations of it, and also in early northern decoration, Anglo-Saxon, etc.

letter-paper (let'er-pá-per), n. Paper for writing letters on; specifically, paper of an intermediate size between note-paper and foolscap, usually quarto, as distinguished from the octavo form of note-paper.

letter-perfect (let'er-pér-fékt), a. Perfect to the letter in committing anything to memory; having a part or a speech thoroughly memorized: used especially of actors.

letter-plant (let'er-plant), n. Same as letter-leaf.

letterpress (let'er-pres), n. and a. [< letter + press.] n. Letters or words impressed on paper or other material from printing-types; printed text: so called when subordinate to or in contrast with illustrations.

The letterpress with which the illustration is accompanied is no less interesting than the plate, and furnishes much valuable information. N. and Q., 7th ser., II, 300.

II. a. Consisting of, relating to, or employed in printing from types: as, letterpress printing.

letter-press (let'er-pres), n. [< letter + press.] a. Writing, + press, printing-machine. A press for copying letters by transfer; a copying-press.

letter-punch (let'er-punch), n. A steel punch on the end of which a letter is engraved. Such punches are used for making matrices for printing-type, as well as for making an impression on metal, etc., when applied against the surface and struck with a hammer.

letter-rack (let'er-rak), n. 1. A tray divided into small compartments in which large types of wood are ranged.—2. A rack or small frame, usually ornamented, in which letters, arranged as answered and unanswered or otherwise, are kept.

letter-scale (let'er-skál), n. Same as letter-balance.

letter-stamp (let'er-stamp), n. A stamp used in a post-office for canceling postage-stamps, or for stamping on letters or packages various notices or remarks, such as the place of mailing, instructions for the carrier, etc.

letterure, letterure, n. [ME., < OF. letterure, letterure, letterure, < L. litteratura, litteratura, learning, letters, literature: see literature.] 1. Learning; letters; literature.

Al come he letterure or come he noon,

As in effect he shal fynde it al on.

Chaucer, Prologue to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 293.

2. Writing; scripture.

"Lo!" saith holy letterure, "whiche lordes both this sheweth!"

Piers Plowman (B), x. 27.

letter-winged (let'er-wingd), a. Having the wings marked as if with letters: specifically said of a kite, Elanus scriptus. P. L. Solator.

letter-wood (let'er-wúd), n. The heart-wood of the South American tree Brosimum Aubletii. It is extremely hard, of a beautiful brown color with black spots, which have been compared to hieroglyphics; hence the name, which is also applied to the tree. Being rare and costly, the wood is used in cabinet-work for veneering only.

letter-writer (let'er-rí'tér), n. 1. One who writes letters; specifically, one whose profession it is to write letters for others.

The same desire impels thousands of people to write letters to the newspapers; but these letter-writers are not usually journalists.

Athenaeum, Jan. 14, 1893, p. 43.

2. A book containing rules and examples for the use of persons unskilled in the writing of letters.

Lettic (let'ik), a. and n. [< Lett + -ic.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the Letts or their congeners; related to the Letts: as, the Lettic language; the Samoghitians are a Lettic people. Lettic race is a general term for the Letts, Lithuanians, and Borussiaans or Old Prussians.

II. n. Same as Lettish.

lettice, n. An obsolete spelling of lettuce.

lettice, n. An obsolete form of lettice.

lettice, (let'is), n. [Early mod. E. also lettice; < OF. letice, letice, letice, an animal of a very white color, supposed to be an ermine, also a white fur, < F. lait, < L. lac (lact-), milk: see lettuce.] A kind of fur, white or very light-colored, in use as late as the middle of the sixteenth century.

You shall charge your selves with many [furs], . . . as good martens, minuers, otherwise called lettice.

Hakluyt's Voyages, 1, 228.

lettice-cap, n. [Perhaps < lettice + cap, in allusion to lettice-cap.] A saporific in which lettuce is supposed to have been a leading ingredient.

Bring in the lettice-cap. You must be shaved, sir; And then how suddenly we'll make you sleep!

Fletcher, Monsieur Thomas, III, 1.

lettice-cap, n. [< lettice + cap] = lettice (see quot. from Nares), or lettice, + cap.] A kind of cap.

A lettice-cap it wears and heard not short.

Shippe of Safegarde (1609).

A lettice-cap was originally a lettuce-cap—that is, a net cap which resembles lettuce work.

Nares.

Lettish (let'ish), a. and n. [< Lett + -ish.] I. a. Of or pertaining to the division of the Lettic or Lithuanian race distinctively called Letts: as, the Lettish language; Lettish customs.

II. n. The language spoken by the Letts, a branch of the Indo-European family, closely related to Slavonian or Slavic. Also Lettic.

lettre-de-cachet (let'r-dé-ka-shé'), n. [F. lettre, letter; de, of; cachet, seal: see letter, de, cachet.] See cachet.

letturure, n. See letterure.

Lettsomia (let-só-mí-í), n. [NL. (W. Roxburgh, 1824), named after J. C. Lettsom, an English naturalist.] A genus of plants of the tribe Convolvuleae, distinguished by the fruit, which is a soft, several-seeded berry. There are 32 species, found in eastern India, southern China, and the Malay archipelago, twining or climbing vines with alternate leaves and dense corymbose cymes in the axils. Some of the species are used medicinally. L. grandiflora is an evergreen shrub cultivated in greenhouses under the name of Lettsom's tea-plant.

lettsomite (let'sgm-ít), n. [After W. G. Lettsom, an English mineralogist.] A basic sulphate of copper, of a bright-blue color: same as cyanotrichite.

lettuce (let'is), n. [Early mod. E. also lettice; < ME. letuce, < OF. laituice, letuce, usually laitue, letue, F. laitue (> D. latue) = Sp. lechuga = It. lattuga = AS. lactucos = OHG. lattuh, lattouch, latoch, latwaha, MHG. lateche, latech, lattoch, G. lattich = Sw. Dan. lattuk, < L. lactuca, lettuce, so called from its milky juice, < lac (lact-), milk: see lactate.] 1. A garden-herb, Lactuca sativa, a hardy annual, extensively cultivated for use as a salad. It is believed by some to be derived from L. Scariola (including L. scrota). There are many varieties of the garden-plant, which may be grouped as cabbage-lettuce, low forms with depressed cabbage-like heads, and cut lettuce, erect-growing varieties having the head long and tapering downward.

The heben then being brought up to the bishop, he often dipped a large lettuce into it, and several times sprinkled all the people. Pocock, Description of the East, II, l. 18.

These are creeping Lettuces of a very milky Juice, like their Name. N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I, 302.

Lettuce of las derived is perchance; For mylk it hath or yerech abundance.

Palladius, Rusticorum (E. E. T. S.), p. 51.

2. Any plant of the genus Lactuca; also, a plant having some resemblance to Lactuca.—Miss lettuce, a plant of the section Mesogonium of the genus Lactuca, with blue flowers. [U. S.]—Cabbage-lettuce, Cos lettuce. See def. 1.—Drumhead lettuce, a variety of cabbage-lettuce.—False lettuce. Same as blue lettuce.—Frog's lettuce, a species of pondweed, Potamogeton zoster. (Prov. Eng.)—Garden-lettuce. See def. 1.—Indian lettuce, the American columbia, Frasera Carolinensis; also, the false wintergreen, Pyrola rotundifolia.—Lamb's lettuce, corn-salad, Valerianella (which see).—Loaded lettuce. See def. 1.—Prickly lettuce, Lactuca Scariola.—Sea-lettuce, the seaweed Ulva Lactuca. Also called lettuce-lower. [Eng.]—Wall-lettuce, Lactuca muralis. [Eng.]—Water-lettuce, Pistia Stratiotes of the tropics.—White lettuce, Fremontia alba or kindred species. Also called lion's-foot, rattle-mah-root, etc.—Wild lettuce. (a) In England, Lactuca Scariola. (b) In America, Lactuca Canadensis. Also called trumpet-weed and trumpet-millweed. (c) Sometimes the same as blue lettuce.

lettuce-bird (let'is-bérd), n. The thistle-bird or common American goldfinch, Chrysomitris tristis. [Local, U. S.]

lettuce-opium (let'is-ó-pi-um), n. Lactucarium.

lettuce-saxifrage (let'is-sak'si-fráj), n. A plant of the Alleghany mountains, Saxifraga crotcha, the leaves of which have sharply erose teeth.

letuary, n. See electuary.

let-up (let'up), n. [< let up, verb phrase under let, v.] A cessation of restraint or obstruction; release; relaxation; intermission, as of labor. [Colloq., U. S.]

Our little let-up Wednesday afternoons . . . is sure to come, while the let-up we get other days . . . you can't be sure whether you're going to get them or not.

The Century, XXVIII, 328.

leu (lé), n.; pl. lei (lé). [Rumanian.] A modern silver coin of Rumania, the unit of the monetary system, equivalent to the French franc, or about 19 United States cents.

Leucadendron (lú-ka-dén'drón), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1809), irreg. < Gr. λευκός, white, + δένδρον, a tree.] A genus of plants of the order Proteaceae and tribe Proteeae, distinguished by having the regular diculous flowers in heads in both sexes. There are about 70 species, shrubs and trees, natives of South Africa. L. argenteum, the silver-tree or wattlebush, is native only on a slope of the Table Mountain near Cape Town, and has been nearly exterminated for fuel. Its white silvery leaves make it highly ornamental, and they are much used in Christmas decorations. Other species also are cultivated.

leucemia, leucemic. See leucemia, leucemic. Leucania (lú-ká-ní-í), n. [NL., < Gr. λευκός, white: see leucous.] A genus of noctuid moths founded by Hübner in 1816. It is characterized by full hairy eyes, smooth front, well-developed palpi, strong tongue, simple antennae, hairy unarméd legs, rounded collar, quadrate slightly tufted thorax, and untufted abdomen.

L. unipuncta is the adult of the well-known army-worm (which see). L. abditus is the adult of the wheat-head army-worm, an insect which occasionally appears in great numbers and feeds upon heads of wheat and rye. There are two annual generations, and the insect hibernates as pupa underground.

Leucanilidae (lú-ka-ní-i-dé), n. pl. [NL., < Leucania + -idae.] A group of noctuid moths, represented by the genus Leucania, and regarded as a family. There are about 20 genera, widely distributed. Also called Leucanidae.

leucaniline (lú-kan'í-lín), n. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + E. aniline.] A white crystalline substance ($C_{10}H_9N_3$) forming colorless salts, prepared by treating fuchsin salts with zinc dust and hydrochloric acid. It yields rosaniline by oxidation.

Wheat-head Army-worm (Leucania unipuncta). a, a, larva on a wheat-head; b, pupa (natural size); c, d, pupa (top and side views magnified); lower figure, male moth.

Leucanthemum (lū-kān'thē-mum), n. [L., also leucanthemis, < Gr. λευκάνθημον, the samonile, < λευκός, white, + άνθημον, flower.] A section of the genus Chrysanthemum, embracing the species C. Leucanthemum (Leucanthemum vulgare), the oxeye daisy or white-eyed. It was retained as a genus by A. P. de Candolle (1837), with 20 species.

leucanthous (lū-kān'thus), a. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + άνθος, flower.] In bot., having white flowers.

Leucaster (lū-kas'tēr), n. [NL. (J. D. Choisy, 1849), < Gr. λευκός, white, + αστήρ, a star.] A genus of plants belonging to the family Nyctaginaceae and type of the tribe Leucastereae, distinguished by having but two stamens. The only species, L. oeniflorus, is a native of Brazil, and is a half-twining shrub with entire alternate leaves, and white flowers in axillary cymes.

Leucasteres (lū-kas-tē-rē-s), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1880), < Leucaster + -es.] A tribe of plants of the order Nyctaginaceae, distinguished by a subglobose achenium, which is free and inclosed by the base of the perianth, and a short curved or annular embryo. It includes the genera Leucaster (type of the tribe), Andradea, and Cryptocarpus, tropical American trees or shrubs with alternate leaves.

leucangite (lū-kā'jit), n. [< Gr. λευκός, bright, light, white, + αγγίτης; see angite.] An aluminous variety of pyroxene, allied to augite, but containing very little iron, and hence of a white or grayish color.

leucemia, leucæmia (lū-sē'mi-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λευκός, white, + αἷμα, blood.] A disease characterized by a large excess of the white corpuscles of the blood, with hypertrophy of the spleen or the lymphatic glands, or changes in the bone-marrow. It is usually fatal. Also called leucocythemia.

leucemic, leucæmic (lū-sē'mik), a. [< leucemia + -ic.] Pertaining to or affected with leucemia.

With one exception, that of leucæmic blood (Scherrer), no gluten has as yet been found in the fluids of the body. Frey, Histol. and Histochem. (trans.) p. 22.

leuch (lydh), a. Scotch preterit of laugh.

leuchtenbergite (lōih'ten-berg-it), n. [Named after the duke Maximilian von Leuchtenberg.] A kind of chlorite of a white or greenish-white color, occurring in hexagonal plates or crystals.

leucin (lū'sin), n. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + -ίνη.] A white pulverulent substance, amido-caproic acid (C₆H₁₁O₂NH₂), obtained by treating muscular fiber with sulphuric acid, and afterward with alcohol. It crystallizes in shining scales. It is one of the principal products of the decomposition of nitrogenous matter, and occurs normally in various tissues and fluids of the body, being also a product of the pancreatic digestion of the proteins. Also called apocaprin.

leucisciform (lū-sis'i-fōrm), a. [NL. Leuciscus + L. forma, form.] Having the form of a fish of the genus Leuciscus; resembling a dace.

Leuciscina (lū-si-si'nā), n. pl. [NL., < Leuciscus + -ina.] In Günther's ichthyological system, the eighth group of Cyprinidae. They have the air-bladder divided into anterior and posterior portions; pharyngeal teeth developed in single or double series; the anal fin short or of moderate length (not extending forward to below the dorsal), with from 8 to 11 branched rays; the lateral line when complete running in or nearly in the middle of the tail; and the dorsal fin short, without osseous rays. The species are very numerous, and include the majority of the most familiar European and North American cyprinoid fishes, as the dace and roach.

Leuciscine (lū-si-si'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Leuciscus + -ine.] In Jordan's ichthyological system, a subfamily of Cyprinidae, with the air-bladder next to the roof of the abdominal cavity, the dorsal fin short, median, and spineless, and the lower jaw normal. It embraces partly or wholly the Leuciscinae and Abraimodinae of Günther; and by far the greater portion of the American as well as Eurasian cyprinoids belong to it.

leuciscine (lū'si-sin), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Leuciscinae, or having their characters; leucisciform.

II. n. One of the Leuciscinae or Leuciscineæ.

Leuciscus (lū-sis'kus), n. [NL., < Gr. λευκίσκος, the white mullet, < λευκός, white; see leucous.] A genus of cyprinoid fishes to which various limits have been assigned, typical of the subfamily Leuciscinae. L. ruthenus is the European roach. See cut under dace.

leucism (lū'sizm), n. [< Gr. λευκός, white; see leucous and -ism.] In soöl, whiteness resulting from lack or loss of coloring; albinism, partial or complete; a technical term, correlated with melanism and erythriem. See albinism.

leucite (lū'sit), n. [So called from its whiteness; < Gr. λευκός, white, + -ίτης.] A mineral originally found in the recent volcanic rocks of southern Italy, especially at Vesuvius, disseminated through the lavas in crystals, usually trapezohedrons, or in irregular masses. It has also been observed similarly associated in some other regions, as the Eifel in Rhenish Prussia, the Leucite Hills of Wyoming, etc.; but it is in general of very limited occurrence. It is a silicate of aluminium and potassium, and has a white or grayish color. It was very early called white garnet, from its similarity to garnet in crystalline form; and it is also called amphigene. Leucite has excited much interest because of the phenomenon of double refraction which its crystals exhibit, this being at variance with the usually accepted isometric form. On account of these "optical anomalies," and because also of certain variations in external form, it has been referred to the tetragonal (or orthorhombic) system. Recent investigations have shown, however, that at a temperature of 500° C. it becomes isotropic, and hence it is inferred that when formed it was normally isometric, and that the observed variations in form and optical character have resulted from subsequent molecular changes.—Leucite rocks, a series of rocks closely allied to basalt, but containing leucite in the place of feldspar. These rocks are for the most part, so far as known, of very modern origin. They are particularly well developed in southern Italy and the Eifel. See leucitophyre, phonolite, and tephrite.

leucite-basalt (lū'sit-bā-sālt'), n. A rock closely resembling leucitophyre, but less coarsely granular in texture. Rosenbusch divides the leucite rocks into leucite-basalts and leucitites, the chief difference being that the former contain olivin, while the latter do not.

leucitite (lū'sit'ik), a. [< leucite + -ite.] Of or pertaining to leucite; containing or resembling leucite.

leucitite (lū'sit-it), n. [< leucite + -ite.] The name given by Rosenbusch to varieties of leucite rock containing no olivin. Rocks of this type have been found in various parts of Italy, in the Cornilian regions of the United States, and in the East Indies. Their composition is extremely variable, and they have not yet been fully worked out.

leucitoid (lū'si-toid), n. [< leucite + Gr. εἶδος, form; see -oid.] In crystal., a tetragonal tris-octahedron, or trapezohedron: so called as being a common form of the mineral leucite.

leucitophyre (lū'sit'ō-fir), n. [< leucite + Gr. φῃφειν, mix.] A crystalline-granular rock, differing from ordinary basalt chiefly in the presence of considerable leucite. The essential ingredients of leucitophyre are leucite, augite, olivin, and magnetite, the crystals of the first-named being sometimes as much as an inch in diameter.

leucoblast (lū'kō-blāst), n. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + βλαστός, germ; see blastus.] A germinal leucocyte, or the germ of a leucocyte.

leucocarpous (lū'kō-kār'pus), a. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + καρπός, fruit.] Having white fruit.

leucocholy (lū'kō-kōl-i), n. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + χολή, bile; see cholico. Cf. melancholy.] "White bile": a nonce-word, opposed to melancholy, "black bile."

Miso . . . is a white Melancholy, or rather Leucocholy for the most part; which, though it seldom laughs or dances, nor ever amounts to what one calls Joy or Pleasure, yet is a good easy sort of a state. Gray, Letters, l. 118.

Leucocoryne (lū'kō-kōr'i-nē), n. [NL. (Lindley, 1839), in allusion to the white flowers of some species, mounted on scapes; < Gr. λευκός, white, + κόρυνη, a club.] A genus of liliaceous plants of Chili, of the tribe Alieae, or onion family. Three or four species are known, having narrowly linear, channelled, radical leaves, and simple leafless scapes bearing few white or blue flowers in terminal umbels. They are called white club-flowers.

leucocyte (lū'kō-sit), n. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + κύτος, a hollow.] A white or colorless corpuscle of the blood or lymph.

leucocythemia, leucocythæmia (lū'kō-si-thē'mi-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λευκός, white, + κύτος, a hollow, + αἷμα, blood.] Same as leucemia.

leucocytic (lū'kō-sit'ik), a. [< leucocyte + -ic.] 1. Pertaining to leucocytes.—2. Pertaining to an excess of leucocytes; leucemic.

leucocytogenesis (lū'kō-si-tō-jen'e-sis), n. [NL., < leucocyte + Gr. γένεσις, production; see genesis.] The production of leucocytes, or white blood-corpuscles.

leucocytosis (lū'kō-si-tō'sis), n. [NL., < leucocyte + -osis.] The presence of an excessive number of white corpuscles in the blood, especially when merely the result of temporary causes and not produced by grave disease.

leucoderma (lū'kō-dēr'mi-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λευκός, white, + δέρμα, skin; see derm.] Abnormal lack of pigment in the skin. Also written leucodermia, leukodermia, leukoderma.—Leucoderma acquisite, vitiligo.—Congenital leucoderma, albinism.

leucodermic (lū'kō-dēr'mik), a. [As leucoderma + -ic.] Pertaining to or exhibiting leucoderma.

leucothiop (lū-sē-thi-op), n. Same as leucothiops.

leucothiop (lū-kō-s'thi-op), n. [Also leucothiops; < leucothiops.] Same as leucothiops.

leucothiopic (lū-kō-s'thi-op'ik), a. [< leucothiops + -ic.] Pertaining to a leucothiops or albino; pertaining to leucopathy.

leucothiops (lū-kō-s'thi-op), n. [pl. leucothiopes (lū-kō-s'thi'ō-pēs).] [< Gr. λευκός, white, + Αἰθίοψ, an Ethiop, a negro; see Ethiops, Ethiopian.] An individual of a dark-skinned race exhibiting albinism or a want of coloring matter in the skin and epidermic formations.

leucoindophenol (lū-kō-in-dō-fē'nol), n. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + Εἰ. indophenol.] Indophenol which has been reduced by glucose and caustic soda. It is a commercial article, forming a white paste soluble in pure and in acidified water. It is used in dyeing indigo-blue shades. Sometimes called indophenol white, or indophenol preparation.

Leucium (lū-kō'i-um), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), < L. leucium, < Gr. λευκίον, name of several plants, the wallflower, snowflake, etc., lit. 'white violet,' < λευκός, white, + ιον, violet.] A genus of plants of the family Amaryllidaceae and tribe Amaryllideae, distinguished by the long filaments and the equal segments of the perianth. There are 9 species. L. aestivum is the summer snowflake, and L. vernum, a smaller and earlier plant, the spring snowflake.

leucol (lū'kol), n. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + -ol.] An organic base obtained from coal-tar, isomeric with chinoline.

leucoline (lū'kō-lin), n. Same as leucol.

leucoma (lū'kō-mā), n. [NL., < Gr. λεῖκωμα, a white spot in the eye, < λευκός, white, < λευκός, white; see leucous.] In pathol., a white opacity of the cornea of the eye, the result of inflammation. Also called albugo.

leucomaine (lū'kō-mā-in), n. [Irreg. < Gr. λεῖκωμα, whiteness, a white spot in the eye (see leucoma), + -ine.] A nitrogenous organic base or alkaloid produced in living animal tissues as a result of their activity; distinguished from a ptomaine, which is an alkaloid produced in the putrefactive decay of a dead tissue.

leucomatous (lū-kōm'ā-tus), a. [< NL. leucoma + -ous.] Pertaining to or exhibiting leucoma.

leucomelanous (lū-kō-mel'ā-nus), a. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + μέλας (melas), black.] Having a fair complexion with dark hair.

Leuconaria (lū-kō-nā'ri-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Leucon + -aria.] In Solias's classification of sponges, a tribe of heteroculous Calcispongia, embracing recent and fossil forms whose canal system is of the eurypylous rhagonate type, divided into Leuconidae and Eilharthidae.

leuconate (lū'kō-nāt), a. [< Leucon + -ate.] Pertaining to the Leucones, or having their characters: as, a leuconate canal system; leuconate type of structure.

Leucones (lū'kō-nēs), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λευκός, white; see leucous.] A group of the chalk-sponges, or Calcispongia, characterized first by great thickening of the ectodermal syncytium, so that the inhalant pores, such as exist in Ascones, lengthen into canals which may variously branch and anastomose, and secondly by final restriction to these canals of the endodermal cells, which at first form a continuous layer.

leucopathia (lū'kō-path'i-ā), n. [NL.: see leucopathy.] Same as leucopathy.

leucopathy (lū'kō-pā-thi), n. [< NL. leucopathia, < Gr. λευκός, white, + πάθος, affection; see pathos.] 1. The condition of being an albino; albinism.—2. Same as chlorosis.

leucophane (lū'kō-fān), n. [MGr. λευκοφανής, appearing white, < Gr. λευκός, white, + φανής, < φαίνεσθαι, appear.] An imperfectly crystallized mineral of a pale greenish or wine-yellow color. It is a fluosilicate of beryllium, calcium, and sodium, and is found in Norway. Also called leucophanite.

Leucophasia (lū'kō-fā'si-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λευκός, white, + φάσις, appearance; see phase.] A genus of pierian butterflies of the family Papilionidae. Also called Leptidea. L. sinapis is a British species.

leucophilous (lū-kōf'i-lus), a. [< Gr. λευκός, white, + φίλος, loving.] Fond of light; light-loving; heliophilous.

leucophlegmacy (lū'kō-fleg'mā-si), n. [< Gr. λευκοφλέγματις (also λευκός φλέγμα), the dropsy, < λευκός, white, + φλέγμα, phlegm; see phlegm.] In pathol., an inferred tendency to a dropsical state, as indicated by paleness, flabbiness, or redundancy of serum in the blood.

leucophlegmatic (lū'kō-fleg-mat'ik), a. [< Gr. λευκοφλέγματος, suffering from white phlegm;

see leucophlegmacy.] Of, pertaining to, or affected with leucophlegmacy.

leucophyll, leucophyll (lū-kō-flī), n. [Gr. λευκός, white, + φύλλον, leaf.] A chromogen believed to exist in the white corpuscles of an etiolated plant, which, under appropriate conditions, will give rise to chlorophyll. Sachs.

Leucophyllae (lū-kō-flī-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Benth. and Hooker, 1876), < Leucophyllum + -ae.] A tribe of scrophulariaceae plants, typified by the genus Leucophyllum, and embracing also the genera Heteranthia and Gibbsbreghtia. They are herbs and shrubs of Texas, Mexico, and Brazil, with alternate leaves and bell-shaped corollas with the tube short.

Leucophyllum (lū-kō-flī-um), n. [NL. (Humboldt and Bonpland, 1809), < Gr. λευκός, white, + φύλλον, leaf.] A genus of plants of the family Scrophulariaceae, type of the Leucophyllae.

leucoplasia (lū-kō-plā-sī-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λευκός, white, + πλάσις, anything flat and broad.] In pathol., the occurrence of chronic white patches on the tongue and buccal mucous membrane. There is inflammation of the corium, with hypertrophy and perversion of growth of the epithelium. Also called leukoplasia lingua, lylone lingua, and georastria lingua.

leucoplast, leucoplastid (lū-kō-plast, lū-kō-plas-tid), n. [Gr. λευκός, white, + πλάστος, verbal adj. of πλάσσειν, form.] Same as amyloplast.

leucopterus (lū-kō-ptē-rus), a. [Gr. λευκός, white, + πτερόν, a wing, = E. feather.] Having white wings. Thomas, Med. Diet.

leucopyrite (lū-kō-pī-rī), n. [Gr. λευκός, white, + Ε. pyrites.] A mineral (FeS₂) of a color between white and steel-gray and of a metallic luster, consisting chiefly of arsenic and iron. It is related to loellingite (FeAs₂) and arsenopyrite (FeAsS or FeAs₂FeS₂).

Leucorhamphus (lū-kō-rām-fus), n. [Gr. λευκός, white, + ῥάμφος, beak, bill.] A genus of toothed cetaceans, of the family Delphinidae, having no dorsal fin. These dolphins have hence been called Delphinapterus, but that name belongs to another genus. There are two species: L. poroni of the western coast of South America, black above and white below, with 44 teeth on each side of each jaw; and L. borealis of the same coast of North America, called the right-whale dolphin. See Delphinapterus, Delphinus.

leucorrhoea, leucorrhoea (lū-kō-rē-ā), n. [NL. leucorrhoea, < Gr. λευκός, white, + ῥοια, a flowing, < ῥέω, flow.] In pathol., a mucous or mucopurulent discharge of a white color from the vagina; fluor albus; the whites. Also called blennorrhoea and calporrhoea.

leucorrhoeal, leucorrhoeal (lū-kō-rē-āl), a. [Gr. leucorrhoea + -al.] Pertaining to or of the nature of leucorrhoea: as, leucorrhoeal discharges.

leucoscope (lū-kō-skōp), n. [Gr. λευκός, white, + σκοπεῖν, view.] An optical instrument for testing the eyes for color-blindness, devised by Helmholtz.

Leucosia (lū-kō-sī-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λεῖκωσις, whiteness: see leucosis.] 1. The typical genus of Leucosiidae. Fabricius, 1794.—2. A genus of mollusks.—3. A genus of bombycid moths of the family Liparidae, based upon the European L. nathica. Kumber, 1899.

leucosian (lū-kō-sī-ān), n. and a. [Gr. Leucosia + -an.] 1. n. A crab of the family Leucosidae.

2. a. Resembling or related to crabs of the genus Leucosia; pertaining to the Leucosiidae.

Leucosiidae (lū-kō-sī-ā-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Leucosia + -idae.] A family of brachyurous decapod crustaceans, typified by the genus Leucosia, containing a number of genera of small crabs of compact rounded form and more or less porcellaneous test. Also Leucosiadae.

leucosis (lū-kō-sī-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. λεῖκωσις, whiteness, < λεῖκω, whiten, < λευκός, white: see leucous.] 1. Whiteness of skin; pallor.—2. The formation or progress of leucemia.

leucospermous (lū-kō-spēr-mus), a. [Gr. λευκός, white, + σπέρμα, seed.] Having white fruit or seeds.

Leucospori (lū-kō-spō-rī), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λευκός, white, + σπόρις, seed.] A series of fungi in the large genus Agaricus, distinguished by their white spores.

Leucostictes (lū-kō-stīk-tēs), n. [NL. (Swainson, 1831), < Gr. λευκός, white, + στίκτης, pricked, punctured, spotted, < στίξω, prick, puncture: see stigma.] A notable genus of fringilline birds, having an oblique ridge on the under mandible, and the plumage more or less rosy or silvery-gray. There are several species, chiefly of western North America, known as rosy finches. The best-known is L. taylori, which is of a rich chocolate-brown color, much of the plumage skirted with a rosy tint, the same silvery-gray, and the cap black. Its length is about 6 inches.

leucostine (lū-kōs'tin), n. [Gr. λευκός, white, + ὀστέον, bone (f), + -ine.] A variety of trachyte.

Leucothoe (lū-kōth-ō-ē), n. [NL. (D. Don, 1834), < L. Leucothoe, < Gr. λευκός, white, + θεο, daughter of Orpheus, King of Babylon, and Eurythoe.] A genus of ericaceous plants of the tribe Andromedaceae. The imbricated calyx does not become berry-like in the fruit, and the seeds are winged. There are about 9 species, shrubs with petioled, serrulate leaves and axillary or terminal spiked racemes of white waxy flowers gracefully arranged along the under side of the branches, natives of North America, Japan, and the Himalayas. Some of the species are ornamental, and known in gardens. L. acuminata of the South Carolina and Florida coast is called peppercorn. According to Schimper, no fossil species of Leucothoe occur in the Tertiary deposits of Europe, one in the Miocene of Alaska, and one in the Dakota group (Middle Cretaceous) of Nebraska.

leucous (lū'kus), a. [Gr. λευκός, light, bright, white, akin to L. lucere, be light, and to E. light, q. v.] Light-colored; white; affected with leucism; albinotic: applied specifically to albinos.

leucoxene (lū'kok-sēn), n. [Gr. λευκός, white, + ξένος, a guest.] An opaque white substance often observed in thin sections of rocks, derived from the alteration of titanite iron. It is, sometimes at least, identical with titanite in composition.

leud, leudet, a. Middle English forms of lewd. leugh (lyúch or lyúh). A dialectal (Scotch) preterit of laugh.

leuket, a. An obsolete spelling of leuk.

leukoderma, leukodermia, n. See leucodermia.

leunt, n. A Middle English form of leum.

leuset, v. An obsolete irregular spelling of loose. Elyot.

leutet, leutest, n. Middle English forms of lealty.

leuserat, n. A variant of lucerna.

Lev. An abbreviation of Leviticus.

levant (lev'ant), a. and n. [OF. levant, F. levant, a., rising, < L. levan(-t-), ppr. of levare, raise, refl. se levare, rise, < levis, light, not heavy (whence also ult. *E. lever*¹, levity, levet, levet, *levy*¹, *levy*², alleviate, *allege*², elevate, relieve, relief, etc.), akin to *E. light*², q. v. Hence *levant*², *levant*³.] 1. a. 1. Rising. Mishne, 1617; Phillips, 1700.—2. a. Eastern; coming from the direction in which the sun rises.

Forth rush the Levant and the Ponent winds, Eurus and Zephyr. Milton, P. L., l. 704.

3. [cap.] In geol., appellative of the fourth of Professor H. Rogers's fifteen divisions of the Paleozoic strata in the Appalachian chain, the names of which suggest metaphorically the different natural periods of the day. It is the equivalent of the lower part of the Upper Silurian, and represents the Onondaga conglomerate and Medina sandstone of the New York Survey. See Medina sandstone, under sandstone.—Levant and cochant, in law. See cochant.

II. n. Same as levant. [Local, Eng.]

levant (lě-vant'), n. and a. [= D. levant = G. levante = Dan. Sv. levant, < F. levant = Sp. Pg. It. levante, < ML. levant(-s), the sunrise, the east, the orient, prop. adj., rising, applied to the sun: see *levant*¹.] 1. n. 1. [cap.] The region east of Italy lying on and near the Mediterranean, sometimes reckoned as extending east to the Euphrates and as taking in the Nile valley, thus including Greece and Egypt; more specifically, the coast-region and islands of Asia Minor and Syria: a name originally given by the Italians.—2. An easterly wind blowing up the Mediterranean; a levantar.

The Maestral, the Bora, the Gregalia, and the Levante, are polar currents (of wind)—the first about north-west, the second north, and the other two with more or less easterly. Kittling, Weather Book, p. 141.

3. Same as levant morocco.—Cloth of Levanti, a cosmetic used by ladies in the sixteenth century. Nares.

To make a kind of . . . cloth of Levanti, wherewith women do use to colour their face. Secrets of Alcatraz.

II. a. Of or pertaining to or obtained from the Levant.—Levant fever. See *fever*¹.—Levant morocco, in bookbinding, morocco of superior quality, having a large and prominent grain. It was originally made in the Levant, from the skins of Angora goats.

levant (lě-vant'), v. [Sp. levantar, raise, move, remove (levantar la casa, break up house, levantar el campo, break up camp), < levar, levar, now llevar, raise, carry, < L. levare, raise: see *levant*¹, n.] 1. intrans. To run away; de-camp.

When he found she'd levanted, the Count of Almoe
At first turned remarkably red in the face.

Barkham, Ingoldsby Legends, l. 244.

II. trans. Used only in the imperative, in the exclamation phrase levant me, a mild imprecation much like blow me! [Low.]

Levant me, but he got enough last night to purchase a principal amongst his countrymen. Poets, The Minor, l.

levant (lě-vant'), n. [*Gr. levant*², v.] A bet made by one who expects to evade paying if he loses.—To throw or run a levant, to bet without intention to pay. [Slang.]

Crowd to the hazard table, throw a familiar levant upon some sharp lurching man of quality, and, if he demands his money, turn it off with a loud laugh.

Obber, Provoked Husband, l. (Davies).

levant (lě-van'tēr), n. [*Gr. levant*², n., + -er.] An easterly wind blowing up the Mediterranean from the direction of the Levant.

Let them not break prison to burst like a levant, to sweep the earth with their hurricane.

Swift, Rev. in France.

levant (lě-van'tēr), n. [*Gr. levant*², v., + -er.] 1. One who levants; one who runs away disgracefully. Specifically.—2. One who bets at a horse-race, and runs away without paying the wager lost. [Slang in both senses.]

levantine (lev'an-tin or lě-van'tin), a. and n. [= F. levantin (= Pg. Sp. It. levantino), pertaining to the Levant (sem. levantine, a silk cloth), < levant, the Levant: see *levant*², n.] 1. a. 1. Eastern; Oriental.

They [the seeds of Platanus] should be gathered late in Autumn, and brought us from some more levantine parts than Italy. Evelyn, Sylvia, xiii.

2. [cap.] Of or pertaining to the Levant.—3. Designating a particular kind of silk cloth. See II, 3.

II. n. 1. [cap.] A native or an inhabitant of the Levant.—2. [cap.] A vessel belonging to the Levant.—3. A rich and stout silk material, characterized by having two faces of different colors or shades. Dict. of Needlework.

levari facias (lě-vā-rī fā-shi-as), [L. (NL.), cause to be levied: levari, pass. of levare, raise (see *levy*¹); facias, 2d pers. sing. pres. subj. (with impv. force) of facere, do, cause: see fact.] In law, a writ of execution issued to the sheriff, commanding him to levy the amount of a judgment out of the goods, etc., of the debtor.

levation (lě-vā'shon), n. [= OF. levation = It. levazione, < L. levatio(-n-), a raising, < levare, pp. levatus, raise: see *levant*¹.] The act of raising; elevation; especially, the elevation of the Host.

Knelling, knocking on brestes, and holding vp of handes at the sight of the levation. Str T. More, Works, p. 880.

By his gesture he will behave himself in such sort as rather shall make men the less to regard the mass, for he will not look up at the levation time, hold up his hands, nor strike his hands on his face.

J. Bradford, Works (Parker Soc., 1853), II. 302.

levator (lě-vā'tor), n.; pl. levatores (lev-ā-tō-rūs), [L., a lifter, < levare, raise: see *levant*¹. Cf. *levor*¹, ult. < L. levator.] 1. In anat., that which raises or elevates, as various muscles of the human body: opposed to depressor.—2. A surgical instrument used to raise a depressed part of the skull.—Levator anguli oris, the lifter of the angle of the mouth. Also called canine muscle.—Levator anguli scapulae, the lifter of the angle of the scapula: in man, a distinct muscle arising from the cervical region of the spine and inserted into the scapula; in some animals, a part of the serratus magnus, as in the opossum.—Levator ani, the lifter of the anus, a sheet of muscular tissue chiefly forming the floor of the pelvic cavity.—Levator arcuum, in some of the lower vertebrates, as Levator arcus, one of the muscles suspending branchial arches to the parts above them.—Levator claviculae, the lifter of the clavicle, a muscle of many animals, not normally found in man, extending from the occipital bone and attached to the metacromion of the scapula. Also called tracheo-acromioclavicular.—Levator coccygia, the lifter of the coccyx, a considerable muscle having the office implied in the name, proceeding from the pelvis to the coccyx, and belonging to the general series of extensor muscles of the spine. It is well marked, for example, in birds.—Levatores costarum, twelve muscles on each side of the spine. Each passes from the transverse process of a vertebra to the rib below, being inserted between the tubercle and the angle. They raise the ribs.—Levator glandulae thyroideae, a muscle which occasionally passes from the hyoid bone to the thyroid gland.—Levator humeri proprius, the proper elevator of the humerus, a muscle of some animals, as the dog, resulting from union of fibers of the deltoid and sternomastoid, when the latter coalesces with the trapezius.—Levator labii inferioris, the elevator of the lower lip and chin, causing the lip to protrude, as in pointing. Also called levator menti.—Levator labii superioris, the elevator of the upper lip, exposing the canine teeth, as in grinning. From its action in dogs, it is sometimes called the marking-muscle.—Levator labii superioris alae nasi, the lifter of the upper lip and nostril, as in sneezing; the sneezing-muscle.—Levator menti. Same as levator labii inferioris.—Levator palati, the lifter of the soft palate, bounding the posterior naris externally, arising from the apex of the petrous portion of the temporal bone, and inserted with its fellow into the median line of the palate.—Levator palpebrae superioris, the lifter of the upper eyelid, antagonizing the orbicularis palpebrarum.—Levator propius alae nasi, the lifter of the nostril; the dilator naris, anterior or posterior.—Levator prostatae, the lifter of the prostate gland, the anterior part of the levator ani, passing from the pubic ramus to the side of the prostate, and thence under the gland to a median raphe in front of the anus.

level. An obsolete variant of *leave*¹, *leave*², leave, *live*¹, and leaf.

levecel, n. A variant of leavecel.

level, a. A Middle English form of leafed.

level, n. A Middle English form of lady.

levee¹ (le-vē' or lev'ē), n. [F. levee, a raising, embanking, embankment, a levy (also formerly a raising, as of the sun); see *levy*¹, the naturalized form of the word in E.] 1. An embankment on the margin of a river, to confine it within its natural channel: as, the levees of the Mississippi.

On the 15th of November, he had completed in front of New Orleans a levee, of eighteen hundred yards in length, and so broad that its summit measured eighteen feet in width.

Gayarré, Hist. Louisiana, I. 382.

Hence—2. A landing-place for vessels; a quay, pier, or landing-stage. [Southern and western U. S. in both senses.]

levee² (le-vē' or lev'ē), v. t. [F. levee, n.] To embank: as, to levee a river. [U. S.]

levee³ (le-vē' or lev'ē), n. [F. lever (pron. le-vā'), a rising (of the sun), a rising (from bed), a morning reception (on rising), < lever, raise, refl. rise: see *levant*¹. The spelling levee was orig. intended to represent the F. pron. of lever. The word does not come from F. levee, which has not the meaning 'a reception.' 1. The act or time of rising.

Nothing is more alluring than a Levee from a Couch in some Contusion. Congress, Way of the World, iv. 1.

I set out one morning before five o'clock, . . . and got to the sea-coast time enough to be at the sun's levee. Gray, To Mr. Nicholas.

2. A morning reception held by a prince or great personage; a morning assembly. The term is chiefly applied in Great Britain to the stated public occasions on which the sovereign receives such persons as are entitled by rank or favor to the honor. It is distinguished from a dressing-room in the respect that, whereas at a levee men alone appear (with the exception of the chief ladies of the court), both women and men attend a drawing-room. In old French usage, a levee (lever) was a reception of nobles by the king on his rising from bed, or during or immediately after the making of his toilet.

I humbly conceive the business of a levee is to receive the acknowledgments of a multitude. Spectator, No. 193.

(Of the three levees in this street, the greatest is in this house. Walpole, To Mann, Nov. 30, 1743.

That 4th of August was the eve of Louis XVI.'s last levee—a brilliant spectacle, through which sad presages were felt and seen in many hearts and eyes. E. Doudon, Shelley, I. 7.

3. A general or miscellaneous assemblage of guests, without reference to the time of day; a reception: as, the president's levee.

He [Brougham] had a levee the other night, which was brilliantly attended—the archbishops, Duke of Wellington, Lord Grey, a host of people. Greville, Memoirs, March 15, 1831.

levee² (le-vē' or lev'ē), v. t. [*F. levee*², n.] To attend the levee of; fasten one's self on, or pester, at levees. [Rare.]

Warm in pursuit, he levees all the great. Young.

level¹, a. [Also leafy, leafy; < leve, now *leave*², permission, + -ful. In the form leafy, leafy, appar. confused with lawful.] Allowable; permissible; lawful.

For leafy is with force force of showvs. Chaucer, Prologue to Reeve's Tale, I. 58.

Rich men sayen that it is both leafy and needfull to them to gather riches together. Pope, p. 372. (Nares.)

level¹ (lev'el), n. and a. [ME. level, levell, level, < OF. leveau, leveau, leveau, later nivel, niveau, F. niveau (dia. leveau, leveau, leveau) = Sp. nivel, nivel = Pg. nivel, nivel = It. livello, < L. libella, a balance, a level, dim. of libra, a balance, a level: see libra, librate, etc.] 1. An instrument for determining the plane of the horizon, or the plane perpendicular to the direction in which bodies fall under the action of gravity. The simplest instrument used for this purpose is the plumb-line. This is now superseded for most purposes by the vide with a chamber so contrived that the length of the bubble can be altered. The spirit-level is usually reversed in use, and the mean of its two indications adopted. The spirit-level is an attachment of most geodetical instruments; and there is a special instrument called a level or leveling instrument (which see).

Of alle kynne craftes ich contrivede here tooles . . . And cast out by squire both lyne and level. Piers Plowman (C), xii. 127.

In her lap she held a perpendicular or level, as the ensign of evenness and rest. B. Jonson, King James's Coronation Entertainment.

2. An imaginary surface everywhere perpendicular to the plumb-line, or line of gravity, so that it might be the free surface of a liquid at rest. Every such surface is approximately that of an oblate spheroid, as the sea-level, for example, is; but for the purposes of ordinary life it is convenient, and occasions no sensible error, to confound this surface with its tangent plane at the point referred to—the plane of its horizon. The vertical distance from any given lower level (in the stricter sense of the word), A, to a given higher level, B, will vary with the latitude; but the work required to raise a given weight from A to B is everywhere the same. The level or horizontal surface is ordinarily spoken of as belonging to anything lying or moving upon it, or to a liquid whose free surface in equilibrium will coincide with a portion of it, and frequently indicates, in addition, some reference to some other object having the same or a different vertical elevation. Thus, we speak of the level of a station (often with reference to some standard of elevation), or of the level of the sea; a liquid is spoken of as finding its level; A is said to be on a level with B, or A and B are on a level or on the same level.

Each place is alternately elevated and depressed; but the ocean preserves its level. J. S. Mill, Pol. Econ., III. iii. § 1.

The highest flood-mark was on a level with the terrace round the house. Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xiv.

Hence—3. Figuratively, degree of elevation as regards standing, condition, or action; a height reached or aimed at, from a social, intellectual, or moral point of view. The idea of comparison, relativity, or parallelism is prominent in this as in the literal signification of the word; and a natural or normal level is often spoken of, after the analogy of a free liquid surface.

It was no little satisfaction to me to view the mixed mass of all ages and dignities upon a level, partaking of the same benefits of nature. Steele, Guardian, No. 174.

Kopplish airs

And histrionic mumm'ry, that let down

The pulpit to the level of the stage. Cooper, Trak, II. 564.

When merit shall find its level. F. W. Robertson.

A common level of interests and social standing fostered unconventional ways of thought and speech, and friendly human sympathies.

level, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 206.

4. An extent of land-surface approximately horizontal and unbroken by irregularities; a plain.

We rode a league beyond,

And o'er a bridge of pinewood crossing, came

On flowery levels underneath the oaks,

Full of all beauty. Tennyson, Princess, III.

5. The point-blank aim of a missile weapon, including the line of fire and the range or distance the missile is carried without deflection; hence, purpose; aim.

As if that name,

Shot from the deadly level of a gun,

Did murder her. Shak., R. and J., III. 2. 108.

Bring me within the level of your frown,

But shoot not at me in your drunken hate. Shak., Sonnets, cxvii.

Be the fair Level of thy Actions laid

As Temperance wills, and Prudence may persuade. Prior, Solomon, III.

6. In mining, a drift or nearly horizontal excavation made in opening a mine. Levels are run to connect shafts and winzes, so as to open and make ready for stopping a certain amount of ground. In a mine regularly opened on a permanent vein, the levels are usually from 60 to 100 feet apart, but vary in position with the varying richness of the lode.

7. A leveling-instrument. See clinometer-level and leveling-instrument.—Alta's level, a modified water-level, in which the horizontal part of the tube is replaced by long india-rubber tubing, for carrying lines of level round corners.—Blind level. See blind.—Bricklayers' level, a plummet attached to a wooden T having a line through the attachment of the plumb-line perpendicular to the edge of the wood.—Carpenters' level. Same as bricklayers' level.—Day level, in mining, a level open to the surface at the side of a valley. Most mines have, when possible, at least one such level for drainage. Also called cut or ough.—Dead level, a stretch of land without hills, and very nearly horizontal; hence, absolute uniformity; unvarying sameness; monotony.

We bring to one dead level every mind. Pope, Dunciad, iv. 208.

All unnecessary rises and falls (in roads) should be avoided, but a dead level is unfavorable for drainage. Reape, Brit., XX. 322.

Spirit-level, mounted for surveying.

Flying level, in engineering, a trial leveling over the track of a projected road, railroad, or canal, to ascertain the fitness of the ground.—Gunnery level, a brass instrument with a steel sliding arm and a spirit-level, used for obtaining the line of sighting-points on a gun.—Hand-level, in mining, a level about four feet high and three feet wide, giving just room for a man to pass through in a constrained position, pushing a little wagon called a driving-wagon. [Yorkshire, Eng.]—Line and level. See line.—Lines of level, lines on a map representing the intersections of the surface of the ground with level surfaces; contour-lines.—Locke level (invented by John Locke), a tube, like a small spy-glass, held in the hand, and so contrived that when the bubble occupies the center of a small mirror within the tube, the axis of the instrument, the position of which is indicated by a cross-hair in the field, is level. This instrument, which is extremely convenient for field geologists, is used for getting the height of slopes of moderate extent by holding the instrument to the eye, noting the point in the ascending slope where, when the instrument is level, the cross-hair strikes the ground, then walking to that and repeating the process, until the spot is reached of which the height is desired. The result is given by multiplying the height of the observer's eye above the ground by the number of stations. Of course the instrument can be used only on a continuously ascending grade.—Masons' level. Same as plumb-line level.—Mercurial level, a fluid-level in which mercury serves in place of water or alcohol in the tube or trough.—Reflecting level. Same as Locke level.—Self-recording level, a machine which when passed over the ground makes a profile or vertical section of a line of survey; a grade-indicator.—Surveyors' level, a telescope with a spirit-level attached, for measuring differences of elevation, in connection with a leveling-staff. For the Gravatt surveyors' level, see dumpy-level.—Water-level, a horizontal tube with two upright branches, mounted on a tripod, and partly filled with water, so that one can sight across from the surface of the water in one upright branch to that in the other. (See also artillery-level, batter-level, foot-level, Y-level.)

Gravatt's Surveyors' Level.

II. 1. Lying in or constituting a horizontal surface; not having one part higher than another; horizontally even or flat; not sloping: as, level ground; a level floor or pavement.

The ill, syde lyeth to the moontayne warde, and that nedeth no walle, and it is dressed so yt it is level all about and voughted throughout vnder north.

Str. R. Gwynforde, Pyllyrmage, p. 34.

O God! that one might read the book of fate,

And see the revolution of the times

Make mountains level. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., III. 1. 47.

In the more level parts of Navarin Island, these bands of stratification were nearly horizontal.

Darwin, Geol. Observations, II. 448.

2. Lying in such a surface that no work is gained or lost in the transportation of a particle from any one point of it to any other; equipotential.—3. Existing or acting in the same plane or course; continuing without change of relative elevation; even with something else.

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars

Up to the fiery concave towering high. Milton, P. L., II. 634.

Round and full the glorious sun

Walks with level steps the spray,

Through his vestibule of Day. B. Taylor, Ariel in the Cloven Pine.

Its [Scripture] having some things in it hard to be understood implies that it has but some, and that most things in it are easy to be understood, lie open and level to the meanest understanding.

Sp. Atherton, Sermons, II. ix.

Where Pope, as in the "Rape of the Lock," found a subject exactly level with his genius, he was able to make what, taken for all in all, is the most perfect poem in the language. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 432.

The light thrilled towards her, all'd

With angels in strong level flight. D. G. Rossetti, The Blessed Damsel.

4. With reference to color, especially in dyeing, even; unbroken; uniform.

The perfection of cotton dyeing is to produce on these warps the same tone and depth of colour as are found on the worsted, so that the entire piece may appear level, and free from any chequy character. Workshop Receipts, 2d ser., p. 222.

5. Equal in rank or degree.

And your common'd stia, though you work like moles,

Lie level to their justice. Beow. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, I. 1.

Be level in preferments, and you will soon be as level in your learning. Bentley.

6. Well-aimed; direct; straight; in a right line; conformable.

Everything lies level to our wish. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., iv. 4. 7.

Level as a cannon to its blank. Shak., Hamlet, iv. 1. 42.

7. Steady; in equipoise. [Rare.]

a, end view; b, side view (part shown in section).

bubble, or spirit-level, which consists of a frame of some kind firmly holding a glass tube, closed at the ends, nearly filled with anhydrous ether, or a mixture of ether and alcohol, and having its inner surface on the upper part ground into the form of the outer part of an anchor-ring. Fine levels have besides a graduated scale either on the glass or on a metallic rule set against it, so as to mark the precise position of the bubble. Most fine levels are pro-

It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come from you, can thrust me from a level consideration (of the justice of a cause).

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., II. 1. 124.

8. Well-balanced; of good judgment: as, a level head. [Colloq. or slang, U. S.]

There is a strong suspicion among men whose heads are level that this . . . performance is a bluff.

First Harle, Gabriel Conroy, xxxix.

Level crossing. Same as grade-crossing (which see, under crossing).—Level surface. Same as equipotential surface (which see, under equipotential).—To do one's level best, to do one's utmost. [Slang, U. S.]

"Now you have a position in society, you must assist in all good objects." . . . I said, "I'll do my level best, Doctor."

E. K. Hale, His Level Best.

—Syn. 1 and 2. Level, Flat, Even. In regard to the surface of land, flat is a depreciative word, indicating lowness or unattractiveness, or both; level conveys no slur, and is entirely consistent with beauty: as, flat marshes; level prairies. Flat is a rather more absolute word than level. That which is flat or level is parallel to the horizon; that which is even is free from inequalities: as, an even slope.

level¹ (lev'el), v.; pret. and pp. leveled or levelled, ppr. leveling or levelling. [< level², n.] 1. trans. To make horizontal; bring into a plane parallel to the horizon, as by the use of a leveling-instrument: as, to level a billiard-table.—2. To reduce or remove inequalities of surface in; make even or smooth: as, to level a road or walk.—3. To reduce or bring to the same height as something else; lay flat; especially, to bring down to the ground; prostrate.

All things were levelled by the deluge.

Hæcon, Physical Fables, ix.

4. To reduce to equality of condition, state, or degree; bring to a common level or standing in any respect: as, to level ranks of society.

To level him with a headborough, beadle, or watchman, were but little better than he is; constable I'll abide him.

Middleton, Changeling, I. 2.

This sense of mankind is so far from a levelling principle that it only sets us upon a true basis of distinction, and doubles the merit of such as become their condition.

Steele, Tatler, No. 69.

5. To direct to an object, in a particular line, or toward a purpose; point or aim.

For all his mind on honour fixed is,

To which he levels all his purposes.

Spenser, Mother Hub. Tale, I. 772.

The setting sun

Against the eastern gate of Paradise

Levelled his evening rays. Milton, P. L., iv. 543.

Such is the clamour of rooks, daws, and kites,

Th' explosion of the levelled tube excites.

Cooper, Hoope, I. 350.

6. To adapt; suit; proportion: as, to level observations to the capacity of children.—7. In surv. to find the level or the relative elevation of by observation or measurement.

An ancient river-bed in the desert . . . will soon be levelled throughout its extent, and the conflict of opinion be settled by . . . a careful survey. Science, VI. 510.

8. In dyeing, to make smooth and uniform. See level², a., 4.

This liquid [tartar] is employed by some dyers for leveling certain colours. W. Crookes, Dyeing, etc., p. 549.

To level down or up, to lower or raise to the same level or status.—To level up being used specifically of raising a lower person or class to the level of a higher.

Sir, your levellers wish to level down as far as themselves; but they cannot bear levelling up to themselves.

Johnson, in Boswell, an. 1763.

—Syn. 3. To raise, destroy, demolish.

II. intrans. 1. To be in the same direction with something; be aimed. [Rare.]

He to his engine flew, . . .

And said it till it levelled right

Against the glow-worm tail of kites.

S. Butler, Hudibras, II. III. 443.

2. To point a weapon at the mark; take aim: as, he levelled and fired; hence, to direct a purpose; aim.

Thou lonely Venus;

With thy blind boy that almost never misses,

But hits our hartes when he levels at vs.

Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 147.

Ambitious York did level at thy crown.

Shak., 3 Hen. VI., II. 2. 19.

He lifts the tube, and levels with his eye;

Straight a short thunder breaks the frozen sky.

Pope, Windsor Forest, I. 120.

34. To conjecture; attempt to guess.

So cunning that you can level at the dispositions of women whom you never knew.

Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 229.

She levelled at our purposes, and, being royal,

Took her own way. Shak., A. and C., v. 2. 330.

4. To accord; agree; suit. [Rare.]

Such accommodation and heart

As levels with her breeding.

Shak., Othello, I. 2. 230.

5. To work with a leveling-instrument; make the observations necessary for constructing a profile or vertical section of any line on the earth's surface, or for ascertaining the difference of elevation between two or more stations. level², v. A corruption of levy.

From taking level by unlawful measure.

Bretton, Pasquill's Procecalon, p. 8. (Davies.)

level-coil¹ (lev'el-koi), n. [Formerly also level-coyle; an accom. form of OF. levo-cul, a game so called (see the def.), < lever, raise, + cul, buttock (< L. culus, the posterior); lever le cul, in slang use, rise.] 1. An old Christmas game in which one player hunted another, the loser giving up his seat to the winner.

May we play not level-coyl [read level-coyl]? I have not patience to stay till another match be made.

Shuffling [etc.] in a Game at Piquet (1650), p. 8.

Hence—2. Riotous sport of any kind.

Young Justice Bramble has kept level-coyl

Here in our quarters, stole away our daughter.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, III. 2.

Tax. How now! what coil is here?

Black. Level-coil, you see, every man's pot.

Beau. and Fl. (7), Faithful Friends, I. 2.

level-dyeing (lev'el-di'ing), n. The process of dyeing evenly where, from the great affinity between the goods and the dye, the portion first dyed would absorb too much coloring matter. It is usually accomplished by adding to the bath a quantity of crystallised sulphate of soda (Glauber's salts).

leveler, leveller (lev'el-er), n. 1. One who levels or makes even; one who or that which brings or reduces to a level, or destroys by levelling: as, time is the great leveler.—2. One who desires or strives to bring men to a common level; one who would level social distinctions, or who disregards differences of rank or status.

Its structure strongly proves the truth of the maxim that princes are true levelers—real republicans—among themselves.

Brougham.

3. [cap.] One of a party which arose in the army of the Long Parliament about 1647. They professed a determination to level all ranks and establish equality in titles and estates throughout the kingdom. They were put down by Fairfax.

They were termed levelers upon a pretended principle which they espoused, to endeavour to obtain such an equal righteous distribution of justice in government to all degrees of people that it should not be in the power of the highest to oppress their inferiors, nor should the meanest of the people be out of capacity to arrive at the greatest office and dignity in the state. Baker, Charles II., an. 1649.

4. A screw or other device fitted to the leg of a billiard-table or to any piece of apparatus for adjusting the table or apparatus to a true level.—5. An earth-scraper.

levelless, a. A variant of levelless¹.

level-headed (lev'el-hed'ed), a. Sensible; shrewd. [Colloq. or slang.]

It is to be regretted that the State Department loses the services of so omnipotent and level-headed a chief.

The American, XIV. 341.

leveling, levelling (lev'el-ing), n. [Verbal n. of level¹, v.] 1. The act or process of reducing an uneven surface to a level or plane.—2. The art or operation of ascertaining the different elevations of objects on the surface of the earth; the art or practice of finding how much any assigned point on the earth's surface included in a survey is higher or lower than another assigned point. It is a branch of surveying of great importance in making roads, determining the proper lines for railways, conducting water, draining low grounds, rendering rivers navigable, forming canals, and the like. The instruments commonly employed are a level or leveling-instrument and a pair of leveling-staffs. One of the staffs is held up vertically, resting upon the ground at the initial point. The observer then goes forward with his instrument for a convenient distance, makes his telescope level, and directs the rod-man to raise or lower the target until it is at the height of the telescope. This is called a back-sight. The height of the target on the rod is now read. The other rod has meantime been carried forward, and is observed in the same manner. This is called a fore-sight. The instrument is now carried forward and a back-sight is made on the last rod. When a bench-mark or other terminus is reached, all the fore-sights are added together, as well as all the back-sights, and the difference of the sums is the difference of elevation.

leveling-block (lev'el-ing-blok), n. In iron ship-building, a cast-iron platform made up of large rectangular castings having as many holes with centers from four to five inches apart cast in them as the castings can contain. The faces of the blocks are level. Pins with eccentric disks fitted to their heads are inserted into the holes. The disks have holes arranged with different degrees of eccentricity. The block or platform is used for bending frames, etc. A mold, to the form of which a frame is to be bent, is laid upon the block, and its form is traced by a chalk-mark. The pins are then arranged in the holes so that the heated iron frame may be bent upon them into the form of the trace. The temperature of the heating is indicated by orange-red; and by the use of various tools, with the pins and eccentric disks, the frame is quickly and accurately bent to the form of the trace.

leveling-instrument (lev'el-ing-in'strū-ment), n. An instrument for use in surveying, of different forms, but consisting essentially of a telescope carrying a parallel, rigidly connected, and sensitive spirit-level. The telescope is mounted on a stable stand, and is capable of adjustment in all directions by means of screws.

Leveling-instrument.

leveling-plow (lev'el-ing-plou), n. A plow adapted for leveling the ridges thrown up in some forms of cultivation in rows.

leveling-pole, leveling-rod (lev'el-ing-pōl, -rod), n. Same as leveling-staff, 1.

leveling-screw (lev'el-ing-skrō), n. 1. In a mill, a screw in the hurst or frame on which a run of millstones is placed, used to give a vertical adjustment and bring it to an exact level. It acts against an iron plate set in a bedstone.—2. In a surveying or portable astronomical instrument, any one of the screws used for leveling the horizontal plate or that part of the instrument on which the horizontal angles are read off. In most English theodolites and leveling-instruments there are two pairs of leveling-screws; in French and German instruments usually only three screws.

leveling-staff (lev'el-ing-staf), n. 1. An instrument used in leveling, in conjunction with a leveling-instrument or with a spirit-level and a telescope. It is variously constructed, but consists essentially of a graduated pole with a vane sliding upon it so as to mark the height at any distance above the ground. See leveling, 2. Also called leveling-pole, leveling-rod, station-pole, or station-staff. 2. An instrument used to support a glass plate horizontally so that it can retain a fluid upon its upper surface. It is usually in the form of a tripod fitted with adjusting-screws or levelers.

levelism (lev'el-izm), n. [< level¹ + -ism] The leveling of distinctions in society, or the principle or doctrine of such leveling. [Rare.]

leveler, levelling. See leveler, leveling. levelly (lev'el-ly), adv. In a level manner; evenly; equally. [Rare.]

Neither would praises and actions appear so levelly concurrent in many other of the (reclians as they do in these. Hobbes, tr. of Thucydides, II.

levelness (lev'el-nes), n. The condition of being level; evenness; equality.

The river Tiber is expressed lying along, for so you must remember to draw rivers, to express their levelness with the earth. Peacock, Drawing.

level-sunset, level-sicet, n. [Appar. < OF. lever, raise, + sus, upon, over. Cf. level-coil.] Same as level-coil. Skelton.

By tragick deaths device Ambitious hearts do play at level-sicet.
Sylvestor, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II, The Decey.

leven¹ (lev'n), n. [Early mod. E. also levin, leaven; < ME. levene, lewyn, lightning. No appar. source in AS., connection with AS. līg, lēg (E. lay), lightning, AS. lēgt, lēget (E. last), lightning, AS. lēht (E. light), light, or with leoma (E. leam), gleam, being phonetically improvable.] Lightning. [Obsolete or archaic.]

With wilde thonder dynt and fry levens
Moots thy walkef nakke be to-broke.

Chaucer, Prolog. to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 276.

As when the flashing Levin haps to light
Uppon two stubborne cakes.

Spenser, F. Q., V. vi. 40.

In Sinai's wilderness he saw
The Mount, where Israel heard the law,
Mid thunder-dint, and flashing lava.

Scott, Marmion, l. 22.

leven¹, v. [Early mod. E. also loeven; < ME. loeven, loeynen, < levne, lightning; see *levon*¹, n.] 1. trans. To smite with lightning.

II. intrans. To flash; shine like lightning.

Thou'rt full throly with a thicke halle;
With a leuening light as a low fyre,
Blaset all the brode see as it ben wold.

Destruction of Troy (B. E. T. N.), l. 1082.

leven², n. An obsolete form of leaven.
leven³ (lev'n), n. [Origin obscure.] A lawn; an open space between or among woods. [Scotch.]

And see ye not that braid braid road,
That lies across that lily leven?
Thomas the Rhymer (Child's Ballads, l. 111).

leven-brand¹, n. A bolt of lightning.

His burning levin-brond in hand he took.
Spenser, F. Q., VII. vi. 80.

levening¹, n. [Early mod. E. also loevening; < ME. loevening, loevenyng; verbal n. of *leven*¹, v.] Lightning.

Sins that the fire of gods and king of men Strike me with thondor, and with leuening blast.
Surrey, Atneid, II.

lever¹ (lev'er or lè'vèr), n. [Formerly also leaver; < ME. leaver, leuour, a lever, < OF. levoeur, levoeur, F. levoeur, a lifter, a lever (also OF. and F. levier, a lever, with diff. suffix), < L. levator, a lifter, < levare, pp. levatus, raise: see *levant*¹.] 1. A simple machine, consisting of a bar or rigid piece of any shape, acted upon at different points by two forces which severally tend to rotate it in opposite directions about a fixed axis.

The bearing of this axis is called the fulcrum; of the two forces, one, conceived as something to be balanced or overcome, is termed the resistance, load, or weight, while the other, conceived as voluntarily applied, is termed the power. These are understood to act in the plane of rotation, and each perpendicularly to the line joining the point of its application to the fixed axis. The lengths of these two lines are termed the arms of the lever. If the load is ten times as great as the power, but the power is ten times as far from the fulcrum as the load is from the fulcrum—or, generally, if the two forces are inversely as their respective arms—then the lever is in equilibrium. This principle, beautifully demonstrated by Archimedes, was adopted by Lagrange as one of the two fundamental principles of statics, the other being the principle of the inclined plane. A lever is said to be of the first, second, or third kind, according as of the three points—the ful-

Lever.

F, fulcrum; P, power; W, load or weight. a and b are levers of the first kind, c and d of the second, and e and f of the third. In g, h, and i the pulley is used in combination with the lever. j is a compound lever, or a combination of levers.

crum, the point of application of the load, and that of the power—the first, second, or third is between the other two. But this distinction is insignificant; and when these three points are the vertices of a triangle, and the lever is not in the form of a bar, which often happens, the distinction becomes confused. Among the innumerable examples of levers may be mentioned the steelyard, the crowbar, oars, and the bones of the human limbs.

A lever to uplift the earth
And roll it in another course.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, cxlii.

2. In special uses—(a) In surg., an instrument for applying power, as one of the arms of an obstetrical forceps, used in delivery as a tractor; the vectis. (b) In dentistry, an instrument used in extracting the stumps of teeth. (c) In a steam-engine, a bar used to control by hand the movement of the engine in starting or reversing it; a starting-bar. (d) In firearms, in some forms of breech-loaders, the piece by which the gun is opened or closed, as in the Douglas, Henry, and Maynard rifles. It may be a top, side, or under lever. E. H. Knight.—3. One of the chief supporters of the roof-timber of a house, being itself not a prop, but a part of the framework. Hallwell.—4. The lower movable board of a barn-door. Hallwell.—5. The first row of a fishing-net.—6. Generally, a rod or bar.

There are certain fish-shells, like Scalop-shells, found on the shore, so great that two strong men with a lever can scarce draw one of them after them.

Paradise, Pilgrimage, p. 504.

Arithmetical lever, a straight lever, arranged so that different known weights can be placed at different known distances, either for illustrating the principle of the lever, or for calculating the value of a sum of products of two factors.—Bent lever, a lever having arms bent at an angle with the fulcrum at the angle.—Bent-lever balance. See tangent-balance.—Catch-lever, a lever which carries a catch, as part of the valve-gear of an engine.—Compound lever, a machine consisting of several simple levers combined together and acting on each other.—Continual lever, or perpetual lever, a term sometimes applied to the wheel and axle.—Crow's-foot lever, a compound lever used in the middle ages for bending the arbalist and for other purposes.—Goat's-foot lever, a lever formed of two parts, formerly used for bending the hand-bow, arbalist, or crossbow.—Heterodromous lever. See heterodromous.—Lever hand-car, a hand-car which is driven by means of levers attached to cranks.—Live lever. See live.—Universal lever, a contrivance by means of which the reciprocating motion of a lever is made to communicate a continuous rotatory motion to a wheel, and a continuous rectilinear motion to anything attached by a rope to the axle of the wheel. (See also floating-lever, hand-lever.)

lever¹ (lev'er or lè'vèr), v. t. [*lever*¹, n.] To act upon, as raising, lowering, etc., with a lever.

One of these locks they picked, and then, by levering up the corner, forced the other three.

H. L. Stevenson, Francis Villon.

lever², a. and adv. An obsolete comparative of lift.

leverage (lev'er or lè'vèr-aj), n. [*lever*¹ + -age.] 1. The action of a lever; the arrangement by which lever-power is gained.

The fulcrum of the leverage. I. Taylor.

2. Lever-power; the mechanical advantage or power gained by using a lever.

The puny leverage of a hair
The plane's impulse well may spare.
Whittier, The Waiting.

3. Figuratively, advantage for accomplishing a purpose; increased power of action.

A leverage is at once gained (by a certain procedure) for the removal of other obstacles and abuses.

D. A. Wells, Morchant Marine, p. 160.

Such men have the sensibilities that give leverage to the moralist.

W. R. Sorley, Ethics of Naturalism, p. 146.

lever-board (lev'er-bôrd), n. A corruption of lower-board. See lower-window.

lever-brace (lev'er-brās), n. A brace worked by a lever, which has usually a ratchet motion, as in the ratchet-drill.

lever-compressor (lev'er-komp-res'or), n. A device for applying pressure to an object under the microscope. E. H. Knight.

lever-drill (lev'er-dril), n. A machine-tool in which the tool-spindle works with a spline in the socket of the wheel which rotates it, and is projected axially by a lever to bring it toward or away from its work. E. H. Knight.

leveret, n. A Middle English form of levery.

lever-engine (lev'er-en'jin), n. In steam-engin., a modification of a side-beam engine, in which the beams are levers not of the first but of the second order, the piston-rod connection being at one end of the beams, the fulcrum at the other, and the crank-connection at some intermediate point. In this kind of engine the "throw" of the crank is always less than the stroke of the piston. Also called grasshopper-engine. See cut under grasshopper-beam.

lever-escapement (lev'er-es-kāp'ment), n. See escapement, 2.

leveret (lev'er-et), n. [OF. levret (cf. equiv. levretau, and levraut, F. levraut), a young hare, dim. of levre, F. lièvre = Sp. liebre = Pg. lebre = It. lepore, a hare, < L. lepus (lepor-), a hare: see Lepus. Cf. levrier.] A hare in its first year; a young hare.

leveret-skin (lev'er-et-skin), n. A name given to a Japanese ceramic glaze, usually deeply black, upon which thin silver lines are applied, having a fancied resemblance to hare's fur.

lever-faucet (lev'er-fā'set), n. An automatic faucet which closes by a spring and opens by means of a handle or lever. Car-Builders' Dict.

lever-frame (lev'er-frām), n. In a railroad hand-car, a wooden frame, shaped somewhat like a letter A, which supports the lever-shaft and lever on the platform. Car-Builders' Dict.

lever-hoist (lev'er-hoist), n. A form of lifting-jack employing a lever revolving or reciprocating on a fixed axis. A pair of short arms or stirrups are so attached to the lever that their ends fit into racks set upon both sides, and by catching upon the rack-teeth on alternate sides they enable the lever to raise a weight.

Leverian falcon. See falcon.

lever-jack (lev'er-jak), n. A lifting device. It consists of a post, a sliding-rack working in guides, ways formed in or attached to the post and carrying a stop which supports the object to be lifted, a pawl pivoted to the post and engaging the sliding-rack to hold the latter from descending, and a lever which is pivoted to the post, and carries a pawl which engages the teeth of the rack and slides it upward, thus raising the weight.

leverlock (lev'er-ok), n. A variant of leverlock, for *lark*¹.

lever-press (lev'er-pres), n. In mach., any press in which power is applied to the "follower" or platen by means of a lever, or a combination of levers, as by a treadle, etc., as distinguished from a pendulum-, screw-, or fly-press. The name is applied more particularly, however, to presses which have only one lever of the second order, generally operated by weights hung upon the end of the lever, but sometimes by a screw used as a substitute for the weights.—Compound lever-press, a press comprising a system of compound levers.—Duplex lever-press, a press having two cam-faced levers drawn together by a screw.

lever-punch (lev'er-punch), n. In mach., any punch operated by lever mechanism; in particular, a punch operating upon the principle of the duplex lever-press.

lever-valve (lev'er-valv), n. A safety-valve kept down by the pressure of an adjustable weight. In locomotives a spring is substituted for the weight, and the pressure is regulated by a screw and indicated on a brass plate. See safety-valve.

leverwood (lev'er-wôd), n. The hop-hornbeam or ironwood, Ostrya Virginica. See Ostrya.

levett (lev'et), n. [F. lever, raise, < L. levare: see *levant*¹.] A musical call or strain intended to arouse or excite; a blast of a trumpet to awaken soldiers in the morning.

Come, sir, a quaint levett,
To waken our brave general! then to our labor.
Fletcher, Double Marriage, II. 1.

Waked very early; and when it was time, did call up Will, and we rose, and musiquo (with a bandore for the base) did give me a levett.
Pepys, Diary, l. 585.

levetenant¹, n. Same as lieutenant.

levettest, n. pl. [Early mod. E., appar. irreg. (for the sake of the rhyme, in this one instance) < *level*¹, now *level*¹, + -et.] Levings.

Then gadder they vp their levettie,
Not the best morsell, but gobbettie,
Which vnto poorer people they deale.
Roy and Barlow, Rodome and not Wroth, p. 80. (Davies.)

leviable (lev'i-a-bl), a. [*levy*¹ + -able.] 1. Capable of being levied and collected.

Hence, M. Doniol's would-be purchaser is warned that it never can be worth his while to make improvements on his property, since they would only add to the standard of the fine leviable in these eventualities.
Maine, Early Law and Custom, p. 200.

2. That may be levied upon; capable of being seized upon execution.

leviathan (lè-vi'-a-thān), n. [= F. léviathan = Sp. leviatán = Pg. levitathan, < L.L. levitathan, < Heb. lwydān, an aquatic animal (see def.); cf. Heb. lānā, cleave; Ar. lava, bend, twist.] 1. An aquatic animal mentioned in the Old Testament. It is described in Job xli. apparently as a crocodile; in Isa. xlvii. 1 it is called a piercing and a crooked serpent; and it is mentioned indefinitely in Ps. lxxiv. 14 (as food) and Ps. civ. 24. Hence, in modern use—2. Any great or monstrous marine animal, as the whale.

Wend wo by Sea? the drad Leviathan Turns upside-down the boiling Ocean.
Sylvestre, Tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II. The Furies.

There Leviathan,
Hugest of living creatures, on the deep Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims.
Milton, P. L., VII. 412.

3. Anything of vast or huge size.

The oak leviathans, whose huge ribs make Their oak creator the vain title take
Of lord of seas [the ocean].
Byron, Childe Harold, IV. 121.

Leviathan canvas, coarse canvas used for decorative needlework, the strands being made of two or even three threads each, laid side by side.—Leviathan wool, a soft and loosely laid wool or worsted, used for needlework on leviathan canvas.

levicellular (lev-i-sel'jū-lār), a. [L. levie, smooth, + NL. cellula, cell: see cellular.] Pertaining to or consisting of unstriated muscle-fiber.—Levicellular myoma, a myoma composed of smooth muscle-fibers.

levier (lev'ér), n. [*levy*¹ + -er.] One who levies. Imp. Dict.

levigable (lev'i-ga-bl), a. [leviga (to)¹ + -ble.] Capable of being rubbed or ground down to fine powder.

levigate¹ (lev'i-gāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. levigated, pp. levigating. [L. levigatus, pp. of levigare (> It. levigare = Sp. F. levigar = F. leviger), make smooth, < levis, erroneously levis (= Gr. leios, for leios*; cf. equiv. poet. le- pat. for "leaves"), smooth, + agere, do, make: see act.] 1. To rub or grind to a fine impalpable powder, as in a mortar. See levigation.

Makes logic levigatus the big crime small.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 42.

The masticot (protozoid of lead) . . . is removed, ground, and levigated. . . The product is minium, or red-lead. Spence's Encyc. Metallurg., p. 1550.

24. To plane; polish; make smooth.

When use hath levigated the organs, and made the way so smooth and easy that the spirits pass without any stop, those objects are no longer felt. Barrow, Works, III. 15.

Levigation-machine, levigating-mill, a mortar having a pestle fitted with a crank and mounted in a frame, for convenience in grinding drugs, paints, etc.

levigate¹ (lev'i-gāt), a. [= It. levigato = Pg. levigado, < L. levigatus, pp. of levigare, make smooth: see the verb.] Smooth as if polished; having a polished surface: applied in botany to leaves, seeds, etc. Also levigate.

levigate² (lev'i-gāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. levigated, ppr. levigating. [L. levigatus, made light, pp. of levigare, make light, < levis, light (see levity), + agere, do: see act.] To lighten; make light of; belittle the importance of. [Rare.]

levigate³ (lev'i-gāt), a. [L. levigatus, pp.: see *levigate*², v.] Lightened; alleviated. [Rare.]

Wherby his labours being levigated, and made more tolerable, he shal governe with the better advayce.

Sir T. More, The Governour, I. 2.

levigation (lev-i-gā'shon), n. [= F. levigation = Sp. levigación = Pg. levigação = It. levigazione, < L. levigatio (n.), a smoothing, < levigare, pp. levigatus, make smooth: see *levigate*¹, v.] The act or operation of grinding or rubbing a solid substance to a fine impalpable powder. A mortar and pestle are commonly used in the process, and it is completed by allowing the coarser particles to settle in water, then decanting the latter, letting it stand till the fine powder has fallen to the bottom, and finally pouring off the water. In the chemical analysis of minerals this process is repeated until the mineral has been reduced to a sufficient degree of fineness, the coarser part being subjected to further pulverization after each separation by the aid of the water.

levin¹, n. See *leven*¹.

levin², n. An obsolete variant of leaven.

levine, n. See levyne.

levipede (lev'i-pēd), a. [L. levis, smooth, + pes (ped-), foot.] Smooth-footed.

levirate (lev'i-rāt), n. [= Sp. levirato, < NL. leviratus, < L. levir (= Gr. δαίρ, orig. daFip*, = Skt. dhāra = AS. dāora = OHG. zāihur), a husband's brother, + -atus, *E. -ate*³.] The institution of marriage between a man and the widow of his brother or nearest kinsman under certain circumstances. Among the ancient Hebrews such marriage was required in case the brother died childless, for the purpose of continuing his family, the first-born son being the heir of the deceased husband. (Deut. xxv. 5-10; see also Mat. xxi. 14-25.) From the book of Ruth it appears that the obligation rested upon the nearest kinsman of the husband if there was no brother. It was counted disgraceful for a man to refuse to submit himself to it. A similar custom prevails in parts of India.

An institution . . . known commonly as the levirate, but called by the Hindus, in its more general form, the Niyoga. Maine, Early Law and Custom, p. 100.

levirato (lev-i-rāt'ik), a. [levirate + -ic.] Pertaining to the levirate.

levirational (lev-i-rāt'ik-al), a. [levirate + -al.] Same as levirate.

The first-born son of a levirational marriage was reckoned and registered as the son of the deceased brother.

Dean Alford.

leviration (lev-i-rā'shon), n. [Irreg. < levirate + -ion.] Levirate marriage.

Leviroses (lev-i-rōs'trēz), n. pl. [NL., < L. levis, light, + rostrum, beak.] In ornith.: (a) In Merrem's classification, a group of birds, including the toucans, parrots, and some others, approximately equivalent to the order Psittaci plus the family Rhamphastidae of modern authors. (b) In Blyth's system (1846), a series or superfamily group of his Psittacidae, consisting of the toucans, toucanos, and colies, or Rhamphastidae, Munophagidae, and Coliidae.

Leviticum (lē-vis'ti-kum), n. [NL. (W. D. J. Koch, 1825): see Ligusticum and levage.] A genus of umbelliferous plants of the tribe Sonchaceae and the subtribe Angeliceae, closely related to Angelica and Archangelica, but having the lateral wings of the fruit thickened. It embraces only a single species, L. officinale, the garden lovage. See levage.

levitate (lev'i-tāt), v.; pret. and pp. levitated, ppr. levitating. [L. levitas (-is), lightness (see levity), + *-ate*².] I. trans. To cause to become buoyant in the atmosphere; make light, so as to cease to float in the air; deprive of normal gravity.

II. intrans. To act or move by force of levity—that is, by a repulsive force, contrary to gravity; overcome the force of gravity by means of specific lightness: especially, in recent use, said of a body heavier than the air, but supposed to rise in it by spiritual means.

That distinction between gravitating and levitating matter . . . which the phenomena of their [comets'] tails afford. Herschel, Pop. Lects., p. 140.

It is asserted that a man or a woman levitated to the ceiling, floated about there, and finally sailed out by the window. Huxley, Nineteenth Century, XXI. 201.

levitation (lev-i-tā'shon), n. [levitate + -ion.] 1. The act of making light; lightness; buoyancy.

The lungs also of birds, as compared with the lungs of quadrupeds, contain in them a provision distinguishingly calculated for this same purpose of levitation. Paley, Nat. Theol., xii. § 4.

2. Among Spiritualists, the alleged phenomenon of bodies heavier than air being by spiritual means rendered buoyant in the atmosphere.

The levitation in this case was by the bound Shaman in one lodge being found unbound in the other. Science, XI. 270.

levitator (lev'i-tā-tor), n. [levitate (ion) + -or.] One who believes in the supposed spiritualistic phenomena of levitation, or professes to be able to exhibit them.

Theoretically, therefore, we can have no sort of objection to your miracle. And our reply to the levitator is just the same. Why should not your friend "levitate"? Huxley, Nineteenth Century, XXI. 202.

Levite (lē'vit), n. [= F. Léuite = Sp. Pg. It. Levita, < L.L. Levites, Levita, < Gr. Λευιτης, a Levite, < Heb. Levi, one of the sons of Jacob.] 1. In Jewish hist., a descendant of Levi, one of the sons of Jacob; one of the tribe of Levi.

I have taken your brethren the Levites from among the children of Israel: to you they are given as a gift for the Lord, to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation. Num. xviii. 6.

2. Specifically, one of a body of assistants to the priests in the tabernacle and temple service of the Jews. This body was composed of all males of the tribe of Levi between 30 (or 25) and 50 years of age, exclusive of the family of Aaron, which constituted the priesthood. Originally they guarded the tabernacle, and assisted in carrying it and its vessels, and in preparing the corn, wine, oil, etc., for sacrifice; they furnished the music at the services, and had charge of the sacred treasures and revenues. After the settlement in Palestine they were relieved of some of these duties, but assumed those of religious guides and teachers. Later they were also the learned class, and became scribes, judges, etc. They were allowed no territorial possessions, except thirty-five cities in which they lived, supported by tithes on the produce of the lands of the tribes. The Levites were divided into three families, which bore the names of the sons of Levi—the Gershonites, the Kohathites, and the Merarites.

No Protestant, I suppose, will liken one of our Ministers to a High Priest, but rather to a common Levite.

Milton, Touching Hirelings.

Hence—3. In the early Christian church, a deacon as distinguished from a priest.—4. A priest; a clergyman: often in slight contempt.

A young Levite—such was the phrase then in use—might be had for his board, a small gureet, and ten pounds a year. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., III.

5. A fashionable dress for women, introduced about 1780. It was satirized by Horace Walpole as resembling "a man's night-gown bound round with a belt."

Levitic (lē-vit'ik), a. [= F. levitique = Sp. levítico = Pg. It. levitico, < L.L. leviticus, pertaining to the Levites, < Levites, Levita, Levite: see Levite.] Same as Levitical.

Levitical (lē-vit'ik-al), a. [Levitic + -al.] 1. Of, pertaining to, or peculiar to the Levites.

—2. Of, pertaining to, or contained in the book of Leviticus: as, the Levitical law.

By the Levitical law, both the man and the woman were stoned to death: so heinous a crime was adultery.

Atty, Farergon.

3. Priestly. [Rare.]

Austin . . . sent to Rome . . . to acquaint the pope of his good success in England, and to be resolved of certain theological, or rather Levitical, questions.

Milton, Hist. Eng., IV.

Levitical degrees, degrees of kindred named in Lev. xviii. 6-18, within which persons were prohibited to marry.—Levitical law, that part of the Mosaic law which related to the Levites; hence, that part which regulated the Jewish worship and ritual.

Leviticall (lē-vit'ik-al), adv. After the manner of the Levites or of the Levitical law.

Leviticus (lē-vit'ik-us), n. [L.L., prop. adj., sc. Liber, the book of the Levites: see Levitic.] A canonical book of the Old Testament, the third book of Moses or of the Pentateuch, containing principally the laws and regulations relating to the priests and Levites and to religious ceremonies, or the body of the ceremonial law. Abbreviated Lev.

Leviteism (lē'vit-izm), n. [Levite + -ism.] The doctrines and practices of the Levites.

leviton (lev'i-tōn), n. [ML. leviton (n.), a sleeveless robe.] A sleeveless robe worn by Egyptian monks.

levity (lev'i-ti), n. [= OF. levite = Sp. levidad = Pg. levidade = It. levità, < L. levitas (-is), lightness, < levis, light, akin to Gr. ελαφρς, light, and to *E. light*², q. v.] 1. Lightness of weight; relatively small specific gravity.

Their extreme minuteness and levity enable them [condia] to be dispersed and carried about by the slightest currents of air. Huxley, Biology, v.

2. A tendency to rise by a force contrary to gravity.

For positive levity, till I see it better proved than it hath hitherto been, I allow no such thing planted in sublimity bodies, the propellent gravity of some sufficing to give others comparative or respective lightness.

Boyle, Notion of Nature, § 5.

The simple rise as by specific levity, not into a particular virtue, but into the region of all the virtues. Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 250.

3. Lightness of spirit or temper. Specifically—(a) Cheerfulness; ease of mind.

To what a blessed levity . . . to what a cheerful lightness of spirit is he come that comes newly from confession, and with the seal of absolution upon him!

Donne, Sermons, xxiv.

(b) Carelessness of temper or conduct; want of seriousness; disposition to trifle; inconstancy; volatility: as, the levity of youth.

The Censor, frowning upon him, told him that he ought not to discover so much levity in matters of a serious nature. Addison, Trial of Ladies' Quarrels.

= Syn. 2 (b). Levity, Volatility, Flightiness, Frivolity, Lightness. All these words are founded upon the idea of the lack of physical and, by figure, of mental and moral substance or weight, with a resulting ease in flying away from what is wise. The first three refer especially to outward conduct. Levity is a want of seriousness, temporary or habitual, a disposition to trifle with important interests. Volatility is that moral defect by which one cannot dwell long upon any one object of thought, or turns quickly from one source of pleasure to another: the word does not convey much opprobrium; in the young some degree of volatility is expected. Flightiness borders upon the loss of sanity in upriser or excitement of fancy; it is volatility in an extreme degree. Frivolity is a matter of nature, an inability to care about any but the most petty and trifling things. Lightness is not so strong as frivolity, but covers nearly the same ground; it emphasizes inconstancy.

levoglucose, levoglucose (lē-vō-glū'kōs), n. [L. laevus, left, + E. glucose, q. v.] In chem., same as levulose.

levogyrate, levogyrate (lē-vō-jī-rāt), a. [L. laevus, left, + gyratus, pp. of gyrare, turn round in a circle: see gyre, v., gyrate.] Causing to turn toward the left hand: as, a levogyrate crystal—that is, one that turns the rays to the right in the polarization of light. See dextrogyrate.

If the analyzer [a slice of quartz] has to be turned towards the right so as to cause the colours to succeed each other in their natural order—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, violet—the piece of quartz is called right-handed, or dextrogyrate. If, however, the analyzer has to be turned from right to left to obtain the natural order of colours, the quartz is called left-handed or levogyrate. Dayan.

levogyration, levogyration (lē-vō-jī-rā'shon), n. [L. laevus, left, + ML. gyratio (n.), gyration: see gyration.] Rotation of the plane of polarization to the left. See polarisation.

levogyrous, levogyrous (lē-vō-jī-rūs), a. [L. laevus, left, + gyrus, a turn, gyre: see gyre.] Same as levogyrate.

levorotatory, levorotatory (lē-vō-rō'tā-tō-ri), a. [L. laevus, left, + rotatorius*, turning: see rotatory.] Same as levogyrate.

levulin (lev'ū-lin), n. [As lemul (one) + *-in*².] A carbohydrate (C₆H₁₀O₅) occurring in the tubers of certain species of Helianthus.

levulinic (lev'ū-lin'ik), a. [levulin + -ic.] Derived from levulin.—Levulinic acid, an acid (C₅H₈O₄) obtained from levulin, levulose, cane-sugar, colulose, and other similar substances, by boiling with a dilute mineral acid. It is a crystalline body, soluble in water.

levulose, levulose (lev'ū-lōs), n. [L. laevus, left, + -ulose + -ose.] A sugar (C₆H₁₂O₆) isomeric with dextrose, but distinguished from it by turning the plane of polarization to the left. It occurs associated with dextrose in honey, in many fruits, and in other vegetable tissues. The mixture of these two sugars in equal quantities constitutes invert-sugar, which itself turns the plane of polarization to the left, the specific rotatory power of levulose being greater than that of dextrose. It is usually a thick syrup, having a taste as sweet as that of cane-sugar; it crystallizes with difficulty. Also called fruit-sugar.

levy¹ (lev'i), n.; pl. levies (-is). [Early mod. E. also levay; < ME. levy, levoy, < OF. levee, F. levée, a raising, an embankment (see *levee*¹), rising, breaking up, removal, a raising (of troops, of taxes, etc.), = Sp. levada, a rising, attack, = Pg. levada, a current of water, transport, = It. levata, raising, rising, departure, < ML. levata, something raised or levied, tax, exaction, quota, embankment, prop. fem. of L. levatus, pp. of levare, raise: see levant.¹ 1. The act of levying; the raising or collecting of anything by authority or force; compulsory satisfaction of a requirement, claim, or demand: as, to make a levy of troops or taxes.

They have but two ways of raising money publicly in that country [Virginia]: viz., by duties upon trade, and a poll tax, which they call levies. Beverly, Virginia, iv. ¶ 12.

Upon our first, he sent out to suppress His nephew's levies. Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 62.

These are the sons of Christians taken in their childhood from their miserable parents, by a levy made every five years. Sandys, Travels, p. 27.

2. Specifically, in law, a sufficient taking of possession of chattels, and assertion of authority, by a sheriff or similar officer, under color of legal process, to render the officer liable for trespass if he be not protected by process: as, a levy upon a debtor's property.

And the constable that doth not his devoir for the levy of the same, to less to the said comyn treasure, vi. a vill. d. English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 202.

3. That which is levied, as a body of troops, or the amount accruing from a tax or an execution.

And King Solomon raised a levy out of all Israel, and the levy was thirty thousand men. 1 KL v. 13.

The Danes were as superior to their opponents in tactics as in strategy. An encounter between the shire levies and the pirates was a struggle of militia with regular soldiers. J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., p. 25.

Levy in kind, a tax or toll paid in produce or commodities, in lieu of money.—Levy in mass [F. levée en masse], a levy of all the able-bodied men of a country or district for military service.

*levy*¹ (lev'i), v.; pret. and pp. levied, ppr. levying. [Formerly also levoy (and levoe, q. v.); < late ME. levoyen; < levy, n., in part directly (prop. only in the obs. form levoe) < F. lever, raise: see levy, n., levant.¹ I. trans. 1†. To raise: as, to levy a siege.

Euphrates, having levied the siege from this one city, forthwith led his army to Demetrius. Holland.

2. To raise or excite; stir up; bring into action; set in motion: as, to levy war.

Never did thought of mine levy offense. Shak., Pericles, ii. 5. 52.

Yet live in hatred, enmity, and strife Among themselves, and levy cruel wars. Milton, P. L., ii. 501.

3. To raise by force or authority; gather or collect by compulsion: as, to levy troops; to levy taxes or tolls; to levy contributions.

And did he not, in his protectorship, Levy great sums of money through the realm? Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 61.

If his estate had been confiscated, he wandered about from bawn to bawn and from cabin to cabin, levying small contributions. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xii.

4. In law: (a) To commence enforcement of, as a legal process, by seizing property thereunder for the purpose of raising means for payment. (b) To erect or construct: as, to levy a mill; to levy a ditch. Imp. Dict.—To levy a fine, at common law, to commence an action on a suit for assuring the title to lands or possessions.

II. intrans. To make a levy.—To levy on, to seize, under color of legal process, for the purpose of raising means for payment.

*levy*² (lev'i), n. An obsolete form of *levoe*².

*levy*³ (lev'i), n. [An abbr. of eleven-penny bit.] 1†. A coin, the Spanish real, or eighth part of a dollar (twelve and a half cents), formerly current in the United States. Also called an elevenpenny bit. See *sp*².—2. The sum of twelve and a half cents; a "bit." [Local, U. S. (Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia), in both uses.]

levyne (lev'in), n. [Also levine: so called from Levy, a crystallographer.] A mineral found in Ireland, the Faroe Islands, and some other places. It belongs to the scollite group, and is a hydrated silicate of calcium and aluminium. It is related to chabasite.

*lew*¹, n. [< ME. low, lowe, < AS. lēow, shelter, whence in the contr. form lōo, E. loo: see leol.¹ Shelter; a place sheltered from the wind. [Prov. Eng.]

*lew*² (lū), a. [< ME. low, lowe (= MD. lauw, D. lauw = OHG. lāo (lāw-), MHG. lā (lāw-), G. lau = Icel. lār, lār, warm, mild; orig. with initial h, OHG. hlāo*, whence OF. lo, soft, F. low, soft, softness), warm, tepid. The asserted derivation from *lew*¹, n., a shelter, is not obvious. Cf. equiv. lew, now lue; and cf. also low-warm.¹ 1. Warm; lukewarm; tepid. [Prov. Eng.]

Thou art low [var. in one MS. lew]; neither cold neither hot. Wyck, Rev. iii. 15.

2†. Weak; faint. Hallwell.

*lew*³, n. An obsolete variant of *leol*¹.

But true it is, to th' and a fruitful lew May every climat in his time renew. Sylvestor, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 4.

lewd (lūd), a. [< ME. lewde, lowde, laude, lewed, unlearned, ignorant, < AS. lēowed, unlearned, ignorant; appar. orig. pp. of lēowan, weaken, enfeeble, also betray, = Goth. lēujan, betray, < lēw, an occasion, opportunity. The development of senses has been somewhat peculiar.] 1†. Ignorant; unlearned; illiterate.

Till leude men that er unknund, That can na lātyn understand. Hampole, Frick of Conscience.

For he he lewed man or ellis lerod, He noot how soon that he shal been aferod. Chaucer, Doctor's Tale, l. 228.

This leude and learned, by common experience, know to be most trewe. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 45.

2†. Lay, as opposed to clerical.

For if a prest be foul, on whom we truste, No wonder is a lewed man to ruste. Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 502.

3†. Rude; homely; uncultivated.

The rhyme is lyght and lewed. Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1002.

4†. Worthless; useless.

Chastite with-oute charite worth cheynid in helle; Hit is as lewde as a lampe that no lyght ynn. Piers Plowman (O), li. 186.

5. Bad; vile; vicious; wicked. [Now only prov. Eng.]

I ne'er gave life to lewed and headstrong rebels. Fletcher, Loyal Subject, v. 7.

So since into his church lewed hirelings climb. Milton, P. L., iv. 192.

6. Lustful; wanton; lascivious; libidinous.

The daughters of the Philistines, which are ashamed of thy lewed way. Ezek. xvi. 27.

Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies, To be admired of lewed unhalloved eyes. Shak., Lucrece, l. 392.

—Syn. 6. See list under lascivious. lewdly (lūd'li), adv. [< ME. lewdly; < lewed + -ly.² 1†. In a lewd manner; unlearnedly; ignorantly.

But Chaucer (though he can but lewdly On metres and on rhyming craftily) Hath seyd hem in swiche English as he can Of olde time. Chaucer, Prolog. to Man of Law's Tale, l. 47.

2†. Vilely; viciously; wickedly.

A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent, Under the countenance and confederacy Of Lady Eleanor. Shak., 2 Hen. VI., ii. 1. 167.

3. Lustfully; wantonly; lasciviously.

lewdness (lūd'nes), n. [< ME. lewednesse; < lewed + -ness.¹ 1†. Ignorance; folly.

Ye hynde beestis, ful of lewednesse. Chaucer, Fortune, l. 68.

2†. Viciousness; wickedness.—3. Lustfulness; lascivious behavior; lechery.—Syn. 3. Impurity, unchastity, licentiousness, sensuality, debauchery. lewdshyt (lūd'sh't), n. [< lewd, with term. as in *rude*shyt, etc.] A lewd or lecherous person. Imp. Dict.

lewdster (lūd'stēr), n. [< lewd + -ster.] A lewd person; a lecher.

Against such lewdsters and their lechery Those that betray them do no treachery. Shak., M. W. of W., v. 2. 23.

lewed, a. A Middle English form of lewd.

lewis (lū'is), n. [Origin uncertain. Cf. clevis.]

1. A contrivance for securing a hold on a block of stone in order that it may be raised from its position by a derrick. It consists of two side-pieces which fit into a dovetail recess cut in the stone, and between which a ring-tongue is put and fastened in such a way that, when lifted, the lewis gets a firm hold by wedging itself in the dovetail.

2. A kind of shears used in cropping woollen cloth. [Eng.]

The flocks [for paper-hangings] are obtained from the woollen-cloth manufacturers, being cut off by their shearing machines, called lewises by the English workmen. Ure, Dict., iii. 479.

lewis-bolt (lū'is-bōlt), n. A wedge-shaped bolt which in use is inserted like the shank of a lewis in a hole drilled in a stone, and fastened therein by pouring melted lead into the unoccupied part of the hole; an eye-bolt similarly inserted, and used, like a lewis, for lifting heavy stones. See cut under bolt.

lewis-hole (lū'is-hōl), n. The hole which is drilled in a stone for the reception of a lewis.

The wells are almost entire, and perhaps the work of the Romans, except the upper part, which seems repaired with the ruins of Roman buildings, for the lewis-holes are still left in many of the stones. Duffy, Tour through Great Britain, ii. 287. (Duffy.)

Lewis.

Lewisia (lū'is-i-ā), n. [NL. (F. T. Pursh, 1814), named after Capt. M. Lewis, of the Lewis and Clarke expedition to the Rocky Mountains.] A genus of polypetalous plants belonging to the natural order Portulacaceae, the purslane family, distinguished by having from 5 to 8 sepals and from 8 to 10 petals. There are but 2 species, herbs with narrow woolly leaves and handsome rose-colored flowers open only in sunshine, found only in northwestern North America. One species, L. rediviva, is used as food by the Oregon Indians. It is the blister-root (rache amère) of the early French settlers, and is said to be very nutritious. It is also called tobacco-root, because when cooked it has a tobacco-like odor. These plants are hardy and ornamental in cultivation.

lewkt, a. A Middle English form of *lukt*¹.

lewte, n. A Middle English form of *leat*¹. lewth (lūth), n. [Also spelled irreg. looth; < ME. lewch, < AS. hleowth, hleoth, shelter, < hleo, shelter: see lew, n.] Shelter; warmth. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lew-warm (lū'wārm), a. [Also spelled irreg. loo-warm, lu-warm; < *lew*² + warm. Cf. luke-warm.] Lukewarm; tepid. [Archaic.]

We found pieces of loo-warm pork among the salad, and pieces of unknown yielding substance in the ragout. A. L. Stevenson, Inland Voyage, p. 220.

lewzner, n. A variant of *lucern*⁴.

lex (lek), n.; pl. leges (lē'jēs). [L. lex (leg-), law, lit. that which lies or is laid down: see *law*¹ and lie, v. i.] Law; used in various phrases.—Lex domicilii, the law of the place of domicile.—Lex fori, the law of the jurisdiction where the action is pending.—Lex Gondonada. See Papian code, under code.—Lex Julia, a Roman law of the time of Augustus, regulating marriage, encouraging marriage portions, and discouraging celibacy.—Lex loci, the law of the place; local law.—Lex loci contractus, the law of the place where the contract is made.—Lex loci rei sitæ, the law of the place where the subject of action is situated.—Lex mercatoria, the law of merchants; the system of usages of commerce in force in commercial nations generally, and recognised by the courts as part of the law of the land.—Lex non scripta, the unwritten or common law.—Lex scripta, the written or statute law.—Lex talionis, the law of retaliation, providing that the punishment should be the same in kind as the crime, as an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, etc.

lex. An abbreviation of lexicon.

lexical (lek'si-kəl), a. [< lexico(n) + -al.] 1. Relating to or connected with the vocabulary of a language: as, lexical fullness; lexical knowledge.

The advance of Wycliffe upon Langland is chiefly grammatical, not lexical. G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., vii.

2. Of or pertaining to a lexicon.

lexically (lek'si-kəl-i), adv. In a lexical manner; according to lexical principles; as regards vocabulary.

The Anglo-Saxon is not grammatically or lexically identifiable with the extant remains of any Continental dialect. G. P. Marsh, Hist. Eng. Lang., p. 42.

lexicographer (lek'si-kog'ra-fēr), n. [Cf. F. lexicographe = Sp. lexicógrafo = Pg. lexicographo = It. lessicografo; < NL. lexicographus, < MGr. λεξικογράφος, one who writes a lexicon, < Gr. λεξικόν, a lexicon, + γράφειν, write: see graphic.] A compiler of a lexicon or dictionary; one employed in the making of a vocabulary or word-book of a language, and giving definitions, with or without other explanatory matter, in the same or another language.

Whether it be decreed by the authority of reason, or the tyranny of ignorance, that of all the candidates for literary praise the unhappy lexicographer holds the lowest place, neither vanity nor interest incited me to inquire. Johnson, Plan of Eng. Dict.

lexicographic (lek'si-kō-graf'ik), a. [= F. lexicographique = Sp. lexicográfico = Pg. lexicografico = It. lessicografico, < NL. lexicographicus, < lexicographia, lexicography: see lexicography and -ia.] Of or pertaining to lexicography.

lexicographical (lek'si-kō-graf'ī-kəl), a. [< lexicographic + -al.] Same as lexicographic.

lexicographically (lek'si-kō-graf'ī-kəl-i), adv. In a lexicographic manner; as regards lexicography.

lexicographist (lek'si-kog'ra-fist), n. [< lexicograph + -ist.] A lexicographer. [Rare.]

The good old lexicographist. Adam Littleton.

lexicography (lek'si-kog'ra-d), n. [= F. lexicographie = Sp. lexicografía = Pg. lexicografia = It. lessicografia, < NL. lexicographia, < MGr. as if λεξικογραφία, < λεξικογράφος, one who writes a lexicon: see lexicographer.] 1. The art or science of compiling lexicons or word-books; the scientific exposition of the forms, pronunciation, signification, and history of words.—2. The act or process of making a dictionary.

Such is the fate of hapless lexicography that not only darkness, but light, impedes and distresses it: things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illustrated.

lexicological (lek'-si-kol'-oj-i-kal), a. [< lexicology + -ic + -al.] Pertaining to lexicology; relating to the science of words: as, lexicological studies.

For every one of sixty-seven dialect centres, the author's lexicological collection contains three hundred and fifty articles. A. M. Bickel, Amer. Jour. Philol., IV. 488.

lexicologist (lek-si-kol'-oj-i-jist), n. [< lexicology + -ist.] One who is skilled in lexicology.

lexicon (lek-si-kol'-oj-i), n. [< Gr. λεξικόν, a lexicon, + -λογία, say: see -ology.] The science of words; that branch of learning which treats of the forms, derivation, signification, and relations of words.

lexicon (lek-si-kon), n. [= F. lexique = Sp. lexico = Pg. lexicon = It. lexicon, < ML. NL. lexicon, < Gr. (MGr.) λεξικόν (sc. βιβλίον, book), a lexicon, neut. of λεξικός, of words, < λέξω, a saying, speech, word, < λέγω, speak: see legend.] A word-book; a vocabulary; a collection of the words of a language, usually arranged alphabetically and defined and explained; a dictionary: now used especially of a dictionary of Greek or Hebrew.

In the lexicon of youth which Fate reserves for a bright manhood, there is no such word as fail.

Bulwer, Richelieu, II. 2.

= Syn. Dictionary, Glossary, etc. See vocabulary.

lexicologist (lek-si-kol'-oj-i-jist), n. [< lexicology + -ist.] A writer of a lexicon. Imp. Dict. [Rare.]

lexigraphical (lek-si-graf'-i-kal), a. [< lexicography + -ical.] Pertaining to lexicography.

lexigraphical (lek-si-graf'-i-kal), a. [< lexicography + -ical.] Same as lexigraphical.

lexigraphy (lek-sig'-ra-ſi), n. [(Cl. MGr. λεξίγραφος, equiv. to λεξικογράφος: see lexicographical) < Gr. λέξω, a word (see lexicon), + γράφω, < γράφειν, write.] The art or practice of defining words. [Rare.]

lexiphantic (lek-si-fan'-i-ſik), a. [< Gr. λεξιφάντης, a phrasemonger (found only as a proper name), < λέξω, a speech, word (see lexicon), + φάνειν, show.] Bombastic; turgid; inflated. Campbell.

lexiphanticism (lek-si-fan'-i-sizm), n. [< lexiphantic + -ism.] The habit of using a pompous or turgid style in speaking or writing. Campbell.

ley¹, v. An obsolete form of *lay*¹.

ley², n. An obsolete or dialectal form of *law*¹, *law*², and *lay*³.

ley³ (lā), n. [Sp., lit. law, < L. lex (leg-), law: see *law*¹ and *alloy*², alloy.] Yield; produce; assay-value.

The costs of the Haciendas amount to 801,654 dollars; the produce, or ley, of each cargo averages 11½ dollars. Ward's Mexico, II. 511.

Ley de oro, percentage of gold contained in silver bullion. — Ley de plata, quantity of silver which the ore contains. — De buena ley, of superior quality: said of ore. *See ley*³.

Leyden jar, Leyden vial. See *jar*³.

Leydigian (li-dig'-i-an), a. [< Leydig (see def.) + -ian.] Described by or named after F. Leydig, a German zoölogist, born 1821. — Leydigian organs, the antennal sense-organs of insects, minute sacs inclosed in membrane and communicating with branches of the antennal nerves, sometimes prolonged externally as papillae: regarded by Leydig as organs of smell, by others as auditory organs. Lefebvre and Gerstaecker support Leydig's view of their function.

leye¹, leye², etc. See *ley*¹, etc.

leyelandi, n. An obsolete form of lealand.

leyer, n. An obsolete spelling of layer.

ley-pewter, n. Inferior pewter made for large vessels, having more lead and less tin than the superior qualities.

leysert, n. A Middle English form of leisure.

leytall, n. See laystall.

leyt, n. See *layt*¹.

leyvrei, n. Same as layer.

leze-majesty, n. See lese-majesty.

L. H. In musical notation, an abbreviation for left hand.

L. H. D. An abbreviation of the Latin (New Latin) Litterarum humanorum doctor, 'doctor of the more humane letters'—that is, of the humanities or of learning: a degree conferred by universities.

lherzolite (ler'-sō-lit), n. [< Lherz (see def.) + Gr. λίθος, stone: see lith.] A crystalline aggregate of olivin, enstatite, and diaspore, with some picroite: a rock occurring about Lake Lherz and in the adjacent regions in the French Pyrenees. It has also been found in various other localities in Europe and North America. Some meteorites closely resemble lherzolite in mineralogical composition. See peridotite.

li¹ (lā), n. [Chin.] A Chinese weight, equal to the one thousandth part of a liang or ounce. A li of silver is nominally equal to the copper coin called a cash by Europeans in China, and rin by the Japanese.

li² (lā), n. [Chin.] A Chinese mile, equal to rather more than one third of an English mile, 27½ li being equal to 10 miles.

Li, The chemical symbol of lithium.

Liabess (li-ā'-bē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Cassini, 1826), < Liabum (see def.) + -ess.] A subtribe of composite plants of the tribe Senecionidae, having the scales of the involucre imbricated in many series, the outer gradually shorter. It embraces five genera, of which Liabum is the type, all, with one exception, natives of tropical America and Mexico. The group was treated by Endlicher, De Candolle, and other botanists as a division of the subtribe Pessidae under the tribe Vernoniaeae, a classification still followed by some authors.

liability (li-ā'-bil'-i-ti), n.; pl. liabilities (-tiz). [< liabile (see def.) + -ity.] 1. The state of being liable through obligation or duty; fixed or contingent responsibility; exposure to that which is or may be required: as, the liability of a principal for his agent's acts. In this sense, in law, it is sometimes used as including, and sometimes as excluding, contingent demands and unliquidated damages.

2. The state of being liable incidentally or by chance; exposure to that which is possible or probable; tendency; susceptibility: as, liability to accident or contagion; a physician's liability to broken rest.—3. That for which one is liable; that to which one is bound or exposed; a fixed or contingent obligation: as, to incur or assume a heavy liability (as for the payment of a debt or the performance of a service); the assets and liabilities of a bank.—Employers' Liability Act. See employer.—Individual liability, personal liability of one or more individuals, as distinguished from official liability, as the liability of an executor, for instance, or as distinguished from the liability of a corporation of which persons are members, and for the debts of which they or some of them may become individually liable.—Limited liability, a principle of modern statute law, whereby, under certain conditions, participants in a partnership, joint-stock company, or other undertaking are held liable for joint debts or responsibilities only to the extent of their personal interest therein, or to such further extent as the law may prescribe, instead of to the full extent of their individual means, as at common law.

liable (li-ā-bl), a. [Not found in ME., being appar. a mod. formation, perhaps first in legal use; it is not clear whether it is a mere E. formation, < liel + -able, meaning 'lying open' to obligation (cf. incluable, < incline), or < OF. as if liable*, < ML. as if ligabils*, < li. ligare (> F. lier), bind: see ligament, *lien*². No such OF. or ML. form has been found.] 1. Bound in law or equity; responsible; answerable: as, the surety is liable for the debt of his principal.

To Bridewell, to see the pressed men, where there are about 800, . . . kept these three days prisoners, with little or no victuals, and pressed out, and contrary to all course of law, without press-money, and men that are not liable to it. Pepye, Diary, II. 407.

A corporation is liable like an individual for its torts. Amer. Cys., XV. 808.

2. Having an aptitude or tendency; subject; exposed, as to the doing or occurring of something evil, injurious, or erroneous: as, we are constantly liable to accidents; your plans are liable to defeat.

He here openly avouches, in a manner that is scarce liable to exception. Bacon, Physical Essays, II. Expt., note.

Yet, if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. Shak., J. C., I. 2. 190.

Proudly secure, yet liable to fall
By weakest subtleties. Milton, S. A., I. 55.

Public conventions are liable to all the infirmities, follies, and vices of private men. Swift, Nobles and Commons, v.

3*l*. Subordinate; subject.

All that we upon this side the sea . . .

Find liable to our crown and dignity,
Shall gild her bridal bed. Shak., King John, II. 1. 480.

Though they were objects of his sight, they were not liable to his touch. Addison, Spectator, No. 56.

4*l*. Fit; suitable.

Finding thee fit for bloody villany,
Apt liable, to be employ'd in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death. Shak., J. C., IV. 2. 282.

= Syn. 2. Incident, Subject, Likely, etc. (see incident); Apt, Likely, etc. (see apt).

liableness (li-ā-bl-ness), n. The state of being liable; liability.

Now let it be considered what this brings the noble principle of human liberty to, particularly when it is possessed and enjoyed in its perfection, viz. a full and perfect freedom and Nobleness to act altogether at random. Edwards, On the Will, II. 13.

liaget, n. [< OF. F. liage, a binding, < lier, bind: see liable.] A league; an alliance.

liaison (li-ā-sōn'), n. [F., a union, an entanglement, = Fr. liaso = Sp. ligacion = Pg. ligação, < L. ligatio (n-), a binding: see ligation, of which liaison is but a F. form.] 1. A bond of union; an intimacy; entanglement; commonly, an illicit intimacy between a man and a woman.

He had liaisons with half the ladies in Rome. Froude, Caesar, p. 588.

2. In the French language, the linking or joining in pronunciation of a final consonant, usually silent, to the succeeding word when that begins with a vowel: for example, vous (vō) and avez, when coming together, are pronounced vī savē.—3. In coquetry, a thickening, generally of beaten eggs, intended to combine or amalgamate the ingredients of a dish.

liana, liane (li-an', li-an'), n. [< F. liane, a climbing or twining tropical plant, < lier, bind: see liable.] A general name for the climbing and twining plants in tropical forests which wind themselves round the stems of trees, often overtopping them and passing to other trees, or descending again to the ground.

Cliffs all robed in lianas that dropt to the brink of his bay. Tennyson, The Wreck.

liang (lyang), n. [Chin.] A Chinese ounce or tael. As used in commerce, it is one third heavier than the ounce avoirdupois, but the old standard was 379.84 grains Troy; 16 liang make 1 kin or pound. (See tael.) It is divided into tenths called tsien (or mao), into hundredths called fun (or candaren), and into thousandths called k. See tael. Also spelled leang.

liar (li-ār), n. [Prop., as in early mod. E., liar; early mod. E. also lier, < ME. liçero, liçero, leghero, legher, etc., < AS. leogero (= lecl. lūgaris) (cf. equiv. D. leugonaur = MLG. logenere = OHG. lugināri, lukināri, MHG. lügenere, G. lügen = Dan. lügen = Sw. lögna, of diff. formation: see *liar*³), a liar, < leogan, lie: see *lie*² and -ari, -eri.] One who lies; a person who knowingly utters falsehood; one who deceives by false report or representation.

The messenger was faule y-schent,
And oft y-sleped foule legher. Arthur and Merlin, p. 86.

Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar as I do despise one that is false. Shak., M. W. of W., I. 1. 69. And she to be coming and slandering me; the base little liar! Tennyson, The Grandmother.

The liar [Gr. ψευδόμενος], a Megarian aphorism or logical puzzle, arising from the question whether a man who says he is lying is truly lying or lyingly telling the truth.

liard¹ (li-ārd), a. and n. [Also (Sc.) liart, ly-art; < ME. liard, < OF. liard, liart, liart = It. leardo (ML. liardus), gray, dapple-gray; as a noun, a gray horse.] 1. a. 1. Gray or dapple-gray; applied to a horse.

This carters thakketh his horse upon the croupe. . . .
'That was wel twight, myn owne lyard boy.' Chaucer, Friar's Tale, I. 268.

Stedils stablled in stallis,
Lyards and sore lurrell.
MS. Lincoln, A. 1. 17, l. 180. (Halliwell.)

2. Gray; applied generally.

Twa had manteles o' dolefu' black,
But ane w' lyart linin'. Burns, Holy Fair.

II. n. 1. A dapple-gray horse.

He lichte adown of lyard, and ladde hym in his hands. Piers Plowman (B), xvii. 64.

2. The color gray or dapple-gray.

Colours nowe to knowe attendeth ye:
The baye is goode colours, and broune purpure,
The lyarde and the white and browne is sure.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 188.

[Obsolete or Scotch in all uses.]

liard² (li-ār), n. [F., < OF. liar, liard, liars, a small piece of money.] A small coin formerly current in France, from the fifteenth century, Obverse. Liard. Reverse.

"worth three deniers, or the fourth part of a sol." It was originally struck in silver, and afterward, from the reign of Louis XIV., in copper. The specimen illustrated weighs about 64 grains.

liard³ (li-ārd'), n. The tacamahac, or balsam-poplar, Populus balsamifera, of northern North America. [Canada.]

Har's-bench, n. A place in St. Paul's Cathedral in the sixteenth century, so called because it was said that the disaffected made appointments there. Nares.

Harth, a. and n. See Hard.

Lias (lī'as), n. [F. Lias, OF. Lias, Wals., a hard freestone; prob. < Bret. Lias, leach, a stone, = W. Lech = Gael. leac, a stone (see cromlech).] In geol., the lower division of the Jurassic. It is particularly well developed in England, where it is distinguished by its wealth of organic remains, especially of ammonites, and where it is divided into three groups, each characterized by its assemblage of fossils, the rock being chiefly grayish limestones, shales, and marlstones. The Lias is hardly recognized as a distinct formation except in England and on the continent of Europe.

Liasic (lī-as'ik), a. [F. Liasique; as Lias + -ic.] Belonging to the geological subdivision of the Jurassic called the Lias.

Liatris (lī'ā-tris), n. [NL. (J. C. D. Schreber, 1774); origin unknown.] A genus of composite plants of the tribe Eupatoriaceae and subtribe Liatris pinnatifida.

1, inflorescence; 2, lower part of plant with the cork-like rootstock; 3, anthodium; 4, flower; 5, corolla laid open; 6, bristle of the papus; 7, scale of the involucre.

Adenostyles; the button-snakeroots. They are perennial herbs, growing from large subterranean globose roots, with racemose or spicate heads of handsome rose-purple flowers.

lib (lib), v. t.; pret. and pp. libbed, ppr. libbing. [< D. libben, MD. luppen, main, geld; see lop. Cf. glib.] To castrate. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

To caapon, to geld, to lib, to spila. Florio.

lib² (lib), n. [A dial. var. of leap.] A basket. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lib. An abbreviation of liber. 2.

libament (lib'a-ment), n. [< L. libamentum (cf. equiv. libamen), a drink-offering, < libare, pour out: see libate.] Same as libation.

This discourse being thus finished, we performed our oblations and libaments to the muses.

Holland, tr. of Pintarch, p. 652.

libanomancy (lib'a-nō-man-si), n. [< Gr. λιβανωμός (L. libanus), the frankincense-tree, + μαντεία, divination.] Divination by the burning of frankincense.

libanotophoros (lib'a-nō-tōf'ō-rus), a. [< Gr. λιβανωφόρος, bearing frankincense, < λιβανωρός, frankincense (see libanotus), + φέρω = E. bear.] Bearing or producing frankincense.

The libanotophoros region of the ancients. Encyc. Brit., IX. 710.

libanotus (lib'a-nō'tus), n. [< Gr. λιβανωτός, frankincense, < λιβανωτός, the frankincense-tree.] Frankincense.

In that greater [altar] the Chaldeans burnt yearly in their sacrifices a hundred thousand talents of libanotus. Purshes, Pilgrimage, p. 55.

libant (lī'bant), a. [< L. libant], ppr. of libare, take out a little taste: see libate.] Sipping; touching lightly. [Rare.]

She touched his eyelashes with libant lip.
And breathed ambrosial odours o'er his cheek. Landon.

libate (lī'bāt), v.; pret. and pp. libated, ppr. libating. [< L. libatus, pp. of libare (> It. libare = Pg. Sp. libar), take out a little taste, sip, pour out, = Gr. λιβανωτός, pour out, make a libation of (wine or other liquor) in honor of a divinity.] I. intrans. To make a libation, as by pouring out wine.

II. trans. 1. To pour out, as wine or milk. — 2. To make a libation to; honor with a libation. [Rare and incorrect.]

A son of Israel has no gods whom he can libate.

L. Wallace, Ben-Hur, p. 441.

libation (lī-bā'shon), n. [< F. libation = Sp. libación = Pg. libação = It. libazione, < L. libatio], a drink-offering, < libare, pp. libatus, pour out: see libate.] 1. The act of pouring a liquid, usually wine, either on the ground or on a victim in sacrifice, in honor of some deity. Libation was practiced by the ancient Greeks and Romans on various occasions, both public and private; and the drink-offering of the Jews was of similar character.

2. The wine or other liquid poured out in honor of a deity; a drink-offering.

The goblet then she took, with nectar crown'd,
Sprinkling the first libations on the ground.

Dryden, Racine, l. 1081.

May every joy be yours! nor this the least,
When due libation shall have crown'd the feast,
Safe to my home to send your happy guest.

Pope, Odyssey, xiii.

libatory (lī'bā-tō-ri), a. [*< L. as if libatorius (cf. neut. libatorium, a libation-vessel), < libare, pp. libatus, pour out: see libant, libation.] Of or pertaining to libation.

libavus (lī-bā-vi-us), n. [Named after the discoverer, A. Libavus, a German chemist (died 1616).] Tin chloride, SnCl₄, a colorless volatile and fuming corrosive liquid, used in dyeing as a mordant.

libbard, n. An obsolete variant of leopard.

libbet, v. An obsolete form of libel.

libbet (līb'et), n. [Formerly also libbet; perhaps < lib, in the sense 'lop,' orig. 'a piece lopped off.'] 1. A billet; a stick. [Prov. Eng.]

A besome of birche, for babes very fit,
A longe lastinge libbet for loubbers as meete.

Harman, Caveat for Common Curators (1567). (Nares.)

A little staffe or libbet, bacillus.

Walsley, Diet. (ed. 1605), p. 317. (Nares.)

2. pl. Rags in strips. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.] libecio (lī-bech'ō), n. [< It. libeccio, < L. Libe, < Gr. Λιβ, the southwest wind: see Libyan.] The southwest wind.

Forth rush the Levant and the Ponent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral noise, Sirocco and Libecio.

Milton, P. L., x. 705.

libel (lī'bel), n. [< ME. libel, < OF. libel, libeau, m., libele, libelle, F. libelle, f., = Sp. libelo = Pg. It. libello, m., < L. libellus, m., a little book, pamphlet, note, petition, letter, lampoon, libel, dim. of liber, a book: see liber.] 1. A writing of any kind; a written declaration or certificate.

May I nat axe a libel, Sire Somonour,
And answer there by my procurator
To swiche thyng as men wyl appoun me?

Chaucer, Erasm's Tale, l. 297.

And it hath ben said, whoeever levet his wyf, give he to hir a libel of forsaking [authorised version, "writing of divorcement"]. Wyck, Mat. v. 31.

2. In admiralty law, Scots law, and Eng. eccles. law, a writing or document instituting a suit and containing the plaintiff's allegations. — 3. A lampoon.

Flots have I laid, inductions dangerous,
By drunken prophesies, libels, and dreams,
To set my brother Clarence and the king
In deadly hate the one against the other.

Shak., Rich. III., l. 1. 33.

More solid things do not show the complexion of the times so well as Ballads and libels.

Selden, Table-Talk, p. 68.

4. A defamatory writing made public; a malicious and injurious publication, expressed in printing or writing, or by signs or pictures, tending either to injure the memory of one dead or the reputation of one alive, and to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule.

We have in a libel 1st. the writing; 2d. the communication, called by the lawyers the publication; 3d. the application to persons and facts; 4th. the intent and tendency; 5th. the matter — diminution of fame.

Burke, Powers of Juris in Prosecutions for Libels.

Libel is defamation published by means of writing, printing, pictures, images, or anything that is the object of the sense of sight.

Cooley.

5. The crime of publishing a libel: as, he was guilty of libel. — 6. In general, defamation; a defamatory remark or act; malicious misrepresentation in conversation or otherwise; anything intended or which tends to bring a person or thing into disrepute.

Do not know that old Mansfield, who writes like the Bible, Says the more 'tis a truth, Sir, the more 'tis a libel?

Burns, The Beguiled.

His conversation is a perpetual libel on all his acquaintances.

Sherridan, School for Scandal, l. 1.

Fox's Libel Act, an English statute of 1792 (33 Geo. III., c. 60) empowering a jury on the trial of a criminal libel to give a general verdict upon the whole issue, without being required by the court to find a verdict of guilty on proof of publication and of the sense ascribed in the information. — Libel Act, an English statute of 1843 (6 & 7 Vict., c. 36) which authorizes a defendant sued for libel to plead no malice, and that an apology was made. Compare Fox's Libel Act, above. — Byz. 4. See aspersion and lampoon.

libel (lī'bel), v.; pret. and pp. libeled or libelled, ppr. libeling or libelling. [= F. libeller = Sp. libelar, draw up a legal demand, libel; from the noun: see libel, n.] I. trans. 1. In admiralty law, Scots law, and Eng. eccles. law, to serve a libel upon; institute suit against; present a formal charge against for trial, as against a clergyman for conduct unbecoming his office, or against a ship or goods for a violation of the laws of trade or revenue. See libel, n., 2. — 2. To defame or expose to public hatred or contempt by a malicious and injurious publication, as a writing, picture, or the like; lampoon.

Thou shalt libel, and I'll outdo the rascal.

J. Jonson, Postaster, iv. 4.

But our work is neither to libel our Auditors nor to flatter them, neither to represent them as better nor worse than they are. Stillingfleet, Sermons, II. iii. — Byz. 2. Defame, Columbkia, etc. See aspersion.

II. intrans. To spread defamation, written or printed: with against.

What's this but libelling against the senate?

Shak., Tit. And., iv. 4. 17.

libellant, n. See libellant.

libeler, libeller (lī'bel-er), n. [< libel, v., + -er.] One who libels; a lampooner.

There is not in the world a greater error than that which fools are apt to fall into, and knows with good reason to encourage, the mistaking a satirist for a libeller.

Pope, Imit. of Horace, Advertisement.

libelist, libellist (lī'bel-ist), n. [< F. libelliste, a libelist, < libelle, a libel: see libel, n.] A libeler. Imp. Diet.

libella (lī-bel'ā), n.; pl. libellae (-ē). [L., level, water-level, dim. of libra, a balance: see libra.] Hence ult. (< L. libella) E. level, q. v. 1. A small balance. — 2. An instrument for taking levels; a level. — 3. [cap.] A southern constellation which Lacaille, after 1754, proposed to substitute for Triangulum Australe, which dates from the fifteenth century. — 4. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of dragon-flies. Selys-Longchamps, 1840.

libellant (lī-bel-ant), n. [< F. libellant, ppr. of libeller, draw up a legal demand, libel: see libel, v.] One who brings a libel or institutes a suit in a court, especially in an ecclesiastical or an admiralty court. Also libellant.

The counsel for the libellant contended they had a right to read the instructions. Cranch.

libeller, libellist. See libeler, libelist.

libellous, libellously. See libelous, libelously.

libellula (lī-bel'ū-lā), n. [NL.; so called because they hold their wings extended like the leaves of a book; < L. libellula, a very little book, dim. of libellus, a little book: see libel, n.]

1. A Linnean genus of pseudoneuropterous insects with mandibulate mouth and anal forcipis. (a) A genus coextensive with Libellulina, Libellula, or the modern suborder Odonata of the order Pseudoneuroptera. (b) A genus containing forms considered typical of the modern restricted family Libellulidae. The abdomen is comparatively short, flattened, and tapering, and the male claspers are reduced. See cut under dragon-fly.

2. [i. e.] Any dragon-fly or libellulid.

libellulid (lī-bel'ū-lid), n. A member of the family Libellulidae.

libellulidae (lī-bel'ū-lī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < L. libellula + -idae.] A family of pseudoneuropterous insects of the group Libellulina or Odonata; the dragon-flies, devil's-darning-needles, or mosquito-hawks. (a) Coextensive with Libellulina, and divided into three groups, Agriocnemis, Libellulina, and Macnemis. Also Libellulidae, Libellulidae, Libellulidae. (b) Restricted to forms typified by the genus Libellula in a narrow sense, having the wings unequal, the triangles of the anterior wings dissimilar, and the anterior genital armature of the male free.

Libellulina (lī-bel'ū-lī-nā), n. pl. [NL., < L. libellula + -ina.] A group of pseudoneuropterous insects; the dragon-flies. (a) A superfamily, same as Odonata, or as Libellulina in a broad sense, characterized by the long and more or less slender and cylindrical abdomen ending in an anal armature, an enormous head and thorax, the former globular with immense eyes, the latter square with its tergal parts small and its flank pieces enlarged and rising up in front to take the place of the aborted prothorax. The antennae are short and setiform, and the mouth is not provided with palps. The wings are large, long, and approximately equal in size and shape. The base is tricarinate, and the second abdominal segment of the male is furnished with accessory genitalia. Metamorphosis is incomplete; the larva is aquatic, and voracious; and the pupa resembles the larva. The Libellulinae are composed of three families, named Libellulidae, Agriocnemidae, and Macnemidae. (b) A subfamily, same as Libellulina in a narrow sense, or as Libellulinae. See cut under dragon-fly.

Libellulinae (li-bel-ū-lī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Libellula + -inae.] A subfamily of Libellulidae: same as Libellulina (b).

libelluline (li-bel-ū-līn), a. Of or pertaining to the Libellulinae; resembling a dragon-fly. See out under dragon-fly.

libelous, libellous (lī'bel-us), a. [< Libell + -ous.] Containing a libel; of the nature of a libel; defamatory; containing that which exposes to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule: as, a libelous picture.

It was the most malicious surmise that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet. Str. H. Watson.

libelously, libellously (lī'bel-us-lī), adv. In a libelous manner.

liber¹ (lī'ber), n. [< L. liber, the inner bark of a tree (cf. Gr. Λέβη, a scale; see lepis), also, because such bark was once used for writing on (cf. book as related to beech, and paper as related to papyrus), a writing consisting of several leaves, a book, a division of a book. Hence library, etc.] 1. In bot., the inner bark of exogenous stems, lying next the cambium, and enveloped by the corky layer. When perfect it contains, besides parenchyma, sieve-cells and bast-cells, the last being the characteristic element. Also called bast and endophloem. See *bark*¹, g, and *bark*², 1.

2. A book; used in English especially with reference to the books in which deeds, mortgages, wills, and other public records are kept. Abbreviated l. and lib.

liber² (lī'ber), n. [Origin obscure.] See the quotation.

The rolly horses have a peculiar kind of shafts, commonly made of iron, named libers, the purpose of which is to prevent the carriage from overrunning them. Ure, Dict., III. 383.

liber³ (lī'ber), n. [L.] An ancient Italic divinity presiding over vineyards and wine: later identified by the Romans with the Greek Bacchus.

liberal (lib'e-ral), a. and n. [< ME. liberal, < OF. liberal, F. libéral = Sp. liberal = It. liberale, < L. liberalis, befitting a freeman, < liber (OL. loeber, loebes), free; akin to libet, it pleases, Gr. λίαν, desire, Skt. √ libh, desire, AS. lof, dear, lufian, love; see lieft, lovel, *leave*². From the same L. source (liber, libet) are ult. E. liberate, liberty, libertino, libidinuous, *liber*³, *liberty*², deliver, etc.] 1. A. 1. Befitting a freeman, or a state, condition, or situation free from narrow limitations; free in scope; of wide or ample range or extent; not narrowly limited or restricted; expanded; comprehensive: as, a liberal education; the liberal arts or professions; liberal thought or feeling; liberal institutions; a liberal policy in government; a liberal interpretation or estimate.

So wonderful were the graces of Solomon that they overcame the highest expectation, and the liberalist belief. Sp. Hall, Contemplations, xvii. 6.

To love her [Lady Elizabeth Hastings] was a liberal education. Steele, Tatler, No. 49.

Now the perfection of man as an end and the perfection of man as a mean or instrument are not only not the same, they are in reality generally opposed. And as these two perfections are different, so the training requisite for their acquisition is not identical, and has, accordingly, been distinguished by different names. The one is styled liberal, the other professional education—the branches of knowledge cultivated for these purposes being called respectively liberal and professional, or liberal and lucrative, sciences. Sir W. Hamilton, Metaph., I.

The study of them [the classics] is fitly called a liberal education, because it emancipates the mind from every narrow provincialism, whether of egoism or tradition, and is the apprenticeship that every one must serve before becoming a free brother of the guild which passes the torch of life from age to age.

Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 177.

2. Free in views or opinions; expansive in purpose or aim; not narrow, bigoted, or intolerant; specifically, favorable to personal, political, or religious liberty; opposed to narrow conservatism or undue restriction: as, a liberal thinker; a liberal Christian; a liberal statesman; the liberal party (in the politics of some countries).

It was a Scotchman, Buchanan, who first brought liberal principles into clear relief. Lecky, Rationalism, I. 184.

A livelier bearing of the outward man. . . . A bright, fresh twinkle from the week-day world. Tell their plain story:—yes, thine eyes behold A cheerful Christian from the liberal fold. O. W. Holmes, A Rhymed Lesson.

A liberal leader here in England is, on the other hand, a man of movement and change, called expressly to the task of bringing about a modern organisation of society. M. Arnold, Nineteenth Century, XII. 662.

3. Free in bestowal or concession; generously inclined; ready to impart or bestow; bounful; munificent; magnanimous: followed by with or of before the thing bestowed, and to before the recipient: as, a liberal donor; to be liberal with one's money; to be liberal to an opponent in debate.

Where you are liberal of your loves and counsels, He sure you be not loose. Shak., Hen. VIII., II. 1. 126. Nature had been . . . liberal of personal beauty to her. Goldsmith, The Bee, No. 2.

Pure is the nymph, though liberal of her smiles. Courcier, Taak, III. 712.

Once more the liberal year laughs out O'er richer stores than gems or gold. Whittier, An Autumn Festival.

4. Freely bestowed or yielded; marked by bounty or abundance; generous; ample: as, a liberal donation; a liberal harvest or flow of water; to make a liberal concession or admission.

But the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand. Isa. xxxiii. 8.

His wealth doth warrant a liberal dower. Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 5. 46.

5. Free in character or quality; candid; open; hence, with an added implication, unduly free; unrestrained; unchecked; licentious. [Obsol. lescant.]

For a tongue ever liberal pourlaitheth folly. Boswell Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 106.

Whether they cast any liberal looks towards any of the Kings' women. Purshas, Pilgrimage, p. 368.

Who hath, indeed, most like a liberal villain, Confessed the vile encounters they have had A thousand times in secret. Shak., Much Ado, iv. 1. 83.

Liberal Christianity, liberal theology, the doctrinal views respecting Christianity entertained by liberal Christians.—Liberal Christians, a general name assumed by certain Protestant denominations, especially the Unitarians and Universalists, who dissent from the principal tenets of what are commonly called the orthodox denominations.—Liberal party, a party united in advocacy of measures of progressive reform. As a distinctive designation in British politics, the name was adopted by the Whig party about 1830, to denote the body formed by the addition to their party of the Radicals. From that time it has been the name assumed by and usually given to that party which, in opposition to the Conservative party, has specifically devoted itself to the promotion of measures of progress and reform.—Liberal Union, in German politics, a party consisting of National Liberals who, chiefly because of adherence to doctrines of free trade, in 1890 withdrew their support from Prince Bismarck (Nationalists), together with other Liberals of similar views. In 1894 this party joined with the Progressives (Fortschritt-partei) to form the German Liberal party.—Lib. 2. Catholic, tolerant.—3. Charitable, open-handed, free-handed.—4. Full, abundant, plentiful, unstinted.

II. n. 1. A person of liberal principles; one who believes in liberal reforms, or advocates intellectual, political, or religious liberty.—2. [cap.] Specifically, a member of a Liberal party in politics.

Most of those who now pass as liberals are Tories of a new type. H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 1.

Constitutional Liberals, in Spanish politics, a party composed of former Republicans, who, under the leadership of Señor Sagasta, became supporters of the monarchical constitution established after the restoration of the Bourbon monarchy in Spain in 1874.—German Liberals, in German politics, a party of moderate Liberals, opposed to the policy of Prince Bismarck, formed in 1884 by the union of the Progressist party (Fortschritt-partei) with the Liberal Union.—National Liberals, in German politics, a party which, before the creation of the German empire in 1871, advocated, along with progressive measures of reform, the completion of governmental unity in Germany. After that time it embraced those persons who, though of Liberal antecedents, continued in support of the later policy of Prince Bismarck.

Liberal-Conservative (lib'e-ral-kon-sér-vatív), a. and n. 1. a. In Great Britain, belonging to that wing or portion of the Conservative party which is most nearly in accord with the Liberals; occupying a position midway between that of the average Liberal and that of the average Conservative.

II. n. One who occupies the political position defined above.

Liberalia (lib'e-rā-lī-ā), n. pl. [L., neut. pl. of liberalis, < liber, Bacchus; see *liber*³.] An ancient Roman festival celebrated annually on March 17th, in honor of Liber and Libera.

liberalisation, liberalise, etc. See liberalisation, etc.

liberalism (lib'e-ral-izm), n. [= F. libéralisme = Sp. liberalismo; as liberal + -ism.] 1. Liberal principles; the principles or practice of liberals; freedom from narrowness or bigotry, especially in matters of religion or politics.—2. Specifically, the political principles of a Liberal party.

The function of liberalism in the past was that of putting a limit to the powers of kings. The function of true liberalism in the future will be that of putting a limit to the powers of Parliaments. H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 107.

The effects of their [the Philistines] separation from official liberalism . . . were easily traceable.

Gladstone, Gleanings, I. 127.

liberalist (lib'e-ral-ist), n. [< liberal + -ist.] A liberal.

liberalistic (lib'e-ral-ist'ik), a. [< liberalist + -ic.] Relating to or characterized by liberalism; conforming to liberal principles, especially in politics.

liberality (lib'e-ral-ī-tī), n.; pl. liberalities (-tiz). [< ME. liberalite, < OF. liberalite, F. libéralité = Sp. liberalidad = Pg. liberalidade = It. liberalità, < L. liberalitas (-tēs), a way of thinking befitting a freeman, generosity, < liber, befitting a freeman; see liberal.] 1. The quality of being liberal in thought or opinion; largeness of mind; catholicity; impartiality: as, liberality in religion or politics; he treats his opponent's views with great liberality.

Many treat the gospel with indifference under the name of liberality. J. M. Mason.

2. Freeness in imparting or yielding; disposition to give or concede; generosity; bounty; magnanimity: as, liberality in one's donations or concessions.

Among the comyns wealth and concord, And that our ryche men may use liberality. Joseph of Arimathea (E. E. T. S.), p. 61.

In a bishop great liberality, great hospitality, actions in every kind great are looked for.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, vii. 24.

3. An expression or manifestation of generosity; that which is generously given.

Over and beside Signior Baptista's liberality, I'll mend it with a largess. Shak., T. of the S., I. 2. 150.

A little before the Lord sent this rain of liberalities upon his people. N. Morton, New England's Memorial, p. 99.

= syn. Bounty, Generosity, etc. (see benevolence), bountifulness; toleration, candor.

liberalisation (lib'e-ral-i-zā-shon), n. [< liberalize + -ation.] The act or process of liberalizing or making liberal. Also spelled liberalization.

The end of education is the formation and liberalisation of character. The Academy, No. 876, p. 88.

liberalise (lib'e-ral-īz), v.; pret. and pp. liberalized, ppr. liberalizing. [= F. libéraliser = Sp. liberalizar = Pg. liberalisar; as liberal + -ize.] 1. trans. To render liberal; enlarge the freedom or scope of; free from narrowness or prejudice: as, to liberalise the institutions of a country.

Grand, swelling sentiments of liberty I am sure I do not despise. They warm the heart, they enlarge and liberalise our minds; they animate our courage in a time of conflict. Burke, Rev. in France.

Some acquaintance with foreign and ancient literatures has the liberalising effect of foreign travel.

Lowell, Books and Libraries.

II. intrans. To become liberal. [Rare.]

After the rejection of the exclusive feature of the original plan, Mrs. Munger had liberalised more and more. Hewitt, Annie Kilburn, xvi.

Also spelled liberalize.

liberaliser (lib'e-ral-īzér), n. One who or that which liberalises, or makes liberal. Also spelled liberalizer.

Archery, cricket, gun and fishing-rod, horse and boat, are all educators, liberalisers. Emerson, Culture.

liberally (lib'e-ral-ī), adv. In a liberal manner. (a) With a liberal scope or range; without narrowness or prejudice; impartially; freely. (b) With a liberal hand; bountifully; amply. (c) With undue freedom; licentiously.

Liberal-Unionism (lib'e-ral-ū'n-yon-izm), n. The political attitude or opinions of the Liberal-Unionist party.

Liberal-Unionist (lib'e-ral-ū'n-yon-ist), n. and a. 1. n. A member of that section of the Liberal party in Great Britain which from 1886, refusing to concur in Mr. Gladstone's policy of conceding home rule to Ireland, advocated the maintenance of the legislative union of 1801 essentially unimpaired, and therefore, from the importance they attached to the Irish question, made common cause with the Conservatives.

II. a. Of or belonging to the political party or section of the Liberal-Unionists.

liberate (lib'e-rāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. liberated, ppr. liberating. [< L. liberatus, pp. of liberare (> It. liberare = Sp. Lib. librar = F. libérer), set free, deliver, < liber, free; see liberal. Cf. *liber*³, *liberty*², delivery.] 1. To set free; release from restraint or bondage; deliver: as, to liberate a slave or a prisoner; to liberate the mind from the shackles of prejudice.

It is an uneasy lot . . . to be present at this great spectacle of life and never be liberated from a small, hungry shivering self.
George Eliot, Middlemarch, I. 307.

At last and forever I am mine and God's,
Thanks to his liberating angel Death—
Never again degraded to be yours.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 138.

2. To disengage; separate from something else: as, to liberate a gas from a solid. —Syn. 1. Enfranchise, Manumit, etc. (see emancipate); Release, etc. (see discharge); disenthrall, ransom, discharge, let go, turn loose.

liberate (lib'ə-rāt), n. [< ML. liberata, delivery, livery; see livery.] In old Eng. law, a writ issued out of Chancery for the payment of pensions and similar royal allowances; also, a writ issued to the sheriff for the delivery of land and goods taken upon forfeits of recognizance. —Liberate roll, the account kept in the old English exchequer of pensions and other allowances of money made under the great seal.

liberation (lib'ə-rā'shən), n. [< F. libération = Sp. liberación = Pg. liberação = It. liberazione, < L. liberatio(n-), a freeing, < liberare, pp. liberatus, set free; see liberate, v.] The act of liberating or setting free; deliverance from restraint or confinement; enlargement; disengagement, as from constraint or obligation, or from mixture: as, liberation from prison or from debt; the liberation of a country from tyrannical government; the liberation of a gas.

liberationism (lib'ə-rā'shən-izm), n. [< liberation + -ism.] In British politics, the principles or opinions of the liberationists. Quarterly Rev., CLXII. 8.

liberationist (lib'ə-rā'shən-ist), n. [< liberation + -ist.] In British politics, one who is in favor of the disestablishment of the Church.

The object of the liberationists is sufficiently transparent. If the maintenance of the Established Church could be identified with the supremacy, its fall might be assured with the collapse of one political party.
Quarterly Rev., CLXII. 3.

liberator (lib'ə-rā-tor), n. [= F. libérateur = Sp. Pg. librador = It. liberatore, < L. liberator, one who sets free, < liberare, pp. liberatus, set free; see liberate.] One who liberates or delivers; a deliverer.

He [Luther] was the great reformer and liberator of the European intellect.
Buckle, Civilization, II. 534.

liberatory (lib'ə-rā-tō-ri), a. [= F. libératoire; as liberate + -ory.] Tending to liberate or set free. [Rare.]

Liberia (lib'ē-ri-ān), a. and n. [< Liberia (see def.) (< L. liber, free) + -an.] I. a. Pertaining to or relating to Liberia, a country on the western coast of Africa, colonized with liberated Africans by the American Colonization Society (beginning in 1822), and made a republic in 1847. II. n. An inhabitant of Liberia.

liberomotor (lib'ə-rō-mō'tor), a. [Irreg. < L. liberare, free (see liberate), + motor, a mover.] Disengaging or setting free motor energy, as a nervous ganglion: correlated with receptomotor and dirigomotor. See motor, a.

libertarian (lib'ər-tā-ri-ān), a. and n. [< libert(y) + -arian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to liberty, or to the doctrine of the freedom of the will (especially in an extreme form), as opposed to the doctrine of necessity; advocating the doctrine of free will: opposed to necessitarian.

I believe he [Dr. Alex. Crombie, author of an essay on philosophical necessity] may claim the merit of adding the word libertarian to the English language, as Priestley added that of "necessarian." Reid, Correspondence, p. 23.

The "power of acting without a motive," which Reid and other writers, on what used to be called the Libertarian side, have thought it necessary to claim.
H. Sidgwick, Mind, XIII. 407.

II. n. One who maintains the doctrine of the freedom of the will (especially in an extreme form): opposed to necessitarian.

Though Libertarians contend that it is possible for us at any moment to set contrary to our formed character and previous custom, still they and Determinists alike teach that it is much less easy than men commonly imagine to break the subtle unlettr'd trammels of habit.
H. Sidgwick, Methods of Ethics, p. 49.

libertarianism (lib'ər-tā-ri-ān-izm), n. [< libertarian + -ism.] The principles or doctrines of the libertarians. H. Sidgwick, Mind, XLII. 144.

liberticide (lib'ər-ti-sid or li-bēr'ti-sid), n. [= F. liberticide = Sp. liberticida, < L. liberta(t-), liberty, + -cida, < cedere, kill.] A destroyer of liberty.

His country's pride
The priest, the slave, and the liberticide, Trampled and mocked with many a loathed rite.
Shelley, Adonais, st. 4.

liberticide (lib'ər-ti-sid or li-bēr'ti-sid), n. [< L. liberta(t-), liberty, + -cidium, < cedere, kill.] Destruction of liberty.

The principles of Christian morality and Christian philanthropy were violated in the maxims of liberticide which guided the dominant politics of the country.

libertinage (lib'ər-tin-āj), n. [< F. libertinage; as libertine + -age.] 1. The character or belief of a libertine or free-thinker; laxity of opinion.

A growing libertinage, which disposed them to think slightly of the Christian faith. Warburton, Works, IX. xiii.

2. The conduct of a libertine or debauchee.

Some fourteen years of squalid youth,
And then libertinage, disease, the grave—
Hell in life here, hereafter life in hell.
Browning, Ring and Book, I. 159.

libertine (lib'ər-tin), n. and a. [= F. libertin = Sp. Pg. It. libertino, < L. libertinus, a freedman, prop. adj., of or belonging to the condition of a freedman, < libertus, a freedman, < liber, free; see liberal, liberate, v.] In the later senses (4-7) the word logically depends on liberty, liberal. I. n. 1. In Rom. hist., a freedman; a person manumitted or set free from legal servitude.

By virtue of an act granted out of the senate, the libertines (i. e. the sons of freed-men) were enrolled into the four tribes of the city.
Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 1210.

2. A member of a Jewish synagogue mentioned in Acts vi. 9, probably composed of descendants of Jewish freedmen who had been expelled from Rome by Tiberius, and had returned to Palestine.

Then there arose certain of the synagogue, which is called the synagogue of the libertines, . . . disputing with Stephen.
Acts vi. 9.

3. A freeman of an incorporate town or city.

And used me like a fugitive, an inmate of a town,
That is no city libertine, nor capable of their gown.
Chapman, Iliad, xvi.

4. One who is free from or does not submit to restraint; one who is free in thought and action.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still.
Shak., Hon. V., i. 1. 42.

And though Rubens in his History is too much a libertine in this respect, yet there is in this very place, which we now describe, much truth in the habit of his principal figures, as of King Henry the Fourth, the Queen, her Son, the 3 Daughters, and the Cardinal.

Liter. Journey to Paris, p. 39.

5. One who holds loose views with regard to the laws of religion or morality; an irreligious person; a free-thinker.

The second sort of those that may be justly numbered among the hinderers of Reformation are libertines; these suggest that the Discipline sought would be intolerable.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., I.

6. [cap.] A member of a pantheistic, antinomian sect which existed about 1530 in France and neighboring countries. The libertines maintained that God alone exists, and that there is no distinction between right and wrong, since man, in obeying his own impulses, obeys God, who is in him, and consequently can never commit sin. The sect became greatly sensual, and finally disappeared.

That the Scriptures do not contain in them all things necessary to salvation is the fountain of many great and capital errors: I instance in the whole doctrine of the libertines, familists, quakers, and other enthusiasts, which issue in the corrupted fountain.
Jer. Taylor.

7. A man given to the indulgence of lust; one who leads a dissolute, licentious life; a rake; a debauchee.

Like a puff'd and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads.
Shak., Hamlet, I. 3. 49.

Libertines of Geneva, a body of avowed infidels and voluptuaries of the first half of the sixteenth century, who were evidently influenced by the sect mentioned above, if they were not representatives of it.

II. a. 1. Free; unrestrained. [Rare.]

I have rambled in this libertine manner of writing by way of Essay.
Steele, Tatler, No. 172.

2. Licentious; dissolute; not under the restraint of or in accord with law or religion: as, libertine principles.

There are men that marry not, but chuse rather a libertine and impure single life than to be yoked in marriage.
Bacon.

Pangs arthritic, that infect the toe
Of libertine excess.
Copper, Task, I. 100.

libertinism (lib'ər-tin-izm), n. [< F. libertinisme; as libertine + -ism.] 1. The exercise of the privileges and rights of a libertine or freedman; exemption from servitude and its disabilities. [Rare.]

Dignified with the title of freeman, and denied the libertinism that belongs to it. Hammond, Works, IV. 493.

2. The state of being free or unrestrained in thought or action.

The genial libertinism of Horace.
Sumner, Orations, I. 143.

3. Irreligiousness; regardlessness of the dictates of morality.

Ever since hath libertinism of all kinds promoted its interest, and increased its party.

Sp. Atterbury, Sermons, I. III.

4. The character or conduct of a libertine or rake; licentiousness; unrestrained indulgence of lust; debauchery; lewdness.

libertinism (lib'ər-tizm), n. [< libert(y) + -ism.] Libertinism. [Rare.]

A writ of error, not of libertism, that those two principal leaders of reformation may not now come to be sued in a bill of licence, to the scandal of our Church.

Milton, Judgement of Martin Bucer concerning Divorce.

liberty (lib'ər-ti), n.; pl. liberties (-tiz). [< ME. libertie, libertie, < OF. libertie, F. liberté = Sp. libertad = Pg. liberdade = It. libertà, < L. liberta(t-), OL. leoberta(t-), freedom, < liber, free; see liberal.] 1. The state of being free, or exempt from external restraint or constraint, physical or moral; freedom; especially, exemption from opposition or irksome restraint of any kind.

The creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.
Rom. viii. 21.

Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free.

I must have liberty
Withal, as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please.
Shak., As you Like it, II. 7. 47.

The natural liberty of man is to be free from any superior power on earth, and not to be under the will or legislative authority of man, but to have only the law of Nature for his rule.
Locke, Of Government, II. iv. 22.

'Tis liberty alone that gives the flower
Of fleeting life its lustre and perfume.
Copper, Task, v. 446.

The French notion of liberty is political equality; the English notion is personal independence.
W. R. Greg, Misc. Essays, 2d ser., p. 89.

Specifically—2. Freedom of the will; the power of election or free choice, undetermined by any necessity; exemption from internal compulsion or restraint in willing or volition.

Liberty . . . is the power a man has to do or forbear doing any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind.
Locke, Human Understanding, II. xxi. 15.

Freedom from necessity is also called liberty of election, or power to choose, and implies freedom from anything inevitably determining a moral agent. It has been distinguished into liberty of contrariety, or the power of determining to do either of two actions which are contrary, as right or wrong, good or evil; and liberty of contradiction, or the power of determining to do either of two actions which are contradictory, as to walk or to sit still, to walk in one direction or in another. Freedom from necessity is sometimes also called liberty of indifference, because, before he makes his election, the agent has not determined in favor of one action more than of another.
Fleming, Vocab. Philos.

3. The condition of being exempt, as a community or an individual, from foreign or arbitrary political control; a condition of political self-government. Civil liberty implies the subjection of the individual members of a community to laws imposed by the community as a whole; but it does not imply the assent of each individual to these laws. An individual has civil liberty if he is a member of a community which possesses such liberty, and is in the enjoyment of the rights which the laws of the community guarantee him.

If not equal all, yet free,
Equally free: for orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty.
Milton, P. L., v. 793.

Real liberty is neither found in despotism, nor in the extremes of democracy, but in moderate governments.
A. Hamilton, Works, II. 416.

Liberty and Union, now and forever, one and inseparable.
D. Webster, Second Speech on Fugate's Resolution.

4. In law, freedom from all restraints except such as the lawful rights of others prescribe.—

5. Permission granted, as by a superior, to do something that one might not otherwise do; leave; specifically, permission granted to enlisted men in the navy to go on shore. Compare liberty-man.

There is full liberty of feasting, from this present hour of five till bell have tol'd eleven. Shak., Othello, II. 2. 10.

There is no liberty for causes to operate in a loose and straggling way.

Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, i. 13.

6. Immunity enjoyed by prescription or by grant; privilege; exemption; franchise: as, the liberties of the commercial cities of Europe.

It is the property of Englishmen, much more of religious Englishmen, and should be most of all of religious New Englishmen, to be tenacious and tender of their liberties.
U. Oakes, Election Sermon (Tyler's Amer. Lit., II. 166).

7. A place or district within which certain special privileges may be exercised; the limits within which freedom is enjoyed by those entitled to it; a place of exclusive jurisdiction: generally in the plural: as, the liberties of a prison (the limits within which prisoners are free to move); within the city Liberty; the Northern Liberties (a part of Philadelphia so named because originally consisting of districts having certain specific privileges).

We had told him that, if ours [our vessels] did trade within his Liberties, they should do it at their own peril. Winthrop, Hist. New England, II, 377.

Yet there are no people in the Liberty of Westminster that live in more credit than we do.

Poets, The Commissary, I
We dropt with evening on a rustic town
Set in a gleaming river's crescent-curve, Close at the boundary of the Liberties.

Tennyson, Princess, I

8. Action or speech not warranted by custom or propriety; freedom not specially granted; freedom of action or speech beyond the ordinary bounds of civility or decorum: as, may I take the Liberty of calling on you?

This headstrong writer came; who, with a new-found art,
Made following authors take less Liberty.

Dryden and Soame, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry, I, 180.
This Liberty of your Tongue will one Day bring a Confinement on your Body. Congress, Love for Love, I, 3.

Alceus, I never saw him in my life.

Sir Luc, That's no argument at all—he has the less right then to take such a Liberty. Sheridan, The Rivals, III, 4.

He was repeatedly provoked into striking those who had taken Liberties with him. Macaulay.

9. In the manège, a curve or arch in a horse's bit affording room for the tongue.—At Liberty.
(a) Free from constraint; free: as, to set a person at Liberty.

And yet within these five hours lived Lord Hastings, Untainted, unexamined, free, at Liberty.

Shak., Rich. III., III, 4, 2.

(b) With freedom or power (to do something): as, he was not at Liberty to disclose the secret.

I took one of the janizaries of the place, and paid him the usual tribute, and found myself at perfect Liberty to do what I pleased. Pooveke, Description of the East, I, 2.

(c) Disengaged; not in use.

I dressed as well as I could for shivering, and washed when there was a basin at Liberty.

Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, v.

Cap of Liberty. See cap and Liberty-cap.—Civil Liberty.
See civil, and def. 3, above.—Forest Liberties, Gallican Liberties, Jail Liberties. See the qualifying words.—Liberties' Union Act, an English statute of 1800 (18 and 14 Vict., c. 106), providing for the incorporation of liberties with the counties in which they are situated.—Liberty hall. See hall.—Liberty of indifference. See quotation from Fleming under def. 1, and indifference.—Liberty of the press, freedom of the press from police restrictions of the right to print and publish; liberty to print and publish without previous permission from government. Liberty of the press is deemed to exist where the only restrictions on the right of publishing are amenability to judicial process for damages, or to punishment, after making an actionable or criminal publication, and amenability to judicial process to prevent intended publication on proof that it is injurious to rights of private property.—Liberty party, in U. S. hist., a political party whose leading principle was the abolition of slavery. It arose about 1839, and nominated a candidate for President in 1840 and in 1844. From 1848 its members generally acted with the Free-soil and later with the Republican party.—Natural Liberty, the power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the law of nature. Blackstone. [Many writers, however, use natural Liberty in the sense ascribed to civil Liberty.]
—Personal Liberty, freedom from restraint of the person.— Political Liberty, freedom from political usurpation; the condition of a people which participates in the making of its own laws, in a state which is not subject to foreign domination.—Religious Liberty, the right of freely adopting and professing opinions on religious subjects, and of worshiping or refraining from worship according to the dictates of conscience, without external control.—To break Liberty. See break.—Syn. Independence, etc. (see freedom); License, etc. (see leave), n.).

Liberty-book (lib'ér-ti-buk), n. A book on a man-of-war which shows the length of liberty allowed, the time of returning, and the condition in which the man returned. Luco.

Liberty-cap (lib'ér-ti-kap), n. A cap of the form known as the Phrygian, used as a symbol of political or personal liberty. The custom is taken from the supposed use of this cap as a token of the manumission of a slave in Rome. The red cap of the French extreme revolutionists (see bonnet-rouge) was identified with the Roman cap of liberty, which accordingly became the symbol of the French revolution.

Liberty-man (lib'ér-ti-man), n. Naut., a sailor who has leave to go ashore; one who has been allowed a period of liberty for recreation.

It is a point with Liberty-men to be pulled off and back by their shipmates.

R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 147.

Liberty-pole (lib'ér-ti-pöl), n. A tall flagstaff set up in honor of liberty, usually surmounted with the liberty-cap or other symbol of liberty.
[U. S.]

The soldiers openly insulted the people, and in a few weeks cut down their Liberty-pole.

Frederick, Hist. of the Flag, p. 122.

Libethenite (li-beth'en-ít), n. [Libethen (see def. 1) + -ite]. The basic phosphate of copper, a mineral first found at Libethen in Hungary, having an olive-green color and crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. It is isomorphous with olivenite.

Libidinist (li-bid'i-nist), n. [L. libido (libi-din-), desire (see libidinous), + -ist]. One who is given to lewdness. [Rare.]

Nero, being monstrous incontinent himself, verily believed that all men were most foul libidinists.

F. Junius, Sin Stigmatised (1680), p. 350.

Libidinosity (li-bid-i-nos'i-ti), n. [F. libidino-sité; as libidinous + -ity]. The state or character of being libidinous; libidinousness.

Libidinous (li-bid'i-nus), a. [F. libidinosus =
Sp. Lib. libidinoso, < L. libidinosus, libidinosus, full of desire, passion, or appetite, lascivious, < libido, libido (libidin-, libidin-), desire, < libet, libet, it pleases: see liberal]. Characterized by lust or lewdness; having or arising from an eager appetite for sexual indulgence; lustful; lewd; also, fitted to excite lustful desire.

It is not love, but strong libidinous will,
That triumphs o'er me.

Heau, and Pl., Knight of Malta, I, 1.

—Syn. Prurient, concupiscent. See list under lascivious.
Libidiously (li-bid'i-nus-i), adv. In a libid-inously manner; with lewd desire; lustfully; lewdly.

Libidinousness (li-bid'i-nus-nes), n. The state or quality of being libidinous; lustfulness; lewdness.

Libkent, libkint, n. [Appar. < Hue! (lib*) + kent]. A house; lodgings. [Old slang.]

To their libkint at the crackman's.

B. Jones, Gipsies Metamorphosed.

These are the fees that I always charge a swell that must have his lib-kent to himself—dirty shillings a-week for lodging, and a guinea for garnish; half-a-guinea a-week for a single bed. Scott, Guy Mannering, xlv.

Liblong, n. An obsolete form of libelong. Cot-grave.

Libocedrus (li-bō-sē'drus), n. [NL. (Endlicher, 1847); the first element is not obvious; the second is Gr. libos, the cedar: see cedar]. A genus of coniferous trees of the tribe Cupressaceae.
It is closely related to Thuja, the arbor-vitæ, but distinguished from it by having only two fertile scales in the cone, and seeds united at the top. There are eight species, natives of Chili, California, China, Japan, New Zealand, and New Caledonia. L. decurrens, the North American species, called white cedar, bastard cedar, post-cedar, and incense cedar, is a large tree, sometimes 150 feet in height, ranging from Oregon to Mexico, with light, soft, durable wood. (See incense-cedar.) L. chilensis is the Chilean arbor-vitæ or sereno-leve.

Libra (li'brā), n. [L. libra, a balance, a Roman pound (see libra); cf. Gr. λίρα, a pound (see liter).
Hence ult. libra, libella, level, etc.]. 1. [cap.]
An ancient zodiacal constellation, representing an ordinary pair of scales. This constellation was not commonly used among the Greeks, its place being occupied by the Chelæ, or Scorpion's Claws. It is found, however, in all the Egyptian zodiacs, going back to 600 B. C.; but there is reason to believe that it is not as old as the rest of the zodiac (that is, 2,000 years or more B. C.). Its principal stars, Kiifa borealis and Kiifa australis, 2.7 and 3.0 magnitude respectively, are at the base of an isosceles triangle of which Antares forms the vertex.

2. [cap.] The seventh sign of the zodiac, represented by the character ♎ , which shows the scale-beam.—3. An Italian or Spanish pound. The Roman pound was 327 grains or 6,048 grains Troy, and the Italian light-weight pounds seem to be derived from it, their heavy weights having another origin, as is shown in the following table:

Libra.	Grains.	Libra.	Grains.
Grossa of Milan.....	11,776.7	Rome.....	5,284.0
Piccola of Milan.....	5,046.6	Mosina.....	4,928.7
Naples.....	4,949.1	Tuscany.....	5,240.5
Piedmont.....	5,092.6	Grossa of Venice....	7,888.0
Ragusa.....	5,772.7	Raticle of Venice....	4,648.5

All these statements are taken from the work of the Russian Commission, and differ in some cases from Italian official figures. The Castilian libra was 7,101 grains; that of Portugal was 7,083.3 grains.

Libral (li'brāl), a. [L. libralis, of a pound weight, < libra, a pound: see libra]. Of or pertaining to a Roman libra or pound: as, the libral as, a Roman bronze coin weighing one pound or 12 ounces (compare as); the libral system, the Roman monetary system based on the libra or pound.

Librarian (li-brā'ri-an), n. [In def. 1, < L. librarius, a transcriber of books, also a bookseller (> It. libraro = Sp. librero = Pg. livreiro, a bookseller, = OF. libraire, a bookseller, trans-criber, a writer of books, F. livraire, a bookseller), < librarius, belonging to books: see library. In def. 2 as if directly < library + -an].
1. One who transcribes or copies books.

Charvdis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds, the waves: this must be understood of regular tides. There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the librarian. Brown, Notes on the Odyssey.

2. The keeper or custodian of a library; one who has charge of the books and other contents of a library.

Librarianship (li-brā'ri-an-ship), n. [L. librarian + -ship]. 1. The office of librarian.—2.
The work of a librarian; the management of a library.

A very good basis for his modest plea for the recognition of librarianship as one of the learned professions.
Sciences, VIII, 70.

Library (li'brā-ri), n.; pl. libraries (-riz). [*L.
ME. librarie*, < OF. librairie, librarie, libraire, a bookseller's shop, a bookcase, a library, F.
librairie = Fr. librari = Sp. libreria (after F.) =
Pg. livraria = It. libreria (after F.), a booksell-er's shop, bookselling, also, in imprints, a publication-office, < L. libreria, a bookseller's shop, ML. a library, cf. L. librum, a bookcase, fem.
and neut. respectively of librarius, belonging to books, < liber, a book: see liber. For the Rom.
word for 'library' in the usual E. sense, see bli-otheca.] 1. A place set apart for the keeping and use of books and other literary material; a room, set of rooms, or a building in which a collection of books for reading or study is kept.

His library (where busts of poets dead
And a true Pindar stood without a head)
Received of wits an undistinguished race.

Pope, Prolog. to Satires, I, 225.

2. A collection of books, whether manuscript or printed, which may include also pamphlets, maps, and other literary material, intended for reading, study, or reference, as distinguished from a bookseller's stock, which is intended for sale. Libraries are of different kinds and classes according to the tastes of their owners, the readers for whom they are designed, their contents, and the manner in which they may be used, as private, public, special or professional, general, consulting or circulating, etc.

Knowing I loved my books, he furnish'd me
From mine own library with volumes that I prize above my dukedom.

Shak., Tempest, I, 2, 167.

Alexandrian Library, a library at Alexandria (see Alexandria), destroyed about 47 B. C. A supplementary or second library was in the Serapeum. This library (according to some writers who discredit its making by the Arabs) was entirely destroyed under Theophilus, A. D. 527.—Ambrozian, Cotsian, Caprinian, etc., libraries. See the adjectives.—Circulating Library. (a) A library the books of which circulate among the subscribers: distinguished from a consulting or reference library, whose books may be consulted, but from which they may not be taken away. (b) Specifically, a collection or stock of books kept exclusively for lending out, as a private enterprise, either for a fixed payment on each or for a periodical subscription.

Library-keeper (li'brā-ri-kē-šer), n. The custodian of a library: formerly used for the now current librarian, 2.

Librate (li'brāt), v.; pret. and pp. librated, ppr.
librating. [L. libratum, pp. of librare, poise, weigh, balance, < libra, a balance: see libra.]
I. trans. To hold in equipoise; poise; balance.
II. intrans. To move as a balance; be poised.

The birds of the air librating over me served as a can-opy from the rays of the sun. Beckford, Vathek, p. 128.

Librate (li'brāt), n. [ML. librata, the value of a pound (librata terra, appar. orig. a piece of land producing an annual rent of one pound), < L. libra, a pound: see libra.] 1. Land of the annual value of one pound.—2. A piece of land containing 4 oxgangs of 13 acres each. Minshew; Bailey.

The sheriffs were ordered to send [to a provincial council] all persons who possessed more than twenty librate of land. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 178.

Libration (li-brā'shon), n. [F. libration = Sp.
libración = Pg. libração = It. librazione, < L. libratio (n.), a poising, < librare, pp. libratus poise: see librate.] 1. The act of librating or balancing, or the state of being balanced; the state of equipoise; balance.—2. In astron., real or apparent libration or oscillating motion, like that of a balance before coming to rest.—Libration of the earth, a phrase used by some of the older astronomers to describe that feature of the earth's motion by which, while it revolves in its orbit its axis constantly continues parallel to itself.—Libration of the moon, an apparent irregularity of the moon's motion, whereby those parts very near the border of the lunar disk alternately become visible or invisible, indicating, as it were, a sort of vibratory motion of the lunar globe. The libration of the moon is of three kinds: (a) libration in longitude, or a seeming vibratory motion according to the order of the signs, due to the fact that the angular motion of the moon in her orbit is not precisely uniform, as her rotation about her axis is; (b) libration in latitude, in consequence of her axis being inclined to the plane of her orbit, so that sometimes one her poles and sometimes the other declines, as it were, dips toward the earth; (c) durnal libration, which is du-ply a consequence of the lunar parallax. In the last case an observer at the surface of the earth perceives point near the upper edge of the moon's disk, at the time of h rising, which disappears as her elevation is increased; while new ones on the opposite or lower edge, that were before invisible, come into view as she descends toward the horizon. If the observer were placed at the earth's center he would perceive no diurnal libration.

libratory (li-brə-tō-ri), a. [librate + -ory.] Balancing; moving like a balance as it tends to become stationary; oscillating.

Astronomers . . . ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that, at full moon, they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times.

Dict. of Trivoux. (Latham.)

librettist (li-bret-'ist), n. [libretto + -ist.] A writer of librettos; one who writes the words for an extended musical composition.

Cambert . . . built his work on the Florentine model, and, encouraged by success, wrote several others, on the strength of which he, with his librettist Perrin, instituted the Académie Royale de Musique. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 87.

libretto (li-bret-'ō), n. [It., dim. of libro, a book, < L. libro, a book: see liber]. 1. A book containing the words of an extended musical composition, like an opera or an oratorio.—2. The words themselves of such a work; the text.

libriform (li-'bri-fōrm), a. [L. liber, inner bark, + forma, form.] Having the form of liber or bark.—Libriform cells or fibers, those wood-cells which resemble liber in being extremely thick-walled.

The wood of the beech consists of the usual elements—vessels, tracheides, libriform fibers, and wood parenchyma. Nature, XXXIX. 611.

librilla (li-bril-'ā), n. [ML., a balance (steelyard), a warlike engine, dim. of L. libra, a balance: see libra.] A fool's bauble.

libs (libz), n. [L., < Gr. λίβη, the southwest wind, perhaps, like λίψ (libz), any liquid poured forth, a drop, stream, < λείβω, pour (so called because it brought wet).] The west-southwest wind. Shenstone.

Liburnian (li-bēr-'ni-an), a. and n. [L. Liburnia, Gr. Λιβυρία, the country so called, Liburni, Gr. Λιβυνοί, Λιβυνοί, the inhabitants, an Illyrian people.] 1. a. In anc. geog., pertaining or relating to the country called Liburnia, on the eastern coast of the Adriatic sea, southeast of Istria, answering to parts of modern Fiume, Croatia, and northern Dalmatia.—Liburnian galley, a light, fast-sailing ship with two or more banks of oars, originally used by Liburnian pirates, and employed by the Romans at the battle of Actium and afterward as a war-ship.

II. n. In anc. hist., an inhabitant of Liburnia. Liburnians were much employed at Rome under the empire as porters and litter-bearers.

Libyan (lib-'i-an), a. and n. [L. Libya, < Gr. Λιβύη, the northern part of Africa, west of Egypt; cf. L. Libe, Libys, < Gr. Λίβυς, a Libyan.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to Libya. Libya was the ancient Greek name of that part of northern Africa which lies between Egypt and the Atlantic, but especially of the country immediately west of Egypt. The term was also used by the Greeks as the name of the whole continent of Africa. 2. Belonging to or concerning a branch of the Hamitic family of languages found in and about ancient Libya. Also called Berber.—Libyan sub-region, in zoogeog. See region.

II. n. A member of the primitive race inhabiting ancient Libya; a Berber.

licania (li-kā-'ni-ā), n. [NL. (Fusée Aublet, 1775); said to be a modification of calignia, the native name of these trees in Guiana.] A genus of roseaceous plants of the tribe Chrysobalanaceae, distinguished by the small anthers, minute stamens, and one-celled ovary. There are about 35 species, trees or shrubs, natives of Guiana, the West Indies, and Brazil, with alternate simple leaves and small flowers. The wood is exceedingly hard. L. Guianensis is called Cayenne rose and Cayenne cassafra, pepperwood, and pottery-bark tree, names indicating its character and uses.

lica-tree (lik-'ā-trē), n. A West Indian shrub or tree, Xanthoxylum emarginatum. Also called ignum-rotum.

lice, n. Plural of louse.

licebane (li-'bān), n. The stavesacre, Delphinium Staphisagria, a species of larkspur.

licensable (li-'sen-sə-bl), a. [L. licent + -able.] Capable of being licensed; suitable to be licensed; permitted by legal grant.

license, licence (li-'sen), n. [ME. licenc, < OF. (and F.) licenc = Sp. licencia = Pg. licença = It. licenza, < L. licentia, license, < licen (t)-e, pp. of licere, be allowed, be allowable; cf. linguere, Gr. λείπω, leave: see delinquent, relinquish. Hence also (from L. licere) E. licensure, loit, il-loit, licentiate, etc.] 1. Authority or liberty to do or forbear some act; the admission of an individual, by proper authority, to the right of doing particular acts, practicing a certain profession, or conducting a certain trade; a grant of authorization; a permit.

I will no longer dwell in this contré,
Wherefore, I you beseech, with it is so,
That ye will graunte me licences for to go.

Geometrical (E. E. T. S.), l. 588.

Which did not more embolden than encourage My faulting tongue. Ford, Parkin Warbeck, l. 2.

Very few of the Egyptians avail themselves of the licences, which their religion allows them, of having four wives. E. W. Lane, Modern Egyptians, l. 162.

Specifically—(a) In the law of real property, authority to do an act or series of acts upon the land of the person granting the license, without, however, conferring on the licensee any estate in the land: as, a license to enter and shore up an adjoining building, or to take sand, or bore for oil: distinguished from easement. (b) In patent and copyright law, permission to use the invention patented, or publish the work copyrighted, without a grant of any proprietary rights therein. (c) In the law of municipal corporations and police power, permission from government to pursue a vocation or carry on acts which are prohibited to those not taking a license, the object being, by the prohibition and the conditions imposed on the permission, to regulate the extent or manner of doing what is licensed. (d) In international law, a safe-conduct granted by a belligerent state to its own subjects, to those of its enemy, or to neutrals, to carry on a trade which is interdicted by the laws of war, and operating as a dispensation from the penalties of those laws, with respect to the state granting it. Hallock (E. E. T. S.), an authority to preach, but not to administer the sacraments, nor to represent the church as a clergyman in its ecclesiastical assemblies, which powers are conferred by ordination. The license is granted, frequently for a limited period only, by an ecclesiastical body, after examination of the candidate as to his fitness. The person licensed is termed a licentiate. In the Anglican Church, a deacon must procure a license from a bishop to enable him to preach, that power not being inherent in his office. A license from the bishop is also necessary to permit a man not in orders to act as lay reader.

2. A document or certificate conferring such authority or permission.—3. Unrestrained freedom of thought and action, especially the abuse of such freedom; excess of liberty; undue freedom; freedom misused in contempt of law and decorum; rejection of legal and moral control; libertinism.

License they mean when they cry liberty.

Milton, Sonnets, vii.

We have already all the liberty which freeborn subjects can enjoy; and all beyond it is but license.

Dryden, All for Love, Dod.

No more let Ribaldry with License writ Usurp the Name of Eloquence or Wit.

Steele, Conscious Lovers, Prol.

4. An intentional departure from a rule or standard in art or literature; exceptional liberty taken for the sake of a particular purpose or effect: as, poetical or musical license; to use license in painting or sculpture.

Public transactions had generally been recorded in verse. The first historians might, therefore, indulge without fear of censure in the license allowed to their predecessors the bards. Macaulay, History.

High license, a license for the sale of liquor granted only at what is regarded as a high rate, and intended thereby to reduce the number and improve the character of the places so licensed. The principle of high license is regarded as an efficient agency for the promotion of temperance.—Letter of license, an agreement between an embarrassed debtor and his creditors, that the latter shall for a time forbear to enforce their claims, and allow him meanwhile to carry on the business without molestation. The usual form in the United States is a "composition deed," by which the creditors commonly agree to receive part as payment in full, or to receive notes payable at future periods. A letter of license containing provisions that the business is to be carried on under the inspection and control of a committee of the creditors is called a deed of insolvency.

License cases, the decision by the United States Supreme Court in three cases, in 1847 (5 How., 504), sustaining State laws requiring licenses to sell spirituous liquors, on the ground that the constitutional provision conferring on Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States does not restrict the power of a State to legislate on matters of police, public health, etc.—License in amortization, a license to convey land to a corporation whose holding of lands was otherwise forbidden by the law of mortmain, because it involved a perpetuity.—Marriage license. See marriage.—Registrar's license, in Eng. law, a license issued by a superior court registrar for a marriage without religious ceremony at the registrar's office or with religious ceremony in a dissenting chapel or in a church or chapel of the Church of England, but in the latter case only by a clergyman of that church and with consent of the minister.—Red license, a license-tax paid by anglers for the privilege of fishing for salmon. [Canada.]—Special license, specifically, in Eng. law, a license obtained from the Archbishop of Canterbury, permitting specified persons to be married without publication of banns and at a time or place other than that prescribed by law.—Syn. 3. Liberty, etc. (see license, n.); laxity.

License (li-'sen), v. t.; pret. and pp. licensed, pp. licensing. [F. licencier = Fr. Sp. licenciar = Pg. licenciar = It. licenziare, < ML. licentiar, license, < L. licentia, license: see license, n. Cf. licentiate, v.] 1. To grant authority to do an act which, without such authority, would be illegal or inadmissible; remove restrictions from by a grant of permission; authorize to act in a particular character: as, to license a man to keep an inn; to license a physician or a lawyer. Also licence.

In this Year Proclamation was made, whereby the People were licensed to eat white Meats in Lent.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 291.

The king's right of licensing, and of assenting or withholding assent to the election, was backed up by his power of influencing the opinion of the electors.

Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 281.

2. Generally, to permit to act without restraint; allow; tolerate; privilege: as, a licensed but-felon.

Jests like a license'd fool, commands like law.

Donne, Satires, iv. 283.

From stage to stage the licensed earl may run.

Pope, Dunciad, iv. 587.

3. To permit an action of; grant liberty to for a particular proceeding.

I pray, Sir, license me a question.

Chayman, May-Day, l. 1.

License my innocent flames, and give me leave to love such charming sweetness.

Steele, Lying Lover, l. 1.

4. To dismiss. [Rare.]

He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which shewed, that when he listed he could license his thoughts.

Str. E. Wotton.

Licensed victualler. See victualler.—Power to license, conferred on a municipality, is generally understood to mean power to regulate by prescribing the conditions on compliance with which the thing shall be permitted, but not to imply the power absolutely to prohibit any useful business.

licensee (li-'sen-sē), n. [L. licent + -ee.] One to whom a license is granted. Also licencée.

licenser (li-'sen-sēr), n. 1. One who licenses or grants permission; a person authorized to grant permission to others: as, a licenser of the press. Also licencer. In legal use often licensor.—2. Same as censor, 2.

license-tax (li-'sen-saks), n. In the statutes of Wisconsin, an annual license-fee imposed on certain corporations, computed by a percentage of gross receipts, and taken in lieu of ordinary taxation.

The license-tax, as it is called there [in Wisconsin], applies to railroads, insurance, telegraph, and telephone companies. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXVIII. 464.

licensure (li-'sen-sūr), n. [L. licent + -ure.] The granting of a license; the act of licensing, as of an unordained preacher in a church of the Presbyterian order. See licentiate, n., 1 (b).

licentiate (li-'sen-'shi-āt), v. t. [ME. licentiat, pp.; < ML. licentiat, pp. of licentiar, license: see license, v.] To give license or permission to; encourage by license.

All things be taken truly as that attest, ay licentiate and loveth with all ledia.

Books of Proverbes (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), l. 101.

We may not hazard other the stifling of generous inclinations or the licentiating of anything that is coarse.

Str. H. L. Strange.

licentiate (li-'sen-'shi-āt), n. [ME. licentiat = F. licencié = Pg. licenciado = Sp. licenciado = It. licenziato, < ML. licentiat, pp. of licentiar, license: see licentiate, v.] 1. One who has license to practice an art or a profession.

The College of Physicians, in July, 1687, published an edict requiring all fellows, candidates, and licentiates to give gratuitous advice to the neighbouring poor.

Johnson, Garth.

The licentiate Don Felix del Rey, a practicing advocate before the royal courts of St. Domingo and Mexico.

Gayarré, Hist. Louisiana, II. 384.

Specifically—(a) A friar licensed by the Pope to hear confession, grant absolution, and inflict penance in any place independently of the local clergy.

He hadde power of confession,
As seyde himself, more than a curat,
For of his ordre he was licentiat.

Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 230.

(b) In non-episcopal churches, as the Presbyterian, a person licensed to preach and perform the ordinary services of public worship, prior to being ordained as a pastor.

2. One who behaves in a licentious manner; one who transcends the bounds of due restraint and decorum. [Rare.]

What is this but to baffle and affront that sacred power, which is entrusted to government, and to profess ourselves not libertines, but licentiates of disorder?

Br. Hall, Sermon, Christian Liberty.

Licentiate (li-'sen-'shi-āt), n. [ML. licentiat, the condition of having a license, LL. freedom, license, < L. licentia, license: see license, n., and -ate.] The condition of having a license; specifically, in continental Europe, an academical dignity which intervenes between the baccalaureate and the doctorate, and is a step toward the doctor's degree.

Licentiate-ship (li-'sen-'shi-āt-ship), n. [L. licentiat, n., + -ship.] The condition or office of a licentiate.

Licentiation (li-'sen-'shi-āt-shun), n. [ML. licentiatio (n.), < licentiar, license: see license, v.]

The act of licensing or permitting; the granting of a license or of licenses.

There is a tacit Licentiation or permitting of error. Freeman, Sermons (1843), p. 35. (Latham.)

The system of medical Licentiation is year by year becoming more stringent and more centralized. Encyc. Brit., XI, 19.

Licentious (li-sen'shus), a. [F. Licencieux = Sp. Pg. Licencioso = It. Licenzioso, < L. Licentiosus, full of license, unrestrained, < licentia, license: see license, n.] 1. Characterized by or using license; marked by or indulging too great freedom; overpassing due bounds or limits; excessive. [Now rare.]

For since the chaste grace of our vulgar Poésie consisteth in the symphonie, as hath bene already sayd, our maker must not be too Licentious in his concords.

Puttenham, Art of Eng. Poésie, p. 67.

The Throat and Lungs of Hawks, with voices more Licentious than the loud Moulder-man's.

Congress, Way of the World, v. 1.

He is a very Licentious translator, and does not recompense his neglect of the author by beauties of his own.

Johnson, Stepney.

Specifically—2. Unrestrained by law, religion, or morality; wanton; loose; dissolute; libidinous: as, a Licentious person; Licentious desires.

How dearly would it touch thee to the quick, Shouldst thou but hear I were Licentious!

Shak., C. of E., II, 2, 133.

Divinity itself, inculcating an abject reverence for the Court, gave additional effect to the Licentious example of the Court.

Macaulay, Hallam's Const. Hist.

—Syn. 2. Profligate, dissolute, debauched. See list under licentious.

Licentiously (li-sen'shus-li), adv. In a licentious manner; with too great freedom; especially, in contempt of law and morality; lasciviously; loosely; dissolutely.

Licentiousness (li-sen'shus-nēs), n. The state or character of being licentious; want of due restraint in any respect; especially, dissolute or profligate conduct; sexual immorality.

Licet (li'set), n. [L. Licet, it is permitted: see license.] A formal certificate of permission; authorization.

No faculty or investigator must be allowed to poach beyond the lines laid down by the great Kantian survey, even for an hypothesis or conjecture. It is the function of the philosopher to enforce the licet and non-licet of the code.

Amer. Jour. Psychol., I, 152.

Lich¹, n. An assimilated form of like¹.

Lich², a. An obsolete assimilated form of like².

Lich³, a. Middle English forms of ly¹.

Lich⁴, a. Middle English forms of ly².

Lichanos (lik'a-nos), n. [Gr. λικανός (see chord, string), the string struck with the forefinger, and its note, prop. the forefinger, lit. (see δάκτυλος, finger) the licking finger, < λεχέω, lick: see lick, v.] In anc. Gr. music, originally, the forefinger-string of the lyre, and the tone produced upon that string; later, the third tone from the bottom of the lowest and of the next to the lowest tetrachords of the recognized system of tones. See lyre and tetrachord.

Lichanotinae (lik'a-nō-tī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lichanotus + -inae.] A subfamily of Lemuridae: same as Indrisinae. Also Lichanotina. J. E. Gray, 1825.

Lichanotus (lik-ŷ-nō'tus), n. [NL. (Illiger, 1811).] A genus of lemur: same as Indris.

Liche¹, n. An assimilated form of like¹.

Liche², a. An obsolete assimilated form of like².

Liches, n. See lick.

Lichen (li'ken or lich'en), n. [= F. Fr. lichen = Sp. lichen = Pg. lichen = It. lichene, < L. lichen, < Gr. λειχήν, also λεχών, a tree-moss, lichen, also a kind of liverwort, also an eruption on the skin, ringworm, tetter, perhaps < λεχέω, lick.] 1. In bot., a plant or vegetable growth

(the Collema, or jelly-lichen) form, when wet, a pulpy or gelatinous mass. Lichens are distributed through all lands, enduring great extremes of temperature and the severest drought, living often where nothing else can. They corrode the hardest rocks, thus contributing to the formation of soil. The lichens most useful for food are the Iceland moss (see Cetraria), the reindeer-moss (see Lichens.

c. Buellia graphica; d. Peltigera canina.

Cladonia and reindeer-moss), the manna-lichen (see Lecanora), and the rock-tripe (see Umbilicaria). Various lichens furnish the blue or purple dyestuffs known as archil, cudbear, and litmus. The Iceland moss has a demulcent worth; but for the most part the medicinal virtues of lichens are imaginary.

2. In pathol., an eruption of papules, of a red or pale color, which do not reach a vesicular or pustular stage. They may be in clusters or scattered, or disseminated over the surface of the skin; and may be attended with itching, as in lichen ruber, or may be quite free from it, as in lichen scrofulosorum. — Orab's-eyo lichen, a name in the north of England for Leconora pallescens, formerly used for dyeing. — Foliaceous lichen. See Foliaceous. — Horsehair or horsetail lichen. See horsetail-lichen. — Wild lichen, a form of eczema. — Yellow wall-lichen (commonly wall-moss), Parmelia parietaria.

Lichenaceous (li-ke-nā'shius), a. [L. lichen + -aceous.] Having the characters of a lichen; belonging to the Lichenaceae or Lichenes.

Lichened (li'kend or lich'end), a. [L. lichen + -ed.] Covered with lichens, or appearing as if so covered: as, a lichened wall; the lichened tree-todd, Trachycephalus lichenatus.

Lichenes (li-kē'nēs), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. lichen: see lichen.] A division of cellular, mostly thalloid, cryptogamic plants, formerly regarded as constituting a distinct class, but now, in accordance with the theory of Schwendener and others, considered to be genuine fungi of the divisions Ascomycetes and Basidiomycetes. They exhibit a remarkable parasitism. "The host-plants are algae, growing as a rule in damp situations, but belonging to a variety of groups, frequently to the Chroococcaceae and Nostocaceae, still more frequently to the Palmellaceae, sometimes to the Chlorococcaceae, rarely to the Conferaceae" (Beebe, Outlines of Classification, etc., p. 114). The algae, which are also known in a free state and separate from the fungi, are embraced by the hyphae of the lichen-fungus, and the two elements together compose a thallus of definite form.

A transverse section of a lichen-thallus shows the hyphae to be more or less closely interwoven about the algal cells or gonidia. This parasitism, which is without parallel in the animal kingdom or any other part of the vegetable kingdom, instead of resulting detrimentally to the algae, inclines them to more rapid activity and more vigorous increase. The reproduction is characteristic of the particular class to which the fungus belongs, and in a few lichens examined by Stahl there is an adaptation for the supply of algae to the new lichen: algal cells, the offspring of the thallus-algae (gonidia), are cast off along with the spores, so that the germ-tubes of the spores find suitable hosts at once. Propagation is also abundantly carried on by means of soredia, or brood-buds, which consist of one or more algal cells, surrounded by the fungus-hyphae, which separate from the parent thallus. Lichens have been produced synthetically by Stahl and others by sowing the fungus-spores upon favorable algal cells, thus proving beyond question their dual nature. The older systematic lichenologists prefer to consider lichens as autogenous.

Lichenian (li-kē'ni-an), a. [L. lichen + -ian.] Of or pertaining to lichens. Amer. Naturalist, XXIII, 5.

Lichenic (li-ken'ik), a. [L. lichen + -ic.] Of or pertaining to or derived from lichens: as, lichenic acid.

Lichenicolous (li-ke-nik'ō-lus), a. [L. lichen, a lichen, + colere, inhabit.] Parasitic on lichens. Microsc. Science, XXX, Index, p. 42.

Licheniform (li'ken-i-fōrm), a. [L. lichen, a lichen, + forma, form.] Resembling, or having the form of, a lichen; lichenoid.

Some of the inferior liverworts are quite licheniform, and are often mistaken for lichens.

H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 180.

Lichenin (li'ken-in), n. [L. lichen, q. v., + -in.] A variety of starch obtained from Iceland moss and many other varieties of lichens. It is insoluble in cold water, but forms a jelly with hot water, and yields with iodine a dirty-blue color.

Lichenism (li'ken-izm), n. [L. lichen + -ism.] The habit of living in that union of fungus and algae which is supposed by many to constitute a lichen.

It is moreover quite conceivable that there are species of Algae which have become so adapted to Lichenism that they can no longer attain their full development outside the lichen-combination. De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 418.

Lichenist (li'ken-ist), n. [L. lichen + -ist.] A lichenologist.

It is only within the last thirty years that it (the origin of the gonidia) has been investigated by Lichenists.

Encyc. Brit., XIV, 550.

Lichenographer (li-ke-nog'ra-fēr), n. One who describes lichens; one who is versed in lichenography.

Lichenographic (li'ken-ō-graf'ik), a. [L. lichenograph (y) + -ic.] Pertaining to lichenography.

Lichenographical (li'ken-ō-graf'ik-al), a. Same as Lichenographic.

Lichenographist (li-ke-nog'ra-fist), n. [L. lichenography + -ist.] Same as Lichenographer.

Lichenography (li-ke-nog'ra-fī), n. [Gr. λειχήν, a lichen, + -γραφία, < γράφω, write.] A systematic treatment or description of lichens; the descriptive portion of lichenology.

Lichenoid (li'ken-oid), a. [Gr. λειχήν, a lichen, + -ειδής, form.] In pathol. and bot., resembling lichen or a lichen; lichen-like; especially, in bot., resembling one of the foliaceous lichens; having a decumbent thallus, irregularly lobed.

Lichenological (li'ken-ō-lōj'ik-al), a. [L. lichenology + -ic.] Of, pertaining, or relating to lichenology or the science of lichens.

From the time of Acharius, the father of Lichenological science, different authors have proposed different classifications of lichens.

Encyc. Brit., XIV, 550.

Lichenologist (li-ke-nol'ō-jist), n. [L. lichenology + -ist.] A specialist in lichenology; one who writes on the science of lichens.

Lichenology (li-ke-nol'ō-jī), n. [Gr. λειχήν, a lichen, + -λογία, < λέγω, speak: see -ology.] That department of botany which treats of lichens.

Lichenops (li'ke-nops), n. [NL. (Commerson), < Gr. λειχήν, a tree-moss, lichen, + ὤψ, the face, countenance: see lichen.] A remarkable genus of South American clamatorial birds of the family Tyrannidae, containing a single species of flycatchers called Ada commersoni by Lesson, and now known as Lichenops peregrinatus.

Lichenose (li'ken-ōs or lich'en-ōs), a. [L. lichen + -ose.] Having the characters of a lichen, or belonging to the Lichenes.

The simplest form under which Lichenose vegetation occurs.

Encyc. Brit., XIV, 552.

Lichenous (li'ken-us or lich'en-us), a. [L. lichen + -ous.] 1. Relating to, resembling, abounding in, or covered with lichens.

An effect something like that of a fine flower against a lichenous branch. George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xxvi.

2. Pertaining to or of the nature of the disease called lichen: as, lichenous eruptions.

Lichen-starch (li'ken-stārch), n. A kind of starch associated with lichenin in Iceland moss.

Lich-fowl (lich'foul), n. [Lit. 'corpse-fowl' (cf. equiv. G. Leichhuhn); < lech¹, lekh¹, + fowl¹.] The night-jar or goatsucker, Caprimulgus europæus: so called from an old superstition.

Lich-gate (lich'gāt), n. [L. lichen + -gate.] A churchyard gate with a porch or shed forming a chapel either combined with it or contiguous to it, in which in England and on the continent it was formerly customary, and is still usual in some places, for a bier to stand during the reading of the introductory part of the service, before it is borne inside; a corpse-gate. It is very commonly nothing more than a simple shed under which is the gate. Also spelled, archaically, lychgate.

Yet to the lychgate, where his chariot stood, Brode from the porch. Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

Lich-gate.

Lich-gate.

Lichens.
a. Cladonia pyxidata; b. Cetraria cucullata.

of the group Lichenes, ordinarily recognisable by its dry aspect and gray, brown, greenish, or blackish color, and its appearance in crusts, scaly patches, or bush-like forms on trees, walls, rocks, etc. Lichens also grow on the ground, and some

...and the

So they went and pitched into the old chap, lickety-cut.
E. S. Phelps, Old Maid's Paradise, p. 167.

Lickety-split (lik'g-ti-split'), adv. [< "Lickety" (see Lickety-cut) + split.] Headlong; very fast. [Slang, U. S.]

I tell you if they didn't whip up an' go lickety-split down that hole.
E. S. Phelps, Old Maid's Paradise, p. 167.

Licking (lik'ing), n. [< ME. licken, < AS. licung, verbal n. of liccan, lick. see lick, v.] 1. The act of one who licks.—2. A beating; a thrashing. [Colloq.]

What, still at your tricking?
I see you won't rest till you've got a good licking.
Barnham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 320.

Lickoury, n. An obsolete spelling of liquor.

Lick-penny (lik'pen'), n. [< lick, v., + obj. penny.] A scoundrel.

Lickpenny (lik'pen'i), n.; pl. lickpennies (-iz). [< late ME. lyckpenny; < lick, v., + obj. penny.] A greedy or covetous person; a grasper. [Scotch.]

You talked of a law-suit—law is a lick-penny, Mr. Tyrrel—no counsellor like the pound in purse.
Scott, St. Ronan's Well, xxviii.

Lickplatter (lik'plat'er), n. [< lick, v., + obj. platter.] A sneaking parasite; a lickspittle.

He had a passion for independence, which, though pushed to excess, was not without grandeur. No lick-platter, no parasite, no toady-eater.
Bulwer, My Novel, vi. 23.

Lick-sauce (lik'sās), n. [< lick, v., + obj. sauce.] Same as lick-dish.

Lick-spigot (lik'spig'ot), n. [< lick, v., + obj. spigot.] A tapster or drawer.

Gotho. Fill lick-spigot.
Drazer. Ad inum, Mr. Manning, Old Law, iv. 1.

Lickspittle (lik'spit'l), n. [< lick, v., + obj. spittle.] One who is abject enough to lick, as it were, another's spittle; a vulgar flatterer or parasite.

Stage-coachmen were . . . comrades to gentlemen, lick-spittles to lords, and the high-priests of horse-flesh.
J. Hawthorne, Dust, p. 3.

Lick-trencher (lik'tren'cher), n. [< lick, v., + obj. trencher.] Same as lickplatter.

Art magnanimous, lick-trencher? Dekker, Satiromastix.

Licmetis (lik-mé'tis), n. [NL. (Wagler, 1830), < Gr. λικμητός, a winnowing, < λικμῶν, winnow, < λικμός, also λικμῶν, a winnowing-fan.] A genus of slender-billed white Australian cockatoos, as L. tenuirostris and L. pinnator. They live on bulbs and roots which they dig out of the ground.

Licorice, liquorice (lik'ō-ris), n. [Formerly also licokrice, lickerice, licourize; < ME. licorice, licoris, lycorice, licoris, etc., = D. lakeris, lakeris = MLG. lackeritze = G. lakeritz = Dan. Sw. lakeritz, < OF. licorice, AF. lycorice, later liquorice; also, in other OF. forms, regalisce, regolice, regolice, regalisce, reglisse, etc., F. régisse = Pr. regalisce, regulecia = Sp. regalis, regalia, regalia = Pg. regalis, regalia = It. regolizia, legurizia, liquiritia, < LL. liquiritia, ML. also liquiritium, corrupted from L. glycyrrhiza, < Gr. γλυκύριζα, the licorice-plant, lit. 'sweet root,' < γλυκύς, sweet, + ρίζα, root.] 1. A leguminous plant, Glycyrrhiza glabra, whose root yields the licorice of commerce. It is a perennial herbaceous plant growing 4 or 5 feet high, sparingly branched, with pinnate leaves and bluish pea-like flowers in spikes. The roots grow several feet long and an inch or more thick. Other plants of the genus are also called licorice.

In all these for sayd yles ys growing wondyr myche licorice, tyme, sage, fygges, Orygans, Pomgranettes, smale licorice, which we call licorice of Corana.
Torkington, Diary of Eng. Travell, p. 31.

2. An economic product, either the root of this plant or an extract from it. The former is called licorice-root or licorice; the latter is called stick-licorice, Spanish juice, or Italian extract of licorice, and is obtained by boiling the crushed root and evaporating the infusion, the residuum being rolled into sticks. The substance thus secured is dry and brittle, with a shining fracture, and when pure is entirely soluble in water, but is often grossly adulterated. Licorice is used medicinally chiefly as a demulcent, especially in bronchial affections. It is also employed in making confectionery, in brewing, and in the manufacture of tobacco. The extract is prepared extensively in Mediterranean Europe, and latterly in the United States from imported root.

But first he cheweth greyn and lycorice
To smellen sweete.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 504.

Indian licorice. See Abrus.—Prickly licorice, Glycyrrhiza ephedra, whose pods are bristly and whose root is used like that of G. glabra.—Wild licorice, (a) Same as Indian licorice. (b) The plant also called red-harrow, Ononis asclepiadea. Its root is used by children in place of licorice. [Prov. Eng.] (c) In America, a member of the true licorice genus, Glycyrrhiza lepidota, found chiefly far north-west; also, Gallium circeanum and G. lanceolatum, on account of a sweetish root. (d) In Australia, Tournefortia corymbosa, a sort of germander.

Licorice-mass (lik'ō-ris-mās), n. Same as licorice-pasta.

Licorice-paste (lik'ō-ris-pāst), n. Crude licorice.

Licorice-vetch (lik'ō-ris-vech), n. A milk-vetch, Astragalus glycyphyllos: so called on account of its sweet root.

Licorice-weed (lik'ō-ris-wēd), n. A wide-spread tropical plant, Scorparia dulcis.

Licorons, licoranyi, etc. See Hokerous, etc.

Licoury, n. An obsolete form of liquor.

Licourize, n. An obsolete form of licorice.

Lictor (lik'tor), n. [L., an attendant on the Roman magistrates, perhaps lit. 'binder,' < ligare (v. lig), bind (with ref. to the fasces or 'bound' rods which they bore, or to binding culprits); otherwise < "licere, summon.] Among the ancient Romans, one of a number of officers, required to be free-born (though freedmen were admitted to the office under the empire), whose functions were to attend a magistrate, bearing the fasces, in some cases with the ax and in others without it, in order to clear the way and enforce due respect, and also to arrest offenders and to scourge or behead condemned persons. Magistrates were entitled to a number of lictors according to their rank, a dictator having twenty-four, a consul twelve, a praetor six (at first only two within the city walls), etc. The Flamen Dialis, or priest of Jupiter, and the Vestals also had lictors, but it is believed, without fasces.

Lictors and rods, the ensigns of their power.
Milton, P. R., iv. 63.

Ho, trumpets, sound a war-note!
Ho, lictors, clear the way!
The Knights will ride, in all their pride,
Along the streets to-day.
Macaulay, Battle of Lake Regulus.

Lidnala (lik-ū-s'la), n. [NL. (Thunberg, 1782), from the native Macassar name.] A genus of palms of the tribe Corypheae, distinguished by the terminal style, valvate corolla, and slightly coherent three-angled carpels. There are about 30 species, natives of tropical and eastern Asia, New Guinea, and northern Australia.

Lid (lid), n. [< ME. lid, < AS. lid (= OFries. lida, lid = D. lid, lid, cover, = MLG. lido, way, passage, = OHG. lūt, lit, MHG. lit, G. lid (in comp. augenlid, augenlid, eyelid), a lid, cover, = Icel. lidh, a gate, gateway, gap, breach, = Dan. Sw. led, wicket, gate), < hīdan, pp. hīden, = OS. hīdan = OFries. hīdita, cover.] 1. A movable cover which closes an aperture or shuts in a cavity, and usually forms an integral part of the structure to which it belongs by being either attached or closely fitted to it: as, the lid of a tea-kettle, stove, chest, or desk.

My Lord, I broke my glass that was in the lid of my snuff-box.
Congreve, Double-Dealer, I. 1.

2. In bot., the upper section of a pyxis, which separates by a transverse line; also, the hood of the leaf in the pitcher-plants; in mosses, the operculum.—3. An eyelid.

The flame o' the taper
Hows toward her, and would under-poop her lids,
To see the enclosed lights. Shak., Cymbeline, II. 2. 20.

4. In coal-mining, a short piece of timber placed on top of a prop to help in supporting the roof.

—5. A coverlet. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

6. One of the covers or boards of a book: as, everything between the lids of the Bible. [Colloq.]—Granular lids. See granular.—Port-lid, one of two shutters, upper and lower, which together close a port-hole. Each shutter has a semicircular piece cut out of it, so that together they fit around the gun. Also called half-port.

Lid-cells (lid'sels), n. pl. In bot., the terminal cells of the neck of an archegonium of a cryptogam, closing for a time its canal. Also called stigmatic cells.

Lidded (lid'ed), a. [< lid + -ed.] Having a lid; covered by a lid. In mining, the top of the bearing part of a pipe is said to be lidded when its usual space is contracted to a small compass or width. Halliwell.

The Persian girl alone,
Serene with argent-lidded eyes.
Tennyson, Arabian Nights.

One minute's while his eyes remained Half lidded, piteous, languid, innocent.
Keats, Cap and Bell, st. 20. (Davies.)

Hidden (lid'en), n. [< A dial. form of leden, led- den.] A saying, song, or story. [Prov. Eng.]

ligger (lid'er), a. A dialectal variant of lither. Also used adverbially.

The horses are grown so ligger fat,
They downa stir out o' the sta'.
Dick o' the Cow (Child's Ballads, VI. 68).

liggeront, n. [< ME. ligrone; < ligger, lither.] A lazy fellow.

I love we schall laugh and hate ligring
To se nows this liggeront her he leggis our lawis.
York Plays, p. 232.

lid-flower (lid'flou'er), n. Any tree or shrub of the genus Calyptanthus, of the natural order Myrtaceae. The upper part of the calyx forms a lid, which falls as the flower opens.

Lidford law. See law.¹

Lidgeri, n. An obsolete term of ledger.¹

Lidgett (lij'et), n. [Also lidgit, equiv. to lidger, ledger: see *ledger*¹ in a similar sense.] A gate. [Prov. Eng.]

Lidless (lid'les), a. [< lid + -less.] Having no lid; especially, having no eyelids; hence, poetically, incapable of closing the eyes; sleepless; perpetually vigilant.

Don't imagine
We will but laugh into thy lidless eyes?
Shelley, Prometheus Unbound, I. 1.
An eye like mine,
A lidless watcher of the public weal.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

Lie (li), v. t.; pret. lay, pp. lain, ppr. lying. [Early mod. E. also lye; < ME. lien, lyen, lygen, lygen, also lyggen, lyggen (> E. dial. lyen) (pret. lay, lai, ley, pl. layen, leyen, laye, loye, pp. layn, loyn, leyen, loye, etc.), < AS. liggan (pret. leg, pl. lægon, pp. legen) = OS. liggan = OFries. liga, lida = D. liggen = MLG. liggen = OHG. ligan, liggan, lican, MHG. ligen, lichen, G. legen = Icel. leggia = Sw. ligga = Dan. ligge = Goth. ligan, lie, = OBulg. lezhati, lie, lezhiti, lay oneself down, = Russ. ležat, lie (etc., the word having a wide development in the Slavic tongues), = L. leg, legi, in deriv. lectus, a bed (> E. lectual, etc.), lectica, a litter (> E. litter), = Gr. root λεχ in an old defective verb λέχων (aor. act. ἔλεξα, ἔλεξα, fut. mid. λέξομαι, aor. mid. ἐλέξην, ἐλέξην, aor. pass. ἐλεχτο, ἔλετο, inf. λέχθαι, etc.), act. lay down (to sleep), pass. lie down, and in deriv. λέχος, a bed, λέκτρον, a bed (> ult. E. lectern, q. v.), λόχος, a lying in wait, ambush, a lurking-place, laïr, etc.; not found in Skt. From the E. verb lie are derived many forms, some of them no longer felt to be connected with lie: namely, from AS. lay, allay, belay, lair, law, layer, ledge, ledge, ledge, ledge, ledge, ledge, etc.; from D. G. or Scand. lauguor, belauguer, lager, log, log, low, etc.; from the L. and Gr. are lectual, litter, lectern, etc.] 1. To rest in a recumbent or prostrate position; remain or be held flatwise, lengthwise, or inclined on a supporting surface; recline or be prone or supine on something.

And some wolde munchen hire mete al alone, Liggynge abedde. Chaucer, Troilus, l. 308.

In that Kyngdom like the body of seynt Thomas the Apostle, in Flesche and Bon, in a laïre Tomb.

When the kynge Lion felt hym so sore wounded,
And saugh his felowes by at erthe dede bledynge, he hadde grete drede.
Mortein (E. E. T. S.), II. 346.

If I do not pull him . . . do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shak., T. N., II. 3. 148.

When the angel bath troubled the water, and made it medicinal for him that is first put in and no more, then to have him many years in expectation, and still to lack a servant, or a friend to do that office, this is a misery.
Donne, Sermons, v.

In strong convulsions panting on the sands
He lies, and grasps the dust with dying hands.
Pope, Iliad, xvii. 307.

2. To be in a quiescent state; be or become quiet or inactive; remain passive or expectant.

Well it shewed by these armes that that hadde not al-way lyen at reste. Mortein (E. E. T. S.), II. 356.

Tho' the Wind lie, yet after a Storm the Sea will work a great while. Selden, Table-Talk, p. 62.

3. To lay or place one's self in a recumbent or prostrate position; take a reclining posture: often followed by down when entire prostration is intended: as, to lie back in a chair; to lie down on the ground.

And he [Eli] answered, I called not, my son; lie down again. 1 Sam. iii. 6.

His mother lay over her castle wa',
And she beheld bath dale and down.
Lausome Brand (Child's Ballads, II. 346).

From off the world I came, and lay Upon the freshly-flower'd slope.
Tennyson, Miller's Daughter.

4. To have place, position, or direction; be situated, set, or settled; stay or abide: as, the Azores lie in the Atlantic ocean; the army lay in a fortified camp.

The napkin, that was about his head, not lying with the linen clothes. John x. 7.

And the Turkes mayne londe like with in it or liy myle of them.
Torkington, Diary of Eng. Travell, p. 17.

Those happy climes that lie
Where day never shuts his eye.
Milton, Comus, l. 977.

The door is open, sir: there lies your way.
Shak., T. of the S., III. 2. 212.

Even when that good king lay in the Isle of Athelney, he had a lidd along with him.
R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xlviii.

54. To be confined or imprisoned.

Well, your imprisonment shall not be long;
I will deliver you, or else lie for you.

Shak., Rich. III., l. 1. 115.

5. To rest or remain in a state or condition; continue inactive or unchanged: as, to lie in soak; the land lies fallow.

All that winter King Edward lay without any molestation by the French King.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 132.

I feel a grudging
Of bounty, and I would not long lie fallow.

B. Jonson, Staple of News, l. 2.

A Row that lies a while unbent, and a field that remains fallow for a time, grow never the worse.

Howell, Letters, l. v. 2.

I have been told, too, there is a law of Charles the Fifth something like our statute of Mortmain, which has lain dormant ever since his time.

Addison, Remarks on Italy (ed. Bohn), l. 430.

As she lay, on that day,

In the Bay of Biscay, O.

A. Cherry, The Bay of Biscay (song).

7. To be in a certain direction; be present in a particular place or thing; be found; exist.

O Regan, Coneril! . . .

O, that way madness lies; let us shun that.

Shak., Lear, iii. 4. 21.

He that thinks that diversion may not lie in hard labour forgets the early rising of the huntsman.

Locks.

Only in thy virtue lies

The saving of our Thebes. Tennyson, Titania.

8. To lodge; pass the night; sleep.

And Kay and Arthur hadde made her bedde atte the chamber dore of kynges Loo, in a corner, like as a squire sholde lye.

Mervin (E. E. T. S.), ll. 180.

Look! here comes a pilgrim. I know she will lie at my house.

Shak., All's Well, iii. 5. 84.

We lay at St. Disier the first night, and at Langres the second.

Gray, Letters, l. 31.

9. To rest; bear; press; weigh: with on or upon.

All the curses that are written in this book shall lie upon him.

Dent, xlix. 20.

Though it should sleep for ever to the world,

It is a simple sin to hide myself,

Which will for ever on my conscience lie.

Beau., and Pl., Philaster, ll. 2.

The reason on their parts why she (the ship) stayed so long, was y^e necessity and danger that lay upon them.

Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 99.

10. In law, to be sustainable; be capable of being maintained: as, an action lies against the tenant for waste.

An appeal lies in this case.

Parsons, C. J.

To lie along. (a) To be extended at full length.

Under an oak.

Shak., As you Like it, ll. 1. 30.

(b) Naut., to careen with the wind abeam, as a ship.—To lie along the land (naut.), to coast, keeping the land in sight.—To lie at, to importune; urge.

She lay at me hard to turn aside with her, promising me all manner of content. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 138.

His mother and brother had lain at him, ever since he came into his master's service, to help him to money.

Essays, of Joan Perry (1676). (Harl. Misc., III. 649.)

To lie at anchor. See anchor.—To lie at one's door. See door.—To lie at one's heart, to be an object of affection, desire, or solicitude to one.

The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Jamaica, for that has ever lien at their hearts.

Sir W. Temple.

To lie by. (a) [By, adv.] (1) To be laid aside, out of present use. (2) To rest; intermit labor; knock off: as, we lay by in the heat of the day.

Every thing that heard him play,

Even the billows of the sea,

Hung their heads, and then lay by.

Shak., Ham. Vill., iii. 1 (song).

(St) Naut., same as to lie to.

We arrived at Righah that night, where we staid; it being the custom going up always to lie by at night, as there are many shoals in the Nile.

Poore, Description of the East, l. 70.

(b) [By, prep.] (1) To remain with; be accessible to, or be in the keeping of: as, he has the documents lying by him.

'Twas a commodity lay fretting by you.

'Twill bring you gain, or perch on the sea.

Shak., T. of the S., ll. 1. 330.

(3) Naut., to remain near, as one ship to another at sea.—To lie down, to be brought to bed; lie in. Compare Scotch downing. [Obsolete or dialectal.]

There is in one of (the chests) . . . a rindlet of honey, which she desires may be sent to her against the lie down.

Wentworth, Hist. New England, l. 465.

To lie for, to lie in wait for; keep watch upon for a sinister purpose. See to lay for, under lay, v. 4.

At this Corfona we were aduertysed of certayne Turkes Fustis that lay for us in our wayes.

Sir R. Gysford, Pilgrimage, p. 11.

To lie hard or heavy on, upon, or (formerly) to, to oppress; burden.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me.

Ps. lxxxviii. 7.

Could I meet 'em

But once a day, it would unloose my heart

Of what lies heavy to 't. Shak., Cor., iv. 2. 48.

To lie in, to be in childbed.

Pol. Come, you must go visit the good lady that lies in. Vv. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers.

Shak., Cor., l. 2. 80.

To lie in a nutshell. See nutshell.—To lie in anyone, to be in the power of; depend on; frequently in such phrase-forms as as much or as far as lies in one.

"O no, no, no," the sheriff said,

"Thou shalt on gallowes dye . . .

If ever in me it lie." Robt. Hood, reciting Will Stutly (Child's Ballads, V. 287).

Imitate him as much as in thec lies.

Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 358.

Nature, so far as in her lies,

Imitates God. Tennyson, On a Mourner.

To lie in the or one's way. (a) To be ready at hand.

King. You have not sought it! how comes it, then?

Pol. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., v. 1. 28.

(b) To be an obstacle or impediment: as, objections that lie in the way of adjustment.

That is a step

On which I must fall down, or else o'erleap,

For in my way it lies. Shak., Macbeth, l. 4. 50.

To lie in wait (formerly also in a wait), to wait for in concealment with hostile intent; lie in ambush.

These homicides alle

That in aways lyggen to mordre men.

Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 404.

To lie low. (a) To avoid observation; conceal one's self. (b) To conceal one's views or intentions. [Slang.]—To lie off. Same as to lie by (a) (2).—To lie on or upon. (a) See def. 9. (b) To be incumbent upon, as an obligation or a duty: as, lie on the plaintiff to maintain his action.

This ceremony lay on me, which I performed with all the decency I could.

Bryden, Diary, June 2, 1872.

After the people were gone out of the chamber, it lay upon me from the Lord to speak to those two, the princess and the countess.

Penn, Travels in Holland, etc.

(c) To depend on.

It nothing stands us

To chide him from our caves; for he perishes,

As if his lie lay on 't. Shak., All's Well, iii. 7. 43.

(d) To importune; urge.

The old dotard, he that so instantly doth lie upon my father for me.

Gascoigne, Supposes, l. 1.

Dame Tullia lay ever upon him, and pricked forward his disordered and troubled mind.

Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 27.

To lie on hand, to be or remain in possession; remain unsold or undisposed of: as, goods that have lain long on hand.—To lie on one's hands. (a) To remain unsold. (b) To be unemployed or remain unemployed; hence, of unoccupied time, with a qualifying word, as heavy, to cause ennui; be tedious: as, the hours lay heavy on my hands.—To lie on one's ears. See ear.—To lie over. (a) To remain unpaid after the time when the payment is due, as a note in bank. (b) To be deferred to some future occasion, as a motion or resolution in a deliberative assembly.—To lie to (naut.), to come to a comparatively stationary position at sea; lie with the head as near the wind as possible, for safety in a gale, as a ship. A ship is said to lie to when her progress is checked by keeping the helm a-lee and counterbalancing the yards or taking in sail, or, if a steamer, by slowing down the engines—in all cases with the head to the wind.

About ten o'clock we got under way, but lay to for breakfast.

Lady Brassey, Voyage of Sunbeam, l. 1.

On the 10th of June the vessel lay to off Madras.

Trevelyan, Macaulay, l. 321.

To lie to one's work, to exert all one's strength or powers in the performance of one's task.

So many workers; and no mercenary mock workers, but real ones that lie freely to 't; each patriot stretches himself against the stubborn globe; hews and wheels with the whole weight that is in him.

Carlyle.

To lie under, to be subject to; suffer; be oppressed by.

They lie under the disadvantage of living like foreigners in their own country.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels, iii. 10.

I lay under greater difficulties, as, in this journey, for certain reasons, I did not take my interpreter with me.

Poore, Description of the East, II. l. 1.

To lie up, to lie at rest; abstain from work or usual activity; go into retirement or retreat.

There they [ships] must lie up, or be 3 or 4 Years in their return from a place which may be sailed in 6 Weeks.

Dampier, Voyages, II. iii. 24.

He has a bad cold—rheumatism—he must lie up for a day or two.

Dickens, Household Words.

The black bear lies up during the day in caves and amongst rocks.

W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 595.

To lie upon the lurch. See lurch.—To lie with. (a) To lodge or sleep with.

I lay with Cassio lately,

And, being troubled with a raging tooth,

I could not sleep. Shak., Othello, iii. 3. 413.

(b) To have carnal knowledge of. [Archaic.]

Master Frook, thou shalt know I will predominate over the peasant, and thou shalt lie with his wife.

Shak., M. W. of W., ll. 2. 285.

(c) To belong to: as, it lies with you to make amends.—Syn. lie, lay. "Lie" is a transitive verb, and has for its preterit laid: as, he told me to lay it down, and I laid it down. Lie is intransitive, and has for its preterit lay: as, he told me to lie down, and I lay down. Some persons blunder by using laid for the preterit of lie: as, he told me to lie down, and I laid down. So persons often say, the ship laid at anchor; they laid by during the storm; the book laid on the shelf, etc. It is only necessary to remember, in all such cases, that laid is the preterit of lay and not of lie. This would save many respectable writers from a gross error which seems to be increasing among us." (Goodrich.) Similarly, laid is often erroneously used for lain: as, I had laid down; and lain is sometimes used for laid.

Lie (II), n. [Lie, v. Cf. lay, n.] 1. Manner of lying; relative direction, position, arrangement, etc. See lay, n., 4.

We shall be able, by a study of the position and lie of the earth in her orbit, to determine from what part of space these regular meteors . . . come.

J. N. Lockyer, Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 538.

The lie of the city [Brindisi] and its haven is truly a sight to be studied.

E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 312.

Mrs. Pention . . . went on with her darning. She had filled up all those great holes, doing them all the more quickly because she had studied the lie of them, and how the threads went, before.

Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xl.

2. The place where a bird, beast, or fish is accustomed to lie or lurk; haunt.

A salmon is said to be swimming when he is moving up the river from pool to pool. At other times he is usually resting in his "stand" or lie, or at most shifting from one stand in a pool to another.

Quarterly Rev., CXXVI. 250, note.

On our way home there lay a long narrow spinney which was a very favorite lie for woodcock, and generally held a pheasant or two as well.

Harper's Mag., LXXVII. 181.

3. In rail., a siding or short offset from the main line, into which trucks may be run for the purpose of loading and unloading; one of the different sets of rails at a terminus on which trucks stand while being loaded or unloaded.

Lie (II), v. 4.; pret. and pp. lied, ppr. lying. [Early mod. E. also lye; < ME. lien, lyen, lygen, lygen, lygen (pret. lowe, also weak, lyged, pp. lowen, -lyge), < AS. leagan (pret. liah, pl. lygon, pp. logon) = OS. hogan = OFries. haga = D. hegen = MLG. legen, leigen = OHG. hogan, MHG. liegen, G. liegen, dial. hogen = Icel. lyga = Dan. lyre = Sw. lyga = Goth. hugan, lie, tell a falsehood, = OBulg. lygati = Russ. lygati, lie. Not found in L., Gr., or Skt. Hence lie, n., and ult. lain, v. and n.] 1. To speak falsely; utter untruth for the purpose of misleading; make a misrepresentation consciously: followed by about, etc., and formerly (and still sometimes colloquially) by on.

If they on hire lie,

Ywis hemself sholde han the vyleyny.

Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 20.

2. To make a false impression, either consciously or unconsciously; hold forth a misleading or deceitful appearance; act or manifest an untruth: used of both persons and things.

I trowe that countenance cannot lie

Whose thoughts are legible in the eye.

M. Roydon, Elegy, l. 107.

When London's column, pointing at the skies,

Like a tall bully, lifts the head and lies.

Pope, Moral Essays, III. 340.

To lie in one's teeth or in one's throat, to lie flagrantly and basely.

He will on Musgrave's body prove

He lies most foully in his throat.

Scott, L. of L. M., v. 20.

Lie (II), n. [Early mod. E. also lye; < ME. lie, lye, lyge, < AS. lyge, lyge = OHG. lygi, MHG. lyge, Iuc. G. lyga, lyga = Icel. lygi, a lie; also, with diff. suffix, OS. lygina = D. leugen, logon = MLG. logon = OHG. lygina = Dan. Sw. lygn = Goth. huga, a lie (cf. lain); from the verb: see lie, v.] 1. A false statement made with the purpose of deceiving; an intentional untruth; a falsehood; the utterance by speech or act of that which is false, with intent to mislead or delude.

Tell them that I will not come to-day:

Cannot, is false. . . . Shall Caesar send a lie?

Shak., J. C., II. 2. 65.

It is the wilful deceit that makes the lie. . . a man may act a lie, as by pointing his finger in a wrong direction, when a traveller inquires of him his road.

Paley, Moral Philos., III. l. 18.

Guido pronounced the story one long lie.

Browning, Ring and Book, l. 118.

A lie which is half a truth is ever the blindest of lies.

Tennyson, The Grandmother.

2. That which is intended or serves to deceive or mislead; anything designed or adapted to produce false conclusions or expectations: as, this epitaph is a lie.

Sepulchral lies, our holy walls to grace.

Pope, Dunciad, l. 43.

Wishing this lie of life were o'er.

French.

A lie out accordance with fact, and not meant to be understood literally.

Have you great heroic virtues?—no?—then remember Ananias and Sapphira. They died for a single White Lie,—a White Lie as common as dirt.

C. Roode, White Lies, xlv.

—Gyn. Untruth, deception. Compare liē.

*lie*¹, n. An obsolete spelling of *lye*³.

*lie*², n. An obsolete form of *leel*³.

*lie*³, n. An obsolete form of *lees*³.

lie (lī-ā'), a. [F. lie, pp. of lier, bind, < L. ligare, bind: see *lien*³.] In her., same as stringed.

lie-a-bed (lī-ā-bed), n. One who lies long in bed in the morning. [Colloq.]

If you had got up time enough, you might have secured the stage, but you are a lazy lie-a-bed.

Foots, Mayor of Garratt, I.

David was none of your lie-a-beds. He rose at five in summer, six in winter.

C. Roode, Love me Little, x.

Lieberkühn (lī-ber-kūn), n. [Named after its inventor, J. N. Lieberkühn: see Lieberkühnian.] An annular reflector attached to the nose of the object-glass of a microscope for bringing the light to a focus on an opaque object.

Lieberkühnia (lī-ber-kū-nī-ā), n. [NL., < Lieberkühn: see Lieberkühnian.] A genus of Imperforate foraminifera of the family Gromiidae. They have no test, and the pseudopodia are given off from only a small part of the body, the rest being naked and flexible.

Lieberkühnian (lī-ber-kū-nī-an), a. Pertaining to or named after Johann Nathanael Lieberkühn (1711–56), an anatomist of Berlin.—Lieberkühnian glands, the simple follicles or crypts of Lieberkühn, which stud nearly the whole tract of the small intestine. They are minute tubes with one blind end, the other opening into the intestine, where their orifices may be seen with a lens, like little dots between the villi. Their walls consist of a delicate basement membrane lined with columnar epithelial cells. The purpose served by their secretion is doubtful. They vary in length from $\frac{1}{16}$ to $\frac{1}{8}$ inch, with a diameter of $\frac{1}{16}$ inch.

Liebigite (lī-bīg-īt), n. [Named after Justus, Baron von Liebig (1803–73), a celebrated German chemist.] A hydrous carbonate of uranium and calcium occurring as an incrustation on uraninite.

lied (lēt), n. [G., = AS. lōth, a song: see *lay*³.] Properly, a German ballad, secular or sacred, fitted for singing or actually set to music. A volkslied is a liod whose origin is among the common people and is merely traditional: a volkslied hümlich lied is one that is deliberately written in the general style of a volkslied: a trunklied is one that is designedly and obviously artistic rather than naive. The lied stands in the same relation to poetry and music in Germany as the chanson in France or the ballad in England. The term is also more or less extended to other than German songs.

Liederkrantz (lī-dēr-krānts), n. [G., < Lieder, pl. of lied, a song, + krantz, a garland: see crantz.] A German choral society, especially one composed of men only; a glee-club. See Hedertafel.

Liedertafel (lī-dēr-tā-fel), n. [G., < Lieder, pl. of lied, a song, + tafel = E. table.] A German choral society or glee-club of men; a Liederkrantz; also, a social, informal meeting or rehearsal of such a society.

lie-de-vin (lī-dē-vān'), n. [F.: lie, lees; de, of; vin, wine.] The color of the lees of wine, or a color supposed to be of that hue: a name given to a deep-red color in porcelains, etc.

lie (lē), a. [E. mod. lie, also leef, leafe; < ME. leef, lefe, lefe, lewe; < AS. lōf = OH. lōf = OFries. lōf = D. lōf = MLG. lōf = OHG. lōb, MHG. lōp, G. lieb = Icel. ljúf = Sw. ljuf = Goth. lubs, dear, beloved, = OBulg. lubs = Russ. lubs, dear (etc., being widely developed in Slavic); akin to L. lubet, libet, it pleases, Skt. √ lubh, desire: see liberal. From the same root, and in close relation to lie, are believe, believe, *love*¹, *love*², *love*³, and the disguised compounds furlough, leman, etc.: see these words. From the L. verb are ult. E. liberat, liberate, liberty, etc., *liber*¹, *liber*², *liber*³, etc.] I. a. 1. Beloved; pleasing; agreeable. [Obsolete or archaic.]

He seyde, John, myn hooste, lie and deere.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, i. 815.

Loue made the to me so liefe
That I (Christ) for the wente on Roode;
I suffryde dehte to change thy grete.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 188.

A liefer lass than this had been Coridon had never seen.
Greene, Description of the Shepherd and his Wife.

And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up
My liefe liege to be mine enemy.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 164.

Yet now, I charge thee, quickly go again,
As thou art liefe and dear, and do the thing
I bade thee.
Tempest, Morte d'Arthur.

2†. Inclined; disposed; willing; having a preference.

Though I it seye, I am not liefe to gabbe.

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 334.

Hane thou not to manye wordis; to swere be thou not leafe;
For alle such maners comen to an yuel pree.
Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 22.

lie or leath, willing or averse; ready or reluctant; willingly.

We hem leif other loth William at last

Keured with the kinges some out of the kene pene.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3224.

Cast in your nette: but be you liefe or lothe,

Hold you content as fortune list assyne.

Sir T. More, To them that sake Fortune.

To have as liefe, to have liefer (had as liefe, had liefer or liever). See explanation of these phrases under have.—To have lieft (= D. lieft = G. liebsten, etc.), to hold dear; love.

"Haddes I hym nevere lieft?" By God, I wene

Yet hadde I nevere thyng so lieft!" quod she.

Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 900.

II.† n. One beloved; a darling.

Cryseyde, which that is thi liefe,

Now loveth the as wel as thou dost hire.

Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 611.

lie (lē), adv. [< lie, a.] Gladly; willingly. Lie is peculiarly used (originally an adjective) in the constructions to have as lie, to have liefer (had as liefe, had liefer or liever), etc. See under have.

lieft, n. [Early mod. E. leafekyn, < MD. lieft = G. liebchen; as lie + -kin.] Darling. Palgrave, Acolastus.

liefesome (lēf'sum), a. [Also dial. leesome, < ME. lēsum (= OHG. liebsam); < lie + -some.] Agreeable.

So forth I gae space to see that leefsome sight,
And with a kisse, methinks, I say, welcome my lord, my knight.

Surrey, Complaint of the Absence of her Louer.

lieutenant, n. An obsolete form of lieutenant. liege (lēj), a. and n. [< ME. lege, lige, lyge, liege, < OF. lige, lege = Pr. lige = It. ligio (ML. reflex ligius, legius), liege, free (AF. heignour lige, OF. lige seigneur, liege lord, home lige, liege man, a liege lord being the lord of a free band, and his liege men privileged free men, bound to him, but free from other service, even that of their sovereign); < MHG. ledic, ledec, free, unhindered, empty; G. ledig, empty, vacant, = MLG. ledich, ledich = MD. ledich, idle, unemployed, = Icel. ledhugr, free, unhindered (not found in Goth.); prob. formed (as an adj. in -ig, E. -y) on the noun remaining in ME. lethe, leisure, = MD. lede, in neg. unlede, business, trouble. Cf. AS. unlǣde = Goth. unlǣda, poor, > unlǣdi, poverty. The history of the word is incomplete.] I. a. 1. Free; specifically, free from obligation to service except as within the relations of lord and vassal: as, a liege lord, a liege man (correlative terms implying protection on the one side and service on the other, as against all other claims).

I schal love him lell as my liege brother.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 4128.

It hath pleased God to grant us a natural liege king and lord of our own nation.

Lathmer, 1st Sermon bet. Edw. VI., 1549.

One would think that by his royal Patent, which gave him Power of Life and Death over the King's liege People, Sir W. Raleigh should become rector in curia, and free from all old Convictions.

Hovell, Letters, ii. 61.

2. Of or pertaining to the tie reciprocally connecting vassal and chief: as, liege vassalage.—liege homage. See homage.—liege lord. See II., 2.—liege man. See liege man.

II. n. 1. A liegeman; a subject; a vassal; hence, a law-abiding citizen; a peaceably disposed person: as, to disturb the lieges.

The sowdan and his baronage

And alle his lieges shulde yuristred be.

Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale, l. 142.

"For kings, and all that are in authority," we may yet enlarge, and pray for a peaceable reign, true lieges, strong armies.

Jos. Taylor, Works (ed. 1855), i. 228.

2. A liege lord; one to whom another is bound in fealty or vassalage; a sovereign lord or feudal superior; a lord paramount.

Most mighty liege, and my companion peers.

Shak., Rich. II., i. 3. 22.

And glory to our sovereign liege, King Henry of Navarre.

Macaulay, Ivry.

liegedom (lēj'dum), n. [< liege + -dom.] Allegiance. [Rare.]

Sceptre, robe, and crown, liegedom and seignorie.

Scott, Bridal of Triermain, iii. 26.

liegeman (lēj'man), n.; pl. liegemen (-men). [< ME. lege man, lege man, orig. as two words: see liege and man.] A vassal; a subject; one bound to the service or support of a sovereign lord.

He morte thinks yt is his liege man,
And is his treasour, and his gold in cofre.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 279.

You shall become true liegemen to his crown.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 4. 122.

liege-poultie (lēj'poulti), n. [< ME. (Sc.) liege poultie, < OF. liege poultie, free sovereignty; liege, free; poultie, < L. potestas (-t-), power, sovereignty: see liege and poultie.] In Scots law, that state of health in which a person has full power to dispose, mortis causa or otherwise, of his heritable property.

lieger, n. An obsolete form of *lieger*¹.

*lien*¹ (lī'en), An obsolete or archaic past participle of *lie*¹.

*lien*² (lī'en or lī'en, commonly lēn), n. [< F. lien, a band, tie, = Pg. ligamen, a hindrance, band (to marriage), = It. ligame, a band, tie, < L. ligamen, a band, < ligare, bind, tie: see ligament.] 1. In law: (a) The right of a person having possession of the property of another to retain it until some charge upon it or some demand due him is satisfied; the right to enforce a charge upon a specific thing by withholding possession from the owner until the charge is satisfied. A particular lien is a right to retain a thing for some charge or claim growing out of the identical thing or connected with it; a general lien is a right to retain the thing for a general balance either of all accounts between the parties, without restriction, or of accounts of like transactions, or in the same line of business. At common law possession was essential to the existence of a lien; courts of equity extended the doctrine. Hence—(b) A right of a creditor to have a debt or charge satisfied by legal proceedings out of specific property or its proceeds, irrespective of having possession. Often called an equitable lien. Maritime liens, the creation of courts of admiralty, are also independent of possession. So are mechanics' liens, given by statute to mechanics, etc., for unpaid labor, on real property. See below. Hence—2. A claim; occasion of demand; right to compensation.

The slightest thing will serve in Italy, for a lien upon your exchequer. T. B. Aldrich, Pontopoc to Peeth, p. 44.

Attorney's lien, the right of an attorney, which was established on equitable principles by the courts, and extended in some jurisdictions by statute, to have his compensation satisfied out of the cause of action or the judgment recovered by him, or by retaining his client's papers, even if this prevented his client from compromising and settling with the adversary.—Charging lien, the right of an attorney to have a lien created or declared as a charge upon a fund not in his possession, or upon a judgment or decree recovered by him.—Lien de droit, in French law, obligation; nexus.—Mechanics' lien, a lien on real property, given by statutes in most of the United States, to mechanics and material-men, for the price or value of improvements supplied by them, even though not contracted for directly by the owner. Two systems exist: in one (of which the law of New York is an example) the subcontractors and material-men are subrogated to the claim of the contractor against the owner, and may charge the land with liens up to the amount due from the owner to the contractor; in the other system (of which the Pennsylvania law is a leading example) the subcontractors and material-men are given a lien to the amount of what they have furnished, irrespective of the state of the accounts between the owner and the contractor, the theory of the law being that the contractor is the owner's agent for the purposes of employing labor and material.—Retaining lien, the right of an attorney to retain papers in his possession belonging to a client until his claim against the client for services has been satisfied.—Specific lien, a lien secured by a contract or a judgment, execution, attachment, or other legal proceeding, fastening it on a specific thing.—Vendor's liens, a class of equitable liens arising where a seller conveys land without being paid the price or taking security, and is allowed to have the land resold to raise it.

*lien*³ (lī'en), n.; pl. lienes (lī-e-nēs). [L.] The spleen. [Rare.]

lienculus (lī-eng'kū-lus), n.; pl. lienculi (-li). [NL., dim. of L. lien, the spleen: see *lien*³.] One of the small separate masses of splenic tissue sometimes found about the spleen.

lien-holder (līn'hōl'dēr), n. One who holds a lien.

lienio-intestinal (lī'e-nō-in-tes'ti-nāl), a. Pertaining to the spleen and to the intestine: applied to a vein of the portal system, which brings blood from the spleen and intestine to the liver.

liemomalacia (lī'e-nō-mā-lā-si-ā), n. [NL., < L. lien, the spleen, + Gr. malakia, softness, < malakōs, soft.] In pathol., softening of the spleen.

lienor (lī'nōr), n. One who has a lien.

lienteric (lī-en-ter'ik), a. [< L. lientericus, < Gr. lienteron, lienteria, < lienteria, lienteric, relating to or affected with lienteric.]

lienteric (lī-en-ter'ik), n. [= F. lienteric = Sp. It. lienteria, < Gr. lienteria, the passing one's food without digesting, < liēos, smooth, + enteron, an intestine: see enteron.] In pathol., a form of diarrhea in which, from excessive peristalsis, the aliments are discharged undigested, and with little alteration in either color or substance.

lier (li'ér), n. [ME. lier; < liel + -er. Cf. the variant forms ligger, lüger, lodger.] One who lies down; one who rests or remains.

He wist not that there were liers in ambush against him. Josh. viii. 14.

lier², n. An obsolete spelling of lier.

lier³, n. Same as *lier*².

lierne (li-ern'), n. [F.; perhaps for lienne, the warp-thread in which the wool has not passed, < lier, < L. ligare, bind: see *lier*².] In arch., any rib in vaulting that does not rise from the impost, and is not a ridge-rib, but passes from a boss or intersection of the principal ribs to other secondary ribs. Vaults in which such ribs are employed are called lierne vaults.

lie-tea (li'té), n. [Pidgin-English.] Spurious or adulterated tea sometimes palmed off or attempted to be palmed off on the tea-market by Chinese dealers. It usually consists of willow or other leaves, with tea-leaves and broken stems, fired and prepared as genuine tea.

lieu (li), n. [F. lieu, OF. lu, lou = Pr. luoc, loo = It. luco, luogo, < L. locus, a place: see locus.] Place; room; stead; now only in the phrase in lieu of, which is equivalent to instead of.

One would think it a very large offer to give so great a lieu for so small a service. Sp. Andrews, Sermons, V. 543.
The topmost spire of the mountain was lilles in lieu of snow. Tennyson, Voyage of Maelduna.

lieut. An abbreviation of lieutenant as a title.

Lieutenancy (li- or lef-ten'-an-si), n.; pl. lieutenancies (-sies). [< lieutenant + -cy.] 1. The office, authority, or incumbency of a lieutenant. — 2. The jurisdiction of a lieutenant; a district or territory over which a lieutenant exercises authority.

To this purpose were several other congratulations or addresses to the King (some before, some after this of Mid-dieses), viz. from Norwich, from Hereford, from the Lieutenancy of London. Baker, Charles II., an. 1652.

3. Lieutenants collectively. [Rare.]

Lieutenant (li- or lef-ten'-ant), n. [*Formerly also lieftenant, leftenant; < ME. levetenant, < OF. lieutenent, F. lieutenant = It. locotenente < ML. locum tenen(-t)s, one who holds the place of another: L. locum, soc. of locus, place; tenen(-t)s, ppr. of tenere, hold: see lieu and tenant. Cf. locum-tenens.] 1. In general, one who holds the place of another in the performance of any duty or function; one authorized to act in lieu of another, or employed to carry out his will or purposes; the substitute or representative of a superior.*

My syster sone, Sir Mordreds hym selvene, Saille be my lieutenante, with lordchipes ynwete, Of alle my lole lege-mene, that my landes gemes. Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 646.

Thou shalt be my lieutenant, monster, or my standard. Shak., Tempest, iii. 2. 18.

2. One who holds an office, civil or military, in subordination to or as the representative of a superior; an officer authorized to perform certain functions in the absence or under the orders of another: as, the Lieutenant of the Tower of London; the lord Lieutenant of Ireland or of an English county (considered the direct representative of the sovereign). Particularly—(a) In the army, a commissioned officer next in rank below a captain, and commanding the company in his absence. In the United States this officer is called first lieutenant, and has under him a subordinate officer called second lieutenant. (b) In the navy, a commissioned officer next in rank below a lieutenant-commander in the United States and a commander in Great Britain, and in both ranking with captains in the army. In the United States navy the term lieutenant (junior grade) has been substituted for the old term master, ranking with first lieutenants in the army. In the British navy the corresponding grade is called sub-lieutenant. In the British navy the lieutenants on board a ship are designated as first, second, third, etc. The term first lieutenant in the United States navy has been replaced by executive officer. (c) In the early days of the colony of Virginia, the chief officer of a county, corresponding somewhat to the lord Lieutenant of an English county. Abbreviated, as a title, Lieut. — Field-marshal Lieutenant. See field-marshal. — Lord Lieutenant. See lord.
Lieutenant-colonel (li-ten'-ant-kér-nél), n. A military officer next in rank below a colonel, and in some European armies commonly the actual commander of a regiment, the colonelship being honorary.

Lieutenant-commander (li-ten'-ant-kq-man'-der), n. A commissioned officer in the United States navy, of a grade intermediate between that of commander and that of lieutenant, and ranking with a major in the army.

Lieutenant-general (li-ten'-ant-jen'-e-ral), n. 1. A military officer ranking in the United States and British armies next below a general. In the German army he ranks below a general of infantry and above a major-general, and commands a division. The only persons who have hitherto held this rank in the United States army are Generals Washington, Grant, Sherman, and Sheridan. Gen. Scott held the rank of brevet lieutenant-general. See general.

2. In the proprietary government of Maryland, the deputy of the proprietor, who acted as governor of the province for him. — Lieutenant-general of the kingdom, a title sometimes held by a regent of France when there was no recognized king, or when the king was in a state of disability.

Lieutenant-governor (li-ten'-ant-guv'-ér-nor), n. An officer authorized to perform the functions of a governor in case of the absence, disability, or death of the latter, or in a subordinate governorship. In the United States the lieutenant-governor of a State has some independent duties, and is entitled not only to act as governor ad interim, but to succeed to the office if it becomes vacant during his electoral term. In some parts of the British empire lieutenant-governor is the actual governor of a district or province, under a governor-general or other chief magistrate of the territory of which it is a part.

Lieutenant-governorship (li-ten'-ant-guv'-ér-nor-ship), n. [< lieutenant-governor + -ship.] The office of lieutenant-governor.

Lieutenantry (li- or lef-ten'-an-tri), n. [< lieutenant + -ry.] Lieutenancy.

If such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenantry. Shak., Othello, ii. 1. 173.

Lieutenanthip (li- or lef-ten'-ant-ship), n. [< lieutenant + -ship.] The state or office of a lieutenant; lieutenancy.

liever (li'é-vér). Comparative of lief.

Lievrite (liév'rit), n. [Named after C. H. Lievrière, a French mineralogist (1752-1835).] Same as lievite.

life (li), n.; pl. lives (livz). [*< ME. lif, lif (dat. livo), < AS. lif, life, = OS. lif, liff = OFries. lif = D. lif, life, body, = MLG. lif = OHG. lib, lip, life, MHG. lip, life, body, G. leib, body, = Icel. lif (also lif), life, = Dan. liv = Sw. lif, life, = Goth. *leif (not found; cf. lives, life, from the same root, and fuirhus = AS. feorh, life), lit. 'continuance,' associated with lifan, live, lit. remain, continue, lifan* (pret. láf*, pl. lifon*, pp. lifon*), in comp. belifan = OS. bilifan = OHG. bilifan, MHG. belifan, bilifan, G. bleiben, etc., = Goth. bilifan, etc., remain, be left (see leave), akin to Gr. aimapiv, persistent, persevering, aimapiv, persist, persevere. Hence in comp. (orig. phr.) alive, by aphæresis live.] 1. The principle of animate corporeal existence; the capacity of an animal or a plant for self-preservation and growth by the processes of assimilation and excretion, the permanent cessation of which constitutes death; that state of an animal or a plant in which its organs are in actual performance of their functions, or are capable of performing their functions, though the performance has not yet begun, or has begun but incompletely, or has been temporarily suspended; vitality.*

Deed men he reisid from deeth to lyus. Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 47.

The Lord God . . . breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. Gen. ii. 7.

Noble mother, Can you kill that you gave life? are my years Fit for destruction? Pletcher, Bonduca, iv. 4.

Seeing, then, that in all cases we may consider the external phenomena as simply in relation, and the internal phenomena also as simply in relation, the broadest and most complete definition of life will be—The continuous adjustment of internal relations to external relations. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 80.

Life is the state of an organized being in which it maintains, or is capable of maintaining, its structural integrity by the constant interchange of elements with the surrounding media. O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 201.

2. Duration of the animate existence of an individual; the whole or any period of animate existence; the time between birth and death, or any part of it from a given point till death: as, life is but a span; to hold office for life.

Mannis lif here is but a day Agens the lif that sure shall be. Hymns to Virgin, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 24.

Health and long life to you, Master Silence. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 2. 54.

As men buy Leases, for three times and downward. Milton, Church-Government, ii., Int.

A life spent worthily should be measured by a nobler line—by deeds, not years. Sheridan, Duenna, iv. 1.

3. The principle or state of conscious spiritual existence: as, the life of the soul.

This life, whereof our nerves are scant, Oh life, not death, for which we pant, More life, and fuller, that I want. Tennyson, Two Voices.

4. Duration of existence or activity in general; term of continuance, usefulness, or efficiency; the time during which anything lasts, or has force or validity: as, the life of a machine; the life of a lease; the enterprise had a short life.

In turning or planning steel the life of the tools used upon it is greatly increased if it has been thoroughly annealed. C. P. B. Shelley, Workshop Appliances, p. 234.

In London, [electrical] lamps can now be obtained whose life is guaranteed for a thousand hours. Science, IV. 161.

The life of a rope appears to be about a year and a half. Hankins, Steam Engine, App. p. 533.

5. The state or condition of being alive; individual manifestation of existence: as, to save or lose one's life.

And yf they do any trespass wherof may fall perill of lif and lym [etc.]. Charter of London (Rich. II.), Arnold's Chron., p. 15.

I beg mortality, Rather than life preserved with infamy. Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 5. 22.

6. Embodied vitality; vital force in material forms; living beings in the aggregate: as, a high or a low type of life; the absence of life in the desert.

Full nature swarms with life. Thomson, Spring, l. 137.

From the life that fills the flood To that which warbles through the vernal wood. Pope, Essay on Man, l. 215.

The noise of life begins again. Tennyson, In Memoriam, xli.

7. A corporeal existence; a living being; one who or that which has life; a person: now used only with reference to persons as lost or saved, but formerly of a person generally: as, many lives were lost.

How lounge he is to eche lif a londe and a watere. Piers Plowman (C), xvi. 12.

An awful thought, a life removed, The human-hearted man I loved. Tennyson, In Memoriam, xlii.

8. Source or means of living; that which makes or keeps alive; vivifying principle; an essential vital element, as food or the blood.

Why, there you touch'd the life of our design. Shak., T. and C., ii. 2. 194.

Genial Day, What balm, what life is in thy ray! Moore, Lalla Rookh, The Fire-worshippers.

The warm life came issuing through the wound. Pope, Iliad, iv. 606.

The Lord of all, himself through all diffus'd, Sustains, and is the life of all that lives. Cowper, Task, vi. 222.

9. A vital part of the body; a life-spot or vulnerable point.

The boat approached near enough to "set" the hand-lance into her life, dispatching the animal [a whale] at a single dart. C. M. Seamon, Marine Mammals, p. 25.

10. Condition, quality, manner, or course of living; career: as, high or low, married or single life; to lead a gay life; to amend one's life; the daily life of a community.

When they were alle come, thei ledde alle symple lyf and honeste. Martin (E. E. T. S.), l. 97.

They litle diffred for their maner of life from the very brute beasts of the field. Fritsch, Arts of Eng. Poetic, p. 4.

He hath a dally beauty in his life That makes me ugly. Shak., Othello, v. 1. 19.

It is like they might have lived here happily enough, had their inclinations led them to a quiet life. Dampier, Voyages, II. l. 107.

11. In theol., that kind of spiritual existence which belongs to God, is manifested in Christ, and is imparted through faith to the believer; hence, a course of existence devoted to the service of God, possessed of the felicity of his fellowship, and to be consummated after death.

I am the resurrection and the life. John xi. 25.
To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Rom. viii. 6.

The soul flows into the human mind, and conveys with it the life which it receives, without interruption, from the Lord. Suendenborg, Christian Psychology (tr. by Gorman), p. 70.

12. An account of a person's career and actions; a personal history; a biography: as, Pintarch's Lives; Johnson's Lives of the Poets.

Pintarch . . . that writes his life, Tells us that Cato dearly loved his wife. Pope, Epilogue to Rowe's "Jane Shore."

13. Vivid show of animate existence; animation; spirit; vivacity; energy in action, thought, or expression: as, to put life into one's work.

Rem negligent agit. He goes carelessly about the matter. He puts no life into the matter. He doth it as though he cared not whether he did it or no. Terence in English (1616). (Newman.)

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words. Johnson.

Eyes of intense life looking out from a weary, beaten face.
George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, vii. 5.

14. An animating force or influence; anything that quickens or enlivens; a source of vital energy, happiness, or enjoyment; hence, that which is dear as life (in this sense often used as an epithet of endearment): as, he was the life of the company; his books were his life.

That is the only place of trade in the country, and Trade is the Life of a Chinese.
Dampier, Voyages, II. 1. 15.
And Deborah, my life, grief, you know, is dry; let us have a bottle of the best gooseberry-wine.
Goldsmith, Vicar, xvii.

15. The living form and expression; hence, reality in appearance or representation; living semblance; actual likeness: as, to draw from the life; he looks the character to the life.

There was never counterfeit of passion came so near the life of passion.
Shak., Much Ado, II. 3. 110.

I would your lordship did but see how well
This fury doth become you! It doth show
So near the life as it were natural.

Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, II. 1.

The Ecce Homo, shut up in a frame of velvet, for the life and accurate finishing exceeding all description.

Evelyn, Diary, March 1, 1644.

16. An insurance on a person's life; a life-insurance policy.

He renewed two lives which had dropped.

Mrs. Henry Wood, The Channings, I. 243.

A case or matter of life and death, an extremely critical or pressing case, as one in which life is at stake.—Brethren and Clerks of the Common Life. See brother.—Canonical life. See canonical.—Change of life. See change.—Equal decrease of life. See decrement.—Expectation of life. See expectation.—For life. (a) For the whole term of one's existence: as, a pension for life; estate for life; imprisonment for life. (b) So as to save, or as if to save, one's life: as, to run for life; to swim for life.

As from a bear a man would run for life.

Shak., C. of E., III. 2. 158.

High life. See high.—In life, in the world. [Colloq.]

"Hallo!" responded that gentleman, looking over the side of the chaise with all the coolness in life.

Dickens, Pickwick, I.

Life annuity. See annuity.—Life or lives in being, in law, a phrase used in limiting the power of grantor or testator to suspend the absolute power of alienation of property, the general policy of modern law being that such power shall not be suspended by putting property in trust or otherwise except for a period expressly limited so as to expire on the decease of the last survivor of specified persons in being at the time the will or deed takes effect. In some jurisdictions the limit is two lives or three lives.—Life of an execution, the period prescribed by law or by the terms of an execution within which it ought to be returned to the court.—Line of life. See line.—Organic life. (a) That life which is common to all organized beings, as animals and plants; life in an ordinary sense. (b) That life which belongs properly to the most vital organs, as the heart, brain, or lungs; distinguished from the more vegetative life of the organs of nutrition, for example, whose functions may be temporarily suspended without causing death.—Still life, in art. See still-life.—To bring to life, to restore (that which is apparently dead); revive; resuscitate.—To come to life, to revive as from apparent death; be reanimated: as, a drooping plant comes to life in water.—To the life, so as closely to resemble the original, as a picture; hence, exactly; perfectly: as, a portrait drawn to the life. [Life is used in a number of compounds the meaning of which in most cases is sufficiently obvious: as, life-consuming, life-preserving, etc.] = Syn. Animation, Life, Liveliness, etc. See animation.

life (lif', interj.). An abbreviation of God's life, used as an oath: an interjection of impatience.

Life! had she none to gull but poor promoters?

Middleton, Chaste Maid, II. 2.

She once had past that way; he heard her speak;

She scared him: life! he never saw the like.

Tennyson, Princess, I.

life-and-death (lif'-and-deth'), a. Noting a matter of life or death; critical; desperate.

The life-and-death struggle between the King and the Commons.
New Princeton Rev., IV. 145.

life-arrow (lif'-ar'), n. An arrow carrying a line or cord, fired from a gun for the purpose of establishing communication between a vessel and the shore in cases of shipwreck. The arrow-head has large barbs, so that it may readily catch in the ship's rigging.

life-belt (lif'-belt), n. An inflatable belt, generally of india-rubber, or a belt made of several pieces of cork fastened together, used to support the body in the water.

life-blood (lif'-blad), n. and a. I. n. 1. The blood necessary to life; vital blood.

Patient the sickening victim eyed
The life-blood ebb in crimson tide Down his dog's head and shaggy limb.

Scott, L. of the L., III. 3.

2. That which is essential to the existence or strength of something; that which constitutes or gives strength and energy. Also life's-blood, or, preferably, life's blood.

Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth infect
The very life-blood of our enterprise.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., IV. 1. 29.

Begone, sweet life-blood; if I should discern Thyself but touched for my sake, I should die.

B. Jonson, Postaster, IV. 6.

3. In pathol., the more or less constant spasmodic quivering of the eyelid or lip: also called life's-blood, live-blood, and cillo.

That curious muscular sensation or quiver, to which the vulgar give the name of live blood.

S. W. Richardson, Diseases of Modern Life, p. 168.

II. a. Necessary as blood to life; essential. [Rare.]

Those devout prelates . . . set at nought and trample under foot all the most sacred and life-blood Laws, Statutes, and Acts of Parliament.

Milton, Reformation in Eng., II.

life-boat (lif'-böt), n. A boat constructed for the special purpose of saving life at sea in stormy weather, especially in case of shipwreck. Life-boats are sharp at both ends, and those carried by ships are light and strong, and of great buoyancy, obtained either by air-chambers of metal or by cork cylinders under the thwarts. On the coasts of the United States and Great Britain and of some other countries, life-boats are stationed at intervals along the shore, to assist shipwrecked seamen. These boats vary in construction, according to the nature of the coast. On the sandy sea-coast of the United States a light surf-boat is used, while on the shores of the British Isles and on the great American lakes a much heavier boat is in common use.

life-breath (lif'-breth), n. The breath of life; that which imparts or sustains life; a vivifying principle or agency. [Rare.]

The functions of the staff are the army's life-breath.

N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 454.

life-buoy (lif'-boi), n. See buoy, 2.

life-car (lif'-kär), n. A water-tight chamber used for conveying people ashore from a wreck. Connection between the shore and the ship is established by means of a line-throwing gun, and the car is drawn backward and forward along a guide-rope by means of cords manned on the wrecked vessel and on shore.

life-cord (lif'-körd), n. Same as life-strap.

And to the brain, the soul's bed-chamber, went,
And gnaw'd the life-cords there.

Donne, Progress of the Soul.

life-cycle (lif'-si'kl), n. The whole cycle or series of vital phenomena exhibited by an organism in its successive stages of development from the ovum; life-history.

life-day (lif'-dä), n. [ME. lyfe-day, lyf-day, lyf-dag, < AS. lyfdæg, lifetime, < lyf, life, + dag, day, period.] Lifetime.

Presares huc mentemyneth

To holde lemmanes and lobytyes all at hys dayes.

Piers Plowman (C), IV. 188.

life-drop (lif'-drop), n. A vital drop; a drop of one's heart's blood.

Thou know'st my deeds, my breast devoid of fear,
And hostile life-drops dim my gory spear.

Byron, Nisus and Euryalus, Paraphrase from Eneld, ix.

life-estate (lif'-es-tät'), n. An estate the tenure of which is measured by the duration of a life. See estate for life, under estate.

life-everlasting (lif'-ev-er-läs'ting), n. Cudweed or everlasting; the species of the genus Gnaphalium.

life-ful (lif'-fül), a. [life + -ful.] 1. Full of life; lively. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Tiberius life-full eyes and well-sid vaines.

Marston, The Fawne, I. 2.

Thus he life-ful spake.

Keats, Endymion, I.

2. Giving life.

Like life-ful heat to nummed senses brought.

Spenser, F. Q., VI. xl. 45.

life-giving (lif'-giv'ing), a. Giving life or spirit; having power to revivify or animate; inspiriting; invigorating.

Nor on the virtue thought

Of that life-giving plant, but only used

For prospect what well used had been the pledge

Of immortality.

Milton, P. L., IV. 190.

life-guard (lif'-gärd), n. [= G. Leibgarde = Sw. livgarde = Dan. livgarde, body-guard.] 1. A guard of the life or person; a guard that attends a prince or other person; a body-guard. In the British army the name Life Guards is given to two cavalry regiments forming, with the Royal Horse Guards, the Household Brigade, the body-guard of the sovereign.

And he's kill'd a' the king's life guards,

He's kill'd them every man O.

Sweet William and Lady Marguerite (Child's Ballads, II. 54).

2. Brushes or some other device placed before the forward wheels of a locomotive to sweep small obstructions from the track.

life-history (lif'-his'tör-i), n. In biol. (a) The series of vital phenomena exhibited by an organism in the course of its development from the egg to its adult state. The word refers especially to embryological and subsequent transformations or metamorphoses, if any occur. It incidentally includes the habits, manners, etc., of an organism during the period of its development.

The life-history of such an imaginary individual, that is to say, would correspond with all that was new, all that could be called evolution or development, in a certain typical series of individuals each of whom advanced a certain stage in mental differentiation.

J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 45.

(b) The written description of a life-history; morphological "natural history."

life-hold (lif'-höld), n. Same as life-land.

life-insurance (lif'-in-shür'-ans), n. See insurance, 1.

life-interest (lif'-in'tér-est), n. An interest or estate terminating with the life of the person to whom it belongs.

life-land (lif'-land), n. Land held on a lease for a life or lives. Also called life-hold.

lifeless (lif'-les), a. [ME. lifles, < AS. lyfleda (= OFries. lyfas = MLG. lyfōs = Sw. lyfōs = Dan. lyfōs) (cf. equiv. D. levenloos, MHG. lebelōs, G. leblos, involving another but related noun), lifeless, < lyf, life, + leda, E. -less.] 1. Deprived of life; dead; also, in a state of suspended animation.

There let his head and lifeless body lie,

Until the queen his mistress bury it.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., IV. 1. 142.

2. Not possessing life; inanimate; inorganic: as, lifeless matter.

Was I to have never parted from thy side?

As good have grown there still a lifeless rib.

Milton, P. L., II. 1154.

3. Destitute of power, force, vigor, or spirit; wanting animation or vital energy; dull; heavy; inactive; vapid; insipid: as, a lifeless style of oratory; lifeless movements.

Description cannot suit itself in words

To demonstrate the life of such a battle [army]

In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Shak., Hon. V., IV. 2. 54.

4. Destitute of living beings.

Statues finished the lifeless spot with mimic representations of the excluded sons of men.

Walspole, Anecdotes of Painting, IV. vii.

= Syn. 1. Defunct. — 2. Inert, torpid, sluggish, spiritless, passive; flat, frigid, pointless.

lifelessly (lif'-les-li), adv. In a lifeless manner; without vigor; dully; heavily; frigidly.

lifelessness (lif'-les-nes), n. The state of being lifeless; destitution of life, vigor, or spirit; inactivity.

lifelike (lif'-lik), a. Simulating or resembling life; giving the impression of real life: as, a lifelike portrait or narrative.

lifelikeness (lif'-lik-nes), n. The quality of being lifelike; simulation of real life.

An absolute lifelikeness of expression.

Poe, Oval Portrait.

life-line (lif'-lin), n. Naut.: (a) A rope stretched anywhere on a vessel for the safety of the men in bad weather or when they are manning yards: in the latter case it is stretched from the mast to the lift. (b) One of several lines attached to a life-buoy or life-boat, to enable a person in the water to reach the boat or buoy more readily.

lifelode, n. [ME. lyfode, lyfode; < lyfe + lode.] Hence, by confusion, the present form well-hood.] Conduct of life; means of living; support; sustenance.

This foule syn, accidie, is eek a ful greet enemy to the lifelode of the body.

Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

The Erth mynnyrethe to us 2 thinges; ours lifode, that cometh of the Erthe that wee lyve by, and ours Beputure afre ours Deth.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 223.

lifelong (lif'-lông), a. [life + long.] Cf. lifelong, an older form of the same word.] Lasting or continuing through life: as, a lifelong struggle with poverty; a lifelong friend.

lifelyst, a. and adv. An obsolete form of weely.

life-mortar (lif'-môr'tär), n. A mortar for throwing a rocket with a rope attached over a ship in distress near the shore.

lifent, v. t. An obsolete form of liveen.

life-office (lif'-of'is), n. An office where the business of life-insurance is transacted.

life-peer (lif'-pär), n. A peer whose peerage lapses at his death, not being hereditary. See lord of appeal in ordinary, under lord.

life-peerage (lif'-pär'-äj), n. A peerage conferred only for the period of the recipient's life.

life-plant (lif'-plant), n. A plant of the genus Bryophyllum (B. calycinum and B. prokiferum), belonging to the Crassulaceae. The leaf emits roots when laid on damp earth.

life-preserver (lif'prē-zēr-verb), n. 1. An apparatus of various forms, as a buoyant jacket or belt, or a complete dress, designed for the preservation of the lives of persons who, from shipwreck or other cause, are compelled to trust themselves to the water.—2. A weapon, as a pistol, or specifically a short stick with a loaded head, used for defense against assailants.

Life-preserver.

lifer (li'fēr), n. One who receives or has received a sentence of penal servitude for life. [Slang.]

They know what a clever lad he is; he'll be a lifer; they'll make the Artful nothing less than a lifer.

Dickens, Oliver Twist, xiii.

Lifers cannot claim any remission, but their cases are brought forward at the end of twenty years, and considered on their merits.

Encyc. Brit., XIX, 76d.

life-raft (lif'raft), n. Naut., a raft-like construction designed to save life in case of shipwreck. That in most general use is composed of two water-tight cylinders of wood or metal, or of inflated india-rubber, connected by a wooden framework, and furnished with appliances for rowing and steering.

life-rate (lif'rāt), n. The rate of payment on a policy of life-insurance.

life-rendering (lif'ren'dér-ing), a. Yielding up life. [Rare.]

To his good friends thus wide I'll ope my arms,
And, like the kind life-rendering pelican, Repeat them with my blood. Shak., Hamlet, iv. 5, 14d.

life-rent (lif'rent), n. A rent which one is entitled to receive for life, usually for support; a right which entitles a person to use and enjoy property during life, without destroying or wasting it.

life-renter (lif'ren'tēr), n. A person who enjoys a life-rent.

life-rentrix (lif'ren'triks), n. A woman who enjoys a life-rent.

Lady Margaret Bellenden, . . . life-rentrix of the barony of Tillinstadium.

Scott, Old Mortality, ii.

life-rocket (lif'rok'et), n. A rocket used to convey a rope to a vessel in distress, so as to establish communication between it and the shore.

liferoot (lif'rōt), n. The golden ragwort, Senecio aureus; so named on account of supposed vulnerability and other properties.

life-saving (lif'sāv-ing), a. Designed to save life; especially, designed to save those who are in danger of drowning.—Life-saving apparatus, all the materials, tools, and appliances used for the rescue of human life endangered by shipwreck or by fire, such as life-boats, wreck-ordnance, line-carrying projectiles, shot-lines, faking-boxes, life-cars, breeches-buoys, transportation-carts, life-buoys, life-preservers, hawsers, whip-lines, etc.—Life-saving gun, a light piece of ordnance used to shoot line-carrying projectiles from the shore to vessels in distress, to establish communication between them and the shore.—Life-saving mortar, a small mortar fitted for throwing a hooked projectile with a line attached from the shore to a ship. See Life-saving service.—Life-saving projectile, a projectile which is used for the rescue of human life imperiled by fire or shipwreck.—Life-saving service, an organization for saving the lives of persons shipwrecked within reach of aid from the shore; in the United States, a division of the Treasury Department of the national government, having stations at short intervals along the shores of the ocean and the great lakes, provided with crews and life-saving appliances of all kinds. Similar organizations in other countries are chiefly maintained by voluntary private agencies.

life-s-blood (lif's'blūd), n. See life-blood, 2 and 3.

life-shot (lif'shot), n. A shot or bullet carrying a line, used in the same way and for the same purpose as a life-rocket.

life-signal (lif'sig'nal), n. In a life-saving buoy, a device for producing an inextinguishable chemical light, which is kindled automatically by the cutting loose of the buoy.

life-size (lif'siz), a. Of the same size as the (living) object portrayed.

The Roman senata decreed that his life-size statue should be sculptured and set up upon the Capitoline.

C. C. Perkins, Italian Sculpture, Int., p. ix.

lifesome (lif'sum), a. [K life + -some.] Animated; gay; lively. [Rare.]

I wish for your sake I could be More lifesome and more gay.

Coleridge, Three Graves.

life-spot (lif'spot), n. In whaling, the vulnerable point behind the fin into which the lance is thrust to reach the "life" and kill the whale.

lifespriug (lif'spring), n. The spring or source of life; anything regarded as essential to the sustentation of the life of either the body or the soul. Imp. Dict.

lifestring (lif'string), n. A nerve or string in the body imagined to be essential to life; hence, in the plural, the essential supports of life.

Breaking thy veins and thy life-string w'th like pain & grief. Sir T. More, Works, p. 77.

These lines are the veins, the arteries,
The undecaying lifestrings of those hearts. Daniel.

life-table (lif'tā'bl), n. A statistical table exhibiting the probable proportion of persons who will live to reach different ages.

life-tenant (lif'ten'ant), n. The owner of a life-estate; one who holds lands, etc., for the term of his own or another's life.

lifetime (lif'tim), n. The time that one's life continues; duration of life.

And that Cuppe the Rone schalle kepe to drynken of, alle his lif tyme, in remembrance of his Fadir.

Manderville, Travels, p. 810.

Let me for this life-time reign as king.

Shak., 8 Hen. VI., l. 1, 171.

life-weary (lif'wēr'i), a. Tired of life; weary of living.

A dram of poison, . . .
That the life-weary taker may fall dead.

Shak., R. and J., v. 1, 62.

life-work (lif'wērk), n. The work of a lifetime; the employment or labor to which one's life is or has been devoted.

lifodet, n. See lifelode.

lift, adv. An obsolete form of hevel.
lift (lift), n. [K ME. lyft, lyft, lyft, < AS. lyft = OS. lyft = D. luht = MLG. luht, lyft, LG. lyft = OHG. MHG. G. lyft = Icel. loft (pron. loft) = Dan. Sw. lyft = Goth. lyftus, the air, the sky; the orig. Teut. word for 'air', and not found outside of Teut. Hence, through Scand., lyft, loft, lofty, aloft, etc.] The air; the atmosphere; the sky; the heavens. [Now only prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

When the lyft grew dark, and the wind blew loud,
And gurly grew the sea.

Sir Patrick Spens (Child's Ballads, III, 154).

It is the moon, I ken her horn,
That's blinkin' in the lyft me hie.

Burns, Oh, Willie Brew'd a Peck o' Mant.

lift (lift), v. [K ME. lyften, lyften (pret. lyfta, lyft), < Icel. lypta (pron. lyfta) (= Sw. lyfta = Dan. lyfte, lift, MHG. G. lyften), lift, lift, lit. 'raise in air', < loft (pron. loft) = Sw. Dan. lyft = MHG. G. lyft = AS. lyft, lift, the air; see lyft.] I, trans. 1. To move or heave upward in space; bring to a higher place or position; raise; elevate: often followed by up: as, to lift a stone from the ground: to lift up one who has fallen.

When he was upon his Course, and wente to the Castelle,
And entred in to the Cave, the Dragon lyfte up hire Red asont him.

Manderville, Travels, p. 24.

He lyft up his spear against eight hundred.

2 Sam. xxiii. 8.

He rises on the toe; that spirit of his
In aspiration lyfts him from the earth.

Shak., T. and C., iv. 5, 10.

2. To bring to a higher degree, rank, or condition; make more lofty or considerable; elevate; exalt; raise to a high or a higher pitch or state of feeling, as the voice, the mind, etc.

In those means which he [God] by law did establish as being fittest unto that end, for us to alter any thing is to lyft up ourselves against God, and as it were to countermand him.

Hooker, Ecclies. Polity, iii. 10.

His [Joseph's] envious bretherens treacherous drift
Him to the Stern of Memphian State had lyft.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Baras's Weeks, l. 7.

And Jacob . . . lyfted up his voice, and wept.

Gen. xxxix. 11.

Lyfted at length, by dignity of thought
And dint of genius, to an affluent lot.

Cooper, Table-Talk, l. 67d.

I remember Penn before his accusers, and Fox in the hall dock, where he was lyfted up in spirit, as he tells us, and the Judge and the Jury became as dead men under his feet.

Lamb, Elia, p. 54.

3. To keep elevated or exalted; hold up; display on high: as, the mountain lyfts its head above the clouds.

We saw
The long-roofed chapel of King's College lyft
Turrets and pinnacles in answering files.

Wordsworth, Prelude, iii.

And, in dark firmaments of leaves,
The orange lyfts its golden moons.

Lowell, An Invitation.

4. To take away; steal. See lyft. [Colloq.]—
5. In mining, same as draw, 30.—6. To gather; collect: as, to lyft rents.—7. To carve (as swan).
Lyft that swanne. Beaumont Book (R. E. T. S.), p. 268.

8. To bear; support.

So downe he fell, that th' earth him underneath
Did grone, as feeble so great load to lyft.

Spenser, F. Q., I. xi. 54.

9. In golf, to take (a ball) out of a hazard and drop or tee it in conformity with the rules.—

To lift one's grith. See grith.—To lift one's hat, to scalp one. [Slang, western U. S.]—To lift the orb, in the Great Lakes fisheries, to gather in the netting of a orb or bowl of a pound-net; haul the pound, as would be said in New England.—To lift up the eyes, to look; raise the eyes; direct one's eyes, or, figuratively, one's thoughts.

I will lyft up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. Ps. cxli. 1.

To lift up the head, to rejoice or exult.

Then look up, and lyft up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh. Luke xii. 28.

To lift up the horn, in Script., to vaunt one's self; behave arrogantly.

I said unto the fools, Deal not foolishly; and to the wicked, Lyft not up the horn. Ps. lxxv. 4.

= Syn. 1 and 2. Hold, Heave, etc. See rules.

II. intrans. 1. To raise or endeavor to raise something; exert the strength for the purpose of raising something.

The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by lyfting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken. Locke.

2. To rise or seem to rise; disappear in the air: as, the fog lyfts.

No gladder does the stranded wreck
See thro' the gray skirts of a lyfting squall
The bust that bears the hope of life approach.

Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

3. Naut., to shake lightly in the wind: said of a sail when the wind blows on its edge at too small an angle to fill it.—To lyft for dealing, in card-playing, to draw or cut for deal. Hallmark.

lift (lift), n. [K lyft, v.] 1. The act or manner of lifting or raising; a raising or rising up; elevation.

In races it is not the large stride or high lyft that makes the speed. Beacon, Dispatch (ed. 1887).

A lyft of the fog favored us at last, and we ran into the little harbor. B. Taylor, Northern Travel, p. 18.

Paris had received one of those momentary lyfts of which she went through several before her final exaltation.

E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 4.

Some boughs of the maples were beginning to lose the elastic upward lyft of their prime, and to hang looser and limper with the burden of their foliage.

Hovell, Annie Kilburn, xv.

2. Assistance by, or by means of, lifting; hence, assistance in general; a helping hand: as, to give one a lyft (a help on one's way) in a wagon.

Much watching of Louisa, and much subsequent observation of her impenetrable demeanour, which keenly whetted and sharpened Mrs. Sparrit's edge, must have given her, as it were, a lyft in the way of inspiration.

Dickens, Hard Times, ii. 10.

A lady in a dog-cart warned us of rain, and offered us a lyft, which we refused heroically.

Harper's Mag., LXXVII, 84d.

3. A rise; degree of elevation; extent of rise, or distance through which anything is raised.

All of these valves have cages in which they work and which also act as stops, which prevent them from rising from their seats further than a certain distance. This distance is called their lyft, and the successful working of the pumps depends very much on the amount of lyft which the valves have. Furney, Locomotive, p. 117.

Here and there in the land were sharp lyfts where rocks cropped out, making miniature cliffs overhanging some portions of the brook's course. The Century, XXXI, 108.

Specifically.—(a) The extent of rise in a canal-lock: as, a lyft of ten feet. (b) In mining: (1) The distance from one level to another. (2) The distance through which the piston of an ore-stamp rises and falls.

4. A rise in state or condition; promotion; advancement: as, to get a lyft in the army for bravery.—5. Elevation of style or sentiment; action of lifting or elevating, as the mind. [Rare.]

The voice of the orator ceased, and there was perfect silence. It seemed as if it could never be broken. The lyft was altogether too great for immediate applause.

Joshua Quincy, Figures of the Past, p. 108.

6. Anything which assists in lifting, or by which objects are lifted. Specifically.—(a) A hoisting-machine or other device for raising or lowering persons or things vertically from a lower to a higher level or vice versa. (See elevator, 4.) A lift in a canal is a large machine-elevator sometimes used instead of a lock.

The Times establishment is altogether too conservative to introduce elevators except in their publication department, where the lyfts are employed for carrying the forms up and down and for similar heavy work.

T. C. Crawford, English Life, p. 110.

An elaborate arrangement of lyfts by which actors can suddenly appear or vanish through the stage floor.

Encyc. Brit., XXXIII, 285.

(b) In mining, a set of pumps. The separate pumps in an engine-shaft are placed one above another: each set constitutes a lyft, and the water is raised from the sump or fork to the surface by several repetitions of the same process.

Callon, Lectures on Mining (tr. Le Neve Foster and Galloway), II, 28d.

(c) A handle, knob, or other device attached to windows and window-blinds to afford a hold in raising or lowering them. Cur-Bilder's Dict. (d) One of the steps or grooves of a cone-pulley. The speed of the hoist is varied by changing the belt from lift to lift. (e) The long neck of rod of a deep well-pump. (f) In a ship's rigging, one of the ropes connecting the ends of a yard with a masthead or cap. By means of such ropes the yards are squared or trimmed—that is, brought into and held in a position at right angles with the mast. (g) A machine for exercising the body by the act of lifting. Also called lifting-machine and health-lift. (h) In a lathe and in other machine-tools, any one of the ledges, flats, or grooves on or in the periphery of the headstock-pulley, and of a similar pulley of the shaft or countershaft from which power is taken. These lifts are so proportioned and arranged that shifting the belt from a lift of a given diameter to one of a smaller diameter on the headstock-pulley compels it to be also shifted from a lift of smaller to one of larger diameter on the countershaft-pulley. Thus several definite changes of speed of rotation may be obtained with the same belt. 7. That which is lifted or is to be lifted. Specifically—(a) A weight to be raised: as, a heavy lift. (b) A gate without hinges, which must be lifted up in order to remove or open it. In some parts of England and the United States the projecting ends of the bars are let into mortise-holes in the posts, into and out of which the gate must be lifted. Also called lift-gate, lifting-gate. 8. In a boot or shoe, one of the thicknesses of leather which are pegged together to form the heel; a heel-lift.—Dead lift. (a) A lift made in the most difficult circumstances, as of a dead body: a direct lift without the assistance of leverage or any other mechanical appliance. (b) A last resort; a desperate emergency.

The physician
Helps ever at a dead lift.

Beau. and Fl., Thierry and Theodoret, II. 1.

Here is some of Hannibal's medicine he carried always in the pomel of his sword, for a dead lift.

Shirley, Maida's Revenge, III. 2.

On the lift, on the point of leaving; ready to depart; in a figurative sense, at the point of death. [Southern U. S.]

I can conceive of but one extenuation. Bolus was on the lift for Texas, and the desire was natural to qualify himself for citizenship.

Plunk Times of Alabama.

De ole ox is done took sick, and is on de lift.

C. D. Warner, Harper's Mag., LXVI. 488.

Topping-lift (naut.), a rope used to support or raise the outer end of a sparker-boom or a lower studding-sail-boom.

lift (lift), v. [Commonly supposed to be ult. akin to Goth. lifjan, steal (> lifjan, a thief), = L. clepere = Gr. κλέπτειν (aor. pass. κλήπηναι), steal (see cleptomancy, klept). But the word is not found in this sense in ME. or AS., and this fact and the associations of the word make it clear that lift remove, take away, steal, is simply a use of lift raise: see lift.] I. trans. To remove surreptitiously; take and carry away; steal; purloin: as, to lift cattle.

Common thief! . . . No such thing; Donald Bean Lean never lifted less than a drove in his life; . . . he that lifts a drove from a Sassenach laird is a gentleman drover.

Scott, Waverley, xviii.

The out in question is lifted from the pages of the Scientific American, but I suspect that its reputed author in turn lifted it from the pages of the Engineer.

The Engineer, LXV. 424.

II. trans. To practise theft; steal.

The lifting law, says Dekker, "teacheth a kind of lifting of goods cleane awaye."

Bulman of London (1606). (Halliw.)

One other peculiar virtue you possess, in lifting, or leiger-du-maîn. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, I. 1.

lift (lift), n. [< lift, v.] A thief. Davies.

Though you be crowsbites, foyes, and nips, yet you are not good lifts: which is a great helpe to your faculty, to lish a bout of stolen or velvet.

Greene, Thieves Falling Out (Earl. Misc., VIII. 389).

lift, a. An obsolete form of left.

liftable (lift'g-ble), a. [< lift + -able.] Capable of being lifted.

lift-bridge (lift'brij), n. A bridge which may be raised to admit of the passage of a boat. Such bridges are sometimes used upon canals, when the roadway is but a little higher than the water-level.

lift (lift), n. [< lift + -er.] 1. One who lifts or raises anything.

Thou, O Lord, art . . . my glory, and the lifter up of my head.

Ps. III. 3.

2. That by means of which something is lifted; an instrument or contrivance for lifting, as a hoisting-apparatus or elevator, a curved arm in a steam-engine for lifting the puppet-valve automatically, a bucket-wheel for raising pulp in a paper-mill, a kitchen utensil for lifting the lids of a stove, etc.

lifter (lift'er), n. [< lift + -er.] A thief; one who lifts a thing for the purpose of purloining it. In the quotation from Shakspeare the word is used punningly, Troilus having been praised for his power in lifting.

Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?

Shak., T. and C., I. 2. 120.

I am dead at a pocket, sir: why, I am a lifter, master, by my occupation.

Greene, James IV., III.

lift-gate (lift'gät), n. Same as lift, 7 (b).

lift-hammer (lift'ham'er), n. A form of tilt-hammer in which the alternate action of a spring in raising the hammer, and of the foot in the opposite direction through treadle-mechanism, imparts the blow in forging. See over.

lifting (lift'ing), n. [Verbal n. of lift, v.] 1. The act of raising or rising.

A summer bird, which . . . sings

The lifting up of day. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., IV. 4. 28.

2. A lift; aid; assistance. [Rare.]

I cannot forbear doing that author the justice of my public acknowledgments for the great help and liftings I had out of his incomparable piece.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, v.

3. An attempt; a tentative attack. Davies.

There had been some liftings at him in the Court by Sir John Cook, who had informed against him to the Lord Treasurer then being.

Heppin, Life of Land, p. 180.

lifting-bar (lift'ing-bär), n. 1. In a knitting-machine, a horizontal bar which, moving parallel to itself and vertically, systematically and simultaneously raises the jacks.—2. In the Jacquard loom, a bar which carries and raises the lifting-jacks.

lifting-blade (lift'ing-bläd), n. In the Jacquard loom, an iron rule-like blade or plate which receives the lifting-wires when they are raised.

lifting-bridge (lift'ing-brij), n. A drawbridge the whole or a section of which may be raised by one end to clear the space beneath it.

lifting-day (lift'ing-dä), n. Easter Monday or Tuesday. See heaving-days. [Prov. Eng.]

lifting-dog (lift'ing-dog), n. In mach., a device in the nature of a pawl, clutch, or gripper, by the action of which a lifting movement is effected. See dog.

lifting-gate (lift'ing-gät), n. Same as lift, 7 (b).

lifting-gear (lift'ing-gär), n. In a steam-boiler with an interior or inclosed safety-valve, the mechanism for lifting the valve from its seat. In one form of this gear the principal parts are a lever of the second order, a rod connected with the lever and the valve proper, and a screw passing through a nut in the side of the boiler and swivelled to the lever, by which the latter is actuated. In another form the lever is actuated by a rod passing out through a stuffing-box, and provided with a lifting-handle.

lifting-hitch (lift'ing-hich), n. A hitch adapted for slinging an object by a rope, so that it can be hoisted.

lifting-jack (lift'ing-jak), n. A form of jack adapted for lifting. See jack, 11 (b).

lifting-machine (lift'ing-mä-shén'), n. Same as health-lift.

lifting-piece (lift'ing-pēs), n. A device for raising the hammer of a clock in striking.

lifting-rod (lift'ing-rod), n. In a steam-engine with puppet-valves, a rod which, receiving motion from the rock-shaft, imparts motion to the lifter of a puppet-valve.

lifting-screw (lift'ing-skör), n. A contrivance for raising weight by means of a screw; a jack.

lifting-set (lift'ing-set), n. A series of pumps by which water is raised from the bottom of a mine by successive lifts. E. H. Knight.

lifting-tongs (lift'ing-tóngz), n. sing. and pl. A form of tongs with concave jaws for grasping and lifting crucibles.

lifting-wire (lift'ing-wir), n. In the Jacquard loom, one of the wires which form the pattern by operating the warp-threads.

lift-latch (lift'lach), n. A door-fastening consisting of a latch which is raised by turning a knob.

lift-lock (lift'lok), n. A canal-lock which lifts a boat confined in it by rotation from one level to a higher level when water is allowed to flow into the lock.

lift-pump (lift'pump), n. Any pump that is not a force-pump.

lift-tenter (lift'ten'ter), n. In mach., the governor of a windmill that is employed in driving grinding-stones, designed to regulate the distance between the upper and the lower stone according to the velocity.

lift-wall (lift'wál), n. The cross-wall of a lock-chamber in a canal.

lig (lig), v. An obsolete or dialectal form of lie.

ligament (lig'a-ment), n. [< F. ligament = Sp. ligamiento, ligamento = Pg. I. ligamento, < L. ligamentum, a tie, band, < ligare, bind. Cf. Henz.] 1. A connecting tie or band; anything that binds objects or their parts together; any bond of union, material or immaterial.

Common and described prayers are the most excellent instrument and act and ligament of the communion of saints.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1836), II. 384.

I find here a man, a woman, a child, amongst whom and myself there exist the closest ligaments.

Hawthorne, Scarlet Letter, IV.

2. Specifically—(a) In anat., a band of connective tissue serving to bind one part to another. Most ligaments have a particular shape, site, and office, and consequently receive special names. See phrases following. (b) In conch., a band of uncalcified chitinous cuticular substance which unites the valves of a bivalve shell. It is usually elastic, and so disposed that when the valves are closed it is either compressed or put upon the stretch, in either of which opposite cases it antagonizes the action of the adductor muscles and tends to divaricate the valves.

Conchologists commonly draw a distinction between an internal and an external ligament; but, in relation to the body of the animal, all ligaments are external, and their internality or externality is in respect of the hinge-line, or the line along which the edges of the valves meet.

Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 406.

Acromioclavicular ligaments, alar ligaments, annular ligament. See the adjectives.—Annular ligament of the stapes, the capsular ligament connecting the foot of the stapes with the margin of the fenestra ovalis.—Aruate ligament. See aruate.—Atlas-axis ligament. See axis-axis.—Broad ligament. (a) Of the liver, the falciform or suspensory ligament, consisting of two layers of peritoneum, passing between the liver and the diaphragm. (b) Of the uterus, the fold of peritoneum which extends from the uterus to the pelvis on either side.—Burns's or Hey's ligament, the upper border of the saphenous opening in the fascia lata of the thigh; the femoral ligament or falciform process. Also called femoral ligament of Hey.—Camper's ligament. See transverse ligament of the urethra, under triangular.—Capsular ligament. See capsular.—Central ligament. See central.—Check-ligaments, two stout fibrous cords, one on each side, passing from the occipital condyles and margin of the foramen magnum to the odontoid process of the axis, thus limiting or checking the rotation of the head upon the axis. Also called lateral or alar odontoid ligaments.—Ciliary, conoid, coraco-acromial, coracoclavicular, coracohumeral ligament. See the adjectives, and cut under key-joint.—Coracoid ligament, a fibrous band converting the suprascapular notch into a foramen.—Coronary, costocostal, costoid, crural ligaments. See the adjectives.—Deltoid ligament, the internal lateral ligament of the ankle-joint.—Falciform ligament. See falciform.—Femoral ligament of Hey. Same as Burns's ligament.—Gastroepiploic ligament. See gastroepiploic.—Gimbernat's ligament, that portion of Poupart's ligament which is reflected along the iliopectineal line.—Glenoid ligament, a fibrocartilaginous band surrounding the glenoid fossa of the scapula.—Hey's ligament. Same as Burns's ligament.—Hyo-epiglottic, iliofemoral, iliohumeral, intermuscular ligaments. See the adjectives.—Ligament of Winslow, the principal ligament of the back of the knee-joint, largely derived from expansions of the tendons of muscles, especially of the semimembranosus.—Ligament of Einn, a fibrous band attached to the border of the optic foramen, whence the recti muscles of the eyeball arise.—Ligaments of the diaphragm. See diaphragm.—Lumbosacral ligament. See lumbosacral.—Mucous ligament, a ligament traversing the synovial cavity of the knee from the anterior wall of the synovial membrane to the intercondylar notch of the femur.—Nuchal ligament. See ligamentum nuchæ, under ligamentum.—Odontoid ligaments. See check-ligaments.—Ocular ligament, a circular band of fibers confining the head of the radius in the lesser sigmoid cavity of the ulna.—Poupart's ligament, the thickened lower border of the aponeurosis of the external oblique muscle of the abdomen, continuous with the fascia lata of the thigh, extending from the anterior superior spinous process of the ilium in the line of the groin to the spine of the os pubis; the crural arch, beneath which emerge the great vessels and nerves of the front of the thigh, and just above which is the inguinal canal for the spermatic cord, or for the round ligament of the uterus.—Rhomboid ligament, the costoclavicular ligament.—Round ligament. (a) Of the hip, a short, stout fibrous cord connecting the cavity of the acetabulum with the depression upon the summit of the head of the thigh-bone. (b) Of the liver, the imperforate cord formed by the umbilical vein, passing from the navel to the under surface of the liver. (c) Of the uterus, a rounded cord on each side between the layers of the broad ligament, passing from the upper part of the womb to the internal abdominal ring and thence through the inguinal canal to the labia majora, consisting of fibrous, areolar, and some muscular tissue, with vessels and nerves inclosed in a fold of peritoneum. It corresponds in part to the spermatic cord of the male.—Stellate ligaments, the anterior costovertebral ligaments.—Stylohyoid ligament, the representative in man of the epiphyseal bone of some mammals, situated between the stylohyal and ceratohyal elements of the hyoidian arch.—Suspensory ligament. (a) Of the liver. See broad ligament (a). (b) Of the mamma, processes of the superficial thoracic fascia entering and supporting these glands. (c) Of the penis, the fibrous attachment of the root of the organ to the symphysis pubis. (d) Of the spleen, a fold of peritoneum connecting the spleen with the diaphragm.—Tarsal ligament. See palpebral ligament, under palpebral.—Transverse ligament of the atlas, a stout cord extending across the ring of the atlas, and holding the odontoid process of the axis in place. Its rupture, as in hanging, causes instant death from impact of the odontoid process upon the medulla oblongata.—Trapedoid ligament, the squarish portion of the acromioclavicular ligament.—Venous-umbilical ligament, the urachus.—Y-ligament of Winslow, the lower forked part of the iliofemoral ligament.

Ligamentous (lig-ə-men'tus), a. [= F. ligamentous = Sp. Pg. It. ligamentoso; as ligament + -ous.] Of or pertaining to a ligament; composing a ligament; as, ligamentous tissue; a ligamentous connection or attachment.

Ligamentously (lig-ə-men'tus-lī), adv. By means of a ligament.

Being also connected ligamentously with the scapula.

Boys. Brk., XVI. 600.

Ligamentum (lig-ə-men'tum), n.; pl. ligamenta (-tā). [L.: see ligament.] A ligament. The names of the ligaments here given are commonly written in the Latin form.—Ligamenta subdura, the yellowish elastic ligaments connecting the laminae of vertebrae with one another.—Ligamenta vaginalia, the sheathing ligaments, strong fibrous bands which form sheaths for the flexor tendons of the fingers and toes.—Ligamentum Botalli. See ductus Botalli, under ductus.—Ligamentum dentatum or denticulatum, a narrow serrated fibrous band on each side of the spinal cord, separating the anterior from the posterior roots of the spinal nerves.—Ligamentum mucosum, a mucous ligament.—Ligamentum nuchae, a mass of yellow elastic fibrous tissue in the median line of the back of the neck of many animals, as the ox, serving by its elasticity to assist in the support of the head. It is rudimentary or wanting in man, in whom it is represented merely by an aponeurosis. It is readily seen in a neck of lamb as served on the table: called by butchers famasa, hufas, packman, pacinas, pacynony, whit-leather, etc.—Ligamentum patellae, the ligament of the kneecap, the tendon of insertion of the great extensor muscles which lie upon the front of the thigh.—Ligamentum pectinatum iridis, the connection of the circumference of the iris with the cornea.—Ligamentum spirale, the spiral ligament of the cochlea.—Ligamentum teres, the round ligament of the hip-joint.

Ligamentum Nuchae of the Ox (shown by the shaded part of the figure).

Ligan (lī'gan), n. [In this form, and according to the def. ('a thing tied,' etc.), <OF. as if ligain*, an assumed var. of laia, lien (= Pg. ligame, etc.), a band, tie, <L. ligamen, band, tie: see *lien*². But ligan is appar. a sophisticated form, feigning a connection with L. ligare, bind, as above, or with E. lie, lig, D. liggen, etc., of the older form lagan (formerly also lagon, lagam), <OF. lagan, also lagand, lagant, laguen, waifs or wreckage cast ashore, a seigniorial right claimed to such wreckage; perhaps of LG. origin, from the verb cognate with E. *lie*¹.] In law, anything sunk in the sea, but tied to a support at the surface, as a cork or buoy, in order that it may be recovered. See flotsam and jetsam.

Jetsam is where goods are cast into the sea, and there sink and remain under water; flotsam is where they continue swimming on the surface of the waves; ligan is where they are sunk in the sea, but tied to a cork or buoy in order to be found again. Blackstone, Com., I. viii.

Ligancet, n. A variant of legiance, for alligance. Ligate (lī'gāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. ligated, ppr. ligating. [<L. ligatus, pp. of ligare, tie, bind: see ligament.] To bind with a ligature; tie.

The possibility of ligating the ruptured artery could not, under the circumstances, be entertained. Medical News, LIII. 78.

Ligation (lī-gā'shon), n. [= OF. ligation (vernacularly liaison, F. liaison) = Sp. ligación, ligasón, <LL. ligatio (-n), a binding, < ligare, pp. ligatus, bind: see ligament.] A tying or binding, or the state of being tied or bound; constriction by a ligature or band; especially, in surg., the operation of tying an artery to prevent hemorrhage, as after amputation, etc.

It is the ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason. St. T. Brown, Religio Medici, II. 11.

Ligator (lī-gā'tor), n. [<NL. ligator, <L. ligare, tie, bind: see ligament.] In surg., an instrument used to place and fasten a ligature. E. H. Knight.

Ligature (lī-gā'tūr), n. [<F. ligature = Sp. Pg. ligadura = It. ligatura, <LL. ligatura, a band, <L. ligare, bind: see ligament.] 1. Anything that serves for tying, binding, or uniting, as a cord or bandage; hence, any binding, restraining, or uniting agency or principle.

Religion is a public virtue: it is the ligature of souls, and the great instrument of the conservation of bodies politic. Jos. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 81.

The many ligatures of our English dress check the circulation of the blood. Spectator.

Ligatures of race and family and family affections to bind them together. Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., vi.

Specifically—2. In surg.: (a) A cord for tying a blood-vessel, particularly an artery, to prevent hemorrhage. (b) A cord or wire to remove tumors, etc., by strangulation.—3. The act of binding; ligation.

Any stoppage of the circulation will produce a dropy, as by strong ligature or compression. Arbuthnot, Diet.

4. The state of being bound or consolidated.

Sand and gravel grounds easily admit of heat and moisture, for which they are not much the better, because they let it pass too soon, and contract no ligature. Mortimer, Husbandry.

5. Impotence supposed to be induced by magic.—6. In music: (a) In medieval musical notation, one of various compound note-forms designed to indicate groups of two or more tones which were to be sung to a single syllable—that is, similar to a group of slurred notes in the modern notation. Ligatures are often difficult to decipher, on account of the doubtfulness not only of the pitch of the tones intended, but of their relative duration. (b) In modern musical notation, a tie or band; hence, a group of notes slurred together, intended to be sung at a single breath or to be played as a continuous phrase. (c) In contrapuntal music, a syncope.—7. In printing and writing, a type or character consisting of or representing two or more letters or characters united. In type-founding the ligatures a, n, r, m, are made on account of the kern or overhanging top of the letter f. Six others were formerly made with the similarly shaped long s, now disused—th, th, f, th, n, and s; and there was also a ligature of d. A still larger number of ligatures were used in old fonts of Greek type, all of which are now generally discarded. In medieval cursive or minuscule manuscripts, especially of Greek, ligatures are very numerous, and in the earlier printed editions about fifty such characters are of frequent occurrence. Some of the Greek ligatures and of the elements composing them seem to have originated in tachygraphic or shorthand characters. See tachygraphy.—Ligature forceps. See forceps.

Ligature (lī-gā'tūr), v. t.; pret. and pp. ligatured, ppr. ligaturing. [< ligature, n.] To compress or tie by means of a ligature, in any sense; ligate.

If the sino-aortic junction of the heart of the turtle be ligatured under favorable circumstances, the action of the auricles and ventricle, temporarily arrested, may be resumed. Science, XI. 80.

Ligancet, ligancet, n. Variants of legiance, for alligance.

Ligget, v. t. A Middle English form of *lie*¹.

Liggement, n. An obsolete form of legement.

Ligger (lī-gēr), n. [ME. ligger*, var. of liger*, hier: see *lie*¹, and cf. lig, *lie*¹. Hence by assimilation ligger, ledger: see *ledger*¹.] 1. The horizontal timber of a scaffolding; a ledger.—2. A nether millstone.

The stones which composed these primitive . . . mills . . . were two: an upper stone or runner, and a nether, called in Derbyshire a ligger, from the old word lig to lie. Archæologia (1785), VII. 20.

3. A plank placed across a ditch as a pathway.

—4. A coverlet for a bed.—5. A line with a float and bait used for catching pike.—6. A spent salmon; a kipper or kelt. [Prov. Eng. in all senses. Halliwel.] Light¹ (līt), n. [ME. light, līht, līht, līht, <AS. lēht, lēht, lēht = OS. lēht = OFries. lēcht = D. licht, licht = MLG. LG. licht = OHG. lucht, MHG. lucht, G. licht = Goth. lūhts* (evidenced by its deriv. lūhtjan, shine: see *light*², v.), light, bright; with orig. pp. formative -th (AS. usually -d (E. -ed), -ed), or lūht usually -f), <Teut. √ lūh, be light, whence also lēht, n. (see *light*², n.), leoma, gleam (see *leum*¹), liget, lēget, lightning (see *lat*¹), lig, lēg, a flame (see *lay*³, *low*⁴), līzan, līzan, līzan, shine, glitter, and other Teut. forms; a wide-spread Indo-Eur. root: = L. √ luc, shine, in luc (two), light, lucere, be light (see *luc*¹), lucidus, light, clear (see *lucid*¹), lumen, light (see lume, *loom*², luminous, illumine, etc.), luna, the moon (see luna, lunar, etc.); = Gr. √ luc, shine, in λεωκός, light, bright, white (see leucous, and words in leuco-), λευκός, see, ἀφελεύς, twilight; cf. Ir. lúche, lightning, lōn, gleam, Gael. leus, light, lō, lā, daylight, lōchran, a light, lamp, W. lūg, light; <O Bulg. lucha, beam of light, luna, the moon; = Skt. √ ruc, shine. Hence *light*², v. *lighten*¹, enlighten, etc.; but *light*¹, n., is of different terminal formation: see *light*¹, n.] 1. Bright; clear; not dark or obscure: as, it begins to be light (said of the morning); a light apartment.

Even the night shall be light about me. Ps. cxxxix. 11.

O, now be gone: more light and light it grows. Shak., E. and J., III. 5. 35.

3. Pale or whitish in color; applied to colors, highly luminous and more or less deficient in chroma: as, a light complexion; a light pink.

The boy was so light-eyed and light-haired that the rays appeared to draw out of him what little colour he ever possessed. Dickens, Hard Times, I. 1.

Sweet-hearted, you, whose light-blue eyes Are tender over drowning flies. Tennyson, In Memoriam, xvi.

Light green, light green n. Same as acid-green.—Light meat. See meat.

Light¹ (līt), v.; pret. and pp. lighted (less properly lit), ppr. lighting. [<ME. lighten, līhten, līhten, līhten, līhten, <AS. līhtan, līhtan, lēhtan, shine, lighten (also in comp. ālīhtan, inlīhtan, onlīhtan, gēlīhtan, merged in obs. E. *alight*¹, v., light, illuminate) (= OS. līhtjan, līhtjan, OFries. līhta, līhta = D. lichten = MLG. lichten, lichten, LG. lichten = OHG. MHG. lūhten, G. leuchten = Goth. lūhtjan*, be light, be bright, shine), < lēht, light, bright: see *light*², a.] 1. Intrans. 1. To become light or bright; exhibit a bright or luminous effect; shine, as from internal or reflected light: as, her face lighted up with joy; the picture lights up well.

But, nathless, it was so fair a sight That it made all her hertes for to lighte. Chaucer, Squire's Tale, I. 388.

And that shall be the day, when'er it lighte, That this same child of honour and renown . . . And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., III. 2. 128.

2. To catch fire; kindle, as something to which fire is applied.

II. trans. 1. To make light; give light to, or shed light upon, literally or figuratively; provide with light; illuminate; irradiate: as, to light an apartment; a smile lighted up his countenance.

And after that hire lokynge kan she lyghte That never thoughte hym seen so good a sighte. Chaucer, Troilus, I. 388.

And all our yesterdays have lighted fools The way to dusty death. Shak., Macbeth, v. 5. 22.

That one great eye [in the Pantheon] opening upon heaven is by far the noblest conception for lighting a building to be found in Europe. J. Ferguson, Hist. Arch., I. 211.

From the intense, clear, star-sown vault of heaven, Over the lit sea's unquiet wave. M. Arnold, Self-dependence.

2. To kindle; ignite; cause to burn, either literally or figuratively: as, to light a fire or a match; to light the torch of rebellion.

Whome we follow'd to all the holy plays with in the same Monastery, with candles light (lit or lighted) in over hands. Torkington, Diary of Eng. Travell, p. 48.

With better flames than these, which only be Lighted to plunge in Darkness you and me. J. Beaumont, Pyrrhus, II. 114.

Light¹ (līt), n. [ME. light, līht, līht, <AS. lēht = OS. lēht = OFries. lēcht = D. licht = MLG. LG. licht = OHG. lucht, MHG. lucht, G. licht = Goth. lūhts* (lūhath (lūhath), light; with orig. noun-formative -ath, -th (the Scand. forms, lōel, lōs = Sw. lys = Dan. lys, having a diff. formative -s), from the Teut. √ lūh, be light: see *light*², a. The noun light is thus of diff. formation from the adj. light, though from the same root.] 1. That which makes things visible; in physics, that form of energy which, acting upon the organs of sight, renders visible the objects from which it proceeds. The now abandoned emission or corpuscular theory, which was advocated by Newton, represented light as consisting of minute material particles emitted by the luminous body and traveling through space in all directions from it, with immense velocity; the sensation of sight being due to the action of these particles upon the eye. According to the undulatory theory, which is now generally accepted, light is a kind of undulatory motion produced by the luminous body in the particles of an elastic, imponderable medium called the luminiferous ether (see *ether*¹, 2), which is supposed to fill all space, as also the interstices of all bodies. This motion is propagated in waves (see wave) in all directions from the luminous body, and with a velocity in a vacuum of about 186,000 miles per second. The rays sent out or radiated in straight lines from the luminous body differ in wave-length, although apparently propagated with the same velocity; the eye is sensitive to those only whose wave-lengths are included between certain narrow limits, namely, those corresponding to red and violet light (see spectrum). Light is, then, a part of the kind of energy called radiant energy (see radiant energy, under energy, and radiation). The electromagnetic theory of light, proposed by Maxwell, supposes light (or, more generally, radiant energy) to be an electromagnetic disturbance propagated by vibrations at right angles to the direction of the ray, and taking place in the same ether the strains or vibrations of which serve to propagate electromagnetic induction. In confirmation of this theory, it is found that the experimentally determined velocities of the propagation of light and of electromagnetic induction are nearly the same. The principal phenomena of light are grouped under the following heads: (1) Absorption, or the transformation of the vibration of the ether into the molecular vibrations of the body upon which the light falls or through which it passes. The effect of the absorption of part of the light-rays by a body is to give it color; thus, grass is green because it sends back to the eye only the rays which together produce the effect of green, the other rays being absorbed; and a piece of red glass owes its color to the fact that it transmits only that part of the light whose combined effect upon the eye is that of red. According to the degree of absorption of light, a body is said to be transparent, translucent, opaque, etc. Connected with absorption are the phenomena of fluorescence and phosphorescence. (2) Reflection, or the sending back of the light-rays by the surface on which they fall into the medium through which they have come. The laws of reflection explain the action of plane, concave, and convex mirrors (see mirror). The irregular reflection, scattering, or diffusion of the light from the surfaces of bodies serves to make them visible to the eye. (3) Refraction, the breaking or change of direction of the ray as it passes from one medium into another of different density. This may be single or double, the latter when the ray is separated into two rays. The principles of refraction explain the use of lenses (see lens), with the various instruments in which they form the essential part, as the microscope, telescope, etc. (4) Dispersion, or the separation of rays of different wave-length, as when a pencil of white light passes through a prism, and a spectrum showing the successive colors is produced (see spectrum and spectroscope). (5) Interference, or the mutual action of different waves, producing such phenomena as Newton's rings, the colors of thin plates, and the colored figures of uniaxial and biaxial crystals. A special case is that of diffraction. (6) Polarization, or that change in a light-ray which limits its vibrations to one plane—a change produced by reflection and double refraction, and leading to a wide range of beautiful phenomena. See further under each of these terms.

Truly the Light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun. Eccl. i. 7.

Hail, holy Light! offspring of heaven first-born, . . .
Bright effluence of bright essence incarnate.

Milton, P. L., III. 1.

It is possible to produce darkness by the addition of two portions of light. If light is a substance, there cannot be another substance which when added to it shall produce darkness. We are therefore compelled to admit that light is not a substance. Clerk Maxwell, Heat, p. 215.

No one who has studied the subject can doubt . . . that light really consists of a change of state propagated from point to point in a medium existing between the luminous body and that which the light affects. Stokes, Light, p. 25.

2. In physiol., the sensation produced by the action of physical luminosity upon the organ of vision. See color.—3. Illumination or enlightenment as an effluence or a result; radiation from or to anything, in either a physical or a moral sense; luminosity; glow; radiance; as, the light of the sun, of a taper, or of a glow-worm; to be guided by the light of reason; to shed new light on a subject.

Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us. Ps. iv. 6.

Wearing the white flower of a blameless life,
Before a thousand peering littlenesses,
In that fierce light which beats upon a throne.

Tennyson, Idylls of the King, Ded.

Men and women who have developed power of mind and heart by simple fidelity to truth and conscience, until they have become sources of light and comfort to all the neighborhood. J. F. Clarke, Self-Culture, p. 48.

4. The state or condition of being visible; exposure to view; hence, public observation; publicity; as, his misdeeds have come to light.

The better to follow the good, and avoid the evil, which in time must of force bring great things to light.

Books of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), I. 6.

A doleful story you shall hear,
In time brought forth to light.

The Children in the Wood (Child's Ballads, III. 129).

Oh, spring to light, auspicious Babe, be born!

Pope, Messiah, I. 22.

5. That which gives light; a source of illumination; a body that emits or transmits rays of light, as the sun, the moon, a star, a beacon, a candle, etc.; in pyrotechnics, any piece of fireworks which burns brightly.

And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night. Gen. I. 16.

The lights burn blue. It is now dead midnight.

Shak., Rich. III., v. 3. 180.

The lights of heav'n (which are the world's fair eyes)
Look down into the world, the world to see.

Str. J. Davies, Noce Teipsium.

That on a certain night they lay an image in a bed, and number a set bead-roll of lamentations, which being ended, light is brought in. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 89.

More than two thousand churches in England have lights upon the Altars.

F. G. Lee, Directorium Anglicanum, p. 46, note.

Hence—6. Figuratively, a source of mental or spiritual illumination; one who or that which enlightens, as an eminent teacher; anything which diffuses knowledge, instruction, or information; a guiding power or principle; also, a source of cheerfulness or joy.

The Lord is my light and my salvation. Ps. xvii. 1.

The woman where we lodged was an ancient, grave, and serious person, to whom we declared the testimony of the light, shewing her the difference betwixt an outside and an inside religion, which she received with much kindness.

Penn., Travels in Holland, etc.

One who has not these previous lights is very often an utter stranger to what he reads.

Addison, Spectator, No. 201.

But who shall comfort the living,
The light of whose homes is gone?

Bryant, Autumn Walk.

7. Means of communicating light or fire; something to kindle with: as, to give one a light for a cigar.—8. A lighthouse: as, Fastnet light; Sandy Hook light.

From Kingston Head and from Montank light
The spectre kindles and burns in sight.

Whittier, The Palatine.

9. That which admits light; a medium or an opening for the entrance of light, as a window, or a pane or compartment of a window: as, a window consisting of three lights; a light of glass.

The lights, doors, and stairs [were] rather directed to the use of the guest than to the eye of the artificer.

Str. P. Sidney, Arcadia, I.

10. The manner in which the light strikes upon an object or a picture; also, an illuminated part of an object or picture; the part which lies opposite the point or place from which the light comes or is supposed to come.

Never admit two equal lights in the same picture.

Dryden, tr. of Dufrenoy's Art of Painting.

11. The point of view from which, or position in which, anything is looked at or considered; the side or features to which attention is paid; aspect.

Consider then, and judge me in this light;

I told you, when I went, I could not write.

Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. ii. 27.

12. In law, the right to have one's windows unobscured by obstructions on the part of one's neighbors.—13. In painting, a small patch or surface of very light color, as white, used in a design, to diversify the effect of the darker colors.—14. A torch-bearer; a link-boy.

I went to my lodgings, led by a light, whom I put into the discourse of his private economy, and made him give me an account of the charge, hazard, profit, and loss of a family that depended upon a link.

Steele, Spectator, No. 454.

Aberration of Light. See aberration. 5.—Accidental, alio-carbon light. See the qualifying words.—Ancient light, in law, a window receiving light over the land of another than the owner of the house benefited, which, by reason of uninterrupted enjoyment for twenty years or more, has become established as an easement, imposing a servitude of light and air over such adjoining land. The English law, followed in a few of the United States, establishes such a right by lapse of time, unless the enjoyment was under written permission; but it does not include a right of prospect. In other States such a right cannot be claimed by prescription, but only by contract.—Artificial light. See artificial.—Axis of a beam of light. See axis.—Beale light, a form of Argand burner in which combustion is promoted by a current of air under pressure.—Bengal light, in pyrotechnics, a vivid and sustained blue light used in signaling and displays of fireworks. It is composed of antimony 1 part, sulphur and meal powder each 2 parts, and nitrate of soda 8 parts, pulverized, mixed, and pressed into shallow vessels. E. H. Knight.—Between the lights, between daylight and artificial illumination; in the twilight.

I was still busy between the lights, singing and working by the window.

Dickens, Bleak House, xvii.

Between two lights, between two days; under cover of darkness; in the night: as, he was forced to leave town between two lights. (Colloq.)—Blue light, a composition which burns with a blue flame, used as a night-signal in ships or for military purposes, etc. The color is due to the admixture of ammoniacal copper-sulphate in the composition.—Boccini light, a form of gas-burner in which a pair of concentric metallic cylinders are placed over the flame inside an ordinary lamp-chimney, to reduce the combustion and give a more brilliant light.—Bude light, an exceedingly brilliant light, produced by directing a current of oxygen gas into the interior of the flame of an Argand lamp or gas-burner. See Bude burner, under burner.—Calcium light. See calcium.—Catadioptric light, a light used in lighthouses, in which are combined the catoptric and dioptric systems.—Catoptric light, a light in which the beam is produced by reflection. See catoptric.—Chatham light, a kind of flash-light produced by blowing a mixture of pulverized resin and magnesium dust through the flame of a spirit-lamp. It is used for military signals.—Children of light. See child.—Cockshut, colored, converging light. See the qualifying words.—Collection of light. See collection.—Common light. Same as white light (a).—Decomposition of light. See decomposition.—Deviation of a ray of light. See deviation.—Diffusion of light, the irregular reflection or scattering of the light from the surface of a body not absolutely smooth. The light is called diffused light.—Dioptric light, a light in which the beam is produced by refraction, not by reflection. See dioptric system, under dioptric.—Divine light, that illumination which proceeds directly from God.—Double lights, in lighthouses, lights on different levels, either in one tower at different heights or in two towers.—Drummond light. Same as calcium light.—Electric light. See electric.—Equation of light. See light-equation.—Fixed light, in lighthouses, a light which is maintained steadily without change, in contrast with revolving or intermittent lights.—Floating light, a light displayed at the masthead of a vessel or light-ship anchored near a reef, shoal, or channel where there is no suitable foundation for a lighthouse.—Friends of Light. See Free Congregations, under congregation.—Ground lights, a row of lights used on a stage to light the base of a scene.—High* light, in art, any part or point in a picture upon which the light falls or glances in full force and without shadow; as, the high lights in a portrait, or in a study of still life.—Holme's light, a device used, in practice, to show the movements of a locomotive torpedo. It is an arrow-headed canister pierced with several holes and filled with phosphide of calcium. The contact of water with this chemical produces bubbles which burst into flame on reaching the surface and also emit dense smoke having the odor of garlic.—Homogeneous light, light which is all of one color, or more strictly, of one wave-length; monochromatic light.—Incandescent light. See electric light, under electric.—Increase light. Same as divine light.—Inward or inward light, spiritual illumination; knowledge divinely imparted; specifically, as used by the Society of Friends, the light of Christ in the soul.—Intermittent light, in lighthouses, a light which appears suddenly, remains constant for a short interval, and then suddenly disappears, the light being alternately displayed and hidden by the motion of circular shades in front of the reflectors.—Law of absorption of light. See law.—Leading lights, lights in different towers to indicate to seamen a certain course, channel, or danger. E. H. Knight.—Lead lights. See lead.—Light-elasticity, the elasticity of the luminiferous ether, upon which the velocity of light-propagation depends. This is ordinarily conceived of as being modified by the nature of the particular ponderable medium under consideration. Thus, the ratio of the velocities of light in water and glass (or the inverse ratio of their refractive indices) expresses also the ratio of the light-elasticity in each case. In crystallized media the light-elasticity may differ in different directions in the same substance, and its character determines whether these media are isotropic, uniaxial, or biaxial. See refraction, and axes of light-elasticity (under axis).—Light of nature, (a) Intellectual perception; that faculty of the mind by which certain truths appear evident, or clear and distinct, independently of experience. The phrase was used by Descartes in this sense. Leibnitz remarks that there are certain innate truths, called intuitions, which do not belong to the light of nature, because they are obscure. (b) In theol., the capacity which belongs to man of discovering some of the truths of religion without the aid of revelation: opposed to divine light.—Light-registering apparatus, an automatic device for recording the amount of light falling upon any particular spot during small fixed intervals. E. H. Knight.—Magnetization of light. See magnetization.—Monochromatic light. See monochromatic.—New Lights, a name sometimes given to persons who have seceded from a church, or formed a new religious connection, on account of some new view of doctrine or duty. See Compbellism, I.—North-east lights, the aurora borealis.—Oxyhydrogen light. Same as calcium light.—Oxyhydrogen light. See oxyhydrogen.—Red light, a light colored by strontium.—Revolving light, in lighthouses, a light alternately displayed and concealed by the revolution of a frame with three or more sides fitted with large reflectors so arranged that those on each side have their axes parallel. The light appears, gradually increases to full strength, and gradually disappears as the opaque sides of the frame intervene between it and the observer.—The Lights, (a) The Jewish feast of the Dedication or Kiucnia. (b) In the Greek Church, the feast of the Epiphany, or manifestation of Christ to the world, especially at his baptism. The name also refers to the illumination (baptism) of believers, and to the great number of lights carried at the ceremony of the benediction of the waters (see water) on the day of that feast, symbolical of illumination and baptism.—To bring to light. See bring.—To see the light, to come into view; to be made public; to be brought forth.—To stand in one's own light, to be the means of preventing one's own advantage, or of frustrating one's own purposes.—White light, (a) In physics, the light which comes direct from the sun, and which has not been decomposed as by refraction in passing through a transparent prism. (b) A light produced artificially, and used for signals, etc. (See also arc-light, flash-light).—Syn. 1 and 2. Flash, Beam etc. See flame, n.

Light (lit), a. and n. [ME. light, loht, lgt (orig. lht) = OS. lht (in comp. lhtlik, lht) = OFries. lht = D. lgt = MLG. lcht = OHG. lht, lht MHG. lhte, G. leicht = Iscl. lētt = Sw. lätt = Dan. let = Goth. lehts, light; perhaps orig. lht*, lenht* (with orig. pp. suffix -t), akin to Lith. lengvus = L. levis, earlier levis, orig. lenh* vis (1) = Gr. ελαφρ = Skt. raghu, light. From the L. form levis are ult. E. levity, levitate, leaven, lover, levese, levese, levy, levy, alleviate, allege etc.] I. a. 1. Having little or relatively little actual weight; not burdensome; not cumbersome or unwieldy: as, a light load; light weapons.

This dragon no man cowd wite where Merlin it hadd; and it was mervelesous light and mevable; and when it was set on a launce the behelde it for grete merveile.

Mervin (E. E. T. S.), I. 114

It will be light, my lord, that you may bear it Under a cloak that is of any length.

Shak., T. G. of V., III. 1. 12

The strong and cumbersome arms the valiant wield,
The weaker warrior takes a lighter shield.

Pope, Iliad, xiv. 44

2. Having little weight as compared with bulk of little density or specific gravity; not heavy either absolutely or relatively: as, feathers are light; oil is lighter than water.

Along the quiet air.

Come and float calmly off the soft, light clouds,
Such as you see in Summer.

Bryant, A Winter Piece

3. Of short weight; weighing less than the proper or standard amount: as, to use light weights in trade; light coin.

You allow some grains to your gold before you call it light: allow some infirmities to any man before you call him ill.
Donne, Sermons, xiv.

Good ye are and bad, and like to coine,
Some true, some light. Tennyson, The Holy Grail.
4. In cookery, not heavy or soggy; spongy; well raised: said of bread, cakes, and the like.
To begin, then, with the very foundation of a good table.—Bread: What ought it to be? It should be light, sweet, and tender.
H. B. Stowe, House and Home Papers, x.

5. Lacking that which burdens or makes heavy;
hence, free from burden or impediment; unencumbered: as, light infantry; the ship returned light.

He died for heaviness that his cart went light.
Milton, On Old Hobson, ll.
I would teach them that my arm is heavy, though my pursue be light.
Hawthorne, Twice-told Tales (My Kinsman).

6. Not heavy in action or effect; lacking force or intensity; moderate; slight; buoyant; agile; sprightly: as, a ship of light draft; light of foot;
a light hand; light sleep; a light wind; light comedy.

This city must be famish'd,
Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., l. 4. 68.
A foot more light, a step more true,
Ne'er from the heath-flower dash'd the dew.
Scott, L. of the L., l. 18.

You are young, Miss, and I should say a light sleeper.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xvi.
7. Not weighty; of little import or consequence; trivial; unimportant: as, a light remark; light reading; a light fault.

Seemeth it to you a light thing to be a king's son-in-law?
1 Sam. xviii. 23.
Trifles light as air
Are to the jealous confessions strong
As proofs of holy writ. Shak., Othello, iii. 2. 323.
To throw all Europe into confusion for a purpose clearly unjust was no light matter.
Macaulay, Frederic the Great.

8. Not burdensome, hard, or difficult; easy to perform, to endure, to digest, etc.; slight; inconsiderable: as, light work; light punishment;
a light repast; a light wine.

It is lighter to leave in three lonely persons
Than for to lounge and leue as wol lorettes as lele.
Piers Plowman (B), xvii. 43.
Our light affliction . . . worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. 2 Cor. iv. 17.
You shall presently have a light supper, and to bed.
Ootton, in Walton's Angler, li. 234.
The light wines of Bordeaux began to be familiar to almost every table. J. McCarthy, Hist. Own Times, xli.
9. Not weighed down; free from care or annoyance; cheerful; jubilant: as, a light heart.

Prism, at the prayer of the prize kynes, Delivert the lady with a light will,
In exchange of the phoebes, that chaped before.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 7003.
What sadness can I have? No; I am light,
And feel the courses of my blood more warm
And stirring than they were.
Beau. and Fl., Maid's Tragedy, iii. 2.

Although I did not give way entirely to such hopeful thoughts, I was still very light in spirits and walked upon air.
R. L. Stevenson, Merry Men.

10. Lacking moral or mental gravity; characterized by or exhibiting levity; volatile; capricious; frivolous: as, a light mind; light conduct.
Carols and rounds and such light or luscious Poemes.
Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poetrie, p. 60.
Seneca cannot be too heavy, nor Plautus too light.
Shak., Hamlet, ii. 2. 420.

These light vain persons still are drunk or mad
With surfeiting and pleasures of their youth.
Sir J. Davies, Immortal of Soul, xxx.
Her light head quite turned
In this court atmosphere of flatteries.
Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 56.

Hence—11. Given to levity of conduct; loose in morals; wanton; unchaste.

A light wife doth make a heavy husband.
Shak., M. of V., v. 1. 130.

It's fitting that those who have had a light and evil life, and abused charity when they were young, should shun come to lack it when they are old. Scott, Antiquary, xxi.
The ghawases, clad in light garments, that cling to them, sprawl easily, and sport with one another till the guests are assembled. . . . These are the light women of Egypt; and there are none lighter on the face of the globe.
C. W. Stoddard, Mahallah, xviii.

12. Having a sensation of lightness; giddy;
dizzy; hence, flighty in mind; delirious.

It seems his sleeps were hinder'd by thy railing,
And thereof comes it that his head is light.
Shak., C. of E., v. 1. 72.

13. Adapted for or employed in light work.
A deaf serving woman and the light porter completed
Mrs. Sparrow's empire.
Dickens, Hard Times, ii. 1.

14. Quickly passing; fleeting; transitory.

Fortune unfaithful favours me with light gooden.
Chaucer, Boethius, l. meter 1.

15. Without substance; not nutritious or satisfying. [Rare.]

Our soul loatheth this light bread. Num. xii. 5.

16. Weak; sickly. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]—
A light hand. See hand.—Light artillery, battery, cavalry. See the nouns.—Light carbureted hydrogen. See carbureted.—Light comedian, an actor of light comic parts.—Light in hand. See hand.—Light literature. See literature.—Light marching order (march), the condition of troops equipped with arms, ammunition, canteen, and haversack, but without overcoat, blanket, or knapsack.—Light metal. See metal.—Light sails, top-gallant sails, royal, flying-jib sails, and studding sails.— Light soil. See soil.—To light off. See let.—To make light of, to treat as of little consequence; disregard.—To set light by (formerly off), to undervalue; slight; treat as of no importance.

All their exhortations were to set light of the things in this world, to count riches and honours vanity.
Hooker, Eccles. Polity, Prel., viii.

The Art you speak of is not to be set light by: it is as Praise-worthy sometimes to follow upon nimbly as it is to fight stoutly. N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, l. 85.

II. n. pl. The lungs, especially of a brute animal (most frequently in the phrase liver and lights): so called from their lightness.

*Light*² (lit), adv. [< ME. lighte, lichte, < AS. leohle (= OS. lehto = D. lgt = MLG. lichte = OHG. licho, licht, licht, G. leicht = Dan. let = Sw. lätt), lightly, < leohle, light: see *light*¹, a.] 1. Not heavily; not with full weight or force.

Light lay the years upon the untroubled head.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, l. 157.

2. Lightly; cheaply. Hooker.—3. Easily; readily; nimbly.

Yow oughte ben the lighter merciable.
Chaucer, Good Women, l. 610.
Every elf and fairy sprite
Hop as light as bird from brier.
Shak., M. N. D., v. 1. 401.

4. With light or easy effort; without requiring or exerting much power: as, a light-running wagon or machine.

*Light*² (lit), v. t. [< ME. lighten, lychten, lichten, lichten, lyhten, make light (less heavy), < AS.
lichtan (also in comp. alichtan, gelichtan, > E. *alight*²), make light, alleviate, leohthan, become light (= OFries. lichtha, lhta = D. lichten = MLG. LG. lichten = OHG. lichten, lichten, MLG. lichten, G. lichten (after LG.) = Ice. litta = Sw. lätta = Dan. lätte, make light, lift, dis-burden), < leohle, light: see *light*², a. Cf.
*alight*². Cf. also *light*³.] 1. To make light or less heavy; lighten; ease of a burden. [Obsolete or colloq.]

The letters of syr Lucius lyghte myne herte.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 251.

If we do thus do, . . . we shal with this comfort finde our hartes lyghted, and thereby the griefe of our tribulation lessed.

Sir T. More, Comfort against Tribulation (1573), fol. 53.

Now that the sheering of your sheep is done,
And the washed flocks are lyghted of their wool.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, l. 2.

2. To deliver, as of a child. [Prov. Eng.]

Faste beyde that Chiroha, a 80 Fodme, is a Chirohe of Seynt Ninoias, where our Lady rested hire, after she was lyghted of our Lord. Manderley, Travels, p. 71.

And I shalle say thou wast lyght
Of a knave-child this night.
Tenneyley Mymerie, p. 107. (Halliwel.)

To light along (naut.), to move (a cable or sail) along by lifting or carrying it. Taken.—To light up (naut.), to loosen, slacken, or ease off: as, light up the jib-sheets.

*Light*² (lit), v. i.; pret. and pp. lighted (often lit),
ppr. lighting. [< ME. lighthen, lichten, lychten, lyten, lysten, lhten, < AS. lhtan, lhtan (also in comp. alhtan, gelhtan, *> E. alight*²), dismount (from a horse), = Ice. litta, dismount, stop, halt, lit, make light, relieve of a burden, a particular use of lhtan, make light: see *light*², v.
Cf. *alight*².] 1. To get down or descend, as from horseback or from a carriage; dismount; alight. [In this sense now usually alight; but light is still used in some parts of the United States.]

Down of his horse Aurelius lighte anon.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 455.

Yonder . . . Urania lighted; the very horse methought bewailed to be so disburdened. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, l.

And when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be traitor, or unjustly fight!
Shak., Rich. II., l. 1. 82.

My lord, the count's sister, being overtaken in the streets with a great hail-storm, is light at your gate, and desires room till the storm be overpast.

Beau. and Fl., Woman-Hater, ii. 1.

3. To settle down, as a bird from flight; come to rest; hence, to fall, drop, or spring (upon something): as, bees light among flowers; he lit on his feet; trouble shall light upon him.

The firsten shot (lit) was to neir,
It lighted all to short.
Battle of Bannockburn (Child's Ballads, VII. 235).

The wrongs you do these men may light on you,
Too heavy too.
Pilgrimage, l. 2.

Light on his head who pierced thy innocent breast.
Shelley, Adonais, xvii.

On the tree-tops a crested peacock lit.
Tennyson, Cenci.

3. To come by chance, fall, or happen (upon something): followed by on or upon, formerly sometimes by of.

If, before their goods are all sold, they [the Chinese] can light of Chapman to buy their ships, they will gladly sell them also.
Dampier, Voyages, II. l. 156.

He lighted on the Wills of several persons bearing the same names as the poet. Dyce, Pref. to Ford's Plays, p. vii.
What is that which I should turn to, lighting upon days like these?
Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

4. To drop or fall, as if unexpectedly; be brought or drawn: followed by into.

When the Hierarchy of England shall light into the hands of humble and audacious men, . . . much mischief is like to ensue.
Milton, Reformation in Eng., ii.

They shall light into atheistical company. South.

To light out, to go away; especially, to depart in haste or without notice; make off; abscond; "skip." [Slang,
U. S.]

If I had anuff money to go to New Orleans like a gentleman, I'd just light out some night.
The Century, XXXVI. 80.

lightable (lit'ə-bl), a. [*< light*², v., + -able.]

Capable of being lighted.

light-apostrophe (lit'ə-pos'trō-fē), n. In bot., see *apostrophe*¹, 2.

light-armed (lit'ə-rmd), a. Armed and accout-tered in a manner convenient for active and desultory service: said of troops.

Light-armed troops

In coats of mail and military pride.
Milton, P. R., iii. 311.

light-ball (lit'bál), n. Milit., a pyrotechnic preparation, composed of saltpeter, sulphur, resin, and linseed-oil, used by soldiers to afford light for their own operations. Light-balls are made on frames of iron and canvas, of different sizes, for burning a certain number of minutes. They differ from fire-balls in containing no provision for causing destructive explosion.

light-barrel (lit'bar'el), n. Milit., an empty powder-barrel, with holes in it, filled with shavings soaked in tar, used to light up a trench or breach.

light-boat (lit'bôt), n. Same as light-ship.

light-box (lit'boks), n. Naut., same as light- room, 1.

lightbrain (lit'brán), n. A light-headed or weak-minded person.

Being as some were, light-braines, runnagates, unthriftes, and riotours.
Martin, Marriage of Priestes, l. l. iii. (1554). (Latham.)

light-course (lit'kōrs), n. A copper band, from 15 to 18 inches deep, on the top of the pan used in clarifying sugar. Its function is to keep the scum from boiling over.

light-dues (lit'dūs), n. pl. Duties or tolls levied on ships navigating certain waters, for the maintenance of lighthouses; light-money.

lighten¹ (lit'tn), v. [< ME. lighthen, lighthenen, lyhten, become light; with suffix -en, *E. -en*¹ (1), formative of passive verbs, *< light*¹, a., light:
see *light*¹, a. Cf. *alighten*¹, enlighten. Hence *lightening*¹, *lightning*¹.] I. intrans. 1. To become light or lighter; grow light or clear up; brighten: as, the sky lightens.

No motion, save alone
What lightens in the lucid east
Of rising worlds by yonder wood.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, cv.

After sixty years, the ardent words of a lovely girl are not quite so quick and spirit-stirring as when, fresh from the fancy or the heart, they lived and lightened on the page.
E. Dowden, Shelley, II. 378.

2. To emit flashes of lightning; shoot out as lightning; flash. See *lightning*¹.

The lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven shineth unto the other part. Luke xvii. 24.

This dreadful night,
That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars.
Shak., J. C., l. 2. 74.

II. trans. 1. To make light or bright; give light to; light up.

God, who lightened Eden with his Rays, Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, ii. Eden.

The Lord will lighten my darkness. 2 Sam. xxii. 30.

A key of fire ran all along the shore,
And lightened all the river with a blaze.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 301.

2. To illuminate mentally or spiritually; enlighten.

Saving grace is the gift of the Holy Ghost, which lighteneth inwardly the minds, and inflameth inwardly the hearts of men. Hooker, Booles, Polity, v, App. 1.

Now the Lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool. Shak., 2 Hon. IV, II. 1. 308.

3. To send forth like lightning. [Rare.]

Behold his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lighten forth Controlling majesty. Shak., Rich. II, III. 3. 69.

*lighten*² (lī'tn), v. [ME. lightenen; < light + -en (3). Cf. alighten.] 1. intrans. To become light or less heavy.

Their meto sono made my herte to lighten.
Book of the Knight of La Tour Landry, p. 1.

II. trans. 1. To make light or less heavy; reduce in weight; relieve of weight; as, to lighten coin by clipping or abrasion; to lighten a load or a ship.

As the ships of the company were large, and could not pass without being lightened, a small vessel (flute) was left stationed on the Ballize bar, to receive part of the cargoes. Gayarré, Hist. Louisiana, I. 501.

2. To make less burdensome or oppressive; alleviate; as, to lighten the cares of life.

Then first of all his mind was at ease, and free to rejoice, lightened of all manner burden and care. Mr. H. Scoble, tr. of Tacitus, p. 24.

When I contemplate that infinite Advantage he hath got by this Change and Transmigration, it much lightens the Weight of my Grief. Howell, Letters, I. vi. 7.

3. To cheer; gladden.

A trusty villain, sir, that very oft . . .
lightens my humour with his merry jests. Shak., C. of E., I. 2. 21.

It takes so very little to lighten hearts of seventeen and eighteen! Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xi.

4. To make lighter in color or shade; as, to lighten the background of a picture.

*lighten*³ (lī'tn), v. t. [light + -en (3). Cf. alighten.] To descend; settle down; light.

O Lord, let thy mercy lighten upon us, as our trust is in thee. Book of Common Prayer (Ch. of England), To Deum.

*lightening*¹ (lī'tning), n. [Verbal n. of *lighten*¹, v.; see lightening.] 1. A becoming light; the break of day. See *lightening*¹, 1.—2. A brightening up, as of the mind or spirit. [Rare.]

You gave me good warning to take heed and beware, lest after a lightening I catch a fall. J. Carver, in Bradford's Works (Parker Soc., 1855), II. 356.

4. In metal, the sudden brightening of the color of silver during cupellation when the metal reaches the point of greatest purity.

*lightening*² (lī'tning), n. [Verbal n. of *lighten*², v.] The act or fact of becoming or making light or less heavy.

light-equation (lī't-ē-kwā'shqn), n. The correction for the effect on astronomical phenomena, especially eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, of the time required by light to traverse the space between the planet and the earth. This is combined with aberration (which see).

*lighter*¹ (lī'tēr), n. [= D. lichter = G. leuchter; as light, v., + -er.] 1. One who or that which lights or illuminates; specifically, a torch or an electric device for lighting candles or gas-jets. A simple form of lighter is a strip of paper rolled into a tapering tube.

Twisting up a piece of waste paper into a lighter. Wilde Collins, Hids and Heek, ix.

An electric lighter attached to the gas fixture suddenly flashed brightness over a most curious place. Weekly American (Waterbury, Conn.), Aug. 27, 1882.

2. pl. Blinkers for a horse.

Ye'll take the bridle frae his head,
The lighters frae his e'en. Blanchflower and Jollyfellow (Child's Ballads, IV. 326).

*lighter*² (lī'tēr), n. [= D. lichter; as light + -er.] A boat or vessel, commonly an open flat-bottomed barge, but sometimes decked, used in lightening or unloading and also in loading ships, and for receiving and transporting for short distances passengers or goods, or materials of any kind, usually in a harbor.

Some pretty presentation, which we have addressed and conveyed hither in a lighter at the general charge, and landed at the back door. B. Jonson, Masque of Augusta.

The boatmen jump into the water and push the lighters against the stone stairs, while we unload our own baggage. B. Taylor, Lands of the Barren, p. 13.

*lighter*³ (lī'tēr), v. [*lighter*², n.] I. trans. To convey or transport in or as in a lighter, as goods or cargo.

And our effects of some three or four tons were lighted ashore by means of the Indian canoes. The Century, XXX. 730.

II. intrans. To be employed in the business of transporting goods by means of a lighter.

The vicissitudes of business in their respective vocations — lightering, mule-driving, peddling, or bar-keeping, as the case may be. J. W. Palmer, The New and the Old, p. 207.

*lighter*³ (lī'tēr), n. Same as *lighter*².

lighterage (lī'tēr-āj), n. [*lighter*² + -age.] 1. The act of unloading cargo into a lighter.—2. The price paid for unloading a ship by means of a lighter, or for conveying goods or merchandise in lighters.

The lighterage, carriage and porters' due. Report to Lord Buteleigh in 1583 (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 45).

lighterman (lī'tēr-man), n.; pl. lightermen (-men). [= D. ligterman; as *lighter*² + man.] A man who manages a lighter; one employed on a lighter.

A poor lighterman, sir, one that hath had the honour sometimes to lay in the king's bear there. B. Jonson, Masque of Augusta.

lighter-screw (lī'tēr-skrū), n. A screw for the adjustment of the relative distances of the grinding surfaces of a pair of millstones.

lighter-staff (lī'tēr-staf), n. In a grain-mill, a lever which supports and controls the adjustable end of the bray-plank or bridgetree, to which it is connected at one end by a stirrup, while its other end receives the lighter-screw or a counterbalance weight. E. H. Knight.

light-fingered (lī't-fing'gēd), a. 1. Light in touch with the fingers, as in playing the piano.—2. Dexterous in touching and taking; thievish; addicted to petty thefts: applied particularly to pickpockets.

Our men contented themselves with looking after their goods (the Tongueless being very light-fingered), and left the management of the Boats entirely to the Boats crew. Dampier, Voyages, II. 1. 14.

Great is Apollo with his golden shell,
The gift of Hermes in his infancy,
And great is Hermes' self, light-fingered god. R. H. Stoddard, Arcadian Idyl.

light-foot (lī't fūt), a. Nimble; light-footed. [Poetical.]

There she alighted from her light-foot beast. Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 7.
Light-foot Iris brought it yester-eve. Tennyson, Enoch.

lightfoot (lī't fūt), n. Venison. [Old cant.]

"Wife," quoth the miller, "fetch me forth lightfoot,
And of his sweetness a little we'll taste."
A fair ven'son pastye brought she out presently. The King and the Miller of Mansfield (Child's Ballads, [VIII. 30].)

light-footed (lī't fūt'ed), a. Light of foot; stepping or skipping lightly or nimbly, as in running or dancing.

Wood-nymphs mixed with her light-footed Fauna. Drayton, Polyolbion, xi. 135.
A fairy Prince with joyful eyes,
And lighter-footed than the fox. Tennyson, The Day-dream (The Arrival).

*lightful*¹ (lī't fūl), a. [*light*¹, n., + -ful.] Full of light; bright. [Rare.]

That glorious lamps
Whose lightful presence giveth sudden light
To . . . sleeps. Merton, Sophonisba, I. 2.

*lightful*² (lī't fūl), a. [Irreg. < *light*², a., + -ful.] Light; cheerful. [Rare.]

Tho' my heart was lightful and joyous before, yet it is ten times more lightsome and joyous now. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, II. 60.

lightfulness (lī't fūl-nes), n. The quality of being lightful, in either sense. [Rare.]

The eternal Intelligence . . . needs no recording of opinions to confirm his knowledge, no more than the sun wants wax to be the fuel of his glorious lightfulness. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, III.

light-handed (lī't-han'ded), a. 1. Having light hands; soft, delicate, or dexterous in touch or manipulation.—2. Having or bringing little in the hands: as, to come home light-handed.—3. Insufficiently supplied with hands or assistants, as a ship or a factory; short-handed.

light-headed (lī't-hed'ed), a. 1. Disordered in the head; giddy or dizzy; hence, flighty; delirious.

When Belvidera talks of "lutes, laurels, seas of milk, and ships of amber," she is not mad, but light-headed. Walpole.

Some doubted and were sore afraid
That she had grown light-headed with her woe. William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 152.

2. Thoughtless; volatile; frivolous.

If the man be grave, his speech and stile is grave: if light-headed, his stile and language also light. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poesie, p. 134.

These often overturn a thick-witted or a light-headed man. The Century, XXVI. 300.

light-headedness (lī't-hed'ed-nes), n. The state or quality of being light-headed; dissimilarity; flightiness; wandering; delirium.

So lovely a voice uttering nothing but the incoherent ravings of light-headedness. Mrs. Burney, Cecilia, I. 2.

light-hearted (lī't-hār'ted), a. Having a light heart; free from grief or anxiety; cheerful.

He whistles as he goes, light-hearted wretch, Cold and yet cheerful. Cooper, Task, iv. 12.

—syn. Gladsome, joyous.

light-heartedly (lī't-hār'ted-li), adv. In a light-hearted manner; with a light heart.

light-heartedness (lī't-hār'ted-nes), n. The state of being light-hearted or free from care or grief; cheerfulness; playfulness.

These "gabes," as they are called, are merely frolicsome braggadocio, spoken in light-heartedness, and not intended to convey any serious intention. Sneye, Brit., XX. 652.

light-heeled (lī't-hēld), a. 1. Nimble or lively in walking or running; swift of foot.

The villain is much lighter-heeled than I. Shak., M. N. D., III. 2. 418.

2. Of loose character.

She is sure a light heeled wench. The Bride, 1640, sig. G. (Halliwell.)

light-horse (lī't-hōrs), n. Light-armed cavalry.

One hundred Men at Arms, and Six hundred Light-Horses, led by the Earl of Warwick. Baker, Chronicles, p. 303.

Ludovic comes forth with his army, and with his light horse begins the charge. Coryat, Crudities, I. 110.

light-horseman (lī't-hōrs'man), n. A light-armed cavalry soldier.

lighthouse (lī't-hōs), n. A tower or other structure exhibiting a light or lights, for the purpose of indicating the presence of rocks, shoals, or other dangers to navigation, or for the guidance of mariners when approaching or sailing along a coast, entering a harbor, or navigating a river or other body of water. Lighthouses were formerly illuminated simply by means of a wood- or coal-fire, and afterward by candles and lamps. Coal-fires continued in general use till after the middle of the eighteenth century, and in some places many years later. The lamps in the lanterns of lighthouses in the United States are, for the most part, mechanical oil-lamps fitted with Argand burners, and employed with simple reflectors or with some form of the Fresnel lantern. Electric lighting has been tried in some lighthouses, but found objectionable on account of the depth of shadow produced by it in their immediate vicinity. In order that lighthouses may be distinguished by night, their lights vary in power, color, number, position, etc. As regards power, they are classified as of the first, second, third, or fourth order: the first two being employed in coast-lighthouses, and the others as sound-, harbor-, or river-lights. They may be fixed, revolving, flashing, or intermittent, in either single or combined colors: thus, a light may show two white flashes and a red flash followed by an interval of darkness, or the red and white flashes may alternate. These changes are obtained by various contrivances for causing the lenses, reflectors, or screens to travel in a circular path around the lamp, or to pass before it. Some lighthouses are painted with bands of color, or bear some other distinguishing mark, that their identity may be easily established in the daytime.

Lighthouse on Alligator Reef, Florida Reef.

They saw . . .
The lamp-fire glimmer down from the tall lighthouse tower. Wilder, Tent on the Beach.

Lighthouse Board, a board of commissioners attached to the Treasury Department of the United States government, having supervision of the lighthouse system of the United States. It consists of nine members: three civilians (the Secretary of the Treasury, the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, and a scientist), three naval officers, and three officers of the Corps of Engineers of the Army.

lighthouseman (lī't-hōs-man), n.; pl. lighthousemen (-men). A keeper of a lighthouse.

The manners and ways of coastguardmen, lighthousemen, and other amphibious creatures. Athenaeum, No. 3303, p. 257.

Lighting¹ (lī'ting), n. [< ME. līhtinge, līhtinge, < AS. līhtung, līhtung, līhting, līhting, līhting, verbal n. of līhtan, līhtan, light, shine, illuminate: see līht², v.] 1. The act of making light or becoming light. See līht¹, v. t.—2. The act of igniting or illuminating: as, the lighting of a fire; street-lighting.

Electric lighting and working of railways and tramways are upon a commercial and useful stage.

Nature, XXXVII, 303.

3. In metal-working, same as annealing. Lighting² (lī'ting), n. [< ME. līhting, < AS. līhting, a making or becoming light, alleviation, verbal n. of līhtan, līhtan, make light, lēhtan, become light: see līht², v.] The act of making or becoming light or less heavy. See līht², v. t. Lighting³ (lī'ting), n. [Verbal n. of līhtis, v.] The act of alighting, as from flight.

Ever long it was noticed that in the process of lighting (of various birds) there was, very commonly, a conspicuous flashing-out of white on wings or tail, or on both.

Amer. Naturalist, XXII, 202.

Light-iron (līt'ī'ern), n. An iron stand serving to hold a candle or a lamp: an early utensil, kept in use in some localities until lately.

Light-keeper (līt'kē'pēr), n. The person who has charge of the light in a lighthouse or lightship.

I reached Dublin on the evening of the 5th, and, without giving the lightkeeper any warning of my visit, went straight to the lighthouse.

Nineteenth Century, XXIV, 67.

Light-legged (līt'leg'ed or -legd), a. Nimble; swift of foot.

Lightlegged Pas has got the middle space.

Sir P. Sidney.

Lightless (līt'les), a. [< ME. līhtless, < AS. lēhtlēda, without light, < lēht, light, + -lēda, = E. -less: see līht¹, n., and -less.] Without light; giving no light; dark.

Upon the chauncynges of the moone,

Whan lightless is the world.

Chaucer, Troilus, III, 550.

The lightless fire

Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire.

Shak., Laureo, I, 4.

These large lightless waves of the sun . . . are frequently called obscure or invisible heat.

Tyndall, Forms of Water, p. 13.

Lightly (līt'li), adv. [< ME. līhtly, līhtliche, līhtliche, < AS. lēhtlike (= OFrien. līhtelik = D. līhtelijik = MLG. līhtlike = OHG. līhtlike, MHG. līhtlike, G. līchtlich), in a light manner, < lēhtlic, a., light, < lēht, light, + -ly = E. -ly.] 1. Not heavily; with little weight or force; not oppressively or severely: as, to tread lightly; to punish lightly; his cares sit lightly upon him.

When at the first he lightly afflicted the land of Zebulun.

Isa. ix. 1.

That the King's hands may not be rudely tied by others, he must consent to tie them lightly himself.

Macaulay, Sir William Temple.

2. With little effort; without difficulty; easily. And verily you shall not lightly find in all the city any thing that is more commodious . . . [than] these gardens.

Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), II, 2.

They come lightly by the malt, and need not spare it.

Scott.

And, pushing his black craft among them all, He lightly scatter'd theirs.

Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

3. Without good reason; upon slight grounds; readily. My wife is in a wayward mood to-day,

And will not lightly trust the messenger.

Shak., C. of E., IV, 4, 6.

4. With little regard; slightly; indifferently. Then, and long afterwards, colonial property was lightly esteemed.

Bancroft, Hist. U. S., II, 362.

5. Parsimoniously; niggardly. They are but lightly rewarded.

Shak., L. L. L., I, 2, 157.

6. Without deliberation; heedlessly; inconsiderately. Matrimony . . . is not by any to be entered into unadvisedly or lightly.

Book of Common Prayer, Solemnization of Matrimony. They choose the Transiours yearly, but lightly they change them not.

Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), II, 3.

7. In a light-hearted manner; cheerfully; cheerily; airily; with levity. I'll lightly front each high emprise

For one kind glance of those bright eyes.

Scott, L. of the L., I, 24.

The seventy years borne lightly as the plume Wears its first down of snow in green disdain.

Lowell, Bankside, III.

In the Spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love.

Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

Lightly he answered her, and smile or kiss Would change their talk to idle words of bliss.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II, 774.

8. With agility; nimbly; quickly. It booteth not to think that throw to beare,

But grownd he gave, and lightly leapt aroore.

Spenser, F. Q., II, xl, 28.

Watch what thou seest, and lightly bring me word.

Tennyson, Morte d'Arthur.

9. Commonly; usually. The folk of that Contrée ben lightly drunken, and han but litlle appetyt to mete.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 157.

Short summers lightly have a forward spring.

Shak., Rich. III., III, I, 94.

The great thieves of a state are lightly the officers of the crown.

B. Jonson, Discovert.

Lightly (līt'li), v. t.; pret. and pp. lightlied, ppr. lightlying. [< līhtly, adv.] To make light of; slight; disparage. Also lightly. [Scotch.]

I drew me near to my stairhead,

And I heard my ain lord lightly me.

Lord James Douglas (Child's Ballads, IV, 123).

His House, whose front vpreard so high and even, That lightlied earth, and seemed to threat the heaven.

T. Hudson, tr. of Du Bartas's Judith, I, 73.

light-maker (līt'mā'kēr), n. That which yields light, as a heavenly body. Wychf.

lightman (līt'mān), n. A linkman. The stars might go to sleep a-night,

And leave their work to these new lights;

The midwife moon might mind her calling,

And noke lightman leave his bawling.

Tom Brown, Works, IV, 255.

light-minded (līt'mīn'ded), a. Of light mind; unsteady; volatile; capricious.

No that is hasty to give credit is light-minded.

Ecclesi. xix. 4.

light-mindedness (līt'mīn'ded-nēs), n. The quality of being light-minded; inconsiderateness; capriciousness.

The singular light-mindedness with which a king of France bestows upon a Lombard adventurer a county in the very heart and centre of his own kingdom.

Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XII, 411.

light-moderator (līt'mod'g-rā-tōr), n. An attachment for a microscope to secure a white light on an object when examined by artificial light. It consists of two disks of colored glass, one blue, the other red, mounted on a stand for convenience in adjustment.

light-money (līt'mūn'ē), n. Money levied for the maintenance of lighthouses; light-dues.

Apart from the Sound dues themselves, there were charges of light-money, pass-money, etc., which caused a delay at Kilmore.

E. Schuyler, Amer. Diplomacy, p. 308.

lightness¹ (līt'nēs), n. [< ME. līhtnes, < AS. līhtness (= OHG. līhtness), lightness, brightness, < lēht, līht, light: see līht¹, a., and -ness.] The state or quality of being light or bright.

lightness² (līt'nēs), n. [< ME. līhtness, līhtness (= MLG. līhtness); < līht², a., + -ness.] 1. The state or quality of being light in weight; lack of heaviness or gravity: as, the lightness of a burden; the lightness of cork or of hydrogen.

Its cork's specific lightness, combined with strength and durability, recommends it above all other substances for forming life-buoys, belts, and jackets.

Encyc. Brit., VI, 402.

2. In cookery, sponginess; the state of being well raised; freedom from sogginess.

This matter of lightness is the distinctive line between savage and civilised bread.

H. B. Stowe, House and Home Papers, x.

3. Freedom from heaviness or clumsiness in act or execution; dexterity; nimbleness; agility: as, lightness of touch in painting or music; lightness of foot in running or dancing.

Sometimes, to shew his lightness and mastery, He playeth Herodes upon a scaffold hye.

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, I, 197.

He [Rab] . . . trotted up stairs with much lightness, and went straight to that door.

Dr. J. Brown, Rab and his Friends.

4. Inconstancy; unsteadiness; fickleness. Commanded always by the greater gust;

Such is the lightness of you common men.

Shak., 3 Hen. VI., III, I, 89.

5. Levity; wantonness; unchastity. That modesty may more betray our sense

Than woman's lightness?

Shak., M. for M., II, 2, 160.

Ready to sprinkle our unspeotted fame With note of lightness?

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v, 3.

6. Light-headedness. And he, repulsed—a short tale to make— Fell into a sadness, then into a fast,

Thence to a watch, thence into a weakness,

Thence to a lightness.

Shak., Hamlet, II, 2, 149.

= Syn. 3. Briskness, sprightliness, ease, facility, swiftness. —4. Volatility, Frivolity, etc. (see levity), instability, giddiness, airiness.

Lightning¹ (līt'ning), n. [Also in the first sense lightening, after the present form of the verb, but according to the orig. type lightning; < ME. līhtning, līhtning, illumination, verbal n. of līhtnen, līhtnen, illuminate: see līhten¹. Cf. līhten¹.] 1. A becoming light or bright; a flashing of light: in this sense usually lightening.

Be the lightnings of a storme, To Jhesu alle three presents thei broughte.

Hymns to Virgin, etc. (R. E. T. S.), p. 45.

The great brand Made lightnings in the splendour of the moon.

Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

2. A sudden illumination of the heavens caused by the discharge of atmospheric electricity from one cloud to another or from a cloud to the earth; a flash of light due to electricity in the atmosphere. The lightning-flash may have a length of a mile or even more, and commonly takes an irregular direction (forked lightning), the path of the electrical discharge being that of the least resistance. In sheet-lightning no definite spark is seen, but a general illumination over a broad surface; it is commonly due to the reflection by the clouds of the discharge proper. This is called summer lightning or heat-lightning when the storm is at a great distance, so that only the broad flashes of light are seen, usually near the horizon, and unaccompanied by thunder. Sheet-lightning is also described as occurring when there is neither storm nor cloud; if such cases be authentic, it is probably due to a weak electrical discharge in the air at a considerable altitude. In globular lightning or globe-lightning, which is a rare phenomenon, the discharge takes a spherical form (fire-ball), sometimes apparently a foot or more in diameter, and lasts for a number of seconds, descending slowly to the earth, and often exploding with a loud report. The discharge of frictional electricity in the laboratory gives phenomena similar in kind to those of lightning, and the "brimstone odor" which sometimes accompanies the latter (due to the formation of ozone) is often observed.

In lyknese of a lightning he lygte on hem alle, And made hem konne and knowe alkyll languages.

Piers Plowman (B), xix, 197.

And when the cross blue lightning seem'd to open The breast of heaven, I did present myself Even in the aim and very flash of it.

Shak., J. C., I, 2, 80.

Mr. A. S. Parker photographed outside objects on an excessively dark night by the light of lightning alone. The wind was strong, and the interesting feature was brought out, when the plates were developed, that the foliage had perceptibly moved during the exposure. The flash must therefore have a measurable interval, probably decidedly longer than the thousandth or ten thousandth of a second, as got by Wheatstone.

Amer. Meteor. Jour., III, 101.

Jersey lightning, apple-jack or peach-brandy (as made, or alleged to be made, in New Jersey); very crude and bad whisky. [Blang, U. S.]

lightning², n. [Same as lightening².] A becoming light or less heavy; an exhilaration of the spirits. [Perhaps really the same as lightening², the senses being easily interchanged.]

How oft when men are at the point of death Have they been merry! which their keepers call A lightning before death.

Shak., R. and J., v, 3, 90.

Lightning-arrester (līt'ning-a-rēs'tēr), n. An apparatus used for protecting telegraph or telephone lines, offices, instruments, and operators from lightning-discharges. It usually consists of two wires or plates placed in close proximity, one of them connected to an earth-plate and the other to the line. The opposed surfaces of the plates are sometimes covered with sharp corrugations in directions at right angles to each other, and sometimes filled with sharp points which face each other and increase the power of the instrument.

Lightning-bug (līt'ning-bug), n. A firefly or phosphorescent beetle of the family Lampyridae, related to the European glow-worms. Two common species are Pyralocnemis angulatus and P. borealis.

The genera Photinus, Photinus, and Plectonotus have more or less wingless, degraded, larviform females, which are luminous in abdominal patches. The males of the same genera are winged, and resemble the common lightning-bugs, giving a more or less intense flash-light. Another lightning-bug of the eastern United States is Photinus pennsylvanicus, about half an inch long, of a yellowish color with a few ill-defined lines of black or brown; both sexes have wings and long elytra, and the luminous larva has a brush-like anal leg. A third species, common in parts of the Mississippi valley, is Photinus pyralis, which has blackish-brown elytra margined with pale yellow, and a yellow prothorax with a central black spot. The two last-named belong to the subfamily Lampyrinae.

Lightning-bug, or Firefly (Photinus pennsylvanicus). a, larva (line shows natural size); b, leg of larva, magnified; c, beetle.

Lightning-conductor (līt'ning-kōn-duk'tōr), n. Same as lightning-rod.

Lightning-discharger (līt'ning-dis-chār'jēr), n. Same as lightning-arrester.

Lightning-print (lit'ning-print), n. A branched or tree-like marking sometimes found on the skin of men and animals and on clothing struck by lightning, or in the neighborhood of the stroke, and popularly supposed to be an impression of the images of surrounding objects. That this is the case is highly improbable, and the few well-authenticated instances yet remain to be accounted for.

Lightning-proof (lit'ning-prōf), a. Safe or protected from lightning.

Lightning-protector (lit'ning-prō-tek'tor), n. Same as lightning-arrester.

Lightning-rod (lit'ning-rod), n. A pointed, insulated metallic rod erected to protect a building or a vessel from lightning; a lightning-conductor. Lightning-rods are attached to buildings and other structures for two purposes: (1) to prevent as far as possible sudden discharges of electricity from clouds to earth through or in the neighborhood of the building; (2) to form a line of least resistance for any such discharge, should it take place, and thus prevent damage to the building. In order that a lightning-rod may be efficient for the first purpose, it is provided with one or more (preferably several) sharp points at its upper end, with the view of gradually discharging the electricity of the surrounding atmosphere to earth. (See power of points, under point.) With regard to the most efficient form for a lightning-rod to fulfil the second purpose for which lightning-rods are erected, there have been great differences of opinion. Recent developments of electrical theory and experiment indicate that the form of the conductor is the most important element, the particular kind of metal being of comparatively little account. The conductor should be in the form of a ribbon or a thin tube, or consist of a number of separate thin wires not spun together to form a rope. The object is to obtain a conductor having small self-induction, which is the main impediment to a sudden rush of electricity. Care is also taken that the rod or conductor be well connected to earth, either through wet soil or through a network of water-mains.

Lightning-tube (lit'ning-tūb), n. Same as fulgurite.

Light-o'-love (lit'ō-luv'), n. [From the phrase light of love, i. e. trifling or capricious in love.] 1. A light, capricious woman; a wanton coquette.

So, my queen, you and I must part sooner than perhaps a light-o'-love such as you expected to part with a—likely young fellow. Scott.

2. An old dance-tune.

Clap us into light-o'-love; that goes without a burden; do you sing it, and I'll dance it.

Shak., Much Ado, III. 4. 44.

Light-organ (lit'ōr'gan), n. In entom., one of the luminous organs of certain insects, situated in the thorax or abdomen.

Light-room (lit'ōm), n. 1. A small apartment next to the magazine in a ship of war, in which lights for illuminating the magazine are placed behind thick glass windows, to avoid danger from carrying fire among the explosives. Also called light-box.—2. The room at the top of a lighthouse containing the lighting apparatus.

Light-ship (lit'ship), n. A vessel riding at anchor and displaying a light for the guidance of

It suiteth so fitly with that lightsome affection of joy wherein God delighteth when his saints praise him.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity.

This news should make you lightsome, bring joy to you.

Fletcher, Loyal Subject, II. 1.

Pope's understanding was no less vigorous . . . than his fancy was lightsome and sprightly.

Lowell, Study Windows, p. 410.

Lightsomely (lit'sum-lī), adv. In a lightsome manner.

Lightsomeness (lit'sum-nēs), n. The state or quality of being lightsome or of emitting or showing light, luminousness. [Rare.]

It is to our atmosphere that . . . the lightsomeness of our air and the twilight are owing.

G. Chayne, Philos. Prin. of Nat. Religion.

Lightsomeness (lit'sum-nēs), n. The quality of being lightsome or not heavy.

Drayton could write well, and had an agreeable lightsomeness of fancy.

Lowell, Among my Books, 3d ser., p. 133.

Light-spirited (lit'spir'it-ed), a. Having a light or cheerful spirit.

Light-struck (lit'struk), a. In photog., injured by exposure to actinic light; fogged, as a sensitized plate which has been insufficiently protected from light, or has been used in apparatus leaking light.

Light-tight (lit'tit), a. Impervious to light; excluding the light perfectly. Compare air-tight.

Light-vessel (lit'ves'el), n. Same as light-ship.

Light-wave (lit'wāv), n. A wave of the luminiferous ether; a wave of light.

Light-weight (lit'wāt), n. In sporting, a man or an animal of a certain weight prescribed by the rules, between that of the middle-weight on one hand and that of the feather-weight on the other; hence, any person of light weight or of comparatively little importance.

Light-winged (lit'wing-ed), a. Having light or fleet wings.

Light-wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid. Shak., Othello, I. 3. 239.

Light-witted (lit'wit'ed), a. Having a feeble or weak intellect.

For lyght-witted or drunken, sure, men will name thee in talks. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 82.

Lightwood (lit'wūd), n. [*Light*¹, n., + *wood*¹.] Any wood used in lighting a fire; kindlings; especially, in the southern United States, very resinous pine wood.

They [Indians] make a hearth in the middle of their canoe, raising it within two inches of the edge; upon this they lay their burning lightwood, split into small shivers, each splinter whereof will blaze and burn, and for end, like a candle. Hewert, Virginia, II.

A negro woman on her knees was hastily lighting a fire on the broad hearth with fat lightwood, and in another moment there was a strong aromatic odor, and the brilliant blaze. Harper's Map, LXXVIII. 243.

Lightwood knot. (a) A pine knot used for kindlings. (b) The ruddy duck, Ardeotis rubra: so called from its toughness. [New Bern, North Carolina.]

Lightwood (lit'wūd), n. [*Light*¹, a., + *wood*¹.] An inappropriate colonial name for the Australian tree Acacia melanoxylon, more properly called blackwood.

Lightwood (lit'wūd), n. [*Light*², a., + *wood*¹.] Same as coakwood.

Lighty (li'tī), a. [ME. lighty, light; < *light*¹, n., + -y.] Full of light; illuminated; not obscure.

The lanterns of this bodi is thine ygh: if thin ygh be symple, al thi body schal be lighty, but if it be weyward, al thi body schal be derkful. Wyclif, Luke xi. 34.

Ligia (lij'i-ā), n. [NL., < L. Ligea or Ligia*, < Gr. lygia, a water-nymph, fem. of lygēs, clear-voiced.] 1. A Fabrician (1798) genus of isopod crustaceans, now referred to the family Oniscidae. It contains certain sea-slaters, as L. oceanica. Also Lygia.—2. The typical genus of Ligiinae or Ligiidae, having a few European and Asiatic species. Duponchel, 1829.

Ligiidae (li-jī'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Ligia + -idae.] The Ligiinae rated as a family. Usually called Ligiidae.

Ligine (lij-i-i-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Ligia + -inae.] A subfamily of geometrid moths, typified by the genus Ligia; also named Ligiidae as a family of Geometrinae or Phalaenidae. It is widely distributed, and contains 7 genera of moths, with the body stout, front prominent, palpi variable, antennae stout, pectinate in the male, thorax very short, wings entire and unmarked or very slightly speckled, tarsi spinose, and hind tibiae four-spurred. Usually called Liginae.

Lignage (li-nāj), n. A Middle English form of lineage.

Lignales (lij-nal'ēs), n. [ME. Ligne aloes, < OF. lignales, lignales, ligne aloes, lignales, lignales, etc., < L. lignum aloes: lignum, wood; aloes, gen. of aloe, aloes: see aloes.] 1. Aloes- wood or agalcochum: same as aloes, 2.—2. A bitter drug: same as aloes, 1.

The woful trees that they leten falle
As bitre weren out of tares kynde.
For peyne, as is ligne aloes [var. lignum aloes] or galls.

Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1157.

Lignatile (lij-na'til), a. [NL. lignatilis, < L. lignum, wood. Cf. saxatile.] In bot., growing on wood; lignicole.

Lignet, n. A Middle English form of lignee.

Ligneous (lij-nē-us), a. [= Sp. ligneo = Pg. lit. ligneo, < L. ligneus, wooden, < lignum, wood; see lignum.] Consisting of or resembling wood; wooden; woody; in bot., having a wood-like texture; woody, as distinguished from herbaceous. Also lignose.

For it may be they [shoots of vines and roots of red roses], being of a more lignous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself. Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 554.

Ligneous galls, in entom., galls which are hard and inelastic, resembling wood in structure.—Ligneous marble, wood coated or prepared so as to resemble marble.

Lignescence (lij-nēs-ēns), a. [L. lignum, wood, + -escent.] Tending to be or become ligneous or woody; somewhat woody.

Lignicole (lij-ni-kōl), a. [L. lignum, wood, + colere, dwell.] Same as lignicolous.

Lignicoline (lij-nik'ō-lin), a. [Lignicole + -ine.] Growing upon wood, as some mosses, lichens, and fungi.

Ligniferous (lij-nif'ē-ras), a. [L. lignifer, < lignum, wood, + ferre = E. *bear*¹.] Producing or yielding wood.

Lignification (lij-ni-fi-kā'shon), n. [= F. lignification = Pg. lignificação; as lightify + -ation: see -ation.] The act of lignifying, or the state of being lignified; the process of becoming or of making woody; an alleged conversion of animal matter into wood, not confirmed by scientific investigation.

Ligniform (lij-ni-fōrm), a. [= F. ligniforme, < L. lignum, wood, + forma, form.] Like wood; resembling wood.—Ligniform asbestos. See asbestos, 3.

Lignify (lij-ni-fi), v. t. and i.; pret. and pp. lignified, ppr. lignifying. [= F. lignifier = Pg. (refl.) lignificarse, < L. lignum, wood, + facere, make: see -fy.] To convert into or become wood; make or grow woody.

As internal cells grow older the protoplasm disappears, the cellulose lignifies, and a more framework of woody cells is left. S. E. Herriot, Wonders of Plant Life, p. 6.

The object is, in brief, what appears to be a lignified serpent formed between the outer bark and the wood—in the cambium layer, in fact—of a native tree known as the Ipe mistm. C. V. Riley, Sci. Amer. Suppl., Feb. 17, 1883.

Lignified cells, in phys. bot., vegetable cells whose walls have been indurated and more or less thickened by the deposition of lignin, thus being converted into woody fiber.

Lignin (lij'nin), n. [L. lignum, wood, + *-in*².] An organic substance which forms the characteristic part of wood-cells, bast-cells, and all woody fibers, making the greater part of the weight of most dry wood. It is superadded to the cellulose of primitive cells by deposition on their walls. It is harder and more elastic than the latter, and absorbs comparatively little water. Its chemical composition is not satisfactorily made out; but it differs from cellulose in being soluble in Schultze's macerating mixture and in potassium hydrate, but not in cupro-ammonium. It has sometimes been called xylogem. See lignified cells, under lignify.

Ligniperdous (lij-ni-pēr'dus), a. [L. lignum, wood, + perdere, destroy; cf. F. ligniperdes, insects destructive of wood.] Destructive of wood; injurious to timber: specifically applied to various insects, crustaceans, and mollusks.

Lignite (lij'nit), n. [L. lignum, wood, + *-ite*².] Brown-coal; imperfectly formed coal, or that in which the original form of the wood is so distinctly preserved that it can be easily recognized by the unaided eye. Lignite usually contains considerably more hygroscopic water than does true coal, and is inferior to the latter as a fuel. It contains decidedly more oxygen than true coal, and in its general chemical composition stands midway between coal and wood. It is not limited to any particular geological formation, but is more abundant in the more recent strata. The fossil fuel of the Tertiary is almost all lignite; and in the Tertiary coal, where the vegetable structure may not perhaps be distinctly recognizable, the presence of 10 or 12 per cent. of water is an indication of imperfect conversion of the material into coal. There are, however, Tertiary coals which are nearly as free from water as those of Carboniferous age usually are, as, for instance, some of the coal of southern Colorado, which is either of very early Tertiary or late Cretaceous age.

Lignitic (lij-nit'ik), a. [Lignite + -ic.] Consisting of or containing lignite.—Lignitic group. Same as Lavanian group (which see, under *group*¹).

Lignitiferous (lij-nit'if'ē-ras), a. [Lignite + L. ferre = E. *bear*¹.] In geol., lignite-bearing; containing beds of lignite or brown-coal, as certain strata.

Light-ship.

mariners, in a position where the bottom or the depth would render a fixed lighthouse-structure impracticable. Light-ships have only such masts and sails as will enable them to reach a port if driven by storms from their anchorage.

Light-shot, n. In Anglo-Saxon times, a contribution of wax payable to the church three times yearly.

Lightsome (lit'sum), a. [*Light*¹, a., + -some.] Emitting or manifesting light; luminous; not dark. [Now chiefly poetical.]

However dark the habitation of the mole to our eyes, yet the animal itself finds the apartment sufficiently lightsome. Goldsmith, Vicar, vi.

If thou would'st view fair Melrose aright,
Go visit it by the pale moonlight;
For the gay beams of lightsome day
Gild but to flout the rains gray.

Scott, L. of L. M., II. 1.

Lightsome (lit'sum), a. [*Light*², a., + -some.] Having the quality of lightness or buoyancy; light-hearted; cheerful or cheering; gay; airy; sportive.

and the compounds likam and likewake, likewake, likewake, etc., are ult. derived *like*², a. and n., (prob.) *like*², v. and n., with their derivatives, and the suffixes -ly, -lyd, as well as the terminations of each, *every*¹, such (Sc. so), think, which (whilk), etc.] 1. Body; form; the body of a human being or of any animal.

That in a mannes lyke

The devel to this mayden com.

MS. Coll. Trin. Oxon. 17. (Halliwell.)

Thanne hadde Witte a wyf was hote dame Studye,

That lene was of lere and of hoke bothe.

Piers Plowman (B), x. 2.

Out of her womanishe hounde

Into a briddes lyke I findo

She was transformed forth withall.

Gower, Conf. Amant, v.

2. A dead body; a corpse.

Ear on the morn, when it was day,

Three lyes were ta'en frax the castle away;

Sir Oluf the leal, and his hride was fair,

And his mither, that died wth sorrow and care.

Sir Oluf and the Elf-King's Daughter (Child's Ballads, I. 301.)

*like*² (lik), a. and n. [< ME. like, lyke, lyk, lyk, also assimilated lich, lieche, lyche; not, as stated in the dictionaries, < AS. like, there being no such AS. adj., but, by aphoresis, in later ME., from the earlier ME. like, lyke, lyche, alike, alyke, alyche, etc., < AS. gelike, etc., like (gelike, u., one like), the numerous ME. forms being merged in E. alike: see alike, where the relation to *like*¹, AS. lic, body, is explained.] 1. a. 1. Of similar form, appearance, or quality; of corresponding kind, amount, extent, degree, etc.; corresponding; equal or equivalent; analogous; agreeing in some noticeable respect: as, territory of like extent; two men of like pursuits and tastes.

Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are.

Jas. v. 17.

If the men be both nought, their prayers be both like.

Sir T. More, Comfort against Tribulation (1873), fol. 44.

But thou and I are one in kind,

As moulded like in nature's mint.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxxix.

In proportion as the like units of an aggregate are exposed to unlike forces, they tend to form differentiated parts of the aggregate. H. Spencer, Prin. of Sociol., § 455.

2. Having resemblance; similar in any respect; resembling: followed by to or a dative case (sometimes by as), the word or phrase governed by to being, however, often omitted: as, they are as like (to each other) as two peas. [Like is frequently suffixed to nouns to form adjectives denoting resemblance or in the manner of, as childlike, magnet-like.]

It was nought no humany body like,

But more better seemed a thyng angell-like.

Rom. of Parthenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 987.

He was lythly to looke on;

He was like a devill then a man.

Bevis of Hampton. (Halliwell.)

Who is like unto thee, O Lord, among the gods?

Ex. xv. 11.

But thou art the liket Auld Maitland

That ever I did see.

Auld Maitland (Child's Ballads, VI. 224.)

Roe. O, he hath drawn my picture in his letter!

Prin. Anything like? Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 99.

Come back into memory, like as thou wert in the day-spring of thy fancies.

Lamb, Christ's Hospital.

3. Likely; liable. [Archaic or provincial.]

Or that wayweris in wer what shall worthe of;

Lecker at the last end in langore to bide,

And turne vnto toffer, then any triet loye.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 2254.

He is like to die for hunger in the place where he is.

Jer. xxxviii. 9.

Who was dead,

Who married, who was like to be.

Tennyson, Audley Court.

Had like, with a present or past infinitive, a colloquial expression for was likely, come near: as, the wall had like to fall (or to have fallen) upon me; he had like to be (or to have been) defeated.

Forth is at Bury; but he fell so between two forms as he had like, between both, to have fallen back to Boxford.

Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 405.

Yet they adventured to go back: but it was so dark, and the food was so high, that, in their going back, they had like to have been drowned nine or ten times.

Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 178.

Something like, used elliptically, something like the thing desired or aimed at; what one wants: as, that is something like.—Such like, of that kind: a pleasant for either such or like.

Ye hold the tradition of men, as the washing of pots and cups: and many other such like things ye do.

Mark vii. 8.

They found a large crucifix, copes, rich vestments, beads, and heaps of such like trumpery. Walpole, Letters, II. 16.

To feel like, to have inclination for; to be disposed to: followed by a verbal noun in -ing: as, he felt like refusing. [Colloq.]

He did not feel like returning to his solitary room.

R. A. Kimball, Was He Successful?

To look like, to show likelihood or probability of: be in a state for: as, the weather looks like clearing. [Colloq.] = syn. Allied, cognate, analogous, parallel.

II. n. 1. A person or thing resembling another; a counterpart; a resemblance; a similar character, condition, or example.

His living like saw never living eye.

Spenser, F. Q., I. vii. 8.

He was a man, take him for all in all,

I shall not look upon his like again.

Shak., Hamlet, I. 2. 188.

Your ladye has a steed,

The like o' him 's no in the land o' Leod.

Wilde's Ladye (Child's Ballads, I. 164.)

What more natural then every like to produce his like, man to beget man, fire to propagate fire?

Milton, Church-Government, l. 4.

2. In golf, a stroke which equalizes the number played by the other side.—Like cures like, a popular translation of the homoeopathic maxim similia similibus curantur, literally 'like things are cured by like things'.—The like, whatever is similar or akin to that which has been named; something of a similar or comparable character.

I am a stranger to any ceremonies used by them in Marriage, or at the Birth of a Child, or the like, if they use any.

Dampier, Voyages, II. l. 50.

He is master of a certain set of words, as Unity, Style, Fire, Phlegm, Easy, Natural, Turn, Sentiment, and the like.

Addison, Sir Timothy Tittle.

*like*² (lik), adv. [< ME. like, lyke, by aphoresis for alike: see alike, adv., and cf. *like*², a.] 1. In the same or a similar manner; equally; correspondingly.

The thirde daye that thise chuldren rode to-goder like as that ye haue herde.

Martin (E. E. T. S.), II. 191.

Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him.

Ps. ciii. 13.

How then can they, like wretched, comfort me?

The which no less need comforted to be.

Lady Pembroke (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 261.)

2. In the manner of; in the same way as.

Be strong, and quit yourselves like men. 1 Sam. iv. 9.

Like one in prayer I stood.

Longfellow, Voices of the Night, Prol.

In the honest bosom of this heroic Dutchman dwell the seven noble virtues of knighthood, flourishing among his hardy qualities like wild flowers among rocks.

Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 233.

Who the rôle of the priest and the soldier unites, And, praying like Aaron, like Joshua fights!

Whittier, From Perugia.

[This use of like is so nearly prepositional that the word as properly receives the name of preposition in its use, for example, save, during, except, in their prepositional constructions.]

3. Likely; probably.

I like the work well; ere it he demanded (As like enough it will), I 'd have it copied.

Shak., Othello, III. 4. 190.

4. As it were; so to speak: used after clauses or phrases with a signification similar to that of like suffixed to nouns. See *like*², a., 2. [Colloq. or provincial.]

They say she was out of her mind like for six weeks or more.

Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xxxv.

A drop of good beer puts new sap into a man. It oils his joints like.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, III. 263.

Like blazes. See blaze.—Like fun. See fun.—Like mad. See mad.

*like*² (lik), conj. [*< like*², adv.; being in part an abbr. of like as.] As; an if. This use is commonly condemned as incorrect, and is generally unacknowledged in dictionaries. It occurs several times in Shakespeare, and not unfrequently in modern writers, and is common in colloquial and provincial usage: as, he limped like he had been hurt.

But, like in sickness, did I loathe this food.

Shak., M. N. D., iv. 1. 178.

Through which they put their heads, like the Gauchos do through their cloaks. Darwin, Jour. of a Naturalist, x.

Like for as is never used in New England, but is universal in the South and West. It has on its side the authority of two kings (see sum rex Romanorum et supra grammaticam) Henry VIII. and Charles I. This were ample, without throwing into the scale the scholar and poet Daniel.

Lowell, Intro. to Biglow Papers.

*like*² (lik), v. t.; pret. and pp. liked, ppr. liking. [= D. lijkēn = MLG. lijkēn = G. gleichen = Goth. galeikōn, liken, compare; from the adj.; see *like*², a. Cf. liken.] To regard or describe as resembling; liken; compare. [Rare, liken being the form in common use.]

And like me to the peasant boys of France.

Shak., I Hen. VI., iv. 6. 48.

*like*³ (lik), v.; pret. and pp. liked, ppr. liking. [< ME. liken, lyken, < AS. liokan, liokan, please (= OS. liokōn = OFries. liokā = D. lijkēn, suit, = OHG. liukēn, liokan, MEG. liukēn, be like, suit, please, = Ice. lika, please, like, = Goth. liokan, also in comp. galeikōn, please); prob. < lic, body, form: see *like*¹. The exact transition of sense is not clear; appar. 'be the form' (for a person—governing the dative), i. e. the form or thing desired. It is usually explained as directly from *like*², a., 'to be like or suitable' (for a person); but the adj. does not exist in the earliest tongues (Goth., AS., and OHG.) except in the full form (Goth. galeike, AS. gelic, OHG. galkh), from which the verb without the prefix (Goth. liokan, AS. liokan) could hardly be derived, except by assuming an apheresis impossible at this early period.] 1. trans. 1. To please; be pleasing to; be agreeable to; suit; satisfy; used impersonally, and followed by an object, originally dative, of the person.

I wol you tell a litel thing in prose,

That oughte liken you.

Chaucer, Prol. to Tale of Melibeu, l. 20.

Late me neuer no werke bigynne,

Lord, but gif it like thee.

Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnival), p. 222.

The music like you not.

Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 2. 56.

So soon as we are past through the town, I will endeavour by such discourse as best like you to pass away the time till you come to your ill quarters.

Cotton, in Walton's Angler, II. 237.

[This impersonal construction with the indirect object of the person gave way, in early modern English, to a personal construction, the person being taken as the subject and the thing as the direct object. See def. 2.]

2. To regard with favor; be well affected toward; be pleased with; take pleasure in.

And tho that lyke with me to lende, and trewly tent to me we will take Ball wonne in weith withoutyn ende. York Plays, p. 9.

If I like thee no worse after dinner, I will not part from thee yet.

Shak., Lear, I. 4. 144.

He first decaas'd; she for a little try'd To live without him, like it not, and died.

Sir H. Wotton, Death of Sir Albert Morton's Wife.

"Be reasonable, Louis—be patient! I like you because you are patient."

"Like me no longer, then—love me instead."

Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xxxvi.

I like a monk; I like a cow!

I love a prophet of the soul.

Emerson, The Problem.

3. To agree with, as food or drink. Halliwell.

[Prov. Eng.]—syn. 2. Like, Love; be fond of, relish, fancy. Like and love differ greatly in strength or warmth, and may differ in kind. Like may be feeble and cool, and it never has the intensity of love. We may like or even love a person; we only like the most palatable kind of food. With an infinitive, like is the common word, love being appropriate only in the hyperbole of poetical or rhetorical feeling.

II. intrans. 1. To be suitable or agreeable; give satisfaction.

Come, boys, sing cheerfully; we shall ne'er sing younger. We have chosen a loud tune too, because it should like well.

Fletcher (and others), Hoody Brother, III. 2.

2. To be pleased or suited; choose: used absolutely, but formerly sometimes followed by of.

But when the mightiest began to like of the Christian faith, by their means whole free states and kingdoms became obedient unto Christ. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, VIII. 6.

You have been somewhat bolder in my house Than I could well like of.

Middleton, Chaste Maid, v. 2.

He may either go or stay, as he best likes. Locke.

3. To thrive; grow. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.] *like*³ (lik), n. [*< like*³, v.] A liking; a fancy; an inclination: used chiefly in the phrase likes and dislikes.

She used to say "It was not her likes, but her husband's, or she'd have had me back."

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, II. 561.

The editor of a magazine should be above personal likes and dislikes, and judge articles upon their merits.

G. W. Curtis, Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 475.

*like*⁴ (lik), v. t. [*< like*², a., 3.] To be likely; chiefly or only in the preterit liked, equivalent to had like. See *like*², a. [Rare.]

He probably got his death, as he liked to have done two years ago, by viewing the troops for the expedition from the wall of Kensington-Garden.

Waipole, Letters, II. 193. (Davies.)

likeable, likeableness. See likable, likableness. likehood (lik'hood), n. [= D. gelijkheid = MEG. gelicheit, glicheit, G. gleichheit = Dan. lighed = Sw. likhet; as *like*² + -hood.] Likelihood. [Very rare.]

likelihood, n. [ME. liklihood; < likely + -head. Cf. likelihood.] Same as likelihood. Chaucer.

likelihood (lik'li-hood), n. [< likely + -hood.] 1. The state of being likely or probable; probability; likelihood; promise.

What likelihood of his amendment?

Shak., Rich. III., I. 2. 22.

By all likelihood these Ridges of Mountains do run in a continued Chain from one end of Peru and Chili to the other.

Dampier, Voyages, I. 95.

We were looking for an anchoring-place where there was a likelihood of fishing.

Frederick, Sketches, p. 72.

2. Promising state or appearance; standing; consideration. [Archaic.]

Left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood.
Shak., 1 Hen. IV., III. 2. 45.

3. That which is probable; a probability; an indication.

Likelihoods are those [arguments] that often hit the truth, and yet are not always so; as thus: Soothe a young manne talketh often and that alone with such a young maide. Ergo, he is in love with her.

Str. T. Wilson, Rule of Reason.

Against which testimonies, likelihoods, evidences, and apparent actions of his own, being so abundant, the bare denyall of one man, though with imprecation, cannot in any reason countervail.

Milton, Mikonoklastes, xii.

4†. Likeness; resemblance; similarity.

There is no likelihood between pure light and black darkness, or between righteousness and reprobation.

Raleigh.

Likelihood (lik'li-hes), n. [< ME. likelihood, lykinesse; < likely + -ness.] The condition or quality of being likely. (a) Probability. (b) Suitableness; agreeableness. (c) Likeness.

That she knew not his favour lykynesse,
For many scarres and many hoary heares.

Spenser, F. Q., V. vii. 39.

likely (lik'li), a. [*< ME. likli; by apheresis for likli, < AS. geliclic, likely, apt, < gelic, like; see *like*², a., and *-ly*¹.] 1†. Similar; congenial; kindred.*

Love is a celestiall harmonie
Of likely hearts.

Spenser, In Honour of Beantie, l. 198.

2. That may be suitable; preferred for a particular reason or purpose; fit or adapted, or giving promise of being so: as, a likely subject for satire.

In that battell Darrell was Baner,
And, as the story telleth in euerie wise,
He was a likely knight for that office.

Gearydes (R. E. T. S.), l. 2107.

Venator. Now Piscator, where will you begin to fish?
Piscator. We are not yet come to a likely place.

J. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 61.

The swag-shopkeepers can always find customers "for anything likely," with the indispensable proviso that it is cheap.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, l. 437.

3. Having likeness to truth; that seems or that may be true; credible; probable: as, a likely story.

Most likely 'tis for you.

Shak., Cor., l. 2. 16.

Sore hath been their fight,
As likely was when two such foes met arm'd.

Milton, P. L., vi. 628.

It seems likely that he was in hope of being busy and conspicuous.

Johnson, Otway.

Hence—4. Within the limits of probability; having a tendency; so situated or constituted that he or it will probably be or do something indicated: followed by an infinitive.

Many things happen, not likely to ensue from any promises or antecedencies.

Str. T. Browne, Christ. Mor., II. 6.

The election of the speaker showed that the duke was not likely to have his own way in the assembly.

Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 342.

It is proverbial that, if a man does not care for himself, he is not likely to care much for other people.

Fowler, Shaftesbury and Hutcheson, p. 97.

5†. Liable to happen or come about; in prospect or expectation.

Have you heard of no likely was toward, 'twixt the Dukes of Cornwall and Albany?

Shak., Lear, II. 1. 11.

Grant that our hopes, yet likely of fair birth,
Should be still-born.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., l. 1. 63.

6. Such as may be liked; likable; pleasing; agreeable; commendable; promising; good.

Thou art as likely a fellow as any is in the company.

Middleton (and others), The Widow, l. 2.

Those argent fields more likely habitants,
Translated saints, or middle spirits, hold.

Milton, P. L., III. 400.

From 30 to 60 likely young horses.

Moss, Mercury, April 29, 1796.

He it was who had let her know when Hayterbank Farm had been to let, esteeming it a likely piece of land for his uncle to settle down upon.

Mrs. Gaskell, Sylvia's Lovers, iv.

Time was that Cack was a . . . likely young man, and his wife a very respectable woman.

H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 11.

likely (lik'li), adv. [< likely, a.] Probably; as may reasonably be supposed.

like-minded (lik'min'ded), a. Having a like disposition or purpose; animated by the same spirit or temper; having the same or similar thoughts and tendencies.

Full ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind.

Phil. II. 2.

liken (li'kn), v. t. [*< ME. liknen, lyknen, liknen = MLG. liknen = Dan. lygne = Sw. likna; as *like*², a., and *-en*¹ (3). Cf. *like*², v.] 1†. To make like; cause to resemble.*

I will her liken to a laidly worm,
That warps about the stone.
The Laidly Worm of Spindleston-hough (Child's Ballads, l. 232).

It is remarkable how exactly the occasional deviations from its fundamental principles in a free constitution, and the temporary introduction of arbitrary power, liken it to the worst despotism.

Brougham.

2. To represent, declare, or describe as like or similar; compare.

Lillwhite was hur liche to Kerne the beurde [lady];

Where is ther leugged in lond a Lady so sweete?

Alexander of Macedoine (R. E. T. S.), l. 126.

Men may well lykne that Bryd [the phoenix?] unto God; be cause that there nys no God but on.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 48.

And he said, Whereunto shall we liken the kingdom of God?

Mark iv. 30.

Well may the preacher and the ploughman be likened together.

Lattimer, Sermon of the Plough.

likeness (lik'nes), n. [*< ME. likenes, liknes, lykenes, by aphoresis from liknes, < AS. gelicnes, rarely licnes (= OS. gelicnast, gelicnast, gelicnast = D. gelijkens = MLG. likenisse = OLG. geliknissi, geliknissi, chliknissi, MHG. geliknissi, geliknissi, G. gelichnis), form, semblance, image, likeness, < gelic, like, alike; see alike, *like*², a., and -ness.] 1. The state of being like or alike; the relation of two or more objects which agree in respect to some quality; similitude; similarity; resemblance.*

And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness.

Gen. l. 26.

I see thee what thou art, and know
Thy likeness to the wise below;
Thy kindred with the great of old.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, lxxiv.

While Spalato is putting on the likeness of a busy modern town, Traù has nothing to show but its ancient memories.

H. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 180.

2. That which resembles something else; an express representation or copy; an effigy; especially, a portrait of a person, or a representation of an animal or other object.

What seem'd his head
The likeness of a kingly crown had on.

Milton, P. L., II. 672.

Here, take my likeness with you, whilst 'tis so.
Conley, The Mistress, My Picture.

likerous, a. See likerous.

likewake (lik'wāk), n. [Also lykewake, also assimilated lichwake (also by corruption lake-wake, latewake); < ME. likewake*, lykewak, lichwake; < *like*¹, lich, a dead body, + wake, a watching; see *like*¹ and *wake*¹, n.] A watch over a dead body.

Ne how Arcyte is brent to ashen colde,
Ne how that like-wake was yholde
Al thilke night, no howe the Grekes playe
The wake-playes, ne kepe I nat to seye.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 2100.

The night it is her low lykewake,
The morn her burial day.

Young Benjy (Child's Ballads, II. 308).

likewise (lik'wiz), adv. [Abbr. of in like wise. Cf. Dan. ligewetis.] In like manner; moreover; also; too.

The same Thursdaye we sayled, styll traunerynge ye see ayenst ye wynde; and so lyke wise we dyde ye nyght loowyngs.

Str. I. Guyford, Flygrymage, p. 61.

Then said Jesus unto him, Go, and do thou likewise.

Luke x. 37.

As there were many reformers, so likewise there were many reformations.

Str. T. Browne, Religio Medici, l. 4.

likin (li'kēn), n. [Chin., < li, the thousandth part of a tael, + kin, money.] A tax, originally of one cash per tael on the value of all sales, imposed by the people of China upon themselves, in order to make up the deficiency in the land-tax, during the Taiping rebellion (1850-64).

It was to be set apart for military purposes only, and was intended to be merely a temporary measure. It is still levied, however, and has been recognised in treaties by the foreign nations trading with China. The rate varies at the different barriers all over the country; but foreign-owned goods are exempted from this and other local exactions by transit passes, which are issued by the customs authorities on the payment of a commutation of 2½ per cent. ad valorem. Also spelled lekhi.

There were imposed special taxes, or likin dues (in China, on many commodities.

U. S. Cons. Rep., No. 70 (1886), p. 200.

liking (li'king), n. [*< ME. liking, likinge, lykynge; verbal n. of *like*², v.] 1. The state of being pleased with something; favor; approval; inclination; pleasure: as, one's liking for a friend; he took a liking to the place.*

Yours liking is that I shal tell a tale.

Chaucer, Prologue to Pardoner's Tale, l. 169.

That liked, but had a rougher task in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love.

Shak., Much Ado, I. 1. 302.

Friendships begin with liking or gratitude.

George Eliot, Daniel Deronda, xxiii.

2. A favorable or pleasing condition; attractive appearance; comeliness; in general, appearance. [Obsolete or archaic.]

They not only give it no manner of grace at all, but rather do disfigure the stuffe and spill the whole workmanship, taking away all bewtie and good liking from it.

Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poetrie, p. 115.

Their young ones are in good liking.

Job xxxix. 4.

I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking.

Shak., M. W. of W., II. 1. 57.

On liking, on trial or probation; on approval: as, to engage a servant on liking.

Forced with regret to leave her native sphere,
Came but a while on liking here.

Dryden, Threnodia Augustalis, l. 152.

Pray excuse him, madam: . . . he [the waiter] is a very young man on liking, and we don't like him.

Dieters, Our Mutual Friend, iv. 4.

liking (li'king), a. [*< ME. likinge, lykynge; ppr. of *like*², v.] Pleasing; comely; good-looking.*

I wot no lady so likynge.

Rom. of the Rose, l. 262.

She, thus in blake, likynge to Trolia,

Over alle thinge, he stood for to beholde.

Chaucer, Troilus, l. 209.

likingly, adv. [*< ME. likingly; < liking, a., + *-ly*².] Pleasantly; agreeably.*

Myn herte fill down vnto my too

That was woont sitten full likingly.

Hymns to Virgin, etc. (R. E. T. S.), p. 21.

likingness, n. [*< ME. likingnes; < liking, a., + -ness.] Pleasingness.*

This hank of herte in gouthe y-wys

Pursueth euere this felleant hen;

This felleant hen is likingness.

Hymns to Virgin, etc. (R. E. T. S.), p. 22.

lil, a. See *lil*².

lilac (li'lak), n. and a. [Formerly also lilach, lilack; dial. laylock; = F. lilas, < Sp. lilac = Pg. lilas = Bulg. lilek, luleka = Bohem. lilak = Pol. lilak = Turk. lilak, < Ar. lilak, < Pers. lilak, lilak, lilak, lilak (?), prop. the indigo-plant, with alteration of the initial consonant, < nilak (also nīl = Hind. Ar. nīl), the indigo-plant (nilak, bluish), < Skt. nīla, dark-blue indigo, nīl, indigo-plant. Cf. anil.] 1. A shrub of the genus Syringa. See Syringa. The common lilacs are S. vulgaris and S. Persica, with their varieties; they abound, especially the former, as ornamental plants, cultivated for their beauty and fragrance. S. vulgaris is the larger species, having heart-shaped leaves and large thyrsiform clusters of purple flowers—the ordinary purple lilac or Scotch lilac, or, with white flowers, the common white lilac. There is also a blue-flowered variety, S. Persica, the Persian lilac, is a smaller, slender shrub, with looser panicles and pale flowers, blooming later, and also having a white variety. Countess Joska's lilac, S. Joskiana, discovered by the Countess von Joska in Transylvania, is a tall shrub with elliptical-lanceolate wrinkled leaves and bluish-purple scintles flowers. The Himalayan lilac, S. Amodi, is large, with dense panicles, but is not preferred to the common lilac. The lilac was formerly called pipe-tree or pipe-priest, and blue-pipe, on account of the large pith that could easily be bored out of the straight shoots to make pipe-stems. The common lilac has febrifugal properties. (See Medicine.) An oil is extracted from it for use in perfumery. The name lilac has also been given to various plants having some resemblance to the true lilac (see phrases below).

A fontaine of white marble with a lead cesterne, which fontaine is set round with six trees called lilac trees.

Survey of Nonuch Palace, 1680 (Archæologia, v. 484). (Devon.)

2. The color of the common lilac-blossom; a pale-purple color. A color-disk composed of one half artificial ultramarine, one sixth Chinese vermilion, and one third white will give a lilac.—African lilac, Melia Azadirach.—Australian lilac, the labiate plants Prostanthera violacea and P. lutea.—Charles X. lilac, the variety grandiflora of S. vulgaris, a form with particularly large and fine panicles.—German lilac, an old provincial name for a valerian, probably the red valerian, Centranthus ruber.—Hungarian lilac, same as Countess Joska's lilac. See def. 1.—Indian lilac, the grape-myrtle, Lagerstræmia Indica, a beautiful lythraceous shrub from China, bearing large rose-colored flowers. It is hardy in the latitude of Washington, D. C. Sometimes, also, Melia Azadirach.—Victorian lilac, See Hardenbergia.—West Indian lilac, Melia Azadirach.

lil, a. Of the light-purple color of the flower of the common lilac.

So Willy and I were wedded; I wore a lilac gown;
And the ringers rang with a will, and he gave the ringers a crown.

Tennyson, The Grandmother.

lilaceous (li-lä'shius), a. [< lilac + -ous (acc. com. to -aceous).] Of the color of lilac: as, the lilaceous throat of a humming-bird.

lilac-gray (li'lak-grä), n. A very pale violet color. A color-disk composed of one third artificial ultramarine and two thirds white might be called a lilac-gray.

lilacine (li'lä-sin), n. [*< lilac + -ine*².] In chem., a bitter principle found in the lilac.

lilac-mildew (li'lak-mil'dü), n. A fungus, Microsphaera Friesii, infesting the leaves of the lilac.

Lilac-rust (l'lak-rust), n. Same as lilac-mildew.
Lilacthroat (l'lak-thrôt), n. A hummingbird of the genus Phaceloma.

Lilburni, n. [Origin obscure; perhaps < lil, contr. of little, + ME. burn, borne, etc., a man; see born.] A heavy, stupid fellow. Hallwell.

Ye are such a calfe, such an asse, such a blocke,
Such a lilburne, such a hoball, such a lohecke.

Udall, Roister Doister, iii. 2.

Lil, a. A dialectal contraction of little. Compare lilb.

Liliaceae (lil-i-ä'sä-ë), n. pl. [NL. (S. Endlicher), < L. Lilium, q. v., + -aceae.] An order of monocotyledonous plants, characterized by the regular symmetrical and almost always hexandrous flowers, with a non-glumaceous perianth which is free from the generally three-celled ovary. There are, with one exception, six stamens, one before each division of the perianth. The fruit is a pod or berry containing from few to many seeds having a small embryo in copious albumen. It is a large order dispersed widely round the world, and containing about 2,500 species of herbs, shrubs, and trees. Many genera, as Lilium, Tulipa, Euphrasia, furnish beautiful garden-flowers; some, as Alium, yield esculent bulbs; a few, as Alot, supply important medicines; and P'hormium and a few others yield a textile fiber.

Liliaceous (lil-i-ä'shius), a. [L. Lilium, of or belonging to a lily, < L. lilium, a lily; see lily.] Pertaining to or characteristic of lilies, or plants of the order Liliaceae; lily-like.

Liliet, n. An obsolete spelling of lily.

Lilled (lil'id), a. [Lily + -ed.] 1. Abounding in or embellished with lilies.

By sandy Ladon's lilled hanks.

Milton, Arcades, l. 97.

2. Resembling lilies, especially in color.

She was the fairest of all the lilled brood.

J. Wilson, Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life, p. 6.

Shrinking Caryatides
Of just-tinged marble, like Eve's lilled flesh Beneath her Maker's finger. Browning, Nordello.

Liliform (lil'i-fôr'm), a. [L. lilium, lily, + forma, form.] Having the general form of a lily-flower. [Rare.]

Liliformed (lil'i-fôr'md), a. [liliform + -ed.] Same as liliform.

Patterns of glazed ware with broad flattened rims of tasselled or liliformed patterns found at Canterbury.

Jour. Brit. Archaeol. Ass., xii. 72.

Lilium (lil'i-um), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), < L. lilium, a lily; see lily.] A genus of plants of the order Liliaceae, belonging to the tribe Tulipeae, distinguished from the related genera by the versatile anthers. The flowers are either erect or nodding, and have as a rule a funnel-shaped perianth of six segments, with six stamens and a three-lobed stigma. There are about 45 species, found in the northern temperate regions of the world. They all have scaly bulbs, some of which are edible, as those of L. Martagon, eaten by the Cosacks, and those of L. tigrinum (the tiger-lily) and others in China and Japan. Their chief value, however, lies in the beauty of their flowers. For the species, see lily.

Lil'it (lil'), v. t. and t. [Early mod. E. lylle; a var. of loll.] To loll.

Dreadfull Cerberus
His three deformed heads did lay along, . . .
And lilled forth his bloody flaming tongue.
Spenser, F. Q., i. v. 24.

Lil'it (lil'), n. [Origin obscure.] 1. One of the holes of a wind-instrument. [Scotch.]—2. A small pin. Draper's Dictionary.

Lil'it, lil (lil'), a. A dialectal contraction of little. Also lilo. [Southern U. S.; in negro use.]

Lille lace. See lace.

Lilbulero, Lilbulero (lil'i-bu-lë-rö, -bör-lë-rö), n. Originally, it is said, a watchword of the Irish Roman Catholics in their massacre of the Protestants in 1641; afterward, the name of a song burlesquing the former, said to have been written by Lord Wharton, which was extremely popular in England during and after the revolution of 1688, having the refrain "Lero, lero, lilbulero," etc.

Lilliputian (lil-i-pü'shan), a. and n. [Lilliput (see def.) + -ian.] 1. a. Pertaining to Lilliput, an imaginary kingdom described in Swift's "Travels of Lemuel Gulliver," or to its people, feigned to be pygmies about six inches high. Hence—2. Of minute size.

II. n. 1. An inhabitant of the imaginary kingdom of Lilliput.—2. A person of diminutive size; a very small dwarf.

Lillypilly (lil'i-pil-i), n. [Australian.] A tree of the myrtle family, Eugenia Smithii (Acmena floribunda), found in Australia. It is a slender but sometimes tall tree, with terminal panicles of abundant white flowers, and a very hard and heavy wood. Also called Australian myrtle.

Lilt (lilt'), v. [ME. liltan, liltan; origin obscure.] I. trans. 1. To sound.

Londe alarom ypon lunde lilted was thenne.

Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), ii. 1207.

2. To sing or play in snatches, and with easy, tripping grace, as a song or a tune; utter or pour forth with sprightliness, animation, or gaiety.

Our Jenny sings saftly the "Cowden Broom knowes,"
And Roale liltes swiftly the "Milking the ewes."

Ramsey, Gentle Shepherd, ii. 4.

The Muse shall . . .
Such enchantment lilt to thee
That thou shalt hear the life-blood flow
From farthest stars to grass-blades low.

Lowell, To the Muse.

II. intrans. 1. To sing or play a tune in a sprightly, tripping manner; utter musical sounds flowingly and cheerfully.

Lasses a' liltin' before the break of day.

Jane Elliot, Flowers of the Forest.

Mak' haste an turn king David owre,
An' lilt wi' holy clangor.

Burns, The Ordination.

2. To do anything with dexterity or quickness; spring; hop. [Rare.]

Whether the bird sit here or there,
O'er table lilt, or perch on chair.

Wordsworth, The Redbreast.

Lilt (lilt'), n. [Lilt, v.] 1. A snatch of a cheerful, lively song; a short, smooth-flowing, tripping air or tune.

The blithest lilt that e'er my lugs heard sung.

Ramsey, Poems, ii. 290.

Hence—2. Cadence; rhythmic swing or flow.

This faculty of hitting on the precise lilt of thought and measure that shall catch the universal ear and sing themselves in everybody's memory is a rare gift.

Lowell, Study Windows, p. 286.

The lilt and melody of Shelley, joined to precision of thought and outline. Stedman, Poets of America, p. 165.

Lilting (lil'ting), a. [ME. liltung; ppr. of lilt, v.] Played or sung in an animated manner; giving lively utterance to a lilt or song.

Many a flowte and liltung horne,
And pipes made of greene corne.

Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1222.

Lily (lil'i), n. and a. [Formerly also lilly, lillie; < ME. lile, < AS. lile, lilige = OS. lili = D. lili = OHG. lila, MHG. lile (also gilge), G. lile = Ice. lila = Dan. lile = Sw. lila = F. lis = OSp. lilio, Sp. Pg. lilio (Sp. also lis, < F.) = It. giglio (> Croatian shily) = Pol. lilya, letta = Serv. lilyan = Russ. lilya = Hung. lilom, < L. lilium = Serv. lir, lyer, < Gr. leipon, a lily.] I. n.; pl. lilies (-iz). 1. A plant of the genus Lilium, or its flower. In the four native species of the eastern United States the perianth is colored from red flowers and bulblets in the axils of the upper leaves, a plant of the region of the Alps, long known to gardeners; and the white or Madonna lily, L. candidum, also called annunciation lily, found wild in the northern Mediterranean countries. Among the fine Asiatic lilies are the lance-leaved or spear-leaved lily, L. speciosum (lanceolatum), from Korea and Japan, with white flowers more or less suffused or spotted with pink, and with the lower part of the sepals covered with papillae; the giant lily, L. giganteum, the largest of the genus, from the Himalayan region; and the tiger-lily, L. tigrinum, so called from its spots, a plant introduced from China and known everywhere. There are many other less-known lilies.

Softer than water or any liquor,
Or dew that lilt on the lily flower,
Was Cristes bodi in blood colour.

Holy Rood (R. E. T. S.), p. 120.

Lay her in lilies and in violets.

Spenser, Epithalamion, l. 202.

2. Any one of many plants resembling the lily. —3. The end of a compass which points to the north; so called from being frequently ornamented with a lily or fleur-de-lis.

If we place a needle touched at the foot of tongue and iron, it will obvert or turn aside its lilies or north point, and conform its cusps or north extrem with the andiron.

Str. T. Browne, Vulg. Err., ii. 2.

African lily, a plant of the genus Agapanthus. — Atamisco lily, Epiphyranthes atamisco. See Epiphyranthes, and also Atamisco. — Belladonna lily. See Amaryllis. — Blackberry lily, Belamcanda (Pardonius) chinensis, of the iris family. — Calla lily. See calla, 2. — Day-lily. See hemerocallis. — Fleur-de-lis of three lilies. See flor-de-lis. — Florentine lily. See lily. — Jacobus lily, Sprekelia formosissima. — Knight's-star lily. See Hesperis. — Lent-lily, the daffodil. — Lilies of France, the fleur-de-lis which constitute the distinctive armorial bearing of the ancient royal family of France, and figured on the French royal standard.

But Magua is pledged not to smily the lilies of France.

Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xvii.

Lily of the flag, in her, a fleur-de-lis, as borne in the arms of France. — Mexican lily, Amaryllis regina, a plant with beautiful scarlet flowers. — Pond-lily, the spatterdock, genus Nymphaea (Nuphar); also, the common species of Nymphaea (Callista). — Water-lily, most often Nymphaea (Callista). See water-lily. — Yellow lily, the gold-lily. See def. 1, above.

II. a. Resembling a white lily, especially in purity; pure; unsullied.

By Cupid's dove,
And so thou shalt! and by the lily truth
Of my own breast, thou shalt, beloved youth!

Keats, Endymion, iv.

Elaine, the lily maid of Astolat,
High in her chamber up a tower to the east Guarded the sacred shield of Lancelot.

Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

Lily-beetle (lil'i-bë'til), n. A beetle, Crioceris mordigera.

Lily-encrinite (lil'i-en'kri-nit), n. Same as stone-lily. See encrinite.

Lily-faced (lil'i-fäst), a. Pale-faced; affectedly modest or sensitive.

Like a squemish dame,
Shrink and look lily-faced.

J. Baillie.

Lily-handed (lil'i-han'ded), a. Having white, delicate hands; hence, effeminate.

No little lily-handed Baronet he,
A great broad-shoulder'd genial Englishman.

Tennyson, Princess, Conclusion.

Lily-hyacinth (lil'i-hi'ä-sinth), n. A bulbous perennial plant with blue flowers, Scilla lilio-hyacinthus.

Lily-iron (lil'i-i'ërn), n. In whaling, the detachable barbed head of a harpoon. There are two bars, and between them, a little to one side and at an angle with the axis of the head, is fixed the harpoon-shank, which carries the line. The harpoon, owing to this peculiarity of form, penetrates the whale's body in a curved course, and thus secures a firm hold.

Lilyliver (lil'i-liv'er), n. A white-livered person; a coward.

I always knew that I was a lily-liver.

Thackeray, Roundabout Papers, xii.

Lily-livered (lil'i-liv'ërd), a. White-livered; cowardly.

Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear,
Thou lily-liver'd boy.

Shak., Macbeth, v. 2. 17.

Lily-of-the-valley (lil'i-qv-thë-val'i), n. See Convallaria.

Lily-pad (lil'i-pad), n. The broad leaf of a water-lily, especially as it lies upon the water in its place of growth. [U. S.]

A deer had been down to eat the lily-pads at the foot of the lake the night before.

C. D. Warner, Backlog Studies, p. 145.

Lily-star (lil'i-stär), n. Same as feather-star.

Lily-white (lil'i-hwit), a. [ME. lillwhite, lillwhy; < lily + white.] White as a lily. [Poetical.]

Lord Ronald brought a lily-white doe
To give his cousin, Lady Clara.

Tennyson, Lady Clara.

Lilt, n. An obsolete but historically more correct spelling of lilt.

Lily (Lilium superbum).

1. Upper part of the plant with flowers. 2. Lower part of the plant with bulb. a, stamen; b, pistil; c, fruit.

yellow to scarlet, with purple or brown spots on the inside. They are: the wild orange-red lily, L. Philadelphicum, with flowers erect and sepals not recurved, common in sandy soil; the Southern red lily, L. Canadense, with solitary erect flowers and recurved sepals; L. Canadense, with several nodding flowers and the sepals recurved, common in the north; and the American Turk's-cap or swamp-lily, L. superbum, with a pyramidal panicle, often with 20 or sometimes even 40 blossoms, found on low grounds at the north. Among the eight species of the Pacific slope are the Washington lily, L. Washingtonianum, often with as many as 30 large and fragrant white flowers, becoming purplish, in a thyrsoid raceme; the panther-lily, L. pardalinum; and Humboldt's lily, L. Humboldtii. Among European species are the Martagon lily, L. Martagon, found wild in Europe and in Siberia, and cultivated from time immemorial, the varieties differing in color; the bulb-bearing lily, L. bulbiferum, with orange-

Lima (lī'mā), n. [NL. (Bruguières, 1791), appar. so called from the shape of their shells, < L. lima, a file.] 1. A genus of bivalve mollusks, typical of the family Limidae. The obliquely oval shell gapes anteriorly and has a straight toothless hinge, Lima squamata.

Lima (Plagiostoma) cardiformis.

and the mantle-margin is cirrose. L. Mans swims easily like a scallop, with a flapping movement of the valves, spins a byssus, and sometimes builds a nest or burrow. The genus was formerly placed with the scallops in Pectinidae.

2. [L. c.] A member of this genus.

Lima bark. See *bark*².

Limacina (lī-mā-sīn'ē-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Lamarck, 1809), < Limax (Lamarck) + -ina.] A family of gastropods, typified by the genus Limax, including all the naked terrestrial gastropods. By later systematists its constituents have been distributed among the families Limacidae, Arionidae, Vitrinidae, Testacellidae, and Onchidiidae.

Limacel, limacelle (līm-ā-sel'), n. [F. limacelle, dim., < NL. Limax (Lamarck), q. v.] The small internal shell of the genus Limax. It has a subquadrate form, and has no spine, but a marginal nucleus near the posterior end.

Limaceous (lī-mā'shius), a. [F. limax (Lamarck), a snail, slug, + -ous.] Like a slug; of or relating to the Limacidae.

Limaces (lī-mā'sēz), n. pl. [NL., plural of Limax.] Same as Limacina. Férussac, 1819.

limacian (lī-mā'shi-an), n. [F. limax (Lamarck), a snail, slug, + -ian.] A limacid; a slug, or some related pulmonate.

limacid (līm'ā-sid), n. A gastropod of the family Limacidae; a slug.

Limacidae (lī-mā-sīn'ē-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Limax (Lamarck) + -idae.] A family of land-snails or terrestrial pulmonate gastropods, typified by the genus Limax, accepted with various limitations, sometimes merged in Helicidae; the slugs. In a strict sense now current, the Limacidae are those land-gastropods which have a naked body, the mantle being small, narrow, anterior, and shield-like; the shell reduced to a rudiment and concealed under the mantle; the jaw ribless; and the teeth of three kinds—a central tricuspid, laterals of same height as the central and bicuspid or tricuspid, and marginals differing from the laterals and aculeate, unicuspid, or bicuspid. Wider limits and vaguer characters were assigned to the Limacidae by older authors. The species are of nearly world wide distribution, but most numerous in temperate parts of the northern hemisphere. The slugs of gardens and damp places are familiar examples.

Limax sowerbyi, crawling and at rest.

limaciform (lī-mā-sīn'ē-ā), a. [F. limax (Lamarck), a snail, slug, + -forma, form.] Resembling a slug; limaceous. Specifically applied in entomology to certain ovate herbivorous larvae with short or obsolete legs, and having the body covered with a kind of slime, as those of certain Penthrinidae.

Limacina¹ (lī-mā-sīn'ē-ā), n. [NL., < L. limax (Lamarck), a snail, + -ina.] A genus of pteropods, typical of the family Limacinae. L. borealis is one of the animals which form brit or whale-food. Cuvier, 1817.

Limacina antarctica.

Limacina² (lī-mā-sīn'ē-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Limax (Lamarck) + -ina.] 1. Same as Limacina. Wiegmann, 1832; Macgillivray, 1843.—2. A subfamily of Helicidae, restricted to the genus Limax: same as Limacina. J. E. Gray, 1840.

Limacina (lī-mā-sīn'ē-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Limax (Lamarck) + -ina.] 1. A subfamily of land-snails referred to the family Helicidae, typified by the genus Limax, and variously limited. It is nearly or quite the same as Limacidae.—2. A family of pteropods containing the genera Limacina and Atlantia. Férussac, 1821.

limacine (līm'ā-sin), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Limacina or Limacidae, or having their characters; limaciform; limaceous.

II. n. A slug of the subfamily Limacinae or family Limacidae.

Limacinae (lī-mā-sīn'ē-ā), n. pl. [NL.] 1. In De Blainville's classification (1825), the third family of his Pulmobranchiata, distinguished from Auriculacea and Limnacea, and containing the genera Succinea, Bulinus, Achatina, Clausilia, Pupa, Helix, Testacella, Formicella, Limacella, Limax, Onchidium, etc. It is thus an enormous group, equivalent to the suborder Geophila or Stylommatophora, now divided into many modern families, and no longer in use.

2. Same as Limacina. Reere, 1841.

limacinian (lī-mā-sīn'ē-an), n. [F. limacine + -ian.] A slug or slug-like animal; any limacine.

limacnid (lī-mā-sīn'ē-nid), n. A pteropod of the family Limacinae.

Limacoides (lī-mā-sīn'ē-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limacina + -oides.] A family of thecosomatous pteropods, typified by the genus Limacina, with fins attached to the sides of the body and united ventrally by operculigerous lobes, and with a spiral or subspiral shell coiled toward the left. It contains many species, living near the surface of the ocean in different parts of the world. See out under Limacina.

Limacodes (lī-mā-kō'dēs), n. [NL., < Gr. λεμαξ (> L. limax), a slug, snail (see limax), + eidōs, form.] A genus of moths sometimes giving name to a family Limacodidae. In Latreille's classification it was put in his third section (Pseudobombyces) of nocturnal Lepidoptera, and characterized by "having the caterpillar-like wood-lice," whence the name. It is now referred to Arotidae. L. testudo and L. asellus are examples.

Limacodidae (lī-mā-kō'dē-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limacodes + -idae.] A family of moths named from the genus Limacodes. The antennae are not pectinate, and the larvae are onisciform. Also called Cochleopodidae, or abandoned to Arotidae.

limacoid (līm'ā-kōid), a. and n. [F. limax (Lamarck) + -oid. Cf. limacoides.] I. a. Pertaining to the Limacidae or Limacodidae, or having their characters.

II. n. A slug of the family Limacidae.

Limacoides (lī-mā-kō'dē-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Fitzinger, 1833), < Limax (Lamarck) + Gr. eidōs, form.] Same as Limacina.

limacon (līm'ā-sōn), n. [F., a snail, < L. limax (Lamarck), a snail.] 1. Any univalve shell.—2. A curve, invented and named by Pascal, generated from a circle by adding a constant length to all the radii vectores drawn from a point of its circumference as an origin, taking proper account of negative radii vectores. It is a Cartesian, having cusps on the circular points; and it has a single bitangent, which is always real. It has three varieties, all of which are unicursal curves of the fourth order. One of these is the cardioid, which is a single form lying between the other two. It is of the third class. It has no node, but a cusp at the origin, and has no inflections. (See out under cardioid.) All other limacons are of the fourth class. Those lying outside of the cardioid have the origin as an acnode, and two real inflections; those lying within the cardioid have a crunode at the origin, and two imaginary inflections. For a crunodal limacon, see Cartesian, n. 2.

Acnode

Limadæ (līm'ā-dē), n. pl. See Limidae.

limail (lī-māil'), n. [ME., also limail, limaille, < OF. limaille, F. limaille (= Sp. limalla = Pg. limalha), filings, < limar, file, < L. limare, file: see limation.] Filings of any metal.

Therein put was of silver limaille.
An ounce, and stopped was, withouten fayle,
The hole with wax, to kepe the limail in.
Chaucer, Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 151.

Limapontia (lī-mā-pōn'shi-ā), n. [NL. (Forbes, 1832), < Limax + Gr. pōntos, sea.] A genus of slug-like nudibranchiata, typical of the family Limapontidae.

Limapontidae (lī-mā-pōn'shi-ā-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limapontia + -idae.] A family of nudibranchiate gastropods, typified by the genus Limapontia. The species are slug-like, with a flat head prolonged laterally into simple tentacles, dorsal anus, and no branchiae; the radula has a single row of teeth. They are inhabitants of the coast of the North Atlantic. Also Limapontidae.

limation (lī-mā'shōn), n. [F. limatio (n.), a diminishing (lit. prop. a filing), < L. limare, pp. limatus, file (see limed), < lima, a file: see Lima.] The act of filing or polishing. [Rare.]

limature (lī-mā-tūr), n. [F. limature, limoure = Sp. Pg. limadura = It. limatura, < L. limatura, filings, < limare, file: see limation.] 1. The act of filing.—2. Filings; particles removed by a file. [Rare.]

lima-wood (lī-mā-wōd), n. See brasil, 2.

limax (lī'maks), n. [NL., < L. limax, a slug, snail, kindred with L. limus, slime, mud; cf. Gr.

λίμνη, a marsh.] 1. The typical genus of Limacidae, formerly of great extent and heterogeneous composition, now restricted to the slugs which are without a caudal mucous pore, with a concealed quadrate non-spiral shell or limacel, and a smooth jaw.—2. [L. c.] In early systems of classification, as the Linnean, the animal or soft body of any univalve, considered apart from its shell, which latter was otherwise classified.

limb¹ (līm), n. [Early mod. E. lim, lym, lymme; < ME. lim, < AS. lim (pl. limu, leomu) = Icel. limr = Sw. Dan. lem, a limb, member of the body.] 1. A part or member of an animal body distinct from the head and trunk; an appendicular member; a leg, an arm, or a wing: often limited in meaning to the leg, at present general out of affected or prudish unwillingness to use the word leg.

He was a moche man and a longe,

In every lym styff and stronge.

MS. Cantab. Fl. II. 35, l. 74. (Hallivell.)

Some han here Armes or here lymes alle to broken, and some the sides. Manderley, Travels, p. 176.

Of courage haughty, and of limb

Heroic built. Milton, P. L., ix. 484.

I lastly was with Curtis, among the floating batt'ries,

And there I left for witness an arm and a limb.

Burns, Jolly Beggar, I am a Son of Mars.

"A bit of the wing, Roxy, or of the—under limb!" The first laugh broke out at this.

O. W. Holmes, Elsie Venner, vii.

2. The branch of a tree: applied only to a branch of some size, and not to a small twig.—3. The part of a bow above or below the grip or handle.

—4. A thing or person regarded as a part of something else; a part; a member: as, a limb of the devil; a limb of the law.

Crye we to Kynde that he come and defende vs,

Foles, fro this fendes lymes for Piers loue the Flowman.

Piers Plowman (B), xx. 70.

That little limb of the devil has cheated the gallows.

Scott.

5. A mischievous or roguish person, especially a young person; an imp; a scapegrace; a scamp.

[Colloq.]

I had it from my maid Joan Hearsey; and she had it from a limb o' the school, she says, a little limb of nine year old. B. Jonson, Staple of News, iii. 2.

Exarticulate limbs. See exarticulate.—Syn. 1. See member.

limb² (līm), v. t. [F. limber, n.] 1. To supply with limbs.

As they please,

They limb themselves, and colour, shape, or size

Assume, as likes them best, condense or rare.

Milton, P. L., vi. 352.

2. To dismember; tear or carve off the limbs of: as, to limb a turkey; to limb a tree.

It is dam seemed to be built principally of alder poles wall limbed off, and placed, roughly speaking, side by side. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 231.

limb³ (līm), n. [F. limbe = Sp. Pg. It. limbo, < L. limbus, a border, edge, fringe, belt, the zodiac (in NL. esp. the border or outer edge of the sun or moon). Cf. limbus, limbo.] 1. In astron., the border or outermost edge of the disk of the sun or moon.

The star once risen, though only one man in the hemisphere has yet seen its upper limb in the horizon, will mount and mount, until it becomes visible to other men, multitudes, and climbs the zenith of all eyes.

Emerson, Misc., p. 182.

2. The graduated edge of a circle or circle or astronomical or surveying instrument, etc.—3.

In zool., the lateral area or marginal band of the cephalic shield of trilobites on either side of the glabella, corresponding to a pleuron of the thoracic region.—4. In bot., the border or upper spreading part of a monopetalous corolla, or of a petal or sepal.

limbat (līm'bat), n. A cooling periodical wind in the island of Cyprus, blowing from the northwest from eight o'clock in the morning until noon or later.

limbate (līm'bāt), a. [F. limbatus, edged,

< L. limbus, a border, edge, see *limb*².] 1. In bot., bordered: said especially of a flower, etc.,

in which one color is surrounded by an edging of another.—2. In zool. and anat., having a limb or limbus; bordered; margined: said of various parts and organs.

limb-bearing (līm'bār'ing), a. Furnished with or supporting limbs: said of those segments in arthropods or articulated animals which bear true jointed appendages or their homologues, as the thoracic segments which bear the legs and the cephalic segments which bear the palpi and antennae.

limbec, limbeck (līm'bek), n. [Also limbeck;

contr. of alimbec, alembeic, q. v.] 1. A still.

This blood, together with the opened veins, were still in a vessel of lead, drawn thence a limbeck.
Sandys, Travels, p. 168.

2. In her., the representation of an alembic or still used as a bearing.

limbeck, limbeck (lim'bek), v. t. [< limbec, limbeck, n.] To strain or pass through a still.

The greater do nothing but limbeck their brains in the art of alchemy.
Sandys, State of Religion.

limbed (limd), a. [< limbi + -ed.] Having limbs: used mostly in composition with adjectives: as, strong-limbed, large-limbed, short-limbed.

Timorously hastening from the sickly pale face or feeble limbed suter.
Hakluyt's Voyages, p. 8.

Innumerable living creatures, perfect forms, limb'd and full grown.
Milton, P. L., vii. 456.

limber (lim'ber), a. [Also formerly or dial. limmer; appar. for limper, < limpi + -er, with freq. (adj.) force.] Easily bent; flexible; pliant; litho; yielding: as, a limber rod; a limber joint.

You put me off with limber vows. Shak., W. T., I. 2. 47.

I could skip
Out of my skin now, like a subtle snake,
I am so limber.
B. Jonson, Volpone, III. 1.

limber (lim'ber), v. t. [< limber, a.] To cause to become limber; render limber or pliant. [Rare.]

Her stiff ham, that have not been bent to a civility for ten years past, are now limbered into courteous three deep at every word.
Richardson, Clarissa Harlowe, III. 356.

limber (lim'ber), n. [Also dial. limmer; prob. < Icel. limar, limbs, boughs, branches (hence in E. shafts), pl. of lim, foliage, < limr, a limb (branch): see limb.] 1. The shaft or thill of a wagon: usually in the plural.—2. The fore part of the carriage of a field-gun or cannon, consisting of two wheels and an axle, with a framework and a pole for the horses. On the top of the frame are two ammunition-chests (or sometimes one), which serve also as seats for two artillerymen. The limber is connected with the gun-carriage properly so called by an iron hook called the pinle, fastened into an eye in the trail or block which supports the cannon in the rear. When the gun is brought into action, it is unlumbered by unfastening the block from the pinle and laying it on the ground.

Limber.

3. Naut., a hole cut through the floor-limbers as a passage for water to the pump-well.

limber (lim'ber), v. t. and t. [< limber, a.] To attach the limber to, as a gun; fasten together the two parts of a gun-carriage, in preparation for moving away: often with up.

The enemy soon limbered up and fled west.
N. A. Rev., CXXVI. 244.

limber-board (lim'ber-börd), n. Naut., a short plank placed over a limber-hole to keep out dirt, etc.

limber-box (lim'ber-boks), n. Same as limber-chest.

limber-chain (lim'ber-chän), n. 1. In artillery, a keep-chain which goes round the pinle and confines the trail to the limber, preventing its flying off the limber-hook. Farrow, Mil. Encyc.—2. Naut., a chain lying in the limber-holes of a ship so as to be drawn to and fro to clear the holes.

limber-chest (lim'ber-chest), n. In artillery, the box for ammunition placed on the limber of a field-piece. Sometimes called limber-box.

Some of . . . (the Confederates) springing nimbly on his limber-chests, shot down his horses and then his men.
The Century, XXXVI. 103.

limber-hole (lim'ber-höl), n. Same as limber, 3. limberness (lim'ber-nes), n. The quality of being limber or easily bent; flexibility; pliancy.

limber-strake (lim'ber-sträk), n. The plank in the floor of a vessel nearest the keelson.

limb-girdle (lim'ger'dl), n. In anat., the bony or cartilaginous apparatus by which a limb is attached to the trunk; the basis of the appendicular skeleton; the shoulder-girdle or hip-girdle; the pectoral or pelvic arch.

limb-guard (lim'gärd), n. Defensive armor for the legs and arms.

limbi, n. Plural of limbus, 2.

limbic (lim'bik), a. Having the character of or pertaining to a limbus or border; bordering; marginal.—Limbic lobe, in anat. See lobe.

limb-meal (lim'möl), adv. [< ME. limmele, limmele, < AS. limmölum, limb by limb, < lim, limb, + mölum, dat. pl. of möl, a portion, meal: see meal, -meal.] Limb by limb; limb from limb piecemeal.

O that I had her here, to tear her limb-meal.
Shak., Cymbeline, II. 4. 147.

limbo (lim'bö), n. [Orig. in the phrase in limbo, which is wholly L. (ML.): L. in, in; limbo, abl. of limbus, a border, edge, in ML. a supposed region on the border of hell: see limbus. The prep. in being taken as E., the L. abl. noun came to be used as an E. noun.] 1. A supposed border-land of hell; a region which has been believed by many to exist on the borders of hell, and to be the appointed abode of those who have not received the grace of Christ while living, and yet have not deserved the punishments of wilful and impenitent sinners. See the phrases.

What! heris thou noght this vegely noyse,
Thes lurdans that in limbo dwelle,
Thel make mungyn of many jolys,
And musteres grete mirthe thame smell.
York Plays, p. 578.

O, what a sympathy of woe is this,
As far from help as limbo is from bliss!
Shak., Tit. And., III. 1. 149.

The gate of Dante's limbo is left ajar even for the ancient philosophers to slip out.
Lovell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 112.

2. Any similar region apart from this world.

A limbo large and broad, since call'd
The Paradise of Pools.
Milton, P. L., III. 495.

3. A prison or other place of confinement; any place where things of little or doubtful value are deposited or thrown aside.

He threw it therefore into a limbo of ambiguity.
Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., v.

Quarantine is a sort of limbo, without the pale of civilized society.
B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 22.

There is a limbo of curious evidence bearing on the subject of pre-natal influences.
O. W. Holmes, Elsie Venner, Pref.

limbo of infants (limbus infantium or infantium), in Rom. Cath. and scholastic theol., the appointed place after death of infants who die without receiving baptism.—limbo of the fathers or of the patriarchs (limbus patrum), the place (the outermost circle of hell) where it has been believed the spirits of the righteous who died before the death of Christ were confined until his descent into hell. It has been identified with the "prison" of the spirits to whom Christ preached when "put to death in the flesh" (1 Pet. III. 18-20).

limb-root (lim'röt), n. In anat., the part of the skeleton which bears a limb. Thus, the pectoral and pelvic arches, or shoulder- and hip-girdles, are the limb-roots respectively of the fore and hind limbs: the scapulae of some fishes are limb-roots.

limburger cheese. See cheese.

limburgite (lim'berg-it), n. [< Limburg, a former duchy, now divided between Belgium and the Netherlands, + -ite.] The name given by Rosenbusch to a rock which is related to peridotite, and consists chiefly of olivin and augite with some magnetite and apatite in a variable but largely vitreous magma. It is essentially a basaltic diatexite of feldspathic constitution. To specimens of this rock from Bohemia the name of magma-basalt was given by Bofsky.

limbus (lim'bus), n. [L., a border, edge, ML. esp. as in def. 1 of limbo: see limbo, limb.] 1. Same as limbo, 1.

What thanne, is limbus lorne, alas!
Gurre Satan helps that we were wroken,
This werke is werre thanne eue it was.
York Plays, p. 384.

2. Pl. limbi (-bi). In anat., a border.—limbus infantium or infantium. See limbo of infants, under limbo.—limbus laminae spiralis, the membranous spiral cushion resting on the border of the osseous spiral lamina of the cochlea. It extends from the attachment of the membrane of Bohnsner and terminates externally in a crest overhanging the spiral groove.—limbus palialis, the palial border; the edge of the mantle or mantle-flap of a mollusk.—limbus patrum. See limbo of the fathers, under limbo.*

lime (lim), n. [< ME. lim, lym, < AS. lim, bitumen, cement, glue, = D. lym = MLG. lim = OHG. MHG. G. leim, glue, = Icel. lim = Sw. Dan. lim, lime, glue; akin to AS. lām, E. loam, to Icel. leir, etc., clay, mud (> E. leir), and prob. to L. limus, slime, mud; cf. L. limer, smear: see Unimnet, letter 3.] 1. Any viscous substance; especially, a viscous substance laid on twigs for catching birds; bird-lime.

You must lay lime to tangle her desire.
Shak., T. G. of V., III. 2. 60.

2. An alkaline earth of great economic importance. It is the oxide of the metallic base calcium; but neither this metal nor its oxide occurs in nature in the uncombined condition, although existing in enormous quantity in various combinations. Lime as artificially made for use in the arts is prepared by calcining limestone or marble, or sometimes sea-shells, in properly constructed furnaces, known generally as lime-kilns, or simply kilns. By this process the carbonic acid is driven off from the lime, and the latter remains as an infusible amorphous substance, which is white when pure limestone has been employed. In this condition it is commonly known as quicklime. When exposed to the air it attracts moisture and falls into powder, with greater or less rapidity according to the humidity of the atmosphere, and the quality of the lime. This process is called slaking. For use in preparing mortar lime is slaked by the addition of water, which is absorbed with avidity and with considerable evolution of heat. Lime may be so slaked that it will keep for months without serious change or injury; in most cases, however, the lime is slaked with the addition of a large quantity of water, and is then immediately mixed with the amount of sand deemed suitable for making the desired quality of mortar. (See mortar.) There are few limestones which do not contain a greater or less quantity of sand and clay or of silicates of various bases mixed with the calcareous material. The lime as prepared from various qualities of rocks varies in character with the nature and amount of this foreign admixture. Limestone containing less than 5 or 6 per cent. of impurities yields a rich or, as it is often called, a "fat" lime; with more than that amount the lime is poor, and does not augment in bulk to any considerable extent when slaked with water. When the amount of silica, alumina, etc., in the limestone is increased to above 15 per cent., the lime made from it begins to acquire the property known as "hydraulicity," or of hardening, or "setting," as it is technically called, under water. (See cement, 2.) By far the most extensive use made of lime is as the chief ingredient in mortar; but there are many other purposes to which it is applied when a strong and cheap base is desired. It is of importance in tanning, in various processes of chemical manufacture, as in the preparation of ammonia and the caustic alkalis and of bleaching-powder, for fertilizing or ameliorating land, for purifying gas, and for various other purposes. Sulphate of lime, or gypsum, is found in the form of alabaster and of selenite. It is ground and roasted at a low heat to make plaster of Paris, and is used for molding and statuary. For notices of the nature and distribution of the most important salts of lime, see, for the carbonates, calcite, aragonite, limestone, and marble; for the sulphates, anhydrite, gypsum, and plaster of Paris (under plaster); for the phosphates, apatite and phosphorite. For the presence and action of lime in natural waters, see water, and also stalagmite and stalaclite.—Chloride of lime. Same as calc. chlorata (which see, under calc).—Cream of lime. See cream.—Hydraulic lime. See hydraulic.—Lime cartridge. See cartridge.—Milk of lime. See milk.—White lime, a solution or preparation of lime used for whitewashing; a variety of whitewash. (See also gas-lime.)

lime (lim), v. t.; pret. and pp. limed, ppr. liming. [< ME. limen, < AS. limian (= D. lymen = OHG. limjan, MHG. limen, G. leimen = Dan. lime = Sw. limma), smear with lime, < lim, lime: see lime, 1.] 1. To smear with a viscous substance for the purpose of catching birds.

For who so wol his hondis lime,
They mosten be the more unleshe.
Gower, (Halliwell.)

York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,
Have all limed bushes to betray thy wings,
And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee.
Shak., 2 Hen. VI., II. 4. 64.

Hence—2. To entangle; insnare; encumber.

O limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged!
Shak., Hamlet, III. 2. 68.

True—we had limed ourselves
With open eyes, and we must take the chance.
Tennyson, Princess, III.

3. To apply lime to; in a special use, to manure with lime, as soil; throw lime into, as a pond or stream, to kill the fish in it.

Encouragement . . . to improve [land] by draining, marling, and liming.
Str. J. Child, On Trade.

4. To sprinkle with slaked lime, as a floor; treat with lime; in leather-manuf., to steep (hides) in a solution of lime in order to remove the hair.—5. To cement.

I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together.
Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. 1. 84.

lime (lim), n. and a. [A corruption of limet for orig. limd: see limd.] 1. n. A tree of the genus Tilia, natural order Tiliaceae; the linden.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the tree so called.—Lime hawk-moth, Smorcinthus tilia, whose larva feeds on the lime.

lime (lim), n. [< F. lime, < Pers. limū, a lemon, a citron: see lemon.] 1. A tree, a variety of Citrus medica. The sour lime (var. acida) has a globose fruit, smaller than the lemon, with thin rind, and yields an extremely acid juice. (See lime-juice.) It is cultivated in southern Europe, India, Florida, etc. The sweet lime of India is the variety limetta.

2. The fruit of the lime-tree.

The ruddier orange and the paler lime.
Cowper, Task, III. 572.

Indian wild lime. See Limonium.—Ogechee lime, the sour tupelo, Nyssa oxyptera, found in parts of the southern United States. Its large acid fruit is made into a conserve called Oreococcus limosus.—Wild lime, Santalum Parvum, a small tree with a hard, close-grained, reddish-brown wood, found in tropical America and extending into the southern United States.

lime¹ (līm'), n. [Also leam, "lim, lyam; < OF. lim, also lim, F. lim = Pr. lim = Pg. lim, ligame = It. legame, ligame, < L. ligamen, a band; see lion (another form of the same word) and ligament.] A cord for leading a dog; a leash. Hence limmer, *limmer*², limhound.

My hound then in my lim, I by the woodman's art Forecast where I may lodge the goodly high-palmed hart.
Drayton, Muse's Elysium, vi.

lime², n. [ME. lime, lymo, < OF. "lime (l), limit, < L. limus, limit: see limit.] Limit; end.

Rygt as we cleye get the same,
And harratter shalde withoute lyme.
Chron. Wodden, p. 4. (Halliwell.)

lime³, v. t. [OF. limier, F. limier = Pr. Sp. Pg. limar = It. limare, < L. limare, file, < lima, a file.] To file; polish.

It was like a lymed (var. a thynge of) glas,
But that it shoon ful more clere.
Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1194.

limeball-light (līm'bāl-līt), n. Same as calcium light (which see, under calcium).

lime-boil (līm'boil), n. In calico-bleaching, the passing of the goods through milk of lime. Also called lime-bowk.

lime-burner (līm'bār'nēr), n. One who burns limestone to form lime.

lime-bush (līm'būsh), n. A bush smeared with lime.

He's flown to another lime-bush; there he will flutter as long more, till he have ne'er a feather left.
B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, III. 1.

lime-catcher (līm'kash'ēr), n. In a steam-engine, a form of filter to intercept the lime in the feed-water, and thus prevent the deposit of scale in the boiler. It consists of a cage filled with loose charcoal or other material, inclosed in the dome of a steam-boiler and in communication with it. The feed-water is admitted above the filter, through which it trickles down, leaving its lime and other impurities in the charcoal. Also called limo-extractor.

lime-cracker (līm'krak'ēr), n. In cement-works, a mill in which crude plaster and calcined limestone are coarsely ground. It is made of chilled iron, and its core and teeth are removable in sections, so that separate parts can be repaired when affected by wear.

lime-dog (līm'dog), n. A limhound.

lime-feldspar (līm'fēld'spār), n. See feldspar.

lime-floor (līm'fōr), n. A floor made of lime mortar beaten and smoothed to an even surface.

limhound (līm'hound), n. [Also leamhound; so called as being led by a lime or leam; < lime + hound. Cf. limmer and lym.] A dog used in hunting the wild boar; a limmer.

But Talus, that could like a lime-hound winde her,
And all things secrete wisely could bewray,
At length found out wheres his hidden lay.
Spenser, F. Q., V. II. 23.

lime-juice (līm'jūs), n. The juice of the lime, used for much the same purposes as lemon-juice. It is especially in favor as an antiscorbutic, and forms a part of the outfit of vessels bound on long voyages, especially for arctic regions.

lime-juicer (līm'jō'sēr), n. A British sailor: so called because he is obliged by law to use lime-juice at sea as an antiscorbutic. [Amer. naut. slang.]

You lime-juicers have found that Richmond is taken.
International Rev., XI. 52a.

lime-kiln (līm'kil), n. [Formerly also limkil; < lime + kiln.] A kiln or furnace in which lime is made by calcining limestone or shells.

lime-light (līm'līt), n. Same as calcium light (which see, under calcium).

lime-machine (līm'mā-shēn'), n. In gas-manuf., a machine for purifying gas by causing it to pass through lime.

Limenitis (līm-e-nī'tis), n. [NL., < Gr. Aim-virg, an epithet of Artemis, lit. of harbors, < limnē, a harbor, haven.] A genus of nymphalid butterflies, having the head narrower than the thorax, the antennae nearly as long as the body, and ample wings without ocelli. L. camilla and L. archippe are brownish-black European species with white markings, notable for their graceful flight. L. urticae and L. erionota are found in the middle and eastern portions of the United States. L. archippe is the white admiral of English collectors. L. archippe is a very common North American butterfly, also called Barbaric archippe (not to be confused with Danaus archippe, now called Androctes platerius). See out under archippe.

lime-ointment (līm'oint'mēt), n. In phar., an ointment consisting of 4 parts of slaked lime, 1 part of lard, and 3 parts of olive-oil.

lime-pit (līm'pit), n. A limestone-quarry.

lime-powder (līm'pou'dēr), n. The crackled lime resulting from air-slaking.

lime-punch (līm'punch), n. A punch in which lime-juice is substituted for lemon-juice.

limet, limeret, n. Middle English forms of *limmer*³.

limerick hook, lace, etc. See hook, lace, etc.

lime-rod (līm'rod), n. [ME. lymrod; < lime + rod.] A twig smeared with bird-lime. Also lime-twig, and formerly limeyard.

The eagle of blak therin, Caught with the lymrod.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale, l. 304.

limes (līm'ēz), n.; pl. limes (līm'ī-tēz). [L., a cross-path, balk, boundary, limit: see limit, n.] 1. In anat., one of two distinct tracts of the lateral root of the olfactory lobe of the brain, distinguished as limes alba and limes cinerea. Wilder and Gage, Anat. Tech., p. 480.—2. In soil., a boundary; a line of division or separation between two parts or organs.—Limes facialis, in ornith., the facial boundary, or facial outline; the line or limit of the feathers all around the base of the bill. It forms in different groups of birds various salient and reentrant angles, of some significance in classification. The most constant saliences are the frontal points, or antles. See antle.

lime-sink (līm'sink), n. A rounded hole or depression in the ground in limestone districts.

lime-sour (līm'sour), n. In calico-bleaching, same as gray sour (which see, under gray).

lime-spreader (līm'spred'ēr), n. In agri., a perforated box on wheels, or a special form of cart, for distributing lime over land.

limestone (līm'stōn), n. Rock consisting wholly or in large part of calcareous material or carbonate of lime. Where, as is often the case, there is some carbonate of magnesia mixed with the lime, the rock is called dolomitic limestone, and from this there may be a gradual transition to dolomite. Marble is the name given to the more crystalline limestones, and especially to such as are solid and handsome enough to be used for ornamental purposes or in costly buildings. Limestones are classed as silicious or argillaceous, according to the amount of sand or silica or of clay they contain. They are of many shades of color, reddish, grayish, and slate-colored tints being the most common. Many marbles, however, are either pure white or slightly clouded with tints of gray, red, or brown; but some are so dark as to appear when polished almost black. The limestone of the fossiliferous stratified groups is generally admitted to have been the result of organic agencies, just as limestone deposits are seen forming at the present time from the debris of coral growth. The crystalline varieties of limestone and marble which occur in the aeolic or archean rocks are by some believed to be a chemical precipitate or segregation, while others consider their existence proof that these rocks, in which no fossils have yet been found, are metamorphosed sedimentary beds, and that this limestone is also the result of organic life.—Baculite limestone. See baculite.—Bala limestone, in geol., a bed of limestone which is an important and very fossiliferous member of the Lower Silurian series in North Wales.—Bastard, bituminous, burnt limestone. See the adjectives.—Bird's-eye limestone, a part of the Black River limestone, one of the subgroups into which the Lower Silurian has been divided by the New York geologists: so called because it has crystalline points scattered through it which have a fancied resemblance to the eyes of birds.—Carboniferous limestone. Same as mountain limestone.—Chazy limestone, in geol., the name given by the New York Geological Survey to a member of the Lower Silurian series lying next below the Trenton group. The most abundant and interesting fossil which it contains is the Nautilites nautilus, which is a conspicuous object in the black marble quarried at Isle La Motte in Lake Champlain, and in other localities, and used extensively for floor-tiles in halls and public buildings, in square slabs or tiles alternating with those of white marble.—Corniferous limestone. See Helderberg limestone.—Dudley limestone, a highly fossiliferous limestone belonging to the Silurian system, occurring near Dudley in England, and equivalent to the Wenlock limestone. It abounds in beautiful masses of coral, shells, and trilobites. Also called Dudley rock.—Fontainebleau limestone, a variety of calcite from Fontainebleau, in rhomboidal crystals peculiar in containing a large amount (about 60 per cent.) of sand as impurity.—Galena limestone, the dolomitic rock, of Lower Silurian age, in which the lead ore of the Upper Mississippi lead region chiefly occurs. The formation has a maximum thickness of about 350 feet, and is in large part almost a pure dolomite.—Granular limestone. See granular.—Helderberg limestone, a name derived from the Helderberg mountains in New York, applied to rocks partly of Upper Silurian and partly of Devonian age. The Lower Helderberg limestones include four groups of limestone-beds, distinguished from one another by their fossil remains. Among these groups is the economically important one affording hydraulic cement—the Tentaculite or water-lime group. The Upper Helderberg is more generally called the corniferous limestone. In Canada this rock is, in part at least, a source of petroleum which is of considerable economic importance. It forms with the Schenharie and Canada-gall grits the lowest division of the Devonian series as tabulated by the New York geologists.—Industrial limestone. See industrial.—Jura limestone, the limestone rock of the Jura mountains, which corresponds to the Oolite of British writers. It is composed of limestones of various qualities, clays, marls, and sandstones.—Keokuk limestone, one of the divisions of mountain limestone, of importance in the Mississippi valley. It lies between the Burlington and St. Louis limestones. In this group the geode-bed occurs. See geode.—Magnesian limestone, a carbonate of lime containing some carbonate of magnesia. When the two are present in the necessary proportion to form dolomite (84.85 of the former to 15.15 of the latter), the rock is usually called by that name. See dolomite.—Mountain limestone, the lowest of the three groups into which the entire Carboniferous series in England is divided. It is overlain by the millstone-grit, and over this are the coal-measures proper. These general divisions hold good over a large part of Europe, and to a considerable extent in the eastern and north-eastern United States. Even in China there is a limestone formation corresponding in geological position and fossil contents with the mountain limestone of England. Wherever it occurs, this formation is characterized by similar fossils. Among these the most abundant forms are—Rhipidopoda, especially the wide-spread genus Favosites; crinoids, in great variety and beauty; brachiopods, especially of the genera Productus and Spirifer; corals, among which the genus Lobosolenia is conspicuous; gastropods and salicifera fishes; and also the earliest amphibians known. The trilobites, very characteristic of groups lower than the Carboniferous, have in the mountain limestone almost entirely died out. This formation is of great interest in the Mississippi valley, on account of the extent of territory which it covers and its extraordinary wealth of fossil remains. In various parts of the world, notably in Scotland and in some parts of the Appalachian coal-field, the mountain limestone contains workable beds of coal. Also called carboniferous limestone. See carboniferous.—Niagara limestone, an important member of the Upper Silurian series, largely developed in the vicinity of Niagara Falls, and further west. The Medina sandstone, the Clinton group, and the Niagara shale and limestone together form the "Niagara period" of Dana. The Niagara group contains large numbers of corals, crinoids, brachiopods, and trilobites. It is nearly the equivalent of the Wenlock group of English geologists. Near Lockport, New York, this rock contains many geodes lined with crystals of dog-tooth-spar (calcite), pear-spar, and other minerals. The rocks of the Niagara period are overlain by the calcareous group, and this latter by the Lower Helderberg rocks.—Nummulitic limestone. See Nummulites.—Trenton limestone, a rock of Lower Silurian age, finely exhibited at Trenton, N. J., New York, and hence so named by the geologists of the New York Survey. It is also an important member of the series further west than New York, and south through the Appalachian range. It is generally a highly fossiliferous rock, rich in crinoids, brachiopods, trilobites, cephalopods, and gastropods. The Trenton and Black River limestones, together with the Utica slate and the Hudson River or Cincinnati group, constitute the "Trenton period" of Dana. See marble.

limestone-meter (līm'stōn-mē'tēr), n. An instrument for determining the proportion of calcareous matter in soils.

lime-tree (līm'trē), n. Same as *lime*².—Lime-tree winter moth. See moth.

lime-twig (līm'twig), n. [ME. lime-twig; < lime + twig.] A twig smeared with bird-lime; hence, that which catches; a snare; a beguiling trick or device.

I doubt his lime-twigs catch not;
If they do, all 's provided.
Fletcher and Shirley, Night-Walker, IV. 2.

Enter'd the very lime-twigs of his spells,
And yet came off.
Milton, Comus, l. 648.

limetwig (līm'twig), v. t.; pret. and pp. limetwiggd, ppr. limetwiggng. [< lime-twig, n.] To beset with lime-twigs or snares; entangle or retard.

Not to have their consultations limetwiggd with quacks and sophisms of philosophical persons.
L. Addison, Western Barbary, Pref.

lime-vial (līm'vī'al), n. A vial of quicklime intended for incendiary purposes: an object supposed to be represented by a large bulbous mass on the end of an arrow in some medieval pictures.

lime-wash (līm'wash), n. A coating given with a solution of lime; whitewash.

limewash (līm'wash), v. t. [< lime-wash, n.] To whitewash.

Even in Cornwall and North Devon, moorstone cottages look very "defected" unless they are limewashed.
Contemporary Rev., LI. 257.

lime-water (līm'wā'tēr), n. A saturated aqueous solution of lime. It is astringent and alkaline, and when added to milk it prevents the formation of dense coagula. It is used in diarrhea and vomiting, and as an external application to ulcers, etc. It is also employed in the clarification of coarse sugar.

limewort (līm'wört), n. An old name of the catch-fly, Silene Armeria, and of one or two other plants.

limeyard, n. [ME. limgerd; < lime + yard.] Same as lime-rod.

I lime it to a lym-verde to drawn men to hell,
And to worchipe of the fend to wraththen the scales.
Piers Plowman's Creed (E. E. T. S.), l. 564.

Limicola (līm'ikō'lā), n. [NL., < L. limos, mud (see *lime*¹), + colere, inhabit.] A genus of small broad-billed sandpipers of the family Scolopacidae, having as type Tringa platyrhynchos. Koch, 1816.

Limicolæ (līm'ikō'lā), n. pl. [NL., pl. of Limicola.] 1. In ornith., an order or a suborder of birds, a part of the old order Grallæ or Grallatores, including most of those wading birds the few (usually four) young of which run about at birth, as distinguished from those of the heron tribe, which are reared in the nest, or of the rail tribe, which lay numerous eggs. It is called the "plover-scaup group," and embraces the lies Charadriidae and Scolopacidae, or plovers and snipes, and their allies, as sandpipers, curlews, godwits, avocets, stilts, turnstones, oyster-catchers, etc. It is approximately equivalent to the Longirostris and Prostretus of Cuvier. In Sundevall's system it is restricted to the snipes, tattlers, sandpipers, stilts, and avocets, and is thus little more extensive than the family Scolopacidae. Also called Dolichrostris.

2. In Vermes, a group of chætopod worms containing those Scoliolela which are maritime and characterized by having the looped canals highly developed and differentiated as seminal ducts; distinguished from ordinary earthworms or Terriicola.

Limicola (lim-i-kōl), a. Same as Limicolina.

Limicolina (li-mik-ō-lin), a. and n. [As Limicola + -in]. 1. a. Living on or in mud; specifically, of or pertaining to the Limicola, in either sense of that word. It is a common epithet of the large group of birds known as shore-birds, bay-snipe, etc.

II. n. In ornith., a member of the Limicola.

Limicolous (li-mik-ō-lus), a. [As Limicola + -ous]. Living in mud; limicoline.

In many Limicolous forms, as in earthworms.

Encyc. Brit., XXIV, 678.

Limidae (lim-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lima + -idae].

A family of monomyarian acephalous bivalves or lamellibranch mollusks, typified by the genus Lima, having the mantle-margins fringed with tentacular filaments, the foot finger-like, the lips tentaculate, and the shell obliquely oval, with the umbones eared, the anterior side gaping, and the posterior rounded. They live in the sand and generally burrow, but are able to move like scallops through the water by rapidly opening and closing the valves. Many of them attach themselves by a byssus and form a sort of nest. The animal is generally of an orange or bright-red color. The species are numerous, and occur in most seas. Also Limada. See cut under Lima.

Liminal (lim-i-nal), a. [L. limen (limin-), threshold (cf. eliminate), + -al]. Pertaining to the threshold or entrance; hence, relating to the beginning or first stage; inceptive; inchoative.

Every stimulus must reach a certain intensity before any appreciable sensation results. This point is known as the threshold or liminal intensity.

J. Sully, Outlines of Psychol., p. 114.

The liminal difficulties cannot be evaded without the most disastrous consequences to the body of the exposition.

Mind, IX, 428.

Liming (li-ming), n. [Verbal n. of lime, v.].

1. The operation of treating with lime, or of sprinkling with slaked lime; in leather-manuf., the steeping of hides in a solution of lime to remove their hair.—2. In bleaching, a solution of lime in water.—3. The smearing of twigs with lime to catch birds; bird-liming.

Limit (lim-it), n. [ME. limite, lymyte, < OF. limite, F. limite = Sp. limite = Pg. It. limite, < L. limes (limit-), a cross-path or balk between fields, hence a boundary, boundary line or wall, any path or road, border, limit; cf. limen, a threshold. Cf. limb.] 1. A definite terminal or border line; a boundary; that which bounds or circumscribes in a material manner; as, the northern limit of a field or town; the limits of a country.

Whiche .ij. place be the lymytes or endes of the Holy Lande the longest waye.

Sir R. Gylesford, Pylgrymage, p. 42.

Here, the double-founted stream,

Jordan, true limit eastward. Milton, P. L., xii, 145.

Nor ceas'd her madness and her fight before

She touch'd the limit of the Pharisan shores.

Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metamorph., l.

The spectrum extends in both directions beyond its visible limits.

Tyndall, Light and Elect., p. 68.

2. A terminal line or point in general; the extent or reach beyond which continuity ceases; a fixed term or bound as to amount, supply, continuance, inclusion, or the like; used of both material and immaterial things; as, to reach the limit of one's resources; the limit of vision or of resistance; to set limits to one's ambition.

All kinds of knowledge have their certain bounds and limits.

Hooker, Ecceles. Polity, l. 14.

Dispatch; the limit of your lives is out.

Shak., Rich. III., iii, 3, 8.

The limits of my Paper will not give me leave to be particular in instances of this kind.

Addison, Spectator, No. 267.

Not without a few falls in the wrestle with Nature do we learn the limits of our own power, and the pitiless immensity of the power that is not ours.

J. R. Seeley, Nat. Religion, p. 27.

3. That which is within or defined by limits; confine; district; region.

At length into the limits of the north

They came. Milton, P. L., v, 758.

The archdeacon hath divided it Into three limits very equaly.

Shak., 1 Hen. IV., iii, 1, 7a.

The voyageur here also generally holds his place in the front rank, explores and reports the quality and quantity of timber in certain limits or lots.

Harper's Mag., LXXVI, 550.

4. A logical term. See the quotation.

In this proposition, every man is a sensible body; these two words, man and sensible body, are the terms, limits, or bounds, whereof as the said proposition is compounded, so into the same it is to be resolved, as into his uttermost parts that have any signification.

Blundeville, Arte of Logicks (1619).

5. In math., the precise boundary between two continuous regions of magnitude or quantity; especially, the point at which a variable upon which some function depends passes through infinity. It is frequently said to be the value that a variable quantity may indefinitely approach but can never reach—a definition which, as tacitly assuming that the variable depends upon another which increases by successive finite steps, introduces an inessential element, while altogether overlooking the essential one of continuity.

6. A limb, as a limit or extremity of the body.

Hurried

Here to this place, I the open air, before

I have got strength of limb.

Shak., W. T., iii, 2, 107.

Thought it very strange that nature should endow so fair a face with so hard a heart, such comely limits with such perverse conditions.

Titania and Theseus, bl. iott., cited by Steevens. (Nares.)

Ecliptic limits. See ecliptic.—Equation of limits. See equation.—Limit of a planet. Its greatest heliocentric latitude.—Limit of distinct vision. The smallest or greatest distance from which the image of an object can be fixed upon the retina.—Limit of elasticity. See elasticity.—Limit of the roots of an equation. A value greater than the greatest root or smaller than the smallest.—Limits of a prison. Jail limits, or simply limits. See jail.—Limits of integration. See integration.—Magnetic limit. See magnetic.—Method or doctrine of limits. The doctrine that we cannot reason about infinite and infinitesimal quantities, that phrases in mathematics containing these and cognate words are not to be understood literally, but are to be interpreted as meaning that the functions spoken of behave in certain ways when their variables are indefinitely increased or diminished, and that the fundamental formulæ of the differential calculus should be based upon the conception of a limit. (See def. 5, above.) The first of these positions is not now tenable: the hypothesis of infinite and infinitesimal quantities is consistent, and can be reasoned about mathematically. But the doctrine of limits should be understood to rest upon the general principle that every proposition must be interpreted as referring to a possible experience.

The problems to which this method is applied belong to three types: the summation of series, the problem of tangents, and the problem of quadratures. (See series and problem.) It is essentially the same as Newton's method of prime and ultimate ratios. Its rival is the method of infinitesimals, which is almost excluded from the text-books at present, but is more in harmony with recent advances in mathematics.—Three-mile limit. See mile.—Syn. 1. Confine, termination, bound, precinct, boundary, frontier (see boundary); restriction, restraint, check.

Limit (lim-it), v. [ME. limiten, < OF. limiter, F. limiter = Fr. Sp. Pg. limitar = It. limitare, < L. limitare, bound, limit, fix, determine, < limes (limit-), a boundary, limit; see limit, n. Cf. delimit.] I. trans. 1. To restrict within limits; bound; set bounds to.

They . . . limited the Holy One of Israel. Ps. lxxviii. 61.

In all well-instituted commonwealths, care has been taken to limit men's possessions.

Swift, Thoughts on Various Subjects.

2. To assign to a limit or confine; fix within a limit; allot.

Limit each leader to his several charge.

Shak., Rich. III., v, 3, 25.

The hopes and fears of man are not limited to this short life, and to this visible world.

Macaulay, Gladstone on Church and State.

3. To fix as a limit; assign exclusively or specifically. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Again, he limited a certain day.

Heb. iv. 7.

And, as you do answer, I do know the scope

And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Shak., K. John, v, 2, 122.

Their time limited them being expired, they returned to yr ship.

Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 82.

Limiting case of a hypothesis involving continuity, a case which is indefinitely near to cases which conform to the general conditions, and also to cases which violate these conditions. Thus, a tangent to a circle is a limiting case of a secant. See limit, n. 5.—Limiting points. With reference to the system of circles having a given radical axis, two points which have the same powers with reference to all the circles.

II. intr. To exercise any function, as begging, within a limited district; as, a limiting friar.

They go ydely a limiting abroad, living upon the sweat of other mens travels. Northbrooke, Dicing (1577). (Nares.)

Limitable (lim-i-ta-ble), a. [Limit + -able].

Capable of being limited, circumscribed, bounded, or restricted.

Limitaneous (lim-i-tā-nē-us), a. [L. limitaneus, situated on the borders, < limes (limit-), a boundary, limit; see limit, n.] Pertaining to limits or bounds. Bailey, 1731.

Limitarian (lim-i-tā-ri-an), a. and n. [Limitary + -an]. I. a. Tending to limit or circumscribe.

II. n. One who limits; in theol., one who holds that a part of the human race only are to be saved; opposed to universalist. Imp. Dict.

Limitary (lim-i-tā-ri), a. and n. [= F. limitaire, preliminary, < L. limitarius, that is on the border, < limes (limit-), a boundary, limit; see limit, n.] I. a. 1. Marking or maintaining a limit or boundary; limiting; restrictive.

Then, when I am thy captive, talk of chains, Proud limitary chains. Milton, P. L., iv, 971.

Statements so palpably limitary of the Divine supremacy as I found on the face of Revelation.

H. James, Sub. and Shad., p. 123.

2. Subject to limitation; restricted within limits; limited.

What no inferior limitary king
Could in a length of years to ripeness bring,
Sudden his word performs.

Ps. lxxviii. 1. First Hymn of Callimachus to Jupiter.

A philosopher should not see with the eyes of the poor limitary creature calling himself a man of the world.

De Quincey, Opium Eater.

II. n. 1. That which constitutes a limit or boundary, as a stretch of land; a border-land.

In the time of the Romans this country, because a limitary, did abound with fortifications.

Fuller, Worthies, Cumberland.

2. Same as limiter, 2. Heylin, Life of Laud, p. 210.

Limitate (lim-i-tāt), a. [L. limitatus, pp. of limitare, bound, limit; see limit, v.] In bot., bounded by a distinct line, as the hypothallus in some lichens.

Limitation (lim-i-tā-shon), n. [ME. limitacioun (in sense 6), < OF. limitacion, F. limitation = Sp. limitacion = Pg. limitação = It. limitazione, < L. limitatio (n-), a bounding, < limitare, pp. limitatus, bound; see limit, v.] 1. The act of bounding or circumscribing; the fixing of a limit or restriction.

Mercy to him that shows it is the rule
And righteous limitation of its act,
By which Heaven moves in pardoning guilty man.

Croquer, Task, vi, 568.

The checks naturally arising to each man's actions when men become associated are those only which result from mutual limitation.

H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 101.

2. The condition of being limited, bounded, or circumscribed; restriction.

Am I yourself

But, as it were, in sort or limitation?

Shak., J. C., ii, 1, 283.

3. An opposing limit or bound; a fixed or prescribed restriction; a restraining condition, defining circumstance, or qualifying conception; as, limitations of thought.

Thus Quintus understood that he was appointed to have command of the army, without any other limitation than during the pleasure of the senate.

Raleigh, Hist. World, V, iv, § 14.

We are under physiological and cerebral limitations; limitations of association, want, condition.

Bushnell, Nature and the Supernat., p. 51.

Every limitation of a power is a prohibition to transcend it; for, if it had not that effect, it would not be a limitation.

N. A. Rev., CXXXIX, 187.

4. That to which one is limited; that which is required as a condition.

You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes
Endue you with the people's voice.

Shak., Cor., ii, 3, 165.

God, then, not only framed Nature one,
But also set it limitation
Of Forme and Time.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 1.

5. In law: (a) The period of time prescribed by law after which an action cannot be brought. Since the investigation of controversies becomes more difficult with the lapse of time, and long delay to sue may imply either that satisfaction has been received or that all claim is abandoned, and as it is vexatious to revive stale claims, the law allows fixed periods, varying with the nature of the grievance, within which, if at all, a claimant must apply to the courts. The statutes fixing these periods are called statutes of limitations. From the limitation prescribed for actions to recover real property, it follows that a practically secure title to land can be acquired by mere adverse possession for a sufficient time. (b) In the law of conveyancing, the carving out of an estate less than a fee simple absolute (see fee); the prescribing of an ulterior direction for the devolution of an estate in case the estate of the primary grantee shall fail. If a dead or will gives property to A limiting his estate to his life, and on his death giving the property to B, the gift to B is a limitation, or limitation over. If the property is given to A so long as she remains unmarried, adding that in case she marries the property is to go to B, the added clause is a conditional limitation, or a limitation over dependent on a condition. If a condition only is prescribed without adding a limitation over, the property will, if the condition be valid, revert to the donor or his heirs.

6†. The particular district in which a limiter or begging friar was allowed to beg for alms.

Ther walketh now the lymytour hymself,
And sayth his matyns and his booly thynges
As he gooth in his lymytatoun.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 81.

A limitour of the Grey Friars, in the course of his limitation, preached many times, and had but one sermon at all times.

Latimer, Misc. Ser.

Some [pulpits] have not had four sermons these fiftene or sixtene years since Friars left their limitations.

G. Gifford, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1552.

Collateral limitation a limitation dependent on some collateral event.—Conditional limitation. See def. 5.—Four years' limitation law, a name by which the United States Tenure of Office Act (United States Congress, March, 1887) is sometimes known. See tenure.—Limitation of the Crown Act, an English statute of 1701 (18 and 19 Wm. III., c. 2) which vested the succession to the crown in the Princess Sophia of Hanover and her heirs, being Protestants. Also called the Act of Settlement, and the Succession to the Crown Act.—Statute of Limitations. See def. 5.—Words of limitation, words in a deed or will taken as indicating the nature or kind of estate the donee is vested with, by stating who shall or may take after him.

Limitative (lim'i-tā-tiv), a. [F. limitatif = Sp. Pg. limitativo; as limitate + -ivc.] Limiting; fixing limits; restrictive.

Limitative notions which have a negative value, in so far as they keep open a vacant space beyond experience, but do not enable us to fill that space with any positive realities.

Encyc. Brit., XVI. 84.

Limitative judgment, in logic, a name given by Kant to an affirmative infinitized proposition, such as "Every man is a non-dog," in order to make up the triad of forms—affirmative, negative, limitative—under the category of quality.

Much acoumen has been expended even in recent times in vindicating the limitative form of judgments, but I can see in it only an unmeaning product of pedantic ingenuity.

Nettlethip, tr. of Lotze's Logic, l. II. § 40.

Limited (lim'i-ted), p. a. and n. I. p. a. 1. Confined within limits; narrow; circumscribed.

After this great affront to the King, is Mountford sent over again into Gascony, though with a more limited Authority.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 84.

2†. Allotted or appointed.

I'll make so bold to call,

For 'tis my limited service.

Shak., Macbeth, II. 3. 56.

3. In railroading, restricted as to number of cars (weight), or to the carrying of first-class passengers; said of a train.—Limited adjunct, an adjunct that agrees with the subject in regard to some part, nature, time, place, or respect.

Mortality is the absolute adjunct of man, whilst immortality is the limited; because man is not absolutely immortal, but only as to the soul.

Burgessdictus, tr. by a Gentleman.

Limited company, see function. See the nouns.—Limited divorce. See divorce, 1.—Limited jurisdiction, liability, mail, monarchy, partnership, problem, ticket, train, univocation, vote, etc. See the nouns.

II. n. A limited express-train: as, the Chicago limited. [Colloq., U. S.]

Let the great steamship founder, the limited crash through a treacle.

Pop. Sci. Mo., XXX. 577.

Limitedly (lim'i-ted-li), adv. In a limited manner or degree; with limitation.

The constitution of such an unity doth involve the vesting some person or some number of persons with a sovereign authority, . . . to be managed in a certain manner, either absolutely, according to pleasure, or limitedly, according to certain rules prescribed to it.

Barrow, Unity of the Church.

Limitedness (lim'i-ted-nes), n. The state of being limited. Johnson.

Limiter (lim'i-tēr), n. [ME. limitour, lymytour, < OF. limitour*, limitour, < ML. limitator, a friar licensed to act within certain limits, lit. one who limits, < L. limitare, limit, bound: see limit, v.] 1. One who or that which limits or confines.

They so believing, as we hear they do, and yet abolishing a law so good and moral, the limiter of sin, what are they else but contrary to themselves?

Milton, Tetrachordon.

2†. A friar licensed to beg, collect convent-dues, preach, or perform other duties within certain limits, or in a certain district.

A Friar ther was, a wantoun and a moys,

A lymytour, a ful solemne man. . . .

He was the beste beggere in his hous.

Chaucer, Gen. Pro. to C. T. (ed. Morris), l. 200.

'Twas but getting a Dispensation from the Pope's Limiter, or Gatherer of the Peter-Pence.

Selden, Table-Talk, p. 101.

Limites, n. Plural of limes.

Limit-gage (lim'it-gā), n. A gage which is used for determining whether pieces do not exceed or fall below a certain specified range of dimension. Car-Builder's Dict.

Limitless (lim'it-less), a. [< limit + -less.] Having no limits; unbounded; illimitable.

Now to this sea of city-commonwealth,

Limitless London, am I come obscured.

Sh. J. Davies, Witte's Pilgrimage, sig. R. 4 b.

—Syn. Boundless, unlimited, illimitable, infinite.

Limitour, n. A Middle English form of limiter.

Limit-point (lim'it-point), n. A point on a line or other spread, such that within every interval within which it is contained there lie an infinity of points of a given manifold. The limit-point may or may not belong to this manifold.

Limma (lim'g), n. [LL., < Gr. λεμμα, a remnant, somewhat less than half a major tone, a monosemic pause, < λειπνν, leave.] 1. In the Pythagorean system of music, the smaller half-step or semitone, being the remnant of a perfect fourth after subtracting from it two whole steps or "tones": $\frac{1}{4} - (\frac{1}{2}) = \frac{1}{4}$. A limma and an apotome together made a "tone": $\frac{1}{4} + \frac{1}{4} = \frac{1}{2}$. Also called Pythagorean semitone or hemitone.—2. In pros., a monosemic empty time or pause; a time equal to one mora or semelion, existing in the rhythm, but not expressed by a syllable in the words. The limma is indicated by a mark like a carot (Λ , taken from the initial Λ or λ of λεμμα). The penes at the end of a trochaic dimeter or tetrapody catalectic (see the lines quoted under catalectic) is an example, — — — — — Λ , the acatalectic line being — — — — —. Also written leimma. See pauses.

limmer¹ (lim'er), a. An obsolete or dialectal form of *limber*¹.

They have their feet and legs limmer, wherewith they crawl.

Holman.

limmer² (lim'er), n. 1. A dialectal variant of *limber*².—2†. Naut., a man-rope at the side of a ladder.

limmer³ (lim'er), n. and a. [Formerly also lymmer; in def. 1 also leamer; < ME. limer, limere, lymore, < OF. limier, F. limier, a large dog, lit. a dog held in a leash, < OF. lim, F. lien, a leash: see limet, *lien*². Cf. limelound.] I. n. 1†. A limelound; in general, a hound; in a later use, a mongrel hound.

A gret route
Of huntres and oke of foresteres,
With many rylayes and lymmeres.

Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 262.

A dogge engendred betwene an hounde and a mastey, called a lymmer or mungrell.

Elyot, in v. Hybris. (Halliwell.)

Hence—2. A low, base, or worthless person; a scoundrel; as applied to a woman, in a milder sense, a jade. [Now Scotch and North. Eng.]

To satiffie in parte the wrong which had bene offred him by those lymmers and robbers. Uolknshed, Hist. Ireland.

The nourice was a fawse limmer
As e'er hung on a tree.

Lamkin (Child's Ballads, III. 95).

Thieves, lymmers, and broken men of the Highlands.

Scott.

II.† a. Base; low.

Then the limmer Scotties . . . burnt my guddes, and made deadly feede on me, and my barnes.

Bulletin's Dialogue (1578), p. 3. (Halliwell.)

Rence with 'em, limmer lown,

Thy vermin and thyself.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, II. 1.

limmock (lim'ok), a. [*< limmer*¹, *limber*¹, with substituted term-ock.] Very limber. [Prov. Eng.]

limn (lim), v. [< ME. limnen, contr. of luminen, an aphetic form of enluminen, < OF. enluminer, < L. illuminare, enluminare, illuminate, burnish, limn: see illumine, illuminate.] I. trans. To represent by painting or drawing; depict; delineate; hence, to describe vividly or minutely. [Archaic or poetical.]

It were impossible
To limn his passions in such lively colours
As his own proper sunderance could express.

Ford, Lover's Melancholy, III. 3.

II.† intrans. To practise drawing or painting, especially in water-colors.

Yesterday begun my wife to learn to limn of one Browne, and by her beginning, upon some eyes, I think she will do very fine things, and I shall take great delight in it.

Pope's Diary, II. 234.

Limnacea (lim-nā'sē-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Bronniart, 1817), for Limnaceaea*, < Limnæa + -aea.] In De Blainville's classification (1825), the first of three families of his Pulmobranchiata, containing pulmonate gastropods of the genera Limnæa, Physa, and Planorbis in a broad sense; the pond-snails, now divided into two families, Limnæidae and Physidae.

limnacean (lim-nā'sē-an), a. and n. [< Limnacea + -an.] I. a. Of or relating to the Limnacea.

II. n. A gastropod of the group Limnacea; any pond-snail.

limnaceous (lim-nā'shi-us), a. Same as limnacean.

Limnædia (lim-nā'di-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh.] A genus of phyllopod crustaceans, with a thin flexible bivalve carapace of oval form, and from 18 to 26 segments which bear limbs. L. agassizi is found in pools in New England.

Limnædiacea (lim-nā'di-ā'sē-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Limnædia + -acea.] Same as Limnædiidae.

Limnædiidae (lim-nā'di-ā'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limnædia + -idae.] A family of phyllopod or branchiopod crustaceans, typified by the genus Limnædia. The test is soft and bivalved, there are numerous pairs of pleopods or swimming-feet, the antennae are large, the antennule are small, and the large telson has a pair of appendages. In the male one or two pairs of feet are chelate. The leading genera are Limnædia, Limnetis, and Eubothra. See Eubothridæ.

Limnæe (lim-nē-ē), n. [NL., < Gr. λίμναιος, of or from a marsh, < λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh.]

A genus of Limnæidae, typical of the subfamily Limnæinae. In these pond-snails the shell is a slender dextral spiral with a large body-whorl and aperture, of light, thin, horny texture. There are many species. L. stagnalis is a common one. They live in ponds, and are almost exclusively vegetarian. The genus is cosmopolitan, and reaches its highest development in North America. Also erroneously Limnæa, Limnæus, Limnæa, Limnerus.

Limnæana (lim-nē-an-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Lamarck, 1812), < Limnæa + -ana.] A family of trachealipod mollusks, typified by the genus Limnæa, containing all the limnophilous gastropods, now differentiated into the families Limnæidae and Physidae.

Limnæidae (lim-nē-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limnæa + -idae.] A family of basommatophorous pulmonate gastropods, with diversiform tentacles, eyes at the inner or posterior bases of the tentacles, simple upper jaw as well as lateral ones, wide serriform marginal teeth of the radula, and generally a spiral shell; the pond-snails. They inhabit fresh waters, especially of temperate and northerly countries, and are of cosmopolitan distribution. More than 600 species are described, most of which belong to the genera Limnæa, Planorbis, and Anencylus. They are divided by the shape of the shell into Limnæinae, Planorbinae, and Anencylinae.

Limnæine (lim-nē-i-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Limnæa + -inae.] The typical subfamily of Limnæidae, including those pond-snails whose shell is a long spiral.

limnæine (lim'nē-in), a. [Limnæinae.] Of or relating to the Limnæinae.

Limnanthes (lim-nan'thē-s), n. pl. [NL. (R. Brown, 1833), < Limnanthes + -es.] A tribe of plants of the order Geraniaceae, characterized by regular flowers with valvate sepals, small glands alternating with the petals, and beakless carpels. It embraces the two genera Limnanthes and Flörkea, with four species, all natives of North America. The group was given ordinal rank by some of the earlier botanists.

Limnanthemum (lim-nan'thē-mum), n. [NL. (Gmelin, 1769), < Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + άνθεμον.] A genus of plants of the order Gentianaceae and tribe Meyantheae, distinguished by the indehiscent fruit and cordate leaves. There are about 35 species (perhaps reducible to 15), distributed throughout the temperate and tropical regions of the world. They are aquatic perennials, with floating leaves on very long petioles, and yellow flowers. One beautiful species, L. nymphaoides, is a native of Europe and Asia, and goes by the names of fringed bog-bean or beak-bean, fringed water-lily, water-fringe, and marsh-flower. (See bog-bean.) L. lucorum of the eastern United States is the common floating-bean.

Limnanthes (lim-nan'thēs), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1833), < Gr. λίμνη, a pool, lake, marsh, + άνθος, a flower.] A genus of plants of the order Geraniaceae, type of the tribe Limnantheae, and distinguished from Flörkea, the other genus of the tribe, by having five petals instead of three.

limnæe, n. See Limnæa.

limner (lim'nēr), n. [< ME. limnore, lymenour, luminour, short for enluminour, < OF. enluminour, < ML. illuminator, illuminator, limner: see illuminate and limn.] One who limns; an artist or delineator; more especially, one who paints portraits or miniatures. [Archaic or poetical.]

Johannes Dancastre, lymenour.

English Gilds (H. A. T. S.), p. 3.

Limnæa stagnalis, seen from below.

That family had lately got their pictures drawn by a limner, who travelled the country, and took likenesses for fifteen shillings a head.

Gouldsmith, Vicar, xvi.

Limnæta (lim-né'tis), n. [NL., < Gr. λυμνῆτις, fem. of λυμνῆτης, living in marshes, < λυμνῆ, a pool, lake, marsh.] One of the three leading genera of Limnæidae (or Estheridae), having a bivalve carapace, numerous body-segments, and the foliaceous appendages of typical phyllopoda. L. brachyura is an example. The males of these water-bees may be even more numerous than the females, contrary to the rule among related forms. See Limnæidae, and cut under Estheridae.

Limnæta brachyura: upper left-hand figure, male; upper right-hand figure, female—in both the left side of the carapace cut away; lower left-hand figure, larval form; lower right-hand figure, more further advanced. A, antennules; A', and A'', antennæ; c, head; c', body; D, carapace; M, mandibles; e', great plate covering mouth; e, eye.

Limning (lim'ning), n. [Verbal n. of limn, v.]

1. The act of delineating, as by means of pencil or brush.—2. That which is limned; a delineation, literally or figuratively. [Rare.]

There is nothing in either of the former two [panels with the portraits of the king and queen] which could not have been copied by a Fleming from a limning made in Scotland years before.

Athenæum, No. 2190, p. 221.

Limnite (lim'nit), n. [Limn (see) + -ite.] 1.

A fossil of the genus Limnæa or some similar shell. Also limnite.—2. Yellow ochre or brown iron ore, containing more water than limonite. It consists of oxid of iron 74.8 and water 25.2.

Limnobates (lim-nob'ā-tēz), n. [NL. (Burmeister, 1835), < Gr. λυμνῆ, a pool, lake, marsh, + βάτης, one that treads, < βαίνω, walk, step.]

The typical genus of Limnæatidae, containing such species as L. lineata of the United States.

Limnæatidae (lim-nō-bat'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Douglas and Scott, 1865), < Limnæates + -idae.]

A family of aquatic Heteroptera, represented by the genus Limnæates alone, whose species are commonly found in ponds in Europe and North America. These water-hugs have the head horizontal, as long as the thorax, with the antennæ inserted at the end of the widened front, the first joint stoutest and shortest, the third longest.

Limnochares (lim-nok'ā-rēz), n. [NL., < Gr. λυμνοχαρής, delighting in marshes (epithet of a frog), < λυμνῆ, a pool, lake, marsh, + χαίρειν, rejoice, delight (> χαίρειν, delight).] 1. A genus of water-mites or aquatic acarids of the family Hydrachnidae, or giving name to the Limnocharidae. Latreille, 1796.—2. A genus of heteropterous insects: same as Hydrometra.

Limnocharidae (lim-nō-kar'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limnochares + -idae.] A family of tracheate Acarina, with the skeleton composed of sclerites embedded in a soft skin, palpi raptorial, stigmata near the rostrum, legs of six or more joints, fitted for crawling organs, and habits of life wholly or partly aquatic.

Limnocharidæ (lim-nō-kok'li-dēz), n. pl. [NL. (Latreille, 1825), < Gr. λυμνῆ, a pool, lake, marsh, + κοχλῆς (κοχλῆδ), a small snail: see Cochleidae.]

A family of pulmoniferous gastropods, combining the Limnæacea and Auriculacea.

Limnocyon (lim-nōs'i-on), n. [NL., < Gr. λυμνῆ, a pool, lake, marsh, + κυνῶν, a dog.] A genus of fossil carnivorous mammals from the Eocene of America, belonging or related to the Hyanodontidae. O. C. Marsh, 1872.

Limnocythæ (lim-nō-hi'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limnocythæ + -idae.] A family of extinct Eocene hoofed quadrupeds of suilline character, founded by Marsh for the reception of the genus Limnocythæ.

Limnocythæ (lim-nō-hi'us), n. [NL., < G. λυμνῆ, a pool, lake, marsh, + κύς, a pig, hog (< L. sus = E. sow).] The typical genus of Limnocythæ.

O. C. Marsh, 1872.

Limnophaga (lim-nof'ā-jē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl. of limnophagus: see limnophagous.] See Cyprinodontidae limnophaga, under Cyprinodontidae.

Limnophagus (lim-nof'ā-gus), a. [Limnophagus, < Gr. λυμνῆ, a pool, lake, marsh, confused with L. limus, mud, + φάγειν, eat.] Mud-eating; specifically, of or pertaining to the Cyprinodontidae limnophaga.

Limnophila (lim-nof'i-lā), n. pl. [NL. (Hartmann, 1821), neut. pl. of limnophilus: see limnophilous.] A division of pulmoniferous gastropods, containing the fresh-water basommatophorous forms: same as Hygrophila.

Limnophilidae (lim-nō-fil'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limnophilus + -idae.] A family of trichopterous neuropterous insects, or caddis-flies, typified by the genus Limnophilus, having the maxillary palps of the male three-jointed, scarcely pubescent, and like those of the female. The habits of the larvæ vary; some live in rapid streams, others in standing water, and others in moss at the roots of trees. Their cases are always froe. The group is nearly confined to the temperate and boreal regions of the northern hemisphere.

Limnophilus (lim-nof'i-lus), a. [Limnophilus, < Gr. λυμνῆ, a pool, lake, marsh, + φίλος, loving.] Fond of ponds or pools, or living in them: said of various animals, especially mollusks and insects.

Limnophilus (lim-nof'i-lus), n. [NL.: see limnophilous.] 1. The typical genus of Limnophilidae, having the anterior wings mostly narrow, with straight costa and truncate apical margin. It is abundantly represented in Europe, North America, and Asia by species which extend far north and mostly inhabit still water. Given in this form by Burmeister, 1839, after Limnophilus of Leach, 1817. 2. A genus of reptiles. Fitzinger, 1843.

Limnoria (lim-nō-ri-ā), n. [NL. (Leach, 1815), < Gr. λυμνορία, in myth, a daughter of Nereus and Doris, < λυμνῆ, a pool, lake, marsh, sea.] The typical genus of Limnoriidae. L. lignorum or torebrans is the common gribble, a minute isopod highly injurious to submerged woodwork.

Limnoriidae (lim-nō-ri-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Limnoria + -idae.] A family of isopods represented by the genus Limnoria; the gribbles. By means of their trenchant mandibles they eat their way into submerged wood, and are numerous enough in many waters to do great damage to wharves and shipping on both coasts of America and on European coasts.

Limnospiza (lim-nō-spi-zē), n. [Limnospiza, < Gr. λυμνῆ, a pool, lake, marsh, + σπίζα, a finch.] A genus of fringilline birds: same as Embernagra.

Limnodoreæ (lim-nō-dō-rē-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1833), < Limnoderum + -eæ.] A subtribe of orchidaceous plants of the tribe Neottieæ, with simple erect stems, usually leafy, and rhizomes without tubers. It embraces 5 genera, Limnoderum being the type, all terrestrial (not epiphytic) herbs, growing outside the tropics in both hemispheres.

Limnoderum (lim-nō-dō-rum), n. [NL. (Richard, 1818), < L. limnoderon, < Gr. λυμνόδωρον, λυμνός, a wild plant, not identified.] A genus of orchidaceous plants of the tribe Neottieæ, type of the subtribe Limnoderæ. There is but one species, L. abrotinum, which is found in the Mediterranean region and in central Europe. It grows to the height of 1 or 2 feet, and has a purplish stem and rather large purple flowers in a simple loose spike. It is believed to be partially parasitic on the roots of shrubs. It is sometimes cultivated.

Limoges enamel. See enamel.

Limont, n. An obsolete form of lemon.

Limonia (li-mō-ni-ā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), < F. limon, < Pers. limūn, the lemon, citron: see lemon.] A genus of spiny shrubs from tropical Asia, belonging to the order Rutaceæ, tribe Aurantioæ. They are distinguished by having flowers with a 4- or 5-lobed calyx and from 8 to 10 stamens. The leaves are compound, with from 8 to 10 leaflets. The Javanese employ the extremely acid pulp of the fruits of L. cordata as a substitute for soap, and on the coast of Malabar they are used medicinally. This species is sometimes called the musk-deer plant. L. carnosus yields the kalamfrut of Bengal, and L. monophylla is known as Indian wild lime.

limonin (li-mō-nin), n. [limonin (F. limon), lemon, + -in.] A bitter crystallizable matter (C₂₂H₅₀O₁₃) found in the seeds of oranges, lemons, etc.

limonite (li-mō-nit), n. [= F. limonite; as Gr. λυμνῆ, a marshy meadow, a meadow, + -ίτης.] An important iron ore which is found earthy, concretionary, or mammillary and fibrous. Its brownish-yellow streak distinguishes it from hematite. It forms the bog-iron of existing marshes. Its color varies from dark brown to ochre-yellow. It consists of sesquioxide of iron 85.6 and water 14.4. Also called brown hematite and brown iron ore.

limonitic (li-mō-nit'ik), a. [limonite + -ic.] Consisting of limonite, or resembling it in appearance.

Limosa (li-mō-sā), n. [NL., < L. limosa, fem. of limosus, muddy: see limous.] A genus of wading birds of the family Scolopacidae, having the bill a little recurved; the godwits. They are among the largest of the family, and resemble curlews, but the bill is not decurved. L. lapponica is the common black-tailed godwit; L. kamoharui is the Hudsonian godwit; L. fedoa is the great marbled godwit. There are other species. See godwit.

Bar-tailed Godwit (Limosa lapponica).

limose (li-mōs), a. [L. limosus, muddy: see limous.] Same as limous.

Limosella (li-mō-sel'ā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1737), so called from their place of growth, < L. limus, mud.] A genus of small creeping or floating herbs of the order Scrophularineæ and tribe Gratiolææ, characterized by having the leaves in clusters, the calyx 5-toothed, and the 4 stamens with the anthers confluent 1-celled. There are 5 or 6 species, found throughout the warm and temperate regions of the earth. L. aquatica is known as mudwort or mudweed. The American plant is the variety emutifolia, found in tidal mud northward on the Atlantic coast.

Limosina (li-mō-si-nā), n. [NL. (Macquart, 1835), < L. limosus, muddy (see limosus, limous), + -ina.] A genus of Musoidæ. Also called Coprina.

Limosineæ (li-mō-si-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Limosa + -ineæ.] A subfamily of birds of the family Scolopacidae; the godwits. G. R. Gray.

limosis (li-mō-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. λυμῶς, hunger, + -osis.] In med., a depraved or morbidly ravenous appetite caused by disease.

Limosus (li-mō-sū-jē), n. pl. [NL., < L. limus, mud, + -osus, suck.] In Merrem's classification of birds, a group of his Rusticolæ, including such birds as curlews, snipes, sandpipers, and plovers, and thus nearly coextensive with the Limicolæ of authors.

limous (li-mus), a. [ME. limous, < OF. limoux = Sp. Pg. It. limoso, < L. limosus, muddy, slimy, < limus, mud, slime: see lime.] Muddy; slimy; thick.

If water ther be limous or infecte

Admixture of salt will it correcte.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. 8.), p. 176.

That country . . . became a gained ground by the mud and limous matter brought down by the river Nilus.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., vi. 1.

limp (limp), a. [Not found in ME.; appar. < AS. lomp, in comp. lomphealt, lomphealt, earliest form lomphealt, glossing ML. lurdus (see lourd), appar. 'awkward', but lit. 'lame', < lomp + healt, halt, lame; cf. Icel. lompinn, or lompiligr, pliable, gentle. The adj. is prob. connected with the verb limp, q. v. Cf. limber.] 1. Lacking stiffness or firmness; weak in fiber or texture; flexible; limber; flaccid: applied to things or persons.

The chub eats waterish, and the flesh of him is not firm, limp and tasteless.

I. Walton, Complete Angler.

limp (limp), n. A desponding spirit.

T. Widdrop, Cecil Dreeme, iv.

Her verses on the bombardment of Copenhagen were . . . as limp and incoherent as Shelley's own of the same date.

E. Dowden, Shelley, i. 103.

2. Lacking stability or firmness of character; inefficient; incapable.

A kind Providence furnishes the limp personality with a little gum or starch in the form of tradition.

George Eliot, Middlemarch, i. 25.

limp case. See case.

limp¹, v. t. [limp¹, a.] To be inadequate or unsatisfactory. Stanhurst.

limp² (limp), v. t. [Not found in ME. or AS.; = LG. limpen = MHG. limphen, limp; cf. G. dial. limpen, hang down loosely, > lampecht, flaccid, limp; cf. mod. Icel. limpa, limpness, weakness; W. leipp, flabby, limbin, limber, limpa, limp; perhaps ult. connected (as a nasalized form) with lap, Skt. √ lamb, hang down. Prob. connected with the adj. limp¹, q. v.; but the relations of these and the other forms are not clear, the records being too scanty to determine.] To move with a halting or jerky step; walk lame: often used figuratively; as, a limping argument; limping verses.

Pluck the lined crutch from thy old limping sire.

Shak., T. of A., IV. 1. 14.

The commentator will lend a crutch to the weak poet, to help him to limp a little further than he could on his own feet.

Pope, To Warburton, Sept. 20, 1741.

The unfortunate divine, whom we left limping with a sprained ankle into the breakfast-room of the inn.

Pescoc, Headlong Hall, II.

limp (limp), n. [< limp², v.] A halting step; the act of limping.

limp (limp), v. [ME. limpen (pret. limp, also weak limpede, pp. limpen), < AS. limpan (pret. limp, limp, pp. limpen; also in comp. gelimpan, belimpan), happen, befall, pertain, = OHG. limphan, limpfan, MHG. limfen, become, suit.] I. intrans. To happen; befall; chance.

"A! lord!" quoth Joseph, "how may this limpe?"

Joseph of Arimathea (E. E. T. S.), I. 212.

II. trans. To come upon; meet.

The fyfte was Joses, that joly mane of armes,
That in Jerusalem ofte fulle myche joye limpede.

Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), I. 2416.

limp (limp), n. [Prob. < limp¹, a.] A scraper of board or sheet-iron shaped like half the head of a small cask, used for scraping the ore off the sieve in the operation of hand-jigging.

limpard, n. [< limp² + -ard.] A cripple.

What could that gouty limpard have done with so fine a dog?

Urquhart, tr. of Babelais, I. 89. (Davies.)

limper (lim'pér), n. One who limps; a lame person.

limpet (lim'pet), n. [< ME. lempet, a limpet, appar. orig. a lamprey, < AS. lempeda, another form of lamprede, a lamprey; see lamprey. It can hardly be connected with L. L. lepas (lepad-), < Gr. λέπας (lepad-), a limpet; see Lepas. Cf. limpín.] 1. A marine docoglossate gastropod with an open conical shell imperforate at the apex. The species mostly belong to the families Patelidae and Acanthidae; the best-known is Patella vulgata, the common limpet of northern Europe. This inhabits rocky coasts, and selects a site on intertidal rocks, which it uses as a resting-place and wears down into a cavity, making short excursions in search of food, which consists chiefly of algae. Limpets are noted for sticking closely to rocks by means of their adhesive foot, which acts as a sucker, bringing considerable atmospheric pressure to bear upon their shells, which latter, moreover, fit tightly in consequence of the evenly rounded aperture. Large numbers are collected for fish-bait, and they are also used as food by the poor. See bonnet-limpet, keyhole-limpet, slipper-limpet.

He stuck like a limpet to a rock.

Scott, St. Ronan's Well, xxxi.

And on thy ribs the limpet sticks.

And in thy heart the scrawl shall play.

Tennyson, The Sailor Boy.

2. Some mollusk resembling the foregoing, at least in shape of the shell.—Cup-and-saucer limpet. See cup-and-saucer.—Duck-bill limpet, a limpet of the family Patelidae and genus Parmophorus, having an imperforate shell covered by the mantle.—False limpet, one of the Acanthidae.—Foolscap-limpet, a shell of the genus Pileopsis (which see).—Fresh-water limpet, a species of Anodonta.

limpid (lim'pid), a. [< F. limpide = Sp. limpido = Pg. It. limpido, < L. limpidus, clear, bright; cf. Gr. λάμπειν, shine, λαμπρός, bright; see lamp. Cf. also limp.] Characterised by clearness or transparency; translucent; crystal-clear; lucid; as, a limpid stream; a limpid style.

Filter this solution through cap-paper, to have it clear and limpid.

Boyle, Works, I. 703.

And witness be what splendid Princess are

The stars which move about this limpid sphere.

J. Beaumont, Psycho, II. 301.

A beautiful limpid lake, which is fed by a rivulet flowing down from unseen sources in the rock.

D. G. Mitchell, Bound Together.

Turn those limpid eyes on mine,

And let me read there, love, thy inmost soul!

M. Arnold, The Buried Life.

limpidity (lim'pid-i-ti), n. [< F. limpidité = It. limpidità, < L. limpiditas (-tas), clearness, < L. limpidus, clear, limpid; see limpid.] Limpidness.

limpidly (lim'pid-li), adv. In a limpid manner; transparently; clearly; lucidly.

Goethe himself limpidly perfect as are many of his shorter poems, often falls in giving artistic coherence to his longer works.

Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 236.

limpidness (lin'pid-nes), n. The state of being limpid; clearness; transparency; lucidity.

limpin, n. [Cf. limpet.] A limpet. Nares.

Tellus, mytilus. tellus, mytilos. Athenæo. A limpin.

Nomenclator.

limpingly (lim'ping-li), adv. In a limping or halting manner; lamely.

limpitude (lim'pi-tūd), n. [< L. limpitudo, clearness, < limpidus, clear, limpid; see limpid.] The quality of being limpid; limpidness. Boyle, 1727.

limpkin (limp'kin), n. A local (Florida) name of the crying-bird or courlan, Aramus giganticus.

See courlan, Aramus.

limply (limp'li), adv. In a limp manner.

limpness (limp'nes), n. The quality of being limp or flaccid; weak pliancy.

There are several replicas of rough sketches, which were probably made by Webb, as they show a limpness of method quite unlike the slashing draughtsmanship of Inigo.

Portico, No. 224, p. 112.

The moral laxity and limpness which may be remarked in the lower classes in Russia.

D. M. Wallace, Russia, p. 545.

limpsy (limp'si), a. [< limp¹ + -sy, equiv. to -y.] Limp; flaccid. [Colloq., New Eng.]

Some thin' or other 's ben a usin' on her up, for she was all wore out, and looked sort o' limpsy, as if there wa'n't no starch left in her.

H. E. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 584.

Limulidae (li-mū'li-dē), n. pl. [NL. < Limulus + -idae.] The limulus family; a family of giant-tostracous or paleocaridan crustaceans of the order Paeleopoda, Merostomata, or Xiphosura (or Xiphura), exemplified by the genus Limulus.

limulid (lim'ū-lit), n. [< Limulus + -idē.] A fossil limulid or some similar organism.

limuloid (lim'ū-lōid), a. and n. [< Limulus + -oid.] 1. a. Pertaining to or having the characters of Limulus; related to or resembling a limulus; paeleopodous; merostomatous; xiphurous.

In the Coal-measures no fewer than three genera and eight species of small Limuloid Crustaceans have been met with.

Encyc. Brit., VI. 682.

II. n. A limuloid crustacean; a paeleopod, merostome, or xiphure.

Limulus (lim'ū-lus), n. [NL. < L. limulus, somewhat askance, dim. of limus, askance.] 1. The representative genus of Limulidae. L. polyphemus is the common horseshoe, or king-crab of the Atlantic coast of North America; L. moluccensis is found on the Pacific coast of Asia. Limulus is the only living form of the order to which it belongs.

2. [l. c.] Any crustacean of the genus Limulus.

limy (li'mi), a. [< limci + -y.] 1. Smeared with lime; viscous; glutinous.

Striving more, the more in laces strong Himself he tide, and wrapt his wings twaine
In limy snares the subtil loupes among.

Spenser, Mulpolmos, I. 423.

2. Containing lime; as, a limy soil.—3. Resembling lime; having the qualities of lime.

lin (lin), v. [Sc. also leen; < ME. linnen, < AS. linnan (pret. lann, pp. lunnon) (= leel, linna), also in comp. belinnan, blinnan (> ME. blinnen, E. blin, q. v.), cease.] I. intrans. To cease; stop; rest.

Set a beggar on horseback, he'll never lin till he be a-gallop.

B. Jonson, Staple of News, IV. 1.

So they shall never lin.

But where one ends another still begin.

W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, II. 1.

II. trans. To cease from.

Their tongues will never lin wagging, master.

Middleton (and others), The Widow, v. 1.

Yea, they and their Seminaries shame not to profess, to petition, and never lin pealing our ears.

Milton, Church-Government, II, Con.

lin (lin), n. [Also lyn, lynn; early mod. E. lino; < ME. lynn; prob. (a) in def. 1 < AS. linnan (pret. lann, pp. lunnon) (= leel, linna), also in comp. belinnan, blinnan (> ME. blinnen, E. blin, q. v.), cease.] I. intrans. To cease; stop; rest.

2. A pool; particularly, a pool below a fall of water.

I saw a river rin
Outcure a steepie rock of stone,
Syne lychtit in a lin.

Cherrie and Sae, st. 6.

The nearest to her (Toxy) of kin
Is Toothy, tripping down from Verwin's rusty kin.

Drayton, Polyolbion, v. 118.

The shallowest water makes maist din,
The deepest pool the deepest kin.

Fair Helen (Child's Ballads, II. 207).

3. The face of a precipice; a shrubby ravine.

He took her in his arms twa,
And threw her o'er the kin.

Young Benke (Child's Ballads, II. 301).

Duncan aigh' halth out an' in, . . .

Spak' o' lowpin' owre a lin.

Burns, Duncan Gray.

[Now rare or local in all uses.]

lin (lin), n. A Middle English form of line.

lina (lin'ng), n. [NL. (Megerle, 1823), < Gr. λινον, flax; see line.] A genus of leaf-beetles or chrysomelids, with short antennae, tibiae externally grooved, and pronotum laterally projected. It is represented in all parts of the world; about 30 species are known, of which 8 inhabit the United States, as L. scripta, the cottonwood leaf-beetle, which often does great damage by defoliating the groves of Populus monilifera in the Western States, and also feeds in the larval state on willow.

Linaceae (li-nā'sē-s), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1835), < Linum + -aceae.] A synonym of Linea, still much used.

linaceous (li-nā'sh-us), a. Of or pertaining to the natural order Linaceae.

linaget, n. An obsolete form of lineage.

linaloe (lin'-g-lō'), n. [Also linaloe; a Mex. name.] A fragrant Mexican wood obtained from species of Bursera, used to a limited extent in making furniture, and yielding a substance employed in perfumery.

linament (lin'-g-ment), n. [< L. linamentum, linen stuff, < linum, flax; see line.] In surg., lint; a tent for a wound.

Linaria (li-nā'ri-ſ), n. [NL. (A. L. de Jussieu, 1780), < L. linum, flax, + -aria.] 1. A genus of herbs, rarely shrubs, of the order Scrophularinaceae and tribe Antirrhineae, characterized by a spurred corolla with a prominent palate, and stamens in which the anther-cells are distinct; toad-flax. There are 180 species, found in the warm and temperate regions of the northern hemisphere and of South America. See conceit, Knautwort toy.

2. In ornith.: (a) A genus of linnets, including L. cannabina, the common linnet of Europe, and sundry related species, as the twite, the redpolls, etc. Brissson, 1760. Also called Linota, Agriothus, and by other names. See out under linnet. (b) [l. c.] A bird of this genus.

(c) [l. c.] The Linnean specific name of the mealy redpoll, Fringilla linaria (Agriothus canescens), of northern Europe; more frequently applied of late years to the common redpoll of Europe and America, Linota rufescens, now usually called Agriothus linaria or Acanthis linaria. See out under redpoll.—3. A genus of worms.

linarite (lin'-g-rit), n. [< Linares, a town in Spain, + -ite.] A hydrated sulphate of lead and copper, occurring in deep azure-blue monoclinic crystals.

linativer, n. A corrupt form of linette.

lince (lin), n. [Var. of linch.] A bank of sod between terraces formed on a hillside by the ancient mode of plowing strips and leaving banks of sod between them; also, the strip or terrace of arable soil between two such banks. [Prov. Eng.] lincelst, n. pl. [Also lincels, and lincs; origin obscure; prob. OF.] Tares in corn. Hallwell.

linceus, n. See Lyncus.

linch (linch), n. [< ME. lynch, lynch, < AS. linc, a ridge of land, a balk. Hence the surname linch, lynch.] 1. A ridge or balk of land; any bank or boundary for the division of land.—2. A ledge; a right-angled projection.—3. A narrow and steep bank or footpath.—4. A small inland cliff, generally one that is wooded.—5. A hamlet. [Prov. Eng. in all uses.] (Hallwell).

linch (linch), v. [Origin obscure; cf. linch.] I. intrans. To prance about in a lively manner.

Cheval coquilleux, a linching horse.

Holbynd, Dictionarie (1606). (Hallwell.)

II. trans. To beat or chastise. Urry's MS. additions to Ray. (Hallwell.) [Prov. Eng.]

linchet (lin'chet), n. [Also lynchet; < linch + -et.] A ridge or terrace seen on the slopes of the Chalk, Oolitic, and Liasic escarpments in various parts of England, especially in Bedfordshire, Hertfordshire, Wiltshire, and Somerset. The origin of the linchets has never been made entirely clear. It is probable that most of them are artificial constructions, and that they were made for convenience in cultivating the hill-slopes on which they occur. Also called linch. Used chiefly in the plural. [Local Eng.]

Many terraces are still cultivated, but every farmer I have met with has assured me that there is now, and has been from time immemorial, a general desire to plough down the linchets (as they are locally called), and that formerly their number was much greater than at present.

Westwood, Scenery of England and Wales, p. 66.

linch-hoop (linch'hōp), n. [< linc(-pin) + hoop¹.] A ring on the spindle of a carriage-axle, held in place by the linch-pin.

linch-pin (linch'pin), n. [Also (simulating link¹) dial. linkpin (early mod. E. also linpin, linpinne, linpyn), with loss of the appar. pl. suffix -s; prop., as formerly, linpin, lit. 'axle-pin'; < linc² (obs.), axle, + pin¹: see lince and pin¹.] A pin inserted in the spindle of the axle of a vehicle to prevent the wheel from slipping off. Also axle-pin.

But if the rogue have gone a cup too far,
Left out his linchpin, or forgot his tar,
It is carriage! suffers interruption.

Cowper, Progress of Error, l. 441.

Linckia (ling'ki-ē), n. [NL., named after the German naturalist J. H. Linck (1674-1734).] The typical genus of Linckidae. Nardo, 1834.

Linckidae (ling'ki-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Linckia + -idae.] A family of starfishes, of the order Astroidea, whose skeleton is composed of rounded or elliptical ossicles, either contiguous or united by rods. There are no spines, the body being smooth or only granular. L. guilfordi inhabits Florida and the West Indies; L. unguiculata ranges from California to Peru. Also Linckidae.

Lincoln green. See green¹.

Lincoln's finch. See finch¹.

Lincolshire cheese. See cheese¹.

Lincture (lingk'tūr), n. [< ML. "linctura, < L. lincere, pp. linctus, lick; cf. Gr. λεινω, lick: see lick¹.] A medicine to be taken by licking or sucking; a substance of the consistence of honey, used for coughs, etc.

Confections, treacle, mithridate, colicmes, or linctures, etc.
Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 871.

linctus (lingk'tus), n. [NL., linctus, a licking, < L. lincere, pp. linctus, lick: see lincture.] Same as lincture.

lind¹ (lind; formerly and prob. still dial. also lind), n. [< ME. lind, lunde, lynde, < AS. lind, also lunde = D. lunde = MLG. lunde = OHG. linta, MHG. G. lunde = Icel. Sw. Dan. lind, lind, linden (in AS. also a shield, as made of lind); prob. connected with lind², lithe. G. dial. lind, bast, Icel. lindt, girdle (orig. of bast), are derived from the name of the tree. Cf. linden. Hence by corruption linc², linc².] Same as linden, 1. [Obsolete or local.]

Be ay of chiere as light as leef on lynde.

Chaucer, Clark's Tale, l'Envoy, l. 34.

Was neuer lef vp-on lynde lyghter therafter.

Piers Plowman (C), ll. 152.

lind², a. [ME. lynd; a var. (due perhaps to the cognate Icel. lind or Dan. lind) of lithe, soft, gentle: see lithe¹.] Soft; gentle.

Be not proud, but make & lynd.

And with thi better go thou be-lynd.

Babes Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 21.

lind-coal, n. [ME. lynde-cole.] Charcoal made of the wood of the linden-tree; a, "half an unce of lynde-cole," MS. Soc. Antiq. 101, f. 76. (Hallwell.)

linden (lin'den), a. and n. [Formerly also lynden; < ME. linden, < AS. linden (= G. linden), of the lind, < lind, lind, + -en: see lind¹ and -en².] As a noun the word is modern, being, like aspen, orig. only adj. I, a. Of the linden.

II. n. 1. A tree of the genus Tilia; the lime-tree. The common European linden is T. Europaea. An oil, used by perfumers, is distilled from its flowers. The American linden is T. Americana, and is also called basewood, bee-tree, etc.

The linden broke her ranks and rent

The woodbine wreaths that bind her,

And down the middle, busk: she went

With all her bees behind her.

Tennyson, Amphion.

2. A shield made of linden-wood; any shield: a modern use, translating the Anglo-Saxon lind, used poetically for a shield. See shield.

The shields placed in the graves were the ordinary lindens, of which no part commonly remains but the metal-horn handle.
Heath, Ancient Armor, l. 78.

Silver-leaved linden, Tilia argentea, of Hungary.

linden-tree (lin'den-trē), n. Same as lind¹, linden.

Lindera (lin'dér-ē), n. [NL. (C. P. Thunberg, 1744), named after John Lindér, a Swedish botanist of the early part of the 18th century.] A genus of lauraceous trees or shrubs of the tribe Litseaeeae, having dioecious flowers surrounded by involucre, and often nine stamens having two-celled anthers. There are about 60 species, found in North America and in tropical and eastern Asia as far as Japan. L. benzoin of North America, called rose-bush, wild allspice, and benjamin-bush, has a pleasant aromatic scent and taste, especially its bark and berries.

lindo (lin'dō), n. [NL., < Sp. Pg. l. lundo, fine, beautiful, pretty.] One of the brilliantly colored thick-billed tanagers of South America; a bullfinch tanager of the genus Euphonia.

lind-tree, n. [ME. lindo-tree, lyn-tree; < lind¹ + tree.] Same as lind¹, linden-tree. Turner, Herbal.

line¹ (lin), n. [< ME. line, lin, lyn, < AS. lin, flax, linen, = OS. OFries. lin = D. lijn = MLG. lin = OHG. MHG. lin, G. lein = Icel. lin = Sw. Dan. lin, flax, = Goth. lein, linen (not recorded in sense of 'flax'); cf. OF. F. lin = Sp. It. lino = Pg. linho, < L. linum = Gr. λινον = O.Bulg. linu = Lith. linai = Ir. lin, lion = W. lin = Bret. lin, flax (in L., LGr., etc., also linen, a linen garment, a thread, line, cord, rope, etc.); not found in Skt., etc. It is probable but not certain that the Teut., Slav., etc., forms are derived from the L. or Gr. Hence (from AS. lin) linon, liut², lincsed, lincnet², etc., and ult. (from L. linum) E. linc², linc², etc.] 1. Flax. [In the general sense obsolete or provincial.]

He dronk never eldre ne wyn,

Ne never wored clooth of lyn.

Curior Mundit. (Hallwell.)

Specifically, in technical use—(a) Flax of the longer and fine staple, separated from the shorter by the hankle and prepared for spinning. (b) A hat-makers' pad or brush, now usually of padded velvet, for smoothing the nap of hats.

2t. Cloth of flax; linen.

Throughout all parts of Fraunce they weane line and make sales thereof.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xix. 1.

Nor anie weaver, which his worke doth boast,

In dieper, in damaske, or in lyne.

Spenser, Mulopotmos, l. 364.

Little he was, and ever wore a breastplate made of linne.

Chapman, Iliad, ll. 458.

3t. Linen apparel; apparel generally.
line² (lin), n. [(a) < ME. line, lyne, a cord, a net, a snare, < AS. line = D. lijn = OHG. lina, MHG. linc, G. leine = Icel. lina = Dan. line = Sw. lina, a cord, rope; mixed with (b) ME. linc, lyne, ligne, < OF. ligne, F. ligne = Pr. ligna = Sp. linea = Pg. linha = It. linea = D. MHG. G. Sw. Dan. linie, a line (mark), < L. linea, also linia, a linen thread, a string, line, feature, outline, line of descent, etc., orig. fem. of lineus (= Gr. λινεος, λινωτός), of flax, linen, < linum, flax, linen: see line¹. It is uncertain whether the words of the first group (a) are Teut. derivatives of the Teut. form line¹, or are borrowed or adapted from L. linum, flax, linen, a linen thread, cord, rope, or, less prob., like the words of the second group (b), from the deriv. linaa. The two groups are entirely confused in E.: see line¹.] 1. A thread, string, cord, or small rope of any kind, especially one designed for some particular use, as a fishing-line, measuring-line, clothes-line, a bowline, a hauling-line, etc.

Sowe hem [hula] by a lyne other a threed.

Psalmist, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 85.

Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? Job xxxvii. 5.

The lines were out upon the poles—they were painted green and were square—and on the lines hung half the family linen.
W. Deane, Fifty Years Ago, p. 86.

Specifically—(a) A cord used as a guide or marker in stone-work or carpentry; a chalk-line or marking-line. (b) pl. A lot or portion marked off by or as by a measuring-line; hence, fortune; condition.

The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places.

Ps. xvi. 6.

The old seaman paused a moment. "It is hard lines for me," he said, "to leave your honour in tribulation."

Scott, Redgauntlet, ch. iii.

(c) pl. The reins or thongs by which one guides a horse in driving. [U. S.]

2. Anything which resembles a thread or string in tenuity and extension.

Yon gray lines

That fret the clouds are messengers of day.

Shak., J. C., ll. 1. 108.

Specifically—(a) A thread-like mark, as one made with a pen, pencil, or graving-tool; a mark having length with little appreciable breadth; a stroke; a score. (b) In musical notation: (1) One of the horizontal strokes or marks that constitute the staff. The usual staff consists of five such lines, that for Gregorian music of four, while larger numbers of lines have also been used. The lines are numbered from below upward. The lines and the spaces between them are collectively called degrees. The pitches to which the several degrees are assigned depend upon the clef and the signature placed at the head of the staff. When it is necessary temporarily to increase the compass of the staff above or below, added or larger lines are used, which are numbered up or down from the staff proper. See notation, staff, and ledger. (2) A short dash or stroke used in figured bass to indicate that a tone of a previous chord is to be continued without regard to its harmonic connection into a second chord. See figured bass, under bass. (3) A wavy horizontal mark preceded by the letters sc, added above or below a passage to indicate that it is to be played on an octave above or below the pitch at which it is written. The end of such a transposition is indicated by the word loco, 'in place', or simply by the termination of the line. (4) A wavy vertical mark to the left of the notes of a chord, to indicate that the chord is to be played arpeggio. (5) A seam or furrow on the face or hands. Such seams in the hands are the basis of palmistry. See phrases below.

And do what'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time, . . .
O, carve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
Nor draw no lines there with thine antique pen.

Shak., Sonnets, xix.

3. In math.: (a) The limit of a surface; a length without breadth. These definitions, cited as well known by Aristotle, may be more precisely expressed thus: a part or the whole of the intersection of two surfaces; a continuum of points extended in only one dimension at each point. (b) In higher geom., a right line, ray, or axis; a curve of the first order. This use of the word is inaccurate but common, and can give rise to no inconvenience, since a line in sense (a) is usually called a curve in higher geometry, except a broken line, which is not considered.

4. Outline; contour; lineament; configuration: as, a ship of fine lines.

The lines of my body are as well drawn as his.

Shak., Cymbeline, iv. 1. 10.

5. A limit; division; boundary.

The Hellenes always drew a sharp line between themselves and the barbarians, a term by which they designated all non-Hellenic people.

W. E. Hearn, Aryan Household, p. 202.

6. A row; a continued series or rank: as, a line of trees or of buildings.

We past long lines of northern capes.

Tennyson, The Voyage.

(a) A straight row of letters and words between two margins: as, a page of thirty lines.

And yet I would I had o'erlooked the letter. . .

Lo, here in one line is his name twice writ.

Shak., T. G. of V., l. 2. 123.

(b) In poetry, a succession of feet (colon or period), consisting of words written or printed in one row; a verse. A line or verse is no definite prosodic group of feet, but may consist of a single colon or of two colons, the ordinary width of a page or column generally limiting its length. Short verses or cola are sometimes printed as single lines, or combined in pairs to constitute one line. The name line is sometimes extended to verses slightly exceeding the printed line in length, but marked by indentation and want of initial capital as one verse. In ancient prosody a line (versus, versiculus) was conventionally determined to be a dactylic meter or period, or a monocolic period of eighteen or more more in magnitude. A shorter period was called a colon or a comma. Abbreviated I.

Waller was smooth; but Dryden taught to join

The varying verse, the full resounding line.

Pope, Imit. of Horace, ll. 1. 208.

Hence—(c) pl. Any piece of writing, as a letter, or an actor's part in the dialogue of a play; specifically, a short or occasional poem, or poetry in general.

Compt thou with deep premeditated lines,

With written pamphlets studiously devised?

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ill. 1. 2.

(d) A short letter—one as it were consisting of only a line of writing; a note: as, I received a line from my friend.

(e) pl. Same as marriage lines. [Colloq.]

"How should a child like you know that the marriage was irregular?" "Because I had no lines!" cries Caroline. . . . "And our maid we had then said to me, 'Miss Carry, where's your lines?' And it's no good without." And I knew it wasn't."

Thackeray, Philip, xli.

(f) A row or rank of soldiers drawn up with an extended front; distinguished from column. (g) A disposition of ships at regular intervals, either at anchor or under way. See line of battle. (h) pl. A punishment in English schools, consisting in requiring the student to commit a certain number of lines of Latin or Greek verse to memory.

7. A continuous or connected series, as of progeny or kin, descending from a common progenitor: as, a line of kings; the male line.

He

From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,

Being but fourth of that heroic line.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., ll. 5. 78.

8. A series of public conveyances, as coaches, steamers, packets, and the like, passing to and fro between places with regularity: as, a line of ships to New Zealand; the Cunard line.—9. A railroad, or a continuous part of a railroad: as, a main line, branch line, through line.—10. A telegraph-wire between stations, forming with them the circuit.—11. In com.: (a) An order given to an agent or commercial traveler for goods. (b) The goods received upon such order. (c) The stock on hand of any particular class of goods.—12. In her., the division or demarcation between a bearing and the field, or between one bearing and another when one is charged upon the other. The ordinaries and subordinaries are the bearings whose lines are most commonly varied. See dancelled, dovetailed, embattled, engraved, indented, invected, nebula, regular, and undi or wavy.

13. In fort.: (a) A trench or rampart. (b) pl. A series of field-works, either continuous or with intervals. Wilhelm, Mil. Dict.—14. Milit., in the British army, the regular infantry, as distinguished from cavalry, artillery, militia, volunteer corps, etc. (In some cases, however, including the ordinary regiments of cavalry); in the United States army, the infantry, cavalry, and artillery of the regular army. The combatant officers in the navy are called officers of the line, as distin-ished from the non-combatants, or officers of the staff. Thus, the line officers are admirals, commodores, captains, commanders, lieutenant-commanders, lieutenants, lieutenants (junior grade), ensigns, and midshipmen. Mates, boatswains, and gunners are also line officers, but not in the line of promotion.

It is now generally conceded that the law contemplates that the fighting portion of the army, as cavalry, artillery, infantry, and engineers, . . . constitutes the line of the army. Williams, Mil. Dict.

15. The course in which anything proceeds or which any one takes; direction given or assumed; as, a line of policy or of argument; to mark out a line of travel or of conduct; to pursue a certain line of business or of art.

If I chance to make an excursion into the matters of the Commonwealth, it is not out of curiosity, or busy-bodiness to be meddling in other men's lines. Fuller, Church Hist., II. ix. 22.

He is uncommonly powerful in his own line, but it is not the line of a first-rate man. Coleridge.

I am now sending back to Belle Plaine all my wagons for a fresh supply of provisions and ammunition, and propose to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer. U. S. Grant, To Gen. Halleck, May 11, 1864.

16. A unit of length, the twelfth of an inch, or sometimes the tenth of an inch. As a subdivision of an English inch it was never common and is now obsolete. The Paris line, a unit formerly much used throughout Europe, is the twelfth part of a French inch, equal to 0.0889 of an English inch, or 2.366 millimeters.

17. The equinoctial line; the equator.

Twenty of the dog-days now reign in n's nose; all that stand about him are under the line. Shak., Hen. VIII., v. 4. 44.

Abdominal line. See abdominal.—Absorption-lines. See absorption.—Aortic, adiabatic, agonic, Alomanian, atmospheric, basal, alveolar, basic, etc. line. See the adjectives.—Asymptotic line, a curve upon a surface the envelop of normal sections, having infinite radii of curvature. Not to be confounded with asymptotical lines.—Basiohthalmic line, the line joining the basion and bregma.—Becket-line, a short piece of rope used to form a becket or bight on a longer or larger line, such, for example, as is used in rigging a trawl.—Breeding in the line. See breeding.—Broken, bulkhead, cardiac line. See the qualifying words.—Casting-line, a line, from 7 to 9 feet long, made of several gut-lengths, attached to the rod-line in angling, and having the drops fastened to it.—Check-line, a line attached to a fishing-line fastened to an outrigger, by which the fishing-line is drawn in to the boat without disturbing the outrigger.—Circular, coinciding, contingent, etc. line. See the adjectives.—Curved line, a line whose direction continuously changes along its length.—Curved line of the lumen, inferior, middle, and superior, the lines on the dorsum lili, marking off the origins of the glut muscles. Also called linesa glutina.—Curved lines of the occipital bone, the curved lines on the outer surface of the occipital bone; a superior, median, and inferior are distinguished. Also called linesa nucha.—Cutting-down line. See cutting.—Cyclifying, dimidiating, etc. line. See the adjectives.—Datum-line. See datum.—Directed right line, dislocated line, dotted line. See direct, dislocate, dot.—Double line. See membrane.—Double line, in entom. a line formed of two generally unequal lines which are close together and parallel.—Equinoctial line, the celestial equator; also, the terrestrial equator; in the latter sense commonly called the line.—Equipotential, focal, full line. See the adjectives.—Facial line of Camper. See craniometry.—Fiendish line. (a) The straight edge of the alidade of a plane-table. (b) The initial line of a graduated circle or vernier. (c) Any line which is intended to be taken as a standard straight line.—Fraunhofer's lines. See spectrum.—Frontal minimum line, the shortest horizontal line drawn between the temporal crests of the frontal bone.—Generating line. See generate.—Geodesic, gingival, etc. line. See the adjectives.—Geodesic line, a curve upon a surface any arc of which between points not too remote is the shortest path on that surface between those points. The osculating plane of a geodesic line at any point is there normal to the surface.—Geometrical line, an algebraic curve.—Gunter's line. (a) A logarithmic line on Gunter's scale, used in performing the multiplication and division of numbers mechanically by means of dividers. Also called line of lines and line of numbers. (b) A sliding scale corresponding to logarithms, for performing these operations by inspection without dividers. Also called Gunter's sliding rule.—Hard lines. See def. 1. (b).—Hemispherical line. Same as isochronous line.—Horizontal line. See horizontal.—Hour-lines, in dialing, the common sections of the hour circles of the sphere with the plane of the dial.—Hypocycloidal line, in entom. See hypocycloidal.—Imaginary, isochimal, etc. line. See the adjectives.—Index of a line. See index.—Initial line. See polar coordinates in a plane, under coordinate.—Isoclinical, isodynamic, isogonic lines. See the adjectives.—Isophasal line, a line drawn in the plane of the imaginary variable through all values which correspond to values of the function having one value of the argument.—Isotimal line, a line drawn in the plane of the imaginary variable through all values which correspond to values of the function having one modulus.—Lateral line, in zool. a longitudinal line along each side of many fishes, marked by the structure or color of the skin, or by both. It consists of a row of tubes or pores, mostly on scales, extending from the head to or toward the tail. The pores are the ducts of muciferous glands whose product is excreted on the sides of the fish. The modifications of the lateral line are innumerable, and often afford classificatory characters. Thus, the line is more or less nearly parallel with the outline of the back in most acanthopterygian fishes, and with the outline of the belly in cyprinoids and many other malacopterygian fishes. The line is well shown in the eels under capite, head-dot, and lake (which see).—Laser line. See laser.—Least line. See lower.

—Line abreast. See abreast.—Line and level, a plumb-line; hence, rule; method.

This decade is therefore the line & level for all good makers to do their business by. Puttenham, Arte of Eng. Poetrie, p. 212.

We steal by line and level. Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 230.

Line at infinity, the aggregate of all points in any plane at an infinite distance from any given origin. It is called the line at infinity because represented by a line in a perspective projection; for in such a projection every straight line is projected into a straight line, and no other curve or locus is so projected, generally speaking.—Line coordinate. See line-coordinate.—Line drawing. See drawing.—Line geometry. See geometry.—Line of ap-sides. (a) In astron. the line through the perigee and apogee of a planet's orbit. (b) In mod. astron. the line through the perihelion and aphelion; the major axis of the orbit.—Line of ascent. See ascent.—Line of battle, the line formed by the ships of a fleet or by an army when or as when in readiness for action.—Line of bearing, a line formed by the ships of a fleet in which each ship bears by compass in a prescribed direction from the next ahead or astern or on either side.—Line of beauty, in art. a line of undulating curvature which, if it has been maintained, must enter as a potent factor in all graceful combinations of line and form. Different artists have given it different forms, but it is most commonly considered as a curve of contrary flexure resembling a very slender elongated letter S.—Line of center, in mach. (a) A straight line joining the centers of two wheels in gear. E. H. Knight. (b) The dead line; that line in which a crank and the connecting-rod stand when their axes form a straight line.—Line of coincidence, collimation, counter-approach. See coincidence, etc.—Line of consanguinity, a family relationship between two persons: it is either descending (the relationship of a person to his descendant), ascending (the relationship of a person to his ancestor), or transverse (the relationship of a person to a descendant of one of his progenitors).—Line of curvature, a line traced upon any surface such that the normals at any two successive points meet one another. Through each point of every surface there are two lines of curvature which are perpendicular to each other.—Line of Danderton. See craniometry.—Line of defense. See defense.—Line of dip, in geol. a line in the plane of a stratum, or part of a stratum, perpendicular to its intersection with a horizontal plane; the line of greatest inclination of a stratum to the horizon. See dip.—Line of direction. (a) See direction. (b) A line laid down in surveying; the bearing.—Line of distance. See distance.—Line of equilibrium, a curve every point on which is a point of equilibrium.—Line of fire, notation, flow. See fire, etc.—Line of force. (a) A straight line through the point of application of a force and in the direction of its action. (b) A curve whose tangent everywhere coincides with the direction at the point of tangency of a force distributed through space. Maxwell, following a hint from Faraday, supposes these lines so drawn that the number per unit of area normal to them in the neighborhood of a point shall measure the intensity of the force at that point.—Line of health, or line of the liver (hepatic line), in palmistry, a line beginning at the wrist, near the line of life, and running upward to the base of the fourth finger.—Line of life, in palmistry, a line starting near the wrist, skirting the base of the thumb, and terminating between the thumb and the line of the head.—Line of lines, line of numbers. Same as Gunter's line (a).—Line of motion. (a) A curve imagined to be so drawn in a fluid that the direction at any point is that of the motion of the fluid at the same point; a line of flow. Lamb. (b) The path of a particle of a moving fluid. Basest.—Line of nodes. See node.—Line of Saturn, or line of fate, in palmistry, a line beginning near the wrist, and running up the middle of the hand toward the base of the second finger.—Line of spherical curvature, a line every point of which is an umbilic on the surface.—Line or curve of swiftest descent. Same as brachistochrone.—Line of the head, in palmistry, a line beginning between the thumb and forefinger, and extending across the central part of the palm of the hand, parallel to the line of the heart.—Line of the heart, in palmistry, a line passing across the hand, skirting the mounts of Mercury, Apollo, Saturn, and Jupiter.—Line of the sun or line of fortune, in palmistry, a line running upward to the base of the third finger.—Lines of level. See level.—Lines of operation (milit.), all lines of communication by which an army may reach an enemy's base of operations. A simple line of operations is one by which the divisions of an army are kept together, or within supporting distance of each other. The roads forming this line are nearly parallel, quite close together, and have no impassable obstructions between them. A double line of operations is one in which a divided army follows two sensibly parallel roads so far apart that the two sections of the army cannot be assembled upon the same day on the same field of battle. Double lines of operation may be either converging or diverging, according as they approach each other or draw wider apart as they advance. An accidental line of operations is adopted when an army is compelled to abandon the line of operations proposed in the original plan and take up another. A temporary line of operations (also called maneuver line) is one which deviates from the line of movement adopted in the general plan of the campaign. When the movement is completed the general line is resumed. An interior line of operations is one which lies between the double lines of an enemy, and enables the army following it to fall upon and defeat the parts of the enemy's army in succession. In such a case the double lines are said to be exterior lines.—Logistic, loxodromic, magistral, etc. line. See the adjectives.—Marriage line, a marriage certificate. [Colloq., Eng.]—Mason and Dixon's line, the boundary between Pennsylvania on the north and Maryland on the south (lat. 39° 43' N.), partly surveyed by Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon between 1763 and 1767, and afterward completed by others; celebrated before the extinction of slavery as a line of demarcation between the free and the slave States.—Mechanical line, a transcendental curve.—Medial, median, meridian, etc. line. See the adjectives.—Multiple lines. See multiple.—Naso-alveolar line, nasobasilar line. See craniometry.—Natural line of sight. See sight.—Nelson's line, in surg., a line drawn from the anterior superior spine of the ilium to the most prominent part of the tubercosity of the ischium. In the course of this line lie the center of the acetabulum and the summit of the trochanter major of the femur.—Nemmann line. See metacarpal.—Nodal, objective, oculi, etc. line. See the adjectives.—Oblique line of the lower jaw, an oblique line beginning below the mental foramen and passing upward and backward to the anterior border of the coronoid process.—Organ of the line. See def. 14.—Organs of the lateral line, in zool. See mucous canals under mucous.—Parasartorial line, the line drawn on the surface of the chest perpendicularly downward from the junction of the middle and inner thirds of the clavicle.—Polar line, the intersection of consecutive normal planes to a skew curve. This is the name given by Monge (droit polaire), but Mannheim's axis of curvatures is preferable.—Popliteal line, a line passing downward and inward on the upper part of the posterior surface of the tibia; it gives origin to the soleus muscle.—Quadrant line, in surg. the lines quadrati (which see, under curves).—Rodan line, a series of redans connected by straight curtains. Moles, Milit. Engineering.—Right line. See right.—Ship of the line. See ship.—Shotting line, a fishing-line to which split shot are attached as sinkers. Shotting casting-lines are also used in special cases for fly-fishing.—Spiral line, a bicircular quartic having an axis of symmetry. Such a curve is a plane section of an anchor-ring, or torus, and indeed of four different ones, though all may be imaginary.—Stream-line, in hydrodynamics: (a) A line of motion in a fluid whose motion is steady. Stokes. (b) The actual path of a particle or molecule in a fluid mass.—Supracondylar lines of the femur, the two lines into which the linea aspera divides below.—Telegraph-line, telephone-line. See telegraphy, telephony.—Temporal inferior line, the lower of the two curving ridges which pass back from the external angular process of the frontal bone over the frontal and parietal bones. Also called lower temporal ridge.—Temporal lines, the two curving ridges which pass back from the external angular process of the frontal bone over the frontal and parietal bones. The upper, the superior temporal line or upper temporal ridge, is the line of attachment of the temporal fascia, while the lower marks the upper boundary of the attachment of the temporal muscle.—The line. Same as equinoctial line.—To draw the line. See draw.—To drop a line. See drop.—To give line. See give, s. 4.—To give one line, to allow one apparent freedom or opportunity of action, with a view to securing an ultimate advantage: in allusion to the angler's playing of a hooked fish.

Wherefore should the Ministers give them so much line for shifts and delays? Milton, Reformation in Eng., l.

It's policy to give 'em line. Diakova, Hard Times, II. 2.

To keep a line, in archery, to shoot in the vertical plane of the gold of the target.—To make even lines. See even.—To part a line, to break it, as when a whale runs so fast as to break the whale-line. Also to part a weep.—To sound a line, to go down when harpooned and carry the line with it: said of a whale.—To sound all line, to go down so far as to take out all the line from the boat: said of a whale.—To stop a line, to confine or fasten a rope, usually by means of a smaller one. Thus, to stop the line to the harpoon-staff is to fasten the line to the handle by passing one or more turns of rope around both line and pole, and confining the ends by knotting them together.—To wet one's line, to put one's fishing-line to use; to fish.—Trapezoid line, the line of attachment of the trapezoid ligament on the under side of the outer part of the clavicle.—Visual line. Same as visual axis (which see, under axis).—Vortex-line, a curve imagined to be so drawn in a fluid that its direction is everywhere that of the instantaneous axis of molecular rotation at that point.—Wallace's line (so named after Alfred R. Wallace, who defined it), in zoogeog., a line assumed to separate the Indomalayan from the Austromalayan zoogeographical region or faunal area. It passes between Borneo and Celebes, through the strait of Macassar, southward between Hall and Lombok, northeastward between Mindanao and Gilolo. This line divides the shallow waters of the Indomalayan region from the much deeper Austromalayan seas; and the character of the fauna is quite different on the two sides of it.—White line, in printing, a blank line; a blank space equal in depth to the space occupied by a line of reading in any given size of type. [In geometry curve is often used instead of line, so that phrases not found above should be sought under curve.]

Line² (lin), v.; pret. and pp. lined, ppr. lining. [F. ligner = Sp. lignar = It. lignare (cf. D. lignen, linieren = G. linieren = Dan. liniere = Sw. liniera), line, < L. lineare, reduce to a straight line, M.L. draw lines upon, < linea, a line: see line², n. In defs. 6, 7, the senses touch those of line², v. I. trans. 1. To draw lines upon; mark with lines or thread-like strokes: said of some decorative processes, and also of the effects of age, fatigue, etc., on the human countenance.

Some wood engravers are but too apt to pride themselves on the delicacy of their lining, without considering whether it be well adapted to express their subject. Chitto, Wood Engraving, p. 224.

The simple operation of lining the edge of a plate is executed by female hands. Art Journal, N. S., LX. 207.

2. To delineate; draw; paint. [Rare.]

All the pictures fastest lined Are but black to Rosalind. Shak., As you like it, III. 2. 97.

3. To give out, line by line; read one or two of the lines or strophes of (a metrical hymn) in public worship before singing. The custom of lining out the hymns originated at a time when printed books were scarce, and when congregational singing could be secured in no other way: it is now nearly unknown. The reading was done by the clerk, by a deacon, or by the officiating clergyman himself. In New England it was sometimes called deaconing. Usually with out.

In large coloured churches [in the South] it is still the practice to line out the hymns, because few of the congregation can read. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII, 361.

4. To measure, as land, with a line; fix the boundaries of. [Scotch.]—5. To bring into line or align; hence, to arrange; marshal; employ in service.

No actor of American birth and training can be lined to this class of work. Philadelphia Times, March 21, 1880.

6. To place something in a line along; arrange something along and within for security or defense: as, to line works with soldiers.

Line and new repair our towns of war
With men of courage. Shak., Hen. V., II. 4. 7.

Not feeble years, nor childhood stay'd, but all Alike impatient through'd to line the wall.

Hook., tr. of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, xxxv.

The peers that line
Baronial halls the opprobrious insult feel.
Wordsworth, Eccles. Sonnets, I. 37.

7. See the quotation.

Cunning mules [when hobbled] . . . soon learn to lift both forefeet at a time and gallop off; hence they are lined, that is, the forefoot is tied to the hindfoot on the same side, so that the step is very much shortened and their gait reduced to a kind of pace.

S. De Vere, Americanisms, p. 131.

Lining out stuff, the operation of drawing lines on boarding or planing, to guide the cutting of it into thinner pieces.—To line bees, to track wild bees to their nests by following them in the line of their flight.—To line men (mil.), to dress or arrange a body of men so that they shall collectively form an even line or line.

II. Intrans. To fish with a line. [Rare, U. S.]

The squeteague is taken both by lining and seining.
J. V. C. Smith, Fishes of Massachusetts.

line³ (lin), v. t.; pret. and pp. lined, pr. lining. [< ME. lincen, cover on the inside, double; prob. orig. double with linen, < line¹, linen: see line¹, n.] 1. To cover the inside of (some object, as a garment, a utensil, etc.) with some material other than that of which the object lined is made.

Cosach with purple lin'd, and mitres on its side.
Cowper, Tirocinium, I. 360.

Hence, by extension—2. To fill the inside of; wad; stuff: as, to line a purse or a pocket with money.

What
If I do line one of their hands?
Shak., Cymbeline, II. 2. 72.

By this rich purse, and by the twenty ducats
Which line it, I will answer for thy honesty.
For., Fancies, III. 1.

No bridegroom's hand be mine to hold
That is not lined with yellow gold.

Whittier, Maid of Attitash.

3†. To cover; pad.

Their smoothed tongues are lined all with guile.
Gascoigne, Hearbes, Council to Master Barthol. Withipoll.

Son of sixteen,
Pluck the lined crutch from thy old limping sire.
Shak., T. of A., IV. 1. 14.

4. To impregnate: said of animals.

He would with the utmost Diligence look for a Dog that upon all Accounts was of a good Breed, to line her, that he might not have a Litter of Mongrels.
N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquia of Erasmus, II. 100.

5†. To aid. [Rare.]

Whether he was combined
With those of Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage.
Shak., Macbeth, I. 2. 112.

To line one's jacket. See jacket.

line⁴ (lin), n. An obsolete form of line¹, line².

line⁵ (lin' ē-ē), n.; pl. lines (ē-ē). [L.: see line², n.] In bot. and anat., a line; a linear mark or trace, whether of impression or expression.—Linea alba, the white line, the median longitudinal line of connective tissue running from the pubis to the sternum.—Linea aspera, the rough line, a prominent longitudinal ridge on the back of the femur. It divides above into three lines running to the great trochanter, lesser trochanter, and spiral line, and below into two lines running to the inner and outer condyles.—Linea costocartilaginis, a line marking the junction of the ribs with their cartilages, drawn from the sternoclavicular articulation to the tip of the eleventh rib.—Linea fusca, a median line of darker pigmentation extending upward from the pubis to the umbilicus or beyond, developed in pregnant women. Also called pigmented abdominal line.—Linea glutea posterior, anterior, and inferior respectively, the superior, middle, and inferior curved lines of the dorsum fil.—Linea iliopectinea, the iliopectinea line (which see, under pectinea).—Linea innominata, the brim of the true pelvis, formed by the promontory of the sacrum and the rounded angle between the upper and anterior surfaces of the lateral divisions of the first sacral vertebra, the iliopectinea line, and the upper border of the os pubis.—Linea lateralis, in bot., the lateral line (which see, under line²).—Linea myeloides, the myeloid ridge on the inner surface of the lower jawbone.—Linea nasus inferior, the line, curved, of the nasal bone, inferior.—Linea nasus mediana, the external nasal protuberance, running in the middle line from the external nasal crest to the foramen magnum.—Linea nasus superior or supra-nasal, the line, curved, of the nasal bone, superior.—Linea paranasalis, a line drawn on the surface of the chest from the junction of the inner and middle thirds of the clavicle perpendicularly downward.—Linea quadrati, the line of insertion of the quadratus femoris muscle.—Linea semilunaris, the curved tendinous line on the outer border of the rectus muscle, extending from the cartilage of the eighth rib to the pubis. Also called linea Spiegelii.—Linea splendens, the shining line, a median lengthwise band along the anterior surface of the pia mater of the spinal cord.—Linea transversa. (a) Of the abdomen, the tendinous intersections in the course of the rectus muscle of the abdomen. (b) Of the fourth ventricle, the stria acustica (which see, under stria).

Lineae (lin' ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1813), < Linum + -ae.] An order of polypetalous exogenous plants, typified by the genus Linum, belonging to the cohort Gerantiales. It is characterized by regular flowers, with imbricate sepals, and an entire ovary which is from three- to five-celled, usually with two ovules in each cell, having a fleshy albumen. The order embraces about 235 species, divided among 15 genera, which have been grouped under 4 tribes. They are herbs, rarely trees, usually with alternate leaves, and are widely dispersed throughout the world. Also Linaceae.

lineage (lin' ē-ē), n. [Prop., as orig., linage (mod. pron. lin' ē-ē); the spelling lineage simulates line², lineal, etc., and the pron. has been altered to suit lineal, etc.; < ME. linnage, lynnage, lgnage, < AF. OF. linnage, F. lignage (cf. Pg. linagem), lineage, < ligne, < L. linea, a line: see line², n.] Line of descent from an ancestor; hence, family; race; stock.

Of his lynage am I, and his offspring,
By verrey lynage, as of the stock royal.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, I. 692.

He was of the house and lineage of David. Lake II. 4.

Believe me, he is well-bred,
And cannot be but of a noble lineage.

Beau. and Fl., Wit without Money, I. 2.

Either he brought a joyous dame,
Unknown her lineage or her name.

Scott, Rokeby, VI. 12.

—Syn. Genealogy, etc. (see pedigree), birth, extraction, ancestry, family, descent.

lineal (lin' ē-ē), a. [= F. lineal = Sp. Pg. lineal = It. lineale, pertaining to a line, < L. linealis, < linea, a line: see line², n.] 1. Of or pertaining to a line or length; extending in a line; involving the single dimension of length: as, lineal measure; a lineal foot. [In the physical sense lineal and linear are often used interchangeably, but a differentiation is commonly made. Compare linear.]

Lineal walks immediately enveloped the slight scene.

Walspole, Anecdotes, IV. vii.

An inch is the smallest lineal measure to which a name is given.

O. Gregory, Mathematics, p. 130.

2. Proceeding in a direct or unbroken line; hereditary; unbroken in course; distinguished from collateral: as, lineal descent; lineal succession.

The house of York.

From whence you spring by lineal descent.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., III. 1. 106.

3. Pertaining or relating to direct descent; hereditary in quality or character; having an ancestral basis or right.

The lineal glory of your royal house.

Shak., Rich. III., III. 7. 121.

Millions shall spring from our loins, and trace back with lineal love their blood to ours.

R. Chalmers, Addresses, etc., p. 104.

4†. Allied by direct descent.

For only you are lineal to the throne. Dryden.

lineal measure, warranty, etc. See the nouns.

lineality (lin' ē-ē-ā-ē-ti), n. [< lineal + -ity.]

The state of being lineal, or in the form of a line. Wright. [Rare.]

lineally (lin' ē-ē-ā-ē-li), adv. In a lineal manner; in a direct line: as, one who is lineally descended from the Conqueror.

From whose race of old

She heard that she was lineally extract.

Spenser, F. Q., III. ix. 22.

lineament (lin' ē-ē-mēt), n. [< F. lineament = Sp. lineamiento = Pg. lineamento = It. lineamento, feature, < L. lineamentum, a line, feature, < lineare, reduce to a straight line, ML. draw lines upon: see line².] A feature or detail of a body or figure considered as to its outlines or contour; linear formation of a part, as in the human face; hence, a particular physical feature or characteristic; sometimes, a distinguishing characteristic or quality in general: used chiefly in the plural.

The lineaments of the body do disclose the disposition and inclination of the mind in general.

Bacon, Advancement of Learning, II. 184.

Examine every married lineament,

And see how one another lends content.

Shak., R. and J., I. 3. 22.

line-and-line (lin' and-lin'), a. With edge exactly to edge: a term characterizing the adjustment of a slide-valve without lead: as, a line-and-line setting. See lead¹, n., 8.

The valve is supposed to be set without any lead, or line-and-line, as it is called, at full stroke. That is, the steam edges of the valve correspond with the steam edges of the part at the beginning of the stroke.

Forney, Locomotive, p. 227.

linear (lin' ē-ē-r), a. [= F. lineaire = Sp. Pg. lineal = It. lineare, < L. linearis, belonging to a line, < linea, a line: see line², n. Cf. lineal.]

1. Of or pertaining to a line or lines; composed or consisting of lines: as, linear drawing; linear perspective.—2. Relating to length only; specifically, in math. and physics, involving measurement in one dimension only, or a sum of such measurements; involving only straight lines; unidimensional; of the first degree: as, linear numbers; linear measure. A plane is said to be a linear locus, because of the first order; expansion, if considered in one dimension only, the others being neglected, is termed linear expansion.

The linear expansion of metals heated between the freezing and boiling points of water varies from one to three parts in 1,000.

W. E. Carpenter, Energy in Nature, p. 49.

3. In bot., soot., and anat., like a line or thread; slender; very narrow and elongate: as, a linear leaf.—4. In pros., consisting in or pertaining to a succession of single verses all of the same rhythm and length; stichic: as, linear composition; "Paradise Lost" is linear in composition.—Linear algebra, a system of algebra in which every expression equals a linear expression in certain units.—Linear class of functions, a number of functions produced from one another by addition, by subtraction, and by multiplication by constants.—Linear coefficient of expansion. See coefficient.—Linear complex, congruence, content. See the nouns.—Linear demonstration, a proof drawn from the consideration of a geometrical diagram, without the use of algebra or trigonometry.—Linear differential equation, an equation in which the differential coefficients and dependent variables are not multiplied into themselves or into one another: thus, is a linear partial differential equation.—Linear drawing. See drawing.—Linear dyadic. See dyadic.—Linear ensemble. See ensemble.—Linear equation, in math., an equation of the first degree between two variables: so called because every such equation may be considered as representing a right line.—Linear function, a function resulting from the performance of the operations of addition, subtraction, and multiplication by constants upon the variables.—Linear geometry, group, integral, etc. See the nouns.—Linear heraldry, heraldry of the more elaborate sort, in which a number of ordinaries and their bearings are combined to produce varied escutcheons.—Linear numbers, in math., such numbers as have relation to length only, as a number which represents one side of a plane figure. If the plane figure is a square, the linear side is called a root.—Linear perspective, that branch of perspective which regards only the positions, magnitudes, and forms of the objects delineated: distinguished from aerial perspective, which considers also the variations of the light, shade, and color of objects, according to their different distances and the quantity of light which falls on them.—Linear problem, a problem that may be solved geometrically by the intersection of two right lines, or algebraically by an equation of the first degree.—Linear space, a uniaxial space the points of which may be uniquely represented by value-systems of the coordinates, without the exception of any point-equations or loci-values.—Linear transformation, a transformation from one set of variables to another connected with them by linear equations.—Linear units, units of length.

$$t^2 D_x^2 y + x D_x D_y y = 0$$

linear-acute (lin' ē-ē-r-ā-kūt'), a. [< L. linearis, linear (see linear), + acutus, sharp: see acute.] In bot., narrow and very gradually tapering to a point, as a leaf; acuminate.

linear-ensate (lin' ē-ē-r-on-sāt'), a. [< L. linearis, linear (see linear), + ensata, a sword.] In bot., having the form of a long narrow sword.

linearity (lin' ē-ē-r-ē-ti), n. [< linear + -ity.] The state or condition of being linear.

The linearity of the differential equation depends upon this physical fact, etc.

Airy, Optics, § 12.

linear-lanceolate (lin' ē-ē-r-lan' ē-ē-lāt'), a. [< L. linearis, linear (see linear), + L. lanceolatus, armed with a little lance or point: see lanceolate.] In bot., lanceolate and very slender; narrow and parallel-sided in the middle, and tapering to a slender base and an acute tip.

linearly (lin' ē-ē-r-li), adv. In a linear manner; with lines.

linear-oblong (lin' ē-ē-r-ob-lōng'), a. Oblong and very narrow.

linear† (lin' ē-ē-ri), a. [< L. linearis, belonging to a line, < linea, a line: see line², n. Cf. lineal.] Linear. Holland.

lineate (lin' ē-ē-ti), v. t. [< L. lineatus, pp. of lineare, reduce to a straight line, ML. draw lines upon, < linea, a line: see line², v.] To draw; delineate. Davies.

Linear Leaf of Pycnanthemum lyallii.

Life to the life the Chessboard lineate.

Spectator, Memorials of Mortality, st. 2.

lineate (lin'ē-āt), a. [< L. lineatus, pp.: see the verb.] Marked with lines, especially with longitudinal and more or less parallel lines; as, a lineate leaf. In describing sculpture, a surface is said to be lineate when it has fine elevated or depressed longitudinal lines more or less parallel and separated by regular intervals. Also lined.

lineated (lin'ē-ā-ted), a. Same as lineate.

lineation (lin'ē-ā-shŭn), n. [< L. lineatio (n.), a drawing of a line, < lineare, pp. lineatus, reduce to a line: see lineate, v.] 1. A marking by lines; disposition or arrangement of lines.

The lineation of the nacreous surface may perhaps be thus accounted for. W. B. Carpenter, Micra, § 565.

2. In soil, one or more line-like marks on a surface; the appearance or form of a lineated surface; as, the lineation of the thorax of a fly.

There are in the horny ground two white lineations, with two of a pale red. Woodward.

3. Mensuration. Halliwel (spelled lineation). line-conch (lin'kongk), n. A large gastropod, Fuscularia distans, marked by several black lines revolving on the whorls of the shell. [Florida.]

line-coordinate (lin'kō-ōr-di-nēt), n. One of a set of quantities, commonly three in a plane, or six in space, defining the position of a line. The ordinary line-coordinates are u, v, w, in the equation $uw + vy + wz = 0$, where u, v, w are the trilinear coordinates of a point in a plane. When these are taken as constant, while u, v, w are variable, the equation restricts a line to passing through that point, and any set of values of u, v, w define a line. The above equation determines the incidence of the point on the line, whether u, v, w or z, y, x or both, be variable. The precise geometrical significance of the line-coordinates depends upon that of the point-coordinates. The six line-coordinates in space are generally termed ray-coordinates.

lined (lind), p. a. Same as lineate.

lined (lind), p. a. 1. Having a lining.—2. Impregnated. See lined, v., 4.—3. Supplied with money. [Rare.]

I am given out to be better lined than it can appear to me report is a true speaker; I would I were really that I am delivered to be! Mary, what I have (be it what it will) I will assure upon my daughter at the day of my death. Fletcher (and another), Two Noble Kinsmen, II. 1.

Lined gold. See gold.

line-density (lin'den'ē-ti), n. The limiting ratio of the electricity on an element of the line to the length of that element when the element is diminished without limit. Clerk Maxwell, Elect. and Mag.

line-engraving (lin'en-grā'ving), n. 1. The process of engraving in lines: commonly synonymous with steel or copperplate engraving. See engraving, 2. An engraved plate or a print representing its subject chiefly or wholly by lines.

Drawings, both in crayon and black lead, line engraving, and etchings were within the compass of most people's purses. J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, II. 48.

line-equation (lin'ē-kwā'shŭn), n. An equation between the coordinates of lines, these being usually tangents of a plane curve.

line-fish (lin'fish), n. A fish, such as the cod, haddock, and halibut, which is taken with the line: opposed to net-fish.

line-fisherman (lin'fish'er-man), n. One who fishes with hook and line; a hook-and-line man.

line-fishing (lin'fish'ing), n. The act or art of fishing with hook and line; angling: distinguished from net-fishing.

Lineidae (li-nē'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Linus + -idae.] A family of rhynchocoelous turbellarians, typified by the genus Linus; the sea-longworms, or marine nemerteans. They have an extremely long slender form, unarmed proboscis, elongated cephalic ganglion, and long slits on each side of the head.

lineiform (lin'ē-i-fōrm), a. [< L. linea, line, + forma, form.] Linear in form; linear.

line-integral (lin'in'tē-gral), n. In math., the integral along any curve of a vector quantity distributed through space resolved along that curve. Thus, if the vector is a force, the line-integral is the work gained in passing over the curve.

linelet (lin'let), n. [< line + -let.] A minute or very short line.

The peculiar arrangement of the leading lines (usually two) and train of linelets . . . is fully shown in the diagram. Nature, XXXIX. 370.

lineman (lin'man), n.; pl. linemen (-men). 1. A person who carries the line in surveying, etc.—2. One employed in duties relating to the line of a railroad, telegraph, or telephone; one who attends to keeping the parts of the line, as the rails, posts, wires, etc., in proper condition.—3. A line-fisherman.

linen (lin'en), a. and n. [Early mod. E. also linnen; < ME. linen, linon, also linnen; < AS. linen (= OS. linin = OFries. linnen = D. linen = MLG. linen = OHG. MEG. linen, G. linen, linnen = Dan. linnet = Sw. linne), of flax, linen, < lin, flax, + -en: see *lin*¹ and *-en*². The noun is now generally regarded as the orig. form, its connection with the obs. *line*¹ being no longer generally recognized. Cf. woolen, woollen, u. and n., < wool.] 1. a. 1. Made of the fibers of flax: as, linen thread; linen cloth.

And David was girded with a linen ephod. 2 Sam. vi. 14.

2. Resembling linen cloth; white; pale.

Those linen cheeks of thine

Are counsellors to fear. Shak., Macbeth, v. 3. 16.

Fair linen cloth, in the Anglo-Saxon Ch., the cloth used at the celebration of the eucharist to cover the consecrated elements after communion; the post-communion veil.—Fair white linen cloth, in the Anglo-Saxon Ch., the outer altar-cloth spread over the other altar-cloths at the time of celebration. It usually covers little more than the top of the altar, and hangs down about two feet at each end.—Linen damask. See damask, 1 (d).—Linen diaper, linen cloth woven in the same way as damask, but having a small set pattern of diagonal squares or the like: used for towels, children's clothing, etc.—Linen embroidery, a kind of fancy work made by drawing the threads from a piece of linen, except from the space comprised within the lines of a pattern, so that the pattern remains in solid surface relieved upon the openwork ground from which threads have been withdrawn.—Linen pattern. Same as linen-sock.

II. n. 1. A fabric of linen yarn or thread; cloth woven from the fibers of flax; in the plural, linen cloth in general; manufactures of flax-fiber: as, Irish linens. The principal fabrics included in the term linens are lawn, cambric, batiste, damask, diaper, and glass-cloth, besides the heavy qualities known as toweling, shirting, sheeting, etc.

2. Collectively, articles of linen fabric, or by extension (in modern use) of linen and cotton, or of cotton alone for household use, as table-cloths, napkins, etc. (table-linen), sheets and pillow-cases (bed-linen), towels, etc., or for underwear (body-linen), etc.

In any case, let Thibsy have clean linen.

Shak., M. N. D., iv. 2. 40.

Let's go to that house, for the linen looks white and smells of lavender, and I long to lie in a pair of sheets that smell so. J. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 77.

3. Linen thread.—4. Cloth made of hemp. [Rare.]—5. pl. Sails. [Rare.]

Down with the main mast, lay her at hull,

Furl up her linens, and let her ride it out.

Fletcher, Sea Voyage, I. 1.

Carbonized linen. See carbonize.—Cream-twilled linen, a wide linen cloth used as a foundation for embroidery.—Danubian linen, a name given to ornamental damask for table use, having borders, etc., in red. These linens are of Austrian manufacture, and were introduced about 1878.—Diamond linen. See diamond.—Fossil linen, a variety of hornblende with soft and flexible parallel fibers.

linen-drafter (lin'en-drā'pēr), n. A person who deals in linen goods and related articles.

I am a linen-drafter bold,

As all the world doth know.

Cowper, John Gilpin.

linenert (lin'en-ēr), n. [< linen + -er.] Same as linen-drafter.

Have council of tailors, linenerts, lace-women, embroiderers.

B. Jonson, Epicoene, II. 2.

linenman (lin'en-man), n. Same as linen-drafter.

linen-muslin (lin'en-mus'lin), n. Same as leno.

linen-panel (lin'en-pan'el), n. A panel decorated with a linen pattern.

linen-prover (lin'en-prō'vēr), n. A small microscope used in commerce for counting the threads in linen fabrics, and thus determining their fineness.

linen-scroll (lin'en-skrol), n. In arch., a form of curved ornament employed to fill panels: so called from its resemblance to the convolutions of a folded napkin. It belongs peculiarly to the latter part of the fifteenth and the beginning of the sixteenth century. The figure shows the scroll from a panel in Layr Marney Hall, in the county of Essex, England.

Linen-scroll.

lineograph (lin'ē-ō-grāf), n. [< L. linea, a line, + Gr. γράφειν, write.] An instrument for drawing lines of defined character.

lineola (li-nē-ō-lŭ), n.; pl. lineolae (-lŭ). [LL., a little line, dim. of L. linea, a line: see *line*².] In anat. and soil., a small or fine line or line; a lineolet.

lineolate (lin'ē-ō-lāt), a. [< NL. lineolatus, < LL. lineola, a little line: see lineola.] In soil. and bot., marked with fine or obscure lines; diminutively lineate.

lineolated (lin'ē-ō-lā-ted), a. Same as lineolate.

lineolet (lin'ē-ō-lēt), n. [< lineola + -et.] In entom., a short or minute line.

lineolinear (lin'ē-ō-lin'ē-ār), a. [< L. linea, a line, + linearis, of a line: see linear.] In math., linear with respect to each of two different variables or sets of variables.

lineopolar (lin'ē-ō-pō-lār), a. [< L. linea, a line, + NL. polaris, polar: see polar.] In math., produced by taking the (n—1)th polar of a locus with respect to a function of the *n*th order: so called because such a polar of a point is a line. Thus, the lineopolar envelop of a line with respect to a cubic is a conic which is the envelop of the lines that are the second polars of the points of the first line.

line-pin (lin'pin), n. In bricklaying, a pin of wire pointed at one end, and usually having an eye or loop on the other end, used as a support for the line or cord by which the bricklayer aligns his work.

liner¹ (lī'nēr), n. [*< line*² + -er.] 1. A person employed in drawing or painting lines, as in decorative art.—2. A ship of the line; a man-of-war.

Fancy the sensations of a man fighting his frigate desperately against overwhelming odds, when he sees the outside of a huge liner, with English colours at the main, looming dimly through the smoke! Lawrence, Sword and Gown, xvii.

3. A vessel regularly plying to and from certain ports; especially, a vessel belonging to one of the regular steamship lines: as, a Liverpool and New York liner.—4. In base-ball, a ball knocked or thrown with much force nearly parallel to the ground: as, he struck a liner to second base.—5. A ball, marble, or the like that strikes or remains on some certain line of demarcation used in a game.

liner² (lī'nēr), n. [*< line*², v., + -er.] 1. One who or that which lines. Specifically—2. A vessel of smooth material fit for holding liquids, etc., fitting within an ornamental exterior and made movable for facility of emptying, cleansing, etc. Thus, in ornamental table-ware, a basket of metalwork or a jardinière of fine porcelain has a liner to contain fruit or earth for the plants. 3. In mach., a thin plate of metal, paper, leatheroid, etc., placed under some movable and adjustable part—a gib for example—to set up the part toward its bearing after it has been worn away as much as the thickness of the plate.

The École Industrielle des Vosges exhibits a pattern of an 8-foot flywheel that is well made, and a connecting rod end, the double set of keys and gibs dispensing with the use of liners, while enabling the wear to be taken up without altering the length of the rod. Sci. Amer., N. S., LXI. 68.

The barrels are bored up within three inches of the muzzle with a fine-boring bit, using a spill and liners as already described. W. W. Greener, The Gun, p. 287.

4. In marble-working, a long slab of marble to which the backs of small marble tiles, etc., are secured by plaster while being polished.

Linerages (lī-nēr'jēs), n. [NL., < Gr. λινεργής, wrought of flax, < λινον, flax, + εργειν, work: see *line*¹ and work.] A genus of discoid jelly-fishes, typical of the family Lineridae, or the thimblefishes. The bell has the shape of a thimble.

Thimblefish (Lineridae muricatus).

Lineridae (lī-nēr'jī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Linerages + -idae.] A family of Discomedusae with simple quadrangular manubrium without mouth-arms, simple quadrate mouth, 8 marginal bodies, 8 tentacles, 16 marginal flaps, broad radial pouches, branched sack-shaped flap-canal, and without ring-canal. See Linerages.

line-riding (lin'ī-ding), n. The act of making on horseback the circuit of the boundary of a cattle-drift, in order to keep the cattle within bounds, and recover those that may have "drifted" or strayed. [Western U. S.]

Line-riding is very cold work, and dangerous, too, when the men have to be out in a blinding snowstorm. F. Roosevelt, The Century, XXIV. 60.

line-rocket (lin'rok'et), n. In pyrotechnics, a rocket, usually of small size, with a running connection by which it can be movably attached to a line or wire, along which when fired it is caused to run.

lineman (lin'man), n.; pl. linemen (-men). Milit., a private in the line; an infantryman.

If not perhaps as tall as our ordinary linguist, he [the Puritan soldier] is as heavy and as strongly built.

Westminster Rev., CXXVIII. 458.

line-squall (lin'akwāl), n. In meteor., a squall occurring along the axis of a V-shaped barometric depression, generally secondary to a large cyclonic area, consisting of a violent straight blow of cold air, usually from the north-west, accompanied by rain or snow and a sudden rise of the barometer: so called by Abercromby. The Iowa squall or derecho is a line-squall.

line-storm (lin'stōrm), n. A storm popularly supposed to occur at the time the sun crosses the equator; hence, any heavy storm that occurs within a week or ten days of the equinoxes; an equinoctial storm. [Local, New Eng.]

Along their foam-white curves of shore
They heard the line-storm rave and roar.

Whittier, The Palatine.

lineus (lin'ē-us), n. [NL., < L. linea, line: see line.] The typical genus of Lineidae. L. marinus or L. longitarsis is one of the narrowest of organisms for its length, growing to be 12 or 15 feet long and only half an inch or so broad.

line-wire (lin'wir), n. In telegr., the wire which extends between and connects the stations of a telegraph-line, and transmits the electric current or impulse from station to station.

ling¹ (ling), n. [ME. leunge, leunge, < AS. leunga* (not recorded) = MD. leunge, linghe, D. long = G. lange, lang (also lang, langsch) = Icel. langa = Norw. langa, lona = Dan. lange = Sw. lång, a ling: so named from its length, < AS. lang, etc., long: see long.] Cf. linger, from the same source.] 1. A European gadoid fish, Molva molva or M. vulgaris (called by Cuvier Lota lota). It has an elongate form, a short anterior and long posterior dorsal fin, long anal fin, separate convex caudal Ling (Molva vulgaris).

fin, normal ventral fins, and several large teeth in the lower jaws and vomer, besides a band of small teeth in the jaws and vomer. The ling inhabits the seas of northern Europe, and attains a length of 4 feet. Great numbers of them are caught for food, and either used fresh or salted and dried for future consumption.

2. An American gadoid fish, Lota maculosa, better known as the durbot, and also called lawyer and lake-lawyer.—3. A chiroid fish, Ophiodon elongatus, better known as cultus-cod.—4. Same as bay-cod.—5. Same as conger-eel, 3.

ling² (ling), n. [ME. lyng, < Icel. lyng = Dan. lyng = Sw. lyng, heath.] Common heather, Calluna vulgaris.

ling³ (ling), n. [Chin.] The water-chestnut of China, Trapa bicornis, largely used in China for food.

-ling¹. [ME. -ling, -lyng, < AS. -ling (= OS. -ling, OFries. -ling = OHG. -ling, MHG. -ling, G. -ling = Icel. -lingr = Goth. -liggs), a suffix (orig. a compound suffix, < -l + -ing) denoting origin, or having a dim. force, as in dearling, darling, earthling, earthling, hiring, a hiring, geongling, a youth, gadeling, a companion, etc.] A termination having usually a diminutive or deprecative force, occurring in designations of persons, as darling, earthling, *gading*¹, *gading*², groundling, hiring, lordling, stripling, underling, worldling, etc., or of young animals, etc., as duckling, gaeling, kidling, kitling, starling, firstling, nestling, yearling, etc.

-ling². [ME. -ling (also -linges), < AS. -ling, -lūga, -lūga, an adverbial termination as in baeling, beckling, grundlinga, grundlūga, from the bottom, equiv. to -unga, -lūga, as in callūga, entirely, ferringa, suddenly, etc., orig. a case of -ung, -lūga, suffix of verbal nouns: see -ing. Cf. -long.] An adverbial suffix, forming adverbs from nouns, as in backling, darling, grovelling, headling, sideling, halfing, etc. It also appears with an added adverbial genitive suffix, -lūga, as in backlūga. In dialectal use it is often -lūga. In some words it appears in the variant form -long, as in headlong, sidelong. It is not now used in the formation of new words.

linga (ling'gā), n. Same as lingam.

lingam (ling'gam), n. [Skt. (stem linga, neut. nom. lingam), a mark; a token; especially, the male generative organ.] In Hind. myth., the male organ of generation, worshipped as being representative of the god Siva or of the generative power of nature; a phallus. Also linga.

ling-berry (ling'ber'ī), n. 1. The crowberry, Empetrum nigrum.—2. The cowberry, Vaccinium vitis-idaea.—3. The fruit of the ling. [Prov. Eng. in all senses.]

ling-bird (ling'berd), n. The meadow-pipit of Europe, Anthus pratensis: so called as frequenting the moors where the ling or heather grows. linge (ling), v. 1. [ME. lengen, linger: see linger. Cf. lingy.] To work hard. [Prov. Eng.] lingel¹ (ling'gl), n. [Also lingle, dial. linel, formerly also linel, linle, < ME. lingel, lynge, lynsette, irreg. lynset (by error innset)—Prompt. Parv., < OF. lyngeol*, lyngeol, F. lyngeol, a shoe-latchet, < L. lineola, dim. of linea, line: see line.] 1. A shoe-latchet. [Old Eng. and Scotch.]—2. A shoemaker's thread of hemp rubbed with rosin. Porcy.

The shoemaker maketh flippers . . . of leather (which is cut with a Cutting-knife) by means of an Awl and lingel.
Comenius, Visible World, p. 97.

Where sitting, I spy'd a lovely dame,
Whose master wrought with lingel, and with awl,
And under ground he ramp'd many a boot.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, v. 3.

3. Anything of considerable length; a considerable length of anything. [Scotch.] lingel², n. See *lingel*¹.

lingence (lin'jens), n. [< L. lingen(t)-s, pp. of lingere, lick: see lick.] A liquid medicated confection taken by licking; a lincture.

A stick herof [licence] is commonly the spoon prescribed to patients, to use in any lingence or loaches.
Fuller, Worthies, Nottinghamshire.

linger (ling'ger), v. [ME. lengeren*, tarry (= G. ver-längern, prolong, freq. of lengen, tarry, < AS. langan, prolong, put off (= OHG. langjan, langan, lengen, MHG. lengen = D. lengen = MLG. lengen = Icel. lengja = Sw. för-länga = Dan. for-lønge, lengthen), < lang, long: see long, long.] I. trans. 1. To make long; prolong; protract; delay; put off; defer.

It shall cause things to have good success, and that matters shall not be lingered forth from day to day.
Lutimer, 2d Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

He goes into Mauritania, . . . unless his abode be lingered here by some accident.
Shak., Othello, iv. 2. 231.

We linger time; the King sent for Philaster and the headman an hour ago.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, v. 1.

2. To spend in an inactive or tedious manner; drag: with out, and sometimes away.

Now live secure, and linger out your days.
Dryden, Death of Purcell.

Better to rush at once to shades below,
Than linger life away, and nourish woe.
Pope, Odyssey.

II. intrans. To remain in a place or a state for an unusual, undue, or unexpected length of time; defer action, movement, decision, etc., either from inclination or necessity; hold back; tarry; delay; loiter.

I would not have thee linger in thy pain.
Shak., Othello, v. 2. 88.

He, be sure,
Will not connive or linger, thus provoked.
Milton, S. A., l. 406.

This palace . . . really deserves no small place in the history of Romanesque art. It shows how late the genuine tradition lingered on. H. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 251.

lingerer (ling'ger-er), n. One who lingers. lingerie (F. pron. lan-zhè-ré'), n. [F., a linen-warehouse, linen goods, linen underwear, < linger, a dealer in linen goods, < linge, linen, flax, < L. linum, flax, linen: see line.] Linen goods; linen underwear, especially as used by women; also, collectively, all the linen, cotton, and lace articles of a woman's wardrobe.

lingering (ling'ger-ing), p. a. Drawing out in time; remaining long; protracted; dilatory in action: as, a lingering illness; lingering poisons.

My griefs not only pain me
As a lingering disease,
But, finding no redress, ferment and rage.
Milton, S. A., l. 618.

lingeringly (ling'ger-ing-lī), adv. In a lingering manner; with delay; slowly; tediously. lingery (ling'ger-lī), adv. Lingeringly; slowly. [Rare.]

Sometimes, preoccupied with her work, she sang the refrain very low, very lingery: "A long time ago" came out like the saddest cadence of a funeral hymn.
Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, iii.

linget (ling'get), n. See lingot.

lingiam (ling'iam), n. [< Ling (Peter Henrik Ling (1776-1839), a Swedish poet, who proposed the method) + -iam.] In therap., the Swedish movement-cure; kinesiotherapy.

lingla¹, n. See *lingel*¹.

lingla², lingel² (ling'gl), n. [< L. lingula, dim. of lingua, tongue: see lingual. Cf. ligule.] A little tongue or thong of leather, as a lace used in uniting leather bands.

lingo¹ (ling'gō), n. [Prob. a vulgar or cant corruption of L. lingua, tongue, speech: see Un- guai, a.] Language; speech; especially, a peculiar kind of speech, more or less unintelligible; a dialect.

Well, well, I shall understand your Lingo one of these days, Cousin; in the mean while I must answer in plain English.
Congress, Way of the World, iv. 4.

He's a gentleman of words; he understands your foreign lingo.
Sheridan, St. Patrick's Day, i. 1.

Norman French, for example, or Scotch down to the time of James VI., could hardly be called patois, while I should be half inclined to name the Yankee a lingo rather than a dialect.
Lowell, Biglow Papers, 3d ser., i. 1.

lingo² (ling'gō), n. [Also lingo, a native name.] A large leguminous tree, Pterocarpus indicus, or its wood. See kiabooa-wood.

lingot¹ (ling'got), n. [< OF. lingot (ML. lingotus), an ingot: see ingot.] A small mass of metal showing the form of the mold in which it is cast, often tongue-shaped; an ingot. Also lingot.

Among the Lacedæmonians iron lingots quenched with vinegar that they may serve for no other use (Nath been used for monies).
Camden, Remains.

ling-pink (ling'pink), n. Same as ling. [North. Eng.]

Brakes of ling-pink, faintly scented, a feast for every sense.
Mrs. Humphrey Ward, Robert Elsmere, xi.

-ling. See *-ling*².

lingthorn (ling'thorn), n. A British starfish, Luidia fragilisima, of the family Asteridea.

lingua (ling'gwā), n.; pl. linguæ (-gwē). [L.: see lingual, tongue.] 1. The tongue; a tongue. Specifically, in anatom.: (a) The central lobe of the ligula when this has two lateral lobes or paraglossæ, as in Hymenoptera and many Coleoptera. Kirby applied the term to the whole ligula. Also called glossæ. (b) The tubular proboscis of Lepidoptera, formed of the united and elongated maxillæ. This tongue-like organ is sometimes several inches long, and in repose is coiled spirally beneath the head. Also called anther. (c) The hypopharynx, or a tongue-like prolongation of its apex. Huxley. [Rare.]

2. A language.—Frænum lingua. See frænum.—Ichthyosia lingua, peccaria lingua, tylosis lingua. Same as leucopædia.—Linguliform lingua. See linguliform.—Lingua. Fræna. [NL., lit., etc., lit. the Frank language, etc.] (a) A mixed language or jargon used by Frenchmen, Spaniards, Indians, etc., in intercourse with Arabs, Moors, Turks, and Greeks. It is Italian mixed with Arabic, Turkish, Greek, etc. Hence (b) Any hybrid tongue used similarly in other parts of the world; an international dialect.

What concern have we with the shades of dialect in Homer or Theocritus, provided they speak the spiritual lingua franca that abolishes all alienage of race, and makes whatever shore of time we land on hospitable and homelike?
Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 177.

Lingua geral (Pg. lit. general language), in Brazil, the language of the Guarani Indians: so called because used by Indians throughout Brazil in intercourse with other tribes, and also in dealings with the whites.—Lingua rustica (L. lit. rustic language), the form of ancient Latin as spoken by the common people: so called in contradistinction to classic Latin. It retained numerous archaisms throughout the classical period, and, rather than the literary form of Latin, has been regarded by many as the source of the vernacular part of the modern Romance languages.—Os lingua. See lingua.

linguacious (ling-gwā'ahus), a. [< LL. linguas (linguac), loquacious, < L. lingua, tongue: see lingual, a.] Talkative; loquacious. Bailey, 1727.

linguadental (ling-gwā'den'tal), a. and n. [Prop. linguidental*; < L. lingua, tongue (see lingual, a.), + dens (dent), a tooth: see dental.] Same as dentilingual.

lingual (ling'gwāl), a. and n. [= F. Sp. Pg. lingual = It. linguale, < NL. lingualis, of the tongue, < L. lingua, OL. lingua = E. tongue: see tongue.] I. a. 1. In anat. and zool.: (a) Of or pertaining to the tongue; glossal. (b) Of or pertaining to a lingua or any tongue-like part. See phrases.—2. Pronounced by or chiefly by the tongue: variously applied to sounds made with the tip or forward part of the tongue, as t, d, etc. (also called dental), or especially to the peculiar Sanskrit ṭ, ḍ, etc. (also called acuminal, corbreal), forming a distinct class from the Sanskrit d dentals, and pronounced with the tip of the tongue drawn back.—3. Relating or pertaining to utterance, or of the use of the tongue in speaking: as, lingual corruptions of words or language.

Here indeed becomes notable one great difference between our two kinds of civil war: between the modern lingual or Parliamentary-logical kind, and the ancient or manual kind in the steel battlefield.
Caryle, French Rev., II. i. 2. (Davies.)

Lingual appendages, the paraglossæ, or membranous outer lobes of the ligula.—Lingual artery, a branch of the external carotid, supplying the tongue and associated parts. It is in man the usual second branch of the carotid, arising between the superior thyroid and the facial; its termination is the ramus artery.—Lingual ganglion, lobula, etc. See the nouns.—Lingual nerve, the gustatory nerve, a portion of the third or inferior maxillary division of the trigeminal or fifth cranial nerve, supplying the tongue.—Lingual ribbon, in gastropodous mollusks, an expansive surface which bears the teeth; the radula or odontophore.—Lingual teeth, the rasping points or processes of the radula or lingual ribbon of a mollusk.—Lingual vein, the vein corresponding to the lingual artery.

ll. n. A letter pronounced in the manner described in l, 2.

lingualis (ling-gwá'lís), n.; pl. lingualia (-li-á).

[NL. (sc. os, bone), neut. of lingualis: see lingual.] The bone of the tongue, more fully called os linguae or os linguale; the hyoid bone, or os hyoides. See hyoid, n.

lingualis (ling-gwá'lís), n.; pl. linguales (-lís).

[NL. (sc. musculus, muscle): see lingual.] The proper muscle of the tongue; the muscular substance of the tongue which is not definitively attached to surrounding bony parts.

lingually (ling-gwá'l-í), adv. In a lingual manner; as relates to language.

Linguatula (ling-gwá'tú-lá), n. [NL, dim., < L. linguatus, tongue, < lingua, tongue: see lingual.] A genus of worm-like entoparasitic Arachnida, remarkable among air-breathing arthropods in having the appendages reduced to two pairs of minute hooks. The genus, containing some 30 species, is otherwise known as Pentastoma or Pentastomum, and with some writers constitutes an order, Pentastomida or Pentastomidae, of the class Arachnida. L. testicularis is 3 or 4 inches long.

Linguatulidae (ling-gwá'tú-lí-dé), n. pl. [NL., < Linguatula + -idae.] The only family of tonguelets or five-mouths, typified by the genus Linguatula, and constituting the order Linguatulina of the class Arachnida.

Linguatulina (ling-gwá'tú-lí-ná), n. pl. [NL., < Linguatula + -ina.] A group, ordinal or other, of entoparasitic vermiform arachnidans, represented by the family Linguatulidae, related to the mites or acarids, bear-animalcules or Aro-tiseca, and Pycnogonida; the tonguelets, tongue-worms, or five-mouths. In their mode of parasitism they singularly resemble cestoid worms, being found in the sessile or larval state in the lungs and liver of herbivorous animals, whence they are imported by carnivores, including man, in whose digestive and other passages they develop. The tonguelets are worm-shaped, ringed, and flattened; in the young state, when they resemble acarids, they have four legs, but when matured they have no external organs excepting two pairs of small hooks on the head, and a mouth. These hooks can be retracted into sheaths, the four openings of which, with the mouth, make five holes in the head, whence the alternative name of the creature, five-mouths or Pentastomum. Another name is Acanthothesa, from the sheathing of the hooks. See cut under Pentastomida.

lingue (ling-gwá'), n. [Chilian.] A Chilean tree, Fernex lingue, attaining a height of 90 feet. Its wood is valuable for use in furniture-making, and its bark for tanning.

linguist, a. [L. lingua; tongue, + E. -ed.] Tongued.

Honey-lingued Polyhymnia.
Middleton, World Tost at Tennis.

linguist (ling-gwét), n. Same as linguist (b).
linguiform (ling-gwí-fórm), a. [L. lingua, tongue (see lingual, a.), + forma, form.] Shaped like a tongue; linguulate: specifically, in entomology, said of processes or parts that are flat, somewhat linear, and rounded at the tip.

linguist (ling-gwíst), n. [= F. linguiste = Sp. linguista = Pg. It. linguista, < L. lingua, the tongue: see lingual, a.] 1. A person skilled in the use of languages; one who can speak several languages.

See Out. Have you the tongues?
Yes. My youthful travel therein made me happy. . . .
First Out. By your own report.
A linguist. Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 1. 57.

2. A student of language; a philologist.—3. A master of language or talk; a ready converser or talker.

Artamookes, the linguist, a bird that imitates and utters the sounds and tones of almost all the birds in the country.
Harriot, Virginia (1898).

I'll dispute with him;
He's a rare linguist. Webster.

linguist (ling-gwís-tér), n. [L. linguist + -er.] A dabbler in linguistics; a student of philology; a linguist. [Rare.]

Though he [Chance] did not and could not create our language (for he who writes to be read does not write for linguists), yet it is true that he first made it easy, and so that extent modern. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 305.

linguistic (ling-gwís-tík), a. [= Sp. linguístico; < linguist + -ic.] Of or pertaining to language, or to the study of languages; as, linguistic knowledge.

linguistically (ling-gwís-tí-kál-í), adv. In a linguistic manner or relation; as regards language or linguistics.

linguistics (ling-gwís-tíks), n. [Pl. of linguistic: see -ics.] The science of languages, or of the origin and history of words; the general and comparative study of human languages and of their elements. Also called comparative philology.

In linguistics . . . language itself, as one of the great characteristics of humanity, is the end, and the means are the study of general and comparative grammar.
G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., II.

linguistry (ling-gwís-trí), n. [L. linguist + -ry.] Linguistics. [Rare.]

lingula (ling-gú-lá), n.; pl. lingulae (-lís). [NL. use of L. lingula, lingula, dim. of lingua, tongue: see lingual. Cf. ligula, ligule.] 1. A little tongue or tongue-like part or process; a ligula. Specifically—(a) In embryol., a cartilaginous strap or bridge on each side of the end of the notochord, connecting the trabeculae cranii with the parachordal cartilage or basilar plate of the skull of the early embryo. (b) In anat., the posterior division of the anterior medullary velum or valve of Vieussens, marked by three or four transverse gray laminae, often regarded as the first lobe of the vermis superior of the cerebellum.

2. In zool.: (a) [cap.] The typical genus of Linguulidae. The species are numerous; they are mostly fossil, and go back to the Cambrian group, but several are still living. They are found in the sand of the seashores of most parts of the world, living buried in the sand about low-water mark. One is common on the coast of North Carolina. Its shell is bivalve, about an inch long, flattened, each valve shaped like the bottom of a smoothing-iron, and the two valves working loosely upon each other sidewise, not opening and shutting like those of bivalve mollusks. From the pointed and protruded stalk or peduncle from an inch to several inches long, of stiff gristly consistency, and this organ may be increased in a tube formed of sand, like the case of a tube-worm. The broad end of the shell is fringed with little processes. The shell is thin and of a horny texture. The appearance of a lingula is thus somewhat like that of a stalked barnacle or acorn-shell (Lepas), though the animal has no special affinity with a cirriped. The living American Linguulas are now placed in a restricted genus Glothidia, the one above described, best known as L. pyramidalis, being now called G. audeberti. See cut under Linguulidae. (b) Pl. Linguulas (-lís). Any species of the genus Lingula or family Linguulidae; a lingulid or tongue-shell.—Frenula lingula. See Frenula.—Lingula sphenoidalis, a small tongue-like process of the sphenoid bone on the outer side of the groove for the carotid artery.

lingular (ling-gú-lár), a. [L. lingua + -ar.] Of or pertaining to a lingula, especially that of the cerebellum.

In the child at birth the lingular folia are rounded and distinct. Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, VIII. 130.

lingulate (ling-gú-lát), a. [L. lingulatus, tongue-shaped, < lingula, dim. of lingua, tongue: see lingula, lingual.] Formed like a tongue; strap-shaped; ligulate.

Linguulidae (ling-gú-lí-dé), n. pl. [NL., < Lingula + -idae.] A family of lycopomatous brachiopods, with an elongate peduncle passing out between the valves or through a narrow channel in the hinge-margin, the brachial appendages fleshy and forming separate coils directed upward, the valves oblong or subcircular, and the shell horny. About 15 genera are referred to the family, all but two of which (Lingula and Glothidia) are extinct. See Lingula, 2 (a).

Lingula anatina.

A, ventral valve, with mantle-fringe; B, ventral valve, with mantle turned back; C, dorsal valve, with part of mantle cut away. a, a, anterior; a', posterior adductor muscles; b, brachial vessels; c, capsule of pedicle; c', intestine; d, liver; m, mantle-margin; n, visceral sheath; o, esophagus; p, posterior; p', central adductors; r, anterior retractor or ocellus; r', posterior adductors; s (central) stomach; s', marginal suture; v, vent.

linguliferous (ling-gú-lí-fér-us), a. [L. lingua + L. ferre = E. bear.] Containing or abounding in remains of lingulas.

linguloid (ling-gú-lóid), a. [L. lingua + -oid.] Resembling or belonging to the genus Lingula: as, linguloid shells.

lingwort (ling-wért), n. The white hellebore, Veratrum album.

lingy (ling-í), a. [L. ling + -y.] Abounding in ling; heathy.

His cell was upon a lingy moor.
T. Ward, England's Reformation, p. 305. (Devon.)

lingy (lín-í), a. [With altered vowel as in linger, < long + -y.] In second sense of long, lingy; in third sense of linger. 1. Tall; limber; flexible.—2. Active; strong; able to bear fatigue.—3. Idle; loitering. [Prov. Eng. in all uses.] (Halliwell.)

linhay (lín-há), n. [Also linny; appar. < lean + hay?; equiv. to lean-to, dial. inter.] An open shed attached to a farm-yard. [Eng.]

I went to the upper linhay, and took our new light pony sled.
H. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xlv.

liniation, n. See lineation.

linigerous (lí-ní-jér-us), a. [L. liniger, linen-wearing (< linum, flax, linen: see lin), + gerere, bear.] Bearing flax; producing linen.

liniment (lín-i-mént), n. [F. liniment = Sp. linimento, linimiento = Pg. It. linimento, < LL. linimentum, a soft ointment, < linere, rarely linere, smear. Cf. letter, perhaps from the same source.] In med., a liquid preparation for external application, especially one of an oily consistency.

This Fuller's-earth, Cimulua, is of a cooling nature, and being used in the form of a liniment, it stancheth immoderate sweats.
Holland, tr. of Pliny, xxv. 17.

linimentum (lín-i-mén-tum), n.; pl. linimenta (-tá). [LL.: see liniment.] In phar., a liniment: the official name.

linin (lí-nín), n. [L. linum, flax (see lin), n., + -in.] The crystallizable bitter principle of Linum catharticum, or purging-flax.

lining (lí-níng), n. [Verbal n. of line, v.] The act of measuring, as land, with a line; a fixing of boundaries; specifically, permission granted by a dean of gild to erect or alter a building according to specified conditions. [Scotch.]

lining (lí-níng), n. [Verbal n. of line, v.] 1. The covering of the inner surface of anything, as of a garment, a box, a wall, or the like. The word is applicable especially when the inner face is formed of different material from that forming the body or exterior.

Was I deceived, or did a sable cloud
Turn forth her silver lining on the night?
Milton, Comus, l. 332.

Specifically—(a) In mill. engin., a wooden sheeting to support the top and sides of the galleries and the sides of the shafts of a mine. (b) In carp., the inside boarding, or the felt fabric, paper, or other material, put on the inside of walls, floors, partitions, etc. (c) In metal-working, the flat blank or other refractory material placed within a blast-furnace or converter to resist high temperatures. (d) The padding or tenculous clay put on the back of a dam or the embankment of a canal to prevent the infiltration of water. (e) A piece of canvas sewed on any part of a sail to preserve it against injury by chafing. Tribune Book of Sports, p. 352.

2. In a figurative use, contents.

The lining of his coffers shall make coats
To deck our soldiers. Shak., Rich. II., I. 4. 61.

My money is spent;
Can I be content
With pockets deprived of their lining?
The Lady's Deputy; or, Man-Midwife's Defence (1788), p. 4 (N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 205).

3. The jacket of a steam-boller or cylinder—an inverted use.—4. In marble-working, the process of cementing back to back with plaster of Paris two pieces of marble, so that they can be ground on two or on all four faces, as if they were one piece.—Basic lining. See basic.

lining-brush (lí-níng-brush), n. A brush for marking lines; specifically, in theaters, a brush for painting wrinkles on the face.

lining-felt (lí-níng-felt), n. See felt.

lining-nail (lí-níng-nál), n. A small nail with a hemispherical head, used in upholstery-work.

lining-paper (lí-níng-pé-pér), n. Any paper used as a lining. Specifically—(a) In bookbinding, the plain or ornamented paper pasted on the inside of the cover, which aids in connecting the book proper with the binding. (b) In building, paper (generally made waterproof) intended to the studding of frame buildings before nailing on the weather-boarding. It is more commonly called sheathing. Such paper is also used under slates and shingles in roofing.

lining-strip (lí-níng-strip), n. One of a series of wooden or metal strips fixed on the inside of freight- or baggage-cars to protect the car from injury by the freight. Car-Builder's Dict.

linisus (lí-nís-kus), n.; pl. linis (-í). [NL., < Gr. linisus, dim. of linos, a line, cord: see lin.] In ornith., one of the little lines or traces which form reticulations on the tarsal envelop. [Rare.]

link (línk), n. [ME. "lenke, < AS. lencas = Icel. lenkr = Sw. länk = Norw. länk, a link, = Dan. lænke, a chain; cf. MHG. reine, gelenke, a bending, esp. the main bend or joint of the body, G. gelenk, a joint (knee, wrist, or other joint of the body), also a link, ring; from a noun not found in AS., but represented by E. link = OHG. lancas, lancas, lancas, MHG. lancas, the hinge, the bend of the body (< MHG. G. länk, bend, turn): see länk.] 1. One of the rings or separate pieces of which a chain is composed. In ornamental chain-making, any member of the chain, of whatever form, as a plaque, a bead, etc., is called a link.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit.

Shak., J. C., I. 3. 94.

Untwining his gold chain from his neck, Belshazzar . . .
said, "Then look that none of the links find their way to the wine-house."

Scott, Quentin Durward, v.

2. Anything doubled and closed together like a ring or division of a chain.

Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., v. 1. 23.

Then down came Queen Marie

WI' gold links in her hair.

Mary Hamilton (Child's Ballads, III. 329).

3. Anything which serves to connect one thing or one part of a thing with another; any constituent part of a connected series.

As nature has framed the several species of beings as it were in a chain, so man seems to be placed as the middle link between angels and brutes.

Spectator, No. 408.

4. A division, forming the hundredth part, of the chain used in surveying and for other measurement. In Gunter's chain of 66 feet the link is 7.92 inches. The chain of 100 feet, with link of a foot, is used in the United States exclusively in engineering work, and often in surveying.

5. One of the divisions of a sausage made in a continuous chain. [Colloq.]

Then followed seven camels loaded with links and chitterlings, hog's puddings and sausages.

Urquhart, tr. of Babelala, II. 2. (Davies.)

6. Any rigid movable piece connected with other pieces, generally themselves movable, by means of interlinked open ends or pivots about which it can turn.—7. In a steam-engine, the link-motion.—Link cent. See cent.—Missing link.

(a) Something lacking for the completion of a series or sequence of any kind; a desiderated connecting-link. The term has been used especially with reference to animal forms not found in the supposed unbroken line of development from primordial germs by natural variation and "the survival of the fittest." (b) In evolution, specifically, an unknown hypothetical form of animal life in any evolutionary chain or series, assumed to have existed at some time and thus to have been the connecting-link between some known forms; especially, an anthropomorphic animal supposed to have been derived from some simian and to have been the immediate ancestral stock of the human race; hence, humorously, an ape or monkey taken as such the connecting-link for which Darwinians seek. See Atalua.

The lowest races of men will soon become extinct, like the Tasmanians, and the highest Apes cannot long survive. Hence the intermediate forms of the past, if any there were, become of still greater importance. For such missing links, we must look to the caves and later Tertiary of Africa. O. C. Marsh, Proc. of Amer. Ass. for Adv. of Sci., 1877, p. 256.

Link¹ (link), v. [link, n.,] I. trans. To unite or connect by or as if by a link or links; unite by something intervening; unite in any way; couple; join.

They're so link'd in friendship
That young Prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

Shak., 3 Hen. VI., iv. 1. 116.

In notes with many a winding bout

Of linked sweetness long drawn out.

Milton, L'Allegro, l. 140.

Link towns to towns with avenues of oak.

Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. ll. 280.

Linked ring. See ring.

II. intrans. To be or become connected; be joined in marriage; ally one's self; form a union.

Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,
Is Edward your true king? for I were loath
To link with him that were not lawful chosen.

Shak., 3 Hen. VI., ill. 3. 115.

The flickering fairy-circles wheel'd and broke Flying, and link'd again.

Tennyson, Guinevere.

Link² (link), n. [A dial. and more orig. form of link¹, q. v.] 1. A crook or winding of a river; the ground lying along such a winding; as, the links of the Forth. [Scotch.]—2. pl. A stretch of flat or slightly undulating ground on the sea-shore, often in part sandy and covered with bent-grass, furze, etc., and sometimes with a good sward, on part of it at least. [Scotch.]—3. pl. The ground on which golf is played.—Link goose. See goose.

Link³ (link), n. [A corruption of link², orig. link, a torch; see link¹.] A torch made of tow or hards, etc., and pitch, carried for lighting the streets, formerly common in Great Britain, and still used in London in fogs.

Those that, seeking to light a Link, quenched a Lamp.
Lyle, Epiphany and his England, p. 240.

This place is so haunted with bats that their perpetual rattling endanger'd the putting out our links.

Boswell, Diary, Feb. 7, 1645.

Link⁴ (link), v. t. [link³, n.,] To burn or give light. [Prov. Eng.]

Link⁵ (link), v. t. [Origin obscure; cf. link².] To go smartly; trip along; do anything smartly and quickly. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

They reel'd, they set, they cross'd, they cleekit,
Till like carline swat and reekit,
And coost her duddles to the work,
And linket at it in her sark. Burns, Tam o' Shanter.

Linkage (ling'kāj), n. [link + -age.] 1. A system of connected links; a combination of pieces pivoted together so as to turn about one another in parallel planes of rotation. Sometimes the meaning is extended to embrace cases where the motions are not in parallel planes; and such a linkage is termed a solid, as opposed to a plane linkage.

In Chapter xi. we arrive at the study "beam linkages"—that is, "flat static structures containing beam links."

Kemp's Linkage for trisecting an angle.

The Engineer, LXVIII. 207.

2. The state of being linked together.

Brühl showed that in case of "double-linkage" each such carbon-atom has a refraction equivalent to about 6.1.

Jour. Franklin Inst., CXXIII. 74.

Complete linkage, a linkage whose parts are so jointed that they can move only in one way relatively to one another.—Primary, secondary, etc., linkage, a linkage which has one, two, etc., degrees of freedom more than a complete linkage.

Link-belt (ling'bel'ting), n. A belt for the transmission of power, composed of a series of detachable links.

Link-block (ling'blok), n. In steam-engines, the block, sometimes attached to a valve-stem, actuated by the link-motion.

Linkboy (ling'boy), n. A boy or man who carries a link or torch to light passengers in the streets of a city. Improved street-lighting has made the employment of linkboys generally unnecessary; but they are still required in London during the dense fogs frequently occurring there.

Then shalt thou walk, unharm'd, the dangerous night,
Nor need th' officious link-boy's smoky light.

Gay, Trivia, III. 114.

Linkistery, n. A corrupt form of linguistery.

There was one Redman suspected to have betrayed their pinnace, for he, being Linkistery (because he could speak the language), and being put out of that employment for his evil carriage, did bear ill will to the master.

Wintthrop, Hist. New England, II. 220.

Link-lever (ling'lev'er), n. In a steam-engine, a lever by which the link of a link-motion valve-gear is controlled by the attending engineer; in particular, the reversing-lever of a locomotive engine.

Linkman (ling'man), n.; pl. linkmen (-men).

A man employed to carry a link or torch to light passengers. See linkboy.

Link-motion (ling'kmo'shon), n. 1. A system of pieces pivoted together, and turning about pivots attached to a fixed base, all the rotations being in the same plane or parallel planes, so that all the points describe definite curves; a complete linkwork. Link-motions have been deeply studied by mathematicians, especially since 1864, the date of the discovery of the Peaucellier cell. The problems involved are exceedingly difficult, as well as practically of no little importance. Any algebraic curve whatever may be drawn by a suitable link-motion. See Peaucellier cell, under cell.

Link-motion.

Specifically—2. In steam-engines, a system of gearing for controlling the valves for the purpose of starting or reversing the engine, and for controlling the cut-off. See valve-gear. The link-motion combines in itself a variable cut-off by which the expansion of the steam can be diminished or increased as the resistance to the engine increases or diminishes, and reversing mechanism whereby the engine may be caused to reverse the motion of its crank-shaft as desired in locomotives, marine engines, and some kinds of stationary engines.

Starting ahead or astern is effected by link-motion.

Lucas, Seamanship, p. 225.

Linkpin (ling'pin), n. A dialectal variant of link-pin.

Link-rooming (ling'ro'ming), n. Naut., the operation of filling up the spiral depressions of a rope by means of chains wound into these depressions. The chains thus inserted make the surface of the rope more uniform, and protect the softer parts from abrasion.

Linkwork (ling'werk), n. A linkage pivoted to a fixed base.—Complete linkwork, a linkwork whose parts can move but in one way relative to the base; a link-motion.

Link, n. See link².

Linnaea (li-nē'a), n. [NL. (Gronovius, 1742), named after Linnaeus, a celebrated naturalist;

see Linnaea.] A genus of caprifoliaceous plants of the tribe Linnoideae. It is characterized by imbricate calyx-lobes, drooping three-lobed many-seeded fruit, and long two-flowered peduncles. The only species is L. borealis. See twain-flower.

Linnet (li-nē't), n. [Linnaeus (see Linnaeus) + -et.] A native sulphid of cobalt, of a tin-white color, crystallizing in octahedral crystals, also occurring massive. Siegenite is a nickeliferous variety.

Linnaean, Linnaean (li-nē'an), a. [Linnaeus (see def.) + -an.] Pertaining to Carolus Linnaeus or Carl Linné (called Carl von Linné when ennobled in 1761), a celebrated Swedish naturalist (1707-78).—Linnaean system, in bot., the system of classification introduced by Linnaeus. This was the artificial, as contrasted with the later-developed natural system of Jussieu. Its fundamental division is into 24 classes, the last of which consists of plants without stamens and petals, the Cryptogamia, the other 23 being the Phanerogamia. The latter classes are based on the stamens, their number, insertion, connection with each other, etc. The orders are founded mostly on the number of styles or stigmas, some of them on characters relating to the fruits, others again on the number of stamens in classes which are not defined by the stamens, and some on other considerations. The Cryptogamia were divided into Filices (ferns), Musci (mosses), Algae (including, besides the seaweeds, the Hepatica, Lichenes, etc.), and Fungi (the mushroom, etc.). This gave a definite and convenient scheme, of no scientific value in classification, but exceedingly useful in its day as a key to the nomenclature of botany. Compare Jussieuian.

linnet, a. and n. An obsolete spelling of linnet.

Linnet (lin'et), n. [ME. līnet, līnot, < AS. līneta, a linnet; mixed in ME. with OF. līnot, F. līnot, m., līnotin, f., a linnet; so called from their feeding on flaxseed, < L. linum, flax; see linet, n. Cf. the related linch, n. Cf. G. hānfling, a linnet, < hans, hemp.] 1. A small song-bird, Linaria or Linota cannabina, of the family Fringillidae, inhabiting parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa. It is about 5½ inches long, and 9½ in extent of wings. The plumage is streaked with various gray, Linnet (Linota cannabina).

brown, and flaxen shades; the male in summer has the poll and breast rosy or red. The linnet is called gray, brown, and red or rose, according to sex and season; it has also many local or dialectal names. The yellow-billed linnet, mountain-linnet, or twite is another species of the same genus, L. flavirostris or L. montana. There are yet other species, and sundry related birds also are called linnets, as the redpolls of the genus Agelaius. The bird called pine-linnet or pine-finch in the United States is a salix, Chrysomitris pinus.

2. An ore which contains phosphate intermixed with carbonate of lead in variable proportions: so called on account of the linnet-like color due to the presence of the phosphate. [Prov. Eng. (Derbyshire).]—Chevy, French, red, red-headed, and rose linnet, the redpoll.—Seven-colored linnet, the goldfinch, Carduelis elegans.

Linnet-finch (lin'et-finch), n. Same as linnet, 1.

Linnet-hole (lin'et-höl), n. [Linnet, a corruption of F. linette, + hole.] One of the circular or semicircular holes in the upper part of the sides of a glass-melting furnace, through which flame and smoke pass into the arch.

linot, n. [F. linon, lawn; see linon.] A silk gossamer stuff. Davies.

He absolutely insisted upon presenting me with a complete suit of gauze linot.

Mme. D'Arbigny, Diary (1780), l. 510. (Davies.)

Linociera (li-nō-si'e-rā), n. [NL. (O. Swartz, 1797), named after G. Lincoier, a French physician.] A genus of oleaceous trees or shrubs of the tribe Oleaceae. It is characterized by long linear petals, free or sometimes united in pairs, a hard drupeous fruit, and flowers usually growing in lateral cymes. The leaves are opposite and entire. There are about 40 species, found throughout all the tropical regions of the globe. L. tectoraria of Jamaica, a large tree with panicle of white flowers, is called manzanillo. L. guyanensis, of the same name and other West Indian islands, is called Jamaican rosewood.

linoleic (lī-nō'lē-ik), a. [< L. linum, flax, + oleum, oil. Cf. linoleum.] Related to, existing in, or containing the oil of linseed.—linoleic acid, an acid found in linseed-oil and other drying-oils, forming with glycerol the glycerid linolein.

linolein (lī-nō'lē-in), n. [< (linoleic) + -in.] The glycerid of linoleic acid; the constituent of linseed-oil and other drying-oils on which their drying property depends.

linoleum (lī-nō'lē-um), n. [A trade-name, intended to mean 'linseed-oil cloth'; < L. linum, flax, + oleum, oil: see linel and oil.] A kind of floor-cloth made of linseed-oil which has been oxidized to a dense rubber-like consistency. This is accomplished in various ways, usually by allowing the oil to flow very slowly over a large concrete floor across which warm air is blown. This material is ground up with cork-cuttings, passed through iron rollers, and attached to a coarse canvas. The back of the canvas receives a coat of paint.

linon (lī'nŏn), n. [F., lawn, fine linen; < Lin, < L. linum, flax, linen: see linel.] Lawn. [Trade use.]

linota (lī-nō'tā), n. [NL., < F. linot, a linnet: see linnet.] Same as Linaria, 2 (b).

linotype (līn'ŏ-tip), n. A machine in which stereotyped lines (of words) are produced, for use in printing.

linous (lī'nus), a. [< line² + -ous.] Relating to or in a line. Sir J. Herschel. [Rare.]

lin-pin (līn'pin), n. Same as linch-pin. [Prov. Eng.]

linquet (līng'kwet), n. 1. A tongue; a lanquet. —2. The piece of a sword-hilt which turns down over the mouthpiece of a scabbard.

linsang (līn'sang), n. [E. Ind.] 1. A kind of civet-cat found in Java, etc., banded with black and white, and having 38 teeth. Prionodon (Linsang) gracilis. A related African species, Prionodon (Poiana) richardsoni, is known as the Guinea linsang.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of Viverridae, now commonly called Prionodon.

linset, n. [ME., < AS. lynniss (pl. lynniss), glossing L. (ML.) axello, corruptly axello, an axle, = D. lunn, lens = MLG. lunsac, lusse, L.G. lunso = OHG. lunisa, MHG. luna, lunse, G. linno, OHG. also lun, luna, MHG. lun, lune, OHG. also lunnig, MHG. linnic, MHG. also linier, linch-pin (root uncertain; some uncertainty exists as to the forms).] An axle. William de Shoreham, Poems (ed. Wright), p. 109.

linseed (līn'sēd), n. [Formerly also lintseed; < ME. linsede, linsede, lyncode, < AS. linsēd, flaxseed, < lin, flax, + sēd, seed: see linel and seed.] The seed of lint or flax; flaxseed.

linseed-oake (līn'sēd-kāk'), n. The solid mass of cake which remains when oil is expressed from flaxseed. It is much used as food for cattle and sheep. Also called oil-cake.

linseed-meal (līn'sēd-mēl'), n. The meal of linseed or flaxseed, used for poultices and as a cattle-food.

linseed-mill (līn'sēd-mil), n. A form of mill for grinding flaxseed.

linseed-oil (līn'sēd-ŏil'), n. A drying-oil produced by pressure from linseed, varying in color from light amber to dark yellow. Cold-drawn or cold-pressed linseed-oil is obtained from the crushed seeds without heat. Raw or ordinary linseed-oil is produced by steaming the crushed seeds before expressing the oil. The yield is from 20 to 25 per cent. of oil. Boiled linseed-oil is obtained by boiling the raw oil with litharge, sugar of lead, or some similar substance, the result being a dark oil drying more rapidly than the raw oil. Linseed-oil is used as a vehicle for colors by painters, for printing-inks, varnishes, linoleum, etc.

linseil, n. [< OF. linsel, linsel, linsiel, m., linen cloth; cf. linole, lincote, l., also linpaol, linpaol, linpaol, linsuel, etc., a linen cloth or sheet, F. linneul, a winding-sheet, < L. linoleum, dim. of linum, linen (see lincerie), < L. linum, flax, linen: see linel. Cf. linsey-woolsey.] A cloth of wool and linen mixed together; a garment of such cloth. Richardson.

(tasting a thyn course linsel ore his shoulders,
That torne in pieces trayld upon the ground.
Corrante (1594).

linsey (līn'sī), n. [A corruption of linseil. In part an abbr. of linsey-woolsey.] 1. Cloth made of linen and wool; linsey-woolsey.

O hand awa thae linen sheets,
And bring to me the linsy clouts
I have been best used in.

Barb Richard (Child's Ballads, III. 400).

In 1704 was advertised "Three Suites of Hanging: one of Forrest Tapestry, one of clouded Camlet, and one of blue Printed Linsey."

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 64.
2. In coal-mining: (a) A peculiar kind of clayey rock; bind. (b) A streaky sandstone. [Eng.]

linsey-woolsey (līn'sī-wŏl'sī), n. and a. [Early mod. E. linsey-woolsey, linsewoolste, lynsewoolste, lynsey-woolste; < late ME. lynsey woolste; < linseil + wool; the term -sey being a reduction of -sel in the first element, repeated in the second, and perhaps due in part to imitation of jersey and kersey.] 1. n. 1. A coarse and stout material of which the warp is linen and the wool woollen.

To weave all in one loom.

A web of lynse (lynse in Byce's ed.) wales.

Shelton, Why Come you not to Court? I. 128.

These are the arts we think most fit to go together: . . .
Lynsey weavers; Tiko weavers; Silk weavers; Lynsey woolsey weavers.

Letter to Sney's Cecil (1607).

His wares consist of hose—linsey woolsey, for making petticoats, . . . and all sorts of small wares.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 480.

2. A similar material into which cotton enters either with or without linen. The attempt has been made to reserve the word linsey for a mixture of linen and wool and woolsey for a mixture of cotton and wool. The compound term would then signify a stuff made of all three materials in certain proportions.

3. Inferior fabrics of doubtful or uncertain materials: a term of depreciation.—4. Anything unsuitably mixed; a farrago of nonsense; jargon; gibberish.

What linsey-woolsey hast thou to speak to us again?

Shak., All's Well, IV. 1. 13.

II. a. 1. Made of linen and wool mixed.—2. Of different and unsuitable parts; neither one thing nor another; ill-assorted.

And Balsams wages doe move many still to make such linsey-woolsey marriages. Purshas, Pilgrimage, p. 38.

A lawless linsey-woolsey brother,

Half of one order, half another.

S. Butler, Hudibras, I. III. 1227.

No flimsy linsey-woolsey scenes I write,

With patches here and there like Joseph's coat.

Churchill, The Apology.

linstock, lintstock (līn'-, līnt'stok), n. [Early mod. E. also linestock, linstoke; for lintstock, < D. lontstok, < lont, a match for firing cannon, + stock, stick: see lint and stock.] A pointed staff with a crotch or fork at one end to hold a lighted match, used in firing cannon.

A linstock fell into a barrel of powder, and set it on fire together with the vessel. Stowe, Queen Elizabeth, an. 1563.

And the nimble runner

With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,

And down goes all before them.

Shak., Hen. V., III. (cho.).

lint (līnt), n. [Also dial. linnet; appar. < ME. lin, flax (see linel, n.). Cf. Don. linned, linen cloth.] 1. Flax. [Obsolete or local.]

I have sene flax or lynt growyng wilde in Sommerset shyre.

Turner, Herbal.

The frugal wife, garrulous, will tell How 't [chooses] was a townend auld, sin' lint was 't the bell.

Burns, Cottar's Saturday Night.

2. A flocculent material procured by raveling or scraping linen, and used for dressing wounds and sores; charpie.—3. Raw cotton that has been ginned and is ready for baling.—4. Fluff; flue.

He's brushing a hat almost a quarter of an hour, and as long a driving the lint from his black cloaths with his wet thumb.

Sir R. Howard, The Committee, II.

5. A net.—6. The netting of a pound or seine. E. H. Knight.—7. A kerchief or net for the head.

There's never lint gang on my head,

Nor came gang in my hair.

Lord Lintington (Child's Ballads, III. 346).

lint², n. An obsolete variant of lint.
lint-dor (līnt'dŏr), n. In calico-printing, a knife-edged scraper arranged on the delivering side of a calico-printing machine, in such relation with the printed web that it scrapes off and retains loose lint, fluff, or fragments of threads which might otherwise adhere to and disfigure the fabric.

lintel (līn'tel), n. [< ME. lintel, lyntell, < OF. lintel, F. linteau = Sp. lintel, dintel, < ML. lintellus, head-piece of a door or window, for limitellus*, dim. of L. limes (limit), a boundary, border (cf. limes, a threshold): see limit. Cf. lintern.] In arch., a horizontal piece of timber or stone resting on the jambs of a door or window, or spanning any other open space in a wall or in a columnar construction, and serving to support superincumbent weight.

When he com to the halle dore he wrote letteres on the lintel of the dore in Grewe. Mervin (E. E. T. S.), III. 498.

At the bottom of the steps is a roundheaded doorway, not, it is true, surmounted by a true arch, but by a curved lintel of one stone.

J. Ferguson, Hist. Indian Arch., p. 282.

The immense batton doors with gratings over the lintel. G. W. Cable, Old Creole Days, p. 247.

lintel², n. See lintel.

linter (līn'tēr), n. [< lin² + -er.] A machine for stripping off the short-staple cotton-fiber which adheres to cotton-seed after ginning, preparatory to extraction of oil from the seed. The cotton thus removed is used in the manufacture of cotton batting and for other purposes. Also linter-machine.

linter² (līn'tēr), n. A corrupt dialectal form of lean-to.

linter³, n. [A var. of lintel, appar. by confusion with OF. linter, linter, a threshold, as if *< ML. limitarium, < L. limes (limit), bound, limit, but with sense of L. limes (limit), threshold: see lintel.] Same as lintel.

And with the blood thereof [a lamb] coloured the post and linter of the dore. Halegh, Hist. World, II. III. 4.

I read these two verses written in golden letters upon the linter of the dore, at the entering into the Inne.

Coryat, Crudities, I. 15.

litle (līn'ti), n. [Dim. of linnet, or a reduction of the equiv. linwhite.] The linnet. [Scotch.]

But I dinna see the broom

Wi' its tassels on the lea,

Nor hear the litle's sang

O' my ain countrie.

R. Giffan.

lintseed, n. An obsolete form of linseed.

lintstock, n. See linstock.

lintwhite (līnt'hwti), n. [< ME. (Sc.) lyntquhite, corrupted from AS. līnwtige, līnwtigle, a linnet, so called from frequenting flax-fields, < lin, flax (see linel, and cf. linnet), + -twige, -twigle (seen also in thisteltwige, a linnet), of uncertain origin.] 1. A linnet. Also lintwhite, [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Of Larkes, of lyntquhites, that luffyehe songene.

Morte Arture (E. E. T. S.), I. 2674.

In vain to me, in plen or shaw,

The mavis an' the lyntquhite sing.

Burns, Again Rejoicing Nature Sees.

Her song the lyntquhite swelleth.

Tennison, Claribel.

2. A skylark or wood-warbler. [Prov. Eng.]

lint-white (līnt'hwti), a. [< lin² + white.] As white as lint or flax; flaxen.

Lease wi' the lintwhite locks,

Wilt thou be my dearie, O?

Burns, Lease wi' the Lintwhite Locks.

linter-white, n. Same as lintwhite.

linum (lī'nŭm), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), < L. linum = Gr. λινον = W. lin, flax: see linel.] A genus of dicotyledonous papilionaceous plants, of the natural order Linaceae, tribe Eulineeae. They are herbs, often slightly woody, characterized by regular five-parted flowers, with often showy but fugacious petals, usually yellow or blue in color, and by entire sepals and leaves. There are about 100 species, growing in both hemispheres, many of which are ornamental. L. usitatissimum is the flax of commerce, and the seeds of the same are the source of linseed-oil. L. perenne, called perennial flax, is a very handsome blue-flowered species, abundant in the northern parts of the United States, and having a wide distribution through Europe and Asia.

liny (lī'ni), a. [< line² + -y.] Full of lines; resembling a line; marked with lines.

Then there rose to view a fane

Of liny marble. Keats, Sleep and Poetry.

Shaping their eyes long and liny, partly because of the light.

T. Hardy, Far from the Maddening Crowd, VII.

linyphia (lī-nī'fī-yi), n. [NL., < MGr. λινυφία, λινυφία, weaving linen, < Gr. λινον, flax, linen, + φάειν, weave: see weave.] 1. A Latreillean genus of spiders of the family Theridiidae. L. marmorata is noted for its large domed web, under which it lies in wait for its prey to be entangled in a maze of threads that reach two or three feet upward in the bush. L. communis constructs a double web, with one sheet over the other, and hides between the two.

2. [l. c.] A spider of this genus.

lioccephalus (lī-ŏ-sef'g-lus), n. [NL. (J. E. Gray, 1827, as Leiocephalus), < Gr. λειος, smooth (= L. levis), + κεφαλή, head.] A genus of American iguanoid lizards, having no anal or femoral pores, and the back and tail crested. There are many species, natives of tropical America and the West Indies, known as roquets, as L. carinatus, the keeled roquet.

liodera (lī-ŏd'g-rā), n. [NL. (Fitzinger, 1843), also Liodesira; < Gr. λειος, smooth, + δέρμα (for derma), skin.] A genus of South American iguanoid lizards, containing such as L. chilensis, L. gravenhorstii, and L. gracilis. Also spelled Leiodera.

liodere (lī-ŏ-dēr), n. A lizard of the genus Liodesira. Also spelled liodere.

liodermatide (lī-ŏ-dēr-mat'ī-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Owen, 1841), < Lioderma, the typical genus (< Gr. λειος, smooth, + δέρμα (for derma), the skin), + -ida.] A family of holothurians, commonly called Molpadidae. Also Liodermatid.

liodon (lī-ŏ-dŏn), n. [NL., < Gr. λειος, smooth, + δόντις (for don) = E. tooth.] A genus of Cretaceous mosasaurian or pylonomorph reptiles, with smooth compressed teeth fitted for eating, and lenticular in sectional outline. See original species was described by Owen in 1841, from the Chalk of Norfolk. Large forms abounded in America during the same period. L. proriges of the Kansas beds was 75 feet long. L. degener was still larger. Also spelled Leiodon.

Idioglossa (i-d'glos's), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. leidō, γλωσσος, smooth-tongued, < leio, smooth, + glossa, the tongue.] A primary division of octopod cephalopods, characterized by the non-development of a radula. The only known forms belong to the family Chroteuthidae. Also spelled Leioglossa.

Idioglossate (i-d'glos'sāt), a. [As Idioglossa + -ate.] Smooth-tongued; having no radula, as a member of the group Idioglossa. Also spelled leioioglossate.

Idolepis (i-d'ol'e-pis), n. [NL., < Gr. leios, smooth, + lepis, a scale, rind, husk; see lepis.] A genus of acrodont agamoid lizards, having the skin of the sides expandible into wing-like organs supported on long spurious ribs, the scales small and ecarinate, the tympanum naked, and femoral pores present. L. sulcatus is a flying-dragon of the Malay peninsula and China, about 20 inches long. Also spelled Leolepis.

Homomyoma (i-h'om'i-m'g), n.; pl. Homomyomata (-mā-tā). [NL., < Gr. leios, smooth, + NL. myoma.] A myoma composed of smooth (that is, non-striated) muscle-fiber. Also spelled leiomomyoma.

Ion (i'on), n. [Early mod. F. also lyon; < ME. lion, houen, lyoun, lion, also leoun, leoun, leoun, < AF. lion, OF. lion, leoun, F. lion = Pr. leo = Sp. león = Pg. leão = It. leone, lione = AS. leod (gen. dat. leōn, dat. also leōne, leōnan) = OS. leo = OFries. lawa, NFries. houwe = D. leeuw = MLG. lauwe, LG. louwe, lauwe = OHG. leowe, louwo, MHG. lewe, louwe, lūwe, G. löwe = Icel. leó, león, ljón = Sw. lejon = Dan. løve (cf. OBulg. lŭv = Bulg. lŭv = Serv. lav = Bohem. lev = Pol. lew = Russ. levŭ = Lith. leovan, lavas = Lett. lauvas, all < OHG.) = Croatian ljun = Albanian luan, < L. leo (leōn), < Gr. leōn (leōn), a lion; prob. of Semitic or Egyptian origin; cf. Heb. lābī, OEgypt. labu, Coptic labaf, a lion.] 1. A quadruped of the genus Felis, F. leo, the largest of all carnivorous animals, distinguished by its tawny or yellow color, a full flowing mane in the male, a tufted tail, and the disappearance

8. [cop.] In astron., a constellation and sign of the zodiac. See Leo, 1.

Now next to this opposition, which in the signs shall be of the Leones. Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 880.

4. In her., a representation of a lion used as a bearing. There are various attitudes in which it is represented, forming as many different bearings, viz: passant, passant gardant or leopard, passant regardant, rampant, rampant gardant, rampant regardant, salient, combatant (when two lions are rampant and face to face, also called counter-rampant), stant, stant gardant, sejant, couchant, and coward. (See these words.) Further modifications of these bearings may exist, but are rare. Anciently the blazon was "a lion" only when the creature was rampant; when passant gardant, as on the shield of England, it was called lion leopard, and also leopard. The lion is always langued and armed gules unless the field is gules, when it is langued and armed azure.

No Mon heide scheld of schritte; The denel ston lyk a lyon rampunt.

Hy Rodd (E. E. T. S.), p. 148.

git to know naddil is xv maneris of Monys in armys. Books of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), l. 98.

5. (a) A gold coin current in Scotland from the time of Robert III. to the reign of James VI.: so called from the lion on the obverse of the coin.

Obverse. Lion. Reverse.

Under Mary it was worth 44 shillings Scotch; under James VI. (when it was called the lion noble), 74 shillings Scotch. Half-lions were also coined. (b) A copper coin: same as hardhead, 2.—6. An object of interest and curiosity; especially, a celebrated or conspicuous person who is much sought by society or by the public in general: as, to visit the lions of the place; such a one is the lion of the day. The use is an extension of lion in its literal sense, with reference to the lions formerly kept at the Tower in London. See the first quotation.

The lions of the Tower are the origin of that application of the term lion to any conspicuous spectacle or personage which has long since become universal.

Lecky, Eng. in 18th Cent., iv.

Such society was far more enjoyable than that of Edinburgh, for here was not a lion, but a man. J. Wilson.

After dinner the palanquins went forward with my servant, and the captain and I took a ride to see the lions of the neighborhood. Macaulay, in Trevelyan, I. 384.

A lion in the way. (a) A danger or obstacle to be faced and overcome.

Lancelot shouted, "Stay me not! I have been the sluggard, and I ride apace, For now there is a lion in the way."

Tennyson, Holy Grail.

(b) An imaginary danger, trumped up by cowards or sloth.

The slothful man saith, There is a lion in the way: a lion is in the streets. Prov. xxvi. 13.

They fear'd not the bug-bear danger nor the lion in the way that the sluggish and timorous Politician thinks he sees. Milnes, Reformation in Eng., II.

American lion, mountain lion. Same as cougar.—Blanch lion. See blanch.—British lion, the lion as the national emblem of Great Britain.

The British lion . . . cannot always have a worthy enemy to combat, or a battle royal to deliver. Thackeray, Virginians, lrv.

Lion dollar. See dollar.—Lion of Cotswold or Cotswold lion, a sheep. [Prov. Eng.]

Lo then the mystery from whence the name Of Cotswold lions first to England came.

Harrington, Epigr., B. III. Ep. 13. (Nares.)

Lion of St. Mark, a symbolical lion represented as winged, and holding an open book, on which is written pascha, Nares, Evangelist, mens, or a part of this. It is the characteristic device of Venice. The full heraldic description requires a sword with the point uppermost above the book on the dexter side and a glory surrounding the whole. The lion also is sejant; but in artistic representations this is continually departed from.—Lion's provider. (a) A popular name for the jackal. (b) Any humble friend or follower who acts as a gyronphant or foil to another.—Lion's share, the largest share; an unduly large share; usually, any excessive appropriation made by one of two or more persons from something in which all have an equal right or interest, but sometimes without any invidious sense: as, the lion's share of attention. The phrase alludes to Aesop's fable of the lion, who, hunting in partnership with the fox and wolf, claimed one third of the prey as his agreed portion, one third by right of sovereignty, and the other third on general principles.—Lion tripartite, in her., a bearing representing three rampant bodies of lions springing or proceeding from the three corners of the escutcheon and having a common head affronté.—Order of the Lion, the name of several orders in Germany, etc.; especially, an order founded in 1815 by William I., first king of the Netherlands, and continued by the later kings. It is an order for civil merit. The badge is a star of eight points, having in the central medallion a rampant lion and crown, and a golden W between each two arms.—To put one's head into the lion's mouth, to put one's self in a position of great danger, as in the power of an enemy.

Mon-ant (i'on-ant), n. Same as ant-mon.

Lionardesque (i'ō-nār-dek'), a. and n. Same as Leonardesque.

Monced, leonced (i'-, lē'gnst), a. [OF. Moncel + E. -ed.] In her., adorned with lions' heads, as a cross the ends of which terminate in lions' heads.

Moncel, Moncelle (i'on-sel), n. [OF. Moncel, leonce, F. Monceau (= Sp. leonce = It. leoncetto, Moncello), dim. of lion, león, a lion: see lion.] In her., a small or young lion used as a bearing. When a number of lions are represented on the same field or ordinary, they are assumed to be lioncels and are blazoned as such. Also Moncel.

Mon-dog (i'on-dog), n. A variety of dog with a flowing mane.

Mon-dragon (i'on-drag'on), n. In her., an imaginary beast having the fore part of a lion ending in the hind part of a wyvern.

Monel (i'on-el), n. [OF. Monel, Monnel, Monneau, etc., dim. of lion, a lion: see lion.] 1. A lion's whelp; a young lion.—2. In her., same as Moncel.

Moness (i'on-es), n. [ME. Monesse, leonesse, leony, lyoney, < OF. (also F.) Monesse (= It. leonesa, Monessa), fem. of lion, león: see lion.] 1. The female of the lion.

A Moness hath whelped in the streets. Shak., J. C., II. 2. 17.

The gaunt Moness, with hunger bold, Springs from the mountains tow'rd the guarded fold. Pope, Iliad, x. 214.

2. A woman who is an object of public interest and curiosity; rarely, a boldly conspicuous woman. See lion, 6.

For the last three months Miss Newcome has been the greatest Moness in London. Thackeray, Newcomes, xii. (Davies.)

"Now, boys, keep your eyes open, there must be plenty of Monesses about," and thus warned, the whole load, including the cornopoean player, were on the look-out for lady visitors, profanely called Monesses. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Oxford, xxv. (Davies.)

The reaction against the over-sentimentalism of 1830 which found expression in the Lionesses of 1840—devoted to masculine sport—who, in their turn, were swept away by the storm of '48. Westminster Rev., CLXXVIII. 961.

Monet (i'on-et), n. [Mon + dim. -et.] A young or small lion.

He himself thrust just into the press, and making force and fury wait upon discretion and government, he might seem a brave lion who taught his young Monets how, in taking of a prey, to join courage with cunning. Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, III.

Mon-heart (i'on-härt), n. One who has great courage.

Lion-hearted (i'on-här'ted), a. Having a lion's heart or courage; brave and magnanimous: as, Richard the Lion-hearted (Richard Cœur de Lion—King Richard I. of England).

Arabian mothers long averted their infants to silence with the name of the lion-hearted Plantagenet. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., I.

Mon-hunter (i'on-hun'ter), n. 1. One who pursues the lion as a beast of the chase.—2. A person given to the pursuit or lionizing of notabilities. See lion, 6.

One of the greatest dangers to all genius is that of being robbed of its vital strength by valvety-pawed Mon-hunters. Harper's Mag., LXXVIII. 417.

Monise, v. See Monise.

Monism (i'on-izm), n. [Mon + -ism.] The practice of lionizing; the treating of persons or things as lions in the figurative sense; the pursuit or adulation of celebrities. See lion, 6.

An anecdote or two may be added to bear out the occasional references to the honours and humours of Monism which they contain.

Orsley, Mem. of Mrs. Hemans, II. 25. (Davies.)

All common Monism, which ruins many men, was nothing to this. Carlyle.

Monise (i'on-iz), v.; pret. and pp. Monised, ppr. Monising. [Mon + -ise.] I. trans. 1. To treat as a lion, or as an object of curiosity and interest. See lion, n. 6.

Can he do nothing for his Burns but Monise him? Carlyle, Past and Present, IV. 4.

Tennyson hates being Monised. Caroline Fox, Journal, p. 372.

Besides this, however, . . . [Lant] allowed himself, with his usual good nature, to be Monised, and dragged from concert to concert. Fortnightly Rev., XI. 257.

2. To exhibit objects of curiosity to. [Rare.]

He had Monised the distinguished visitors during the last few days over the University. Disraeli, Lothair, xxiv. (Davies.)

3. To visit or explore as a sight-seer: as, to Monise Niagara. [Rare.]

Head of Lion (Felis leo), from photograph by Dixon, London.

of the feline markings in both sexes before they arrive at maturity. The largest are from 8 to 9 feet in length. The lion is a native of Africa and the warm regions of Asia. He preys chiefly on live animals, avoiding carrion unless impelled by extreme hunger. He approaches his prey with stealthy movements, crouching for the spring, which is accompanied with a terrific roar. The whole frame is most powerful and impressive, giving with the large head and ample mane that majestic appearance to the animal from which he derives his title of "king of beasts." Of the African lion there are several varieties, as the Barbary, Gambian, Senegal, and Cape lions. The Asiatic varieties are generally distinguished as the Bengal, the Persian or Arabian, and the maneless lion of Gujarat.

The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin. Nahum II. 13.

2. Figuratively, a lion-like person; a man possessing the courage, fierceness, etc., of a lion.

There were about two hundred men on horseback, armed with firelocks; all of them lions, if you believed their word or appearance. Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 170.

For eight days I had been working Belgium under the disadvantages of continual rain.

C. A. Bristol, English University, p. 139.

II. intrins. To visit the lions or objects of interest or curiosity in a place.

Also spelled Monise.

lion-leopard (l'gn-lep'ard), n. In her., same as lion leopards. See leopard, 2.

lion-like (l'gn-lik), a. Resembling a lion; having the strength or courage of a lion.

Our first acquaintance was at sea, in fight against a Turkish man-of-war, a stout one, where lion-like I saw him show his valor.

Fletcher, Wife for a Month, v. 2.

lion-lizard (l'gn-liz'ard), n. A species of basilisk, Basiliscus americanus: so called from the crest (or mane) on its back and tail.

lionly (l'gn-li), a. [L. lion + -ly.] Like a lion; fierce.

The Church coveting to ride upon the lionly form of jurisdiction makes a transformation of her self into an Ass.

Milton, Church-Government, II. 2.

lion-monkey (l'gn-mung'ki), n. Same as marikina.

lionné (F. pron. lë-o-nä'), a. [F., < lion, lion: see lion.] In her., rampant gardant: said of a leopard. See under leopard, 2.

lion-poison (F. pron. lë-on'pwoz-ön'), n. [F., < lion, lion, + poison, fish.] In her., same as sea-lion.

lion's-ear (l'gnz-ër), n. 1. A plant of the genus Leonotis.—2. One of various composite plants of the genera Oulotium and Epeletia.

lion's-foot (l'gnz-füt), n. One of various plants. (a) Leontopodium alpinum, from the appearance of its clustered heads. (b) The lady's-mantle, Alchemilla vulgaris, from the shape of the leaf. Also called lion's-paw. (c) The white lettuce, Prenanthes alba, and also P. serpentina.

lion's-heart (l'gnz-härt), n. An American plant, the false dragon's-head, Physostegia Virginiana.

lion's-leaf (l'gnz-läf), n. Any plant of the genus Leonotis, especially L. Leonotetatum, from a fancied resemblance of the leaf to the print of a lion's foot.

lion's-mouth (l'gnz-mouth), n. A popular name of the snapdragon, Antirrhinum majus, and of several other plants with two-lipped flowers. [Prov. Eng.]

lion's-tail (l'gnz-täl), n. The plant Leonotis Leonurus. See Leonotis.

lion's-tooth (l'gnz-töth), n. A plant of the genus Leonodon; also, the common dandelion.

lion's-turnip (l'gnz-ter'nip), n. The plant Leonotis Leonotetatum.

lion-tailed (l'gnz-täld), a. Having the tail tufted like a lion's: applied by Pennant to species of the genus Macacus.—Lion-tailed baboon, the wanderer.

lion-toothed (l'gnz-tötht), a. Having teeth like those of a lion.

Liotheidae (li-thë'i-dë), n. pl. [NL., < Liothem + -idae.] A family of mallophagous insects or so-called bird-lice, differing from the true lice, and typified by the genus Liothem. They have about four-jointed antennae, a generally trilobate head, conspicuous maxillary palps, and two-jointed or one-jointed tarsi. They infest the plumage of birds, but they are also found in the fur of quadrupeds. Also spelled Liothidae.

Liothem (li-oth'ë-m), n. [NL., < Gr. leios, smooth, + (V) them, being, run.] The typical genus of Liotheidae. Also Liotheum.

Liothrix (li-thr'iks), n. [NL. (H. E. Strickland, 1841); orig. Liothrix (Swainson, 1831); < Gr. leios, smooth, + thrux (τρυχ-), hair.] A genus of turdiform passerine birds. The genus was based upon Perus swainsoni of Temminck, now known as Liothrix lutes, one of the Indian hill-tits. Also called Calligys.

Liotia (li-ö'ti-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. leios, smoothness, < leios, smooth.] The typical genus of Liothidae. These shells have the horny operculum spirally dotted with shelly substance, and the mouth ends in a round varix. Also spelled Liotia.

Liotiidae (li-ö'ti-i-dë), n. pl. [NL., < Liotia + -idae.] A family of rhipidoglossate gastropods, typified by the genus Liotia, associated by most authors with the Trochidae or Delphinulidae. Also spelled Liothidae.

Liotrichi (li-ot'ri-ki), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. leios, smooth, + thrux (τρυχ-), hair.] A name applied by Huxley (in the form Liothrichi) to one of the two primary groups into which the races of men are considered to be divisible, the other being Ulotrichi. The Liotrichi are those with smooth hair, and are divisible into four secondary groups: the Australoid, the Mongoloid, the Xanthochroic, and the Melanochroic. See these words.

Liotrichidae (li-ö'trik-i-dë), n. pl. [NL., < Liothrix + -idae.] A family of birds of uncertain character. (a) Approximately the same as Liothrichinae, including some 50 or 60 hill-tits of Asia, having a varied and often brightly colored plumage, feeding on berries and insects. Liothrix, Brachypteryx, Pseudolophus, etc., are leading genera. (b) Extended to include many other birds, as the American wrens and mocking-thrushes, etc. Olbani, 1847. Also spelled Liothridae.

Liotrichinae (li-ö'tri-ki-në), n. pl. [NL., < Liothrix + -inae.] A subfamily of birds, typified by the genus Liothrix; the hill-tits: originally made by Swainson in 1831 a subfamily of Ampeleidae in the form Liothrichinae. Also spelled Liothrichinae.

Liotrichous (li-ot'ri-kus), a. [Gr. leios, smooth, + thrux (τρυχ-), hair.] Having smooth hair; of or pertaining to the Liotrichi. Also spelled leiothrichous.

Lious, Liouret, n. [ME. liours, liours, liore, < OF. liure, lioure, lioure, a binding, band; in cookery, a thickening; < L. ligatura, a binding; see ligature.] 1. Binding or edging, as of curtains and hangings.

Beddy's . . . that henget shall be with hole liours, With crochets and loupys sett on liours. Booke Book (E. T. S.), p. 512.

2. In cookery, a thickening, or a thick preparation.

And make a liours of brede and blode, and lye hit therewith.

Liber Cere Cocorum, p. 32.

lip (lip), n. [ME. lip, lyp, lyppe, lyppe, < AS. lappa, lyppe = OFries. lappa, Fries. lyppe = MD. lyppe, D. lyp = MLG. lyp, lyppe (> G. Dan. lyppe, lyp, < OF. lype, lype, lyps, a lip, esp., as F. lyppe and ML. lypum, a thick under lip; cf. Sw. läpp = Dan. læbe, lip, appar. < LG., but modified by L. labium); with orig. formative -ja (and akin to OHG. lefs, leps, MHG. lefs, lefs, lefs, G. lefs, with var. OHG. leppur = OS. lepur, lip, with orig. formative -as), = L. labium (> Sp. Pg. labio), lip, with var. labrum (= OHG. lefs, leppur, above?) (> It. labbro = Sp. Pg. labro = F. lèvre), lip; of Gael. lob (perhaps < E.), Lith. lupa, Hind. lud, Pers. lab, lip. Connection with lap (L. lambere, etc.) is improbable; the phonetic conditions do not agree, and it is not the lips, but the tongue, that 'laps.']

1. One of the two edges or borders of the mouth; one of the two fleshy or muscular parts composing the opening of the mouth in man and many other animals, and covering the teeth.

All they that see me laugh me to scorn; they shoot out the lip, they shake the head.

Ps. xlii. 7.

He that loves a rosy cheek,
Or a coral lip admires.

Curlew, Disdain Returned.

2. pl. Figuratively, the organs of speech as represented by the lips; speech or utterance as passing between the lips and aided by them.

A wicked deer giveth heed to false lips. Prov. xvii. 4.
His lips are very mild and meek.

Temnyson, Two Voices.

So gently blending courtesy and art
That wisdom's lips seemed borrowing friendship's heart.

O. W. Holmes, A Portrait.

3. Impudent or abusive talk. [Slang.]

I told him that I didn't want none of his lip.
F. R. Stockton, Buddha Grange, p. 99.

4. Anything resembling a lip in position or relation; the edge or border of anything; a margin: as, the lip of a vessel; the lips of a wound.

Now wet the lip of the phial.

Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xx.

Between the town of Brill, upon the southern lip of this estuary, and Maaslandsluis, . . . the squadron suddenly appeared.

Moley, Dutch Republic, II. 322.

The cannon's brassy lips are cold. Whittier, To Pius IX.

5. In bot.: (a) Either of the divisions of a bilabiate corolla. The two are distinguished as upper (the superior or posterior, next the axis) and lower (the inferior or anterior, away from the axis). (b) In orchids, one of the petals differing from the other two in shape. It is really the upper, but by a half-twist of the ovary has become as if anterior or lower.—6. In soöl., any lip-like part or organ.

See labium and labrum for technical usages.—7. In a lip-auger, the blade at the end which cuts the chip after it has been circumscribed by the spur.—8. In a turbine water-wheel, a rim which closes the joint between the barrel and the curb. E. H. Knight.—9. In a vehicle, a projecting part of the bolster; a cuttoo-plate. E. H. Knight.—10. In organ-building, one of the flat vertical surfaces above or below the mouth of a flue-pipe, called respectively the upper lip and the lower lip. The upper lip is always sharp-edged, and the current of air in the pipe is so directed against it as to be thrown into vibration. See pipe and organ.

11. In music, the power or facility of adjusting one's lips to the mouthpiece of a metal wind-instrument so as to produce tones; embouchure. Since the pitch and quality of tones produced upon such instruments depend upon the strength, endurance, and flexibility of the player's lips, the term is used in a general sense to indicate his method and style.—Colloquial lip. See colloquial.—Curly of the lip. See curly.—Lip curl. See curl.—Lip-glass. See lip-glass, under glass.—The calves of the lips. See calves.—To bite the lip. See bite.—To hang the lip, to be sullen or sulky.

Par. How chance my brother Troilus went not?
Helen. He hangs the lip at something.

Shak., T. and C., III. 1. 122.

To keep a stiff upper lip, to keep up one's courage, as under adversity or trying circumstances; struggle against despondency. [Colloq.]—To make a lip, to pout the under lip in sullenness or contempt. [Archais.]

A letter for me! it gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician.

Shak., Cor., II. 1. 127.

To present the cup to one's lips. See cup.

lip (lip), v.; pret. and pp. lipped, ppr. lipping. [Lip, n.] 1. trans. 1. To touch with the lip or lips, as in kissing; reach with the lip or border. [Chiefly poetical.]

A hand that kings
Have lipped, and trembled kissing.

Shak., A. and C., II. 2. 30.

When
A stone is thrown into some sleeping tarn,
The circle widens till it lips the marge.

Temnyson, Follies and Manners.

No good sheep-dog ever so much as lips a sheep to turn it.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xlii.

2. To utter with the lips; speak. [Rare.]

I heard my name

Most fondly lipped.

Keats, Endymion, i.

3. To notch, as the edge of a sword or knife.

[Now only Scotch.]

In these dates the manner is lightly to barbe and pluck off with a sarding hook the beards or strings of the root, that being thus tipped and lipped (as it were) they might nourish the body of the plant. Holland, tr. of Pliny, xii. 4.

II. intrins. In music, to apply one's lips to the mouthpiece of a metal wind-instrument so as to produce tones; also, to use one's lips in some particular manner: as, to lip well or badly.

Lipemia (li-pë'mi-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. leipnëin, leave, be lacking, + aima, blood.] In pathol., the presence of an excessive quantity of fat in the blood.

Lipangus, n. See Lipaugus.

Lipari (lip'a-ri), n. Wine produced in the Lipari Islands, north of Sicily, both red and white, and of many grades of excellence. It is in demand in Naples at prices high for Italian wine, but is rarely exported.

What can make our fingers so fine?
Drink, drink wine, Lipari-wine.

The Slighted Maid, p. 23. (Nares.)

Liparia (li-pä'ri-ä), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1771), so called from the shining leaves; < Gr. λεπρός, oily, shining, sleek, < λεπρός, fat, lard.] A genus of South African leguminous plants of the tribe Genisteae, and type of the subtribe Liparieae. They are shrubs with simple, entire, coriaceous, shining leaves, without stipules, and having bright-yellow flowers in terminal heads, surrounded by large bracts forming an involucre. One of the lower lobes of the calyx is large and petaloid, and the stamens are diadelphous.

Liparidae (li-par'i-dë), n. pl. Same as Liparididae.

Liparididae (li-pä'ri-dë), n. pl. [NL., < Liparis (-idae) + -idae.] 1. A family of acanthopterygian fishes, represented by the genus Liparis, embracing cottoids with oblong or elongated antoraiform body, the head unarmed and enveloped by the skin, a long dorsal fin with anterior spines scarcely differentiated, a long anal fin, and ventrals united to form a circular sucker. The numerous species, of several genera besides Liparis, inhabit cold and temperate seas, chiefly of the northern hemisphere, and attain a moderate or only small size. They are popularly known, in common with many other fishes, as suckers, and are also called small-fishes and sea-mads.

2. A family of bombycid moths, typified by the genus Liparis (named in the form Liparidae by Boisduval in 1834), having the proboscis short or obsolete, and the female rarely wingless. The larvae are free, usually live in trees, have hairs arising in bundles from tubercles, and are mostly dark-colored; they pupate in a loose cocoon usually interspersed with hairs. The family is wide-spread. There are about 60 genera, species of which are variously known as sphinxes, supercorps, etc.

Liparidina (li-pä'ri-di-nä), n. pl. [NL., < Liparis (-idae) + -ina.] In Günther's ichthyological system, the second group of his family Disco-boli: same as Liparidinae and Liparididae, 1.

Liparidina (li-pä'ri-di-nä), n. pl. [NL., < Liparis (-idae) + -ina.] A subfamily of Cycloptoridae, equivalent to the family Liparididae. Also Liparidinae.

Liparines (li-pä'ri-ë-s), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham, 1845), < Liparis + -es.] A subtribe of plants of the tribe Genisteae and order Leguminosae. It includes South African genera characterized by the absence of stipules and by the free vexillary stamen which is rarely joined to the others above the opening of the tube of the corolla. The subtribe includes the type Liparis and five other genera.

Liparinas (lip'-rī-nē), n. pl. Same as Liparidinae.

Liparis (lip'-a-ris), n. [NL., < Gr. λίπαρος, oily, shining, sleek; see Liparia.] 1. In ichth., a genus of fishes, so called by Artedi in 1738 from the soft smooth skin, typical of the family Liparididae, having the ventral disk well developed. The type of the genus is Cyclopterus liparis of Linnaeus.—2. In entom., a genus of aretiid moths, founded by Ochsenheimer in 1810. It is a comprehensive group, much broken up of late years, all the British species having been placed in other genera. The gipsy-moth is L. (Oenoria) dispar. L. monacha is one whose larva is injurious to trees, especially conifers.

3. A genus of orchidaceous herbs, some terrestrial and some epiphytes, belonging to the tribe Epidendreae. It is characterized by small flowers growing in racemes, the anthers having four pollinia, and a column which is rather long and sometimes winged above. There are about 120 species, found in all warm and temperate regions. L. Llewellyi in England is sometimes called fen-orchid.

Liparite (lip'-a-rit), n. [So called from the Lipari Islands in the Mediterranean.] A name applied by Roth to the rock called rhyolite by Von Richter. See rhyolite.

Liparocele (lip'-a-rō-sēl), n. [< Gr. λίπαρος, oily, fatty (see Liparia), + κύημα, a tumor.] Same as lipoma.

Lipauginae (lip'-a-jī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lipaugus + -inae.] A subfamily of Cotingidae, including a number of South American cotingine birds of plain coloration, like the species of Lipaugus. P. L. Solater, 1862.

Lipaugus (li-pā'-gus), n. [NL. (Boie, misprinted Lipaugus and so used by some ornithologists): so called as being a very plain-colored genus among a number of brilliant relatives, < Gr. λίπαυγος, having lost its light or splendor, < λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, + αὖγος, brilliance, splendor.] The typical genus of Lipauginae, based upon Muscicapa simplex of Lichtenstein, a cotingine bird of Brazil.

Lip-bit (lip'-bit), n. A brace-bit with a cutting lip which projects beyond the end of the barrel.

Lip-born (lip'-bōrn), a. Coming from the lips only; not arising from the heart; not cordial or genuine.

Why had he brought his cheap regard and his lip-born words to her who had nothing left to give in exchange? George Eliot, Middlemarch, lxxx. (Davies.)

Lip-cell (lip'-sel), n. In bot., one of a group of cells in the sporangia of some ferns between which the dehiscence begins. They have lignified walls, and number from two to four.

Lip-clipt, n. A kiss. Hallwell. [Old slang.]

Lip-comfort (lip'-kum'-fērt), n. Utterance of words of comfort or consolation, especially of an insincere kind or unaccompanied by practical assistance.

Promises

Are but lip-comforts.

Platner (and another?), Prophets, ll. 1.

Lip-comfort cannot cure me. Pray you, leave me To mine own private thoughts.

Massey, Maid of Honour, ll. 1.

Lip-comforter (lip'-kum'-fōr-tēr), n. One who consoles or comforts with mere empty talk.

Reverend lip-comforters, that once a week Proclaim how blessed are the poor.

Southey, Soldier's Funeral.

Lip-devotion (lip'-dē-vō'shōn), n. The utterance of prayer by the lips, especially without genuine desire.

We saw those large marble stayres, 28 in number, which are never ascended but on the knees, some lip-devotion being used on every step. Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 20, 1644.

Lip-devotion will not serve the turn: it undervalues the very thing it prays for. South, Sermons, VI. 386.

Lipe (lip), n. [< ME. līpe*, lippe, < OF. lippe, lippe (ML. lippa), a large piece, a good bit or morsel, a mouthful.] A piece, bit, or fragment; a portion. [Prov. Eng.]

As we were loiterers, by our lords, a lipe of godes grace Than all the kynde wit that go can bothe and conynge of goure boke. Piers Plowman (O), xii. 236.

Lipeti, n. [ME., dim. of lipe.] A portion.

Of every dische a lipet out to take.

Lipeta, Minor Poems, p. 62. (Hallwell.)

Lip-fern (lip'-fērn), n. A fern of the genus Cholacanthus: in allusion to the lip-like indusium.

Lip-fish (lip'-fish), n. A labroid fish.

Many wrasses are readily recognised by their thick lips, the inside of which is sometimes curiously folded: a peculiarity which has given to them the German name of Lip-fische. Ensay, Brit., XLV. 333.

Lip-good (lip'-gud), a. Good in profession only.

His grace is merely but lip-good.

B. Jonson, Sejanus, l. 2.

Liphamia (li-fē'-mī-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + αἷμα, blood.] Deficiency or poverty of blood. Also spelled lethamia.

Lip-head (lip'-hed), n. A head of a bolt or analogous metal object which projects toward one side only: used in angles and other situations where there is not room for a head symmetrical all around.

Lip-homage (lip'-hom'-āj), n. Homage rendered by the lips only; insincere professions of devotion.

It [devotion to science] is not a mere lip-homage, but a homage expressed in actions.

E. Spencer, Education, p. 91.

Lip-hook (lip'-hūk), n. 1. In angling, the upper hook of a gang, which is put through the lips of live bait, as a minnow, closing the mouth but leaving the gills free for respiration: used on spinning-tackles, etc.—2. A kind of grapnel used by whalers for towing a dead whale to the ship.

Lip-labor (lip'-lā'-bqr), n. A laboring merely with the lips; labor that consists in promises and professions.

When these actions fail of their several ends . . . aims are misapplied, fasting is an importunate trouble, prayer is but lip-labor. Jer. Taylor, Holy Living, l. 2.

Lip-laborious (lip'-lā'-bōr'-i-us), a. Abounding in more verbal professions; hypocritical.

The lower the times grew, the worse they were at the bottom: the Bramins grew hypocritical and lip-laborious. Lord, Hist. Banians (1830), p. 38. (Latham.)

Lip-language (lip'-lang'-gwāj), n. In the instruction of the deaf and dumb, oral or articulate language, to be understood by watching the motion of the lips, in contradistinction to the language of signs or of the fingers.

Liplet (lip'-let), n. [< lip + dim. -let.] A little lip.

Lipobranchia (li-pō-brā'-ki-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + λίαν, arm.] In Haeckel's system of classification, a primary group of Echinodermata, consisting of the sea-urchins (Echinida) and the sea-cucumbers (Holothuria), which are called armless echinoderms in distinction from the ringed-arms or Colobobranchia.

Lipobranchiate (li-pō-brā'-ki-āt), a. [< Lipobranchia + -ate.] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Lipobranchia; armless; rayless; having no brachia.

Lipobranchia (li-pō-brang'-ki-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + βράχια, gills.] In Lankester's classification, one of three grades of the class Arachnida, contrasted with Embolobranchia and Delobranchia, and composed of the weasel-spiders, harvestmen, false scorpions, and mites, or the four orders Galeodina, Ophionina, Pseudoscorpionina, and Acarina.

Lipobranchiate (li-pō-brang'-ki-āt), a. [< Lipobranchia + -ate.] Of or pertaining to the Lipobranchia.

Lipocephala (li-pō-sef'-a-lā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lipocephalus: see lipocephalous.] Lankester's name of the lamellibranchs or bivalve mollusks, contrasted with the Glossophora, regarded as a branch of Mollusca, and divided into Isomya, Heteromya, and Monomya.

Lipocephalous (li-pō-sef'-a-lus), a. [< NL. lipocephalus, < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + κεφαλή, head.] Headless, as a bivalve mollusk; acephalous; of or pertaining to the Lipocephala.

Lipofibroma (li-pō-fī-brō'-mā), n.; pl. lipofibromata (-mā-tā). [NL., < Gr. λίπος, fat, + NL. fibroma.] In pathol., a lipoma in which there is a considerable amount of connective tissue. Also called adipofibroma.

Lipogastria (li-pō-gās'-trī-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + γαστήρ (γαστήρ), stomach.] Atrophy of the primary enteric cavity.

Lipogastrosis (li-pō-gās'-trō'-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + γαστήρ (γαστήρ), stomach, + -osis.] Absence of a stomach; specifically, in sponges, absence of the paragastric, with the development of diverticula, which form a system of canals replacing the original enteric cavity.

Lipogastrosis . . . may be produced by the growing together of the roots of the ectodermal folds, thus reducing the paragastric cavity to a labyrinth of canals. Sollas, Enzo, Brit., XXII. 416.

Lipogastrotis (li-pō-gas'-trōt'-ik), a. [< lipogastrosis (-ōt-) + -ic.] Having no stomach; specifically, in sponges, having no paragastric; characterized by or exhibiting lipogastrosis.

Lipogenesis (li-pō-jen'-e-sis), n. [< Gr. λίπος, fat, lard, + γένεσις, origin: see genesis.] The formation of fat.

The effective agent in lipogenesis . . . also favors the formation of uric acid. Quain, Med. Dict., p. 1032.

Lipogenous (li-pōj'-e-nus), a. [< Gr. λίπος, fat, + -γενής, producing: see -genous.] Pertaining to the formation of fat; forming or tending to form fat; developed in fat.

Lipoglossa (li-pō-glos'-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + γλῶσσα, tongue.] A grade or series of Mollusca, represented by a class (Scotocormophra) containing the genera Neomentia (or Solenopus), as alone distinguished from the Echinoglossa (gastropods, cephalopods, etc.). E. R. Lankester.

Lipoglossae (li-pō-glos'-ē), n. pl. [NL., fem. pl.: see Lipoglossa.] In Nitzsch's classification (1829), a major group of birds, typified by the kingfishers (Alcedinidae), and including the hornbills (Bucconidae) and hoopoes (Upipidae), in all of which the tongue is very small.

Lipoglossate (li-pō-glos'-āt), a. [As Lipoglossa + -ate.] Having a small tongue, or none; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lipoglossae.

Lipogram (li-pō'-gram), n. [< Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + γράμμα, a letter, < γράφειν, write. Cf. lipogrammatia.] A writing from which all words containing a particular letter are omitted, as the several books of the Odyssey of Tryphiodorus, in the first of which, it is said, there was no A, in the second no B, etc. Similarly, poems have been written in English avoiding the use of e, which is the most frequent of all English letters, while, on the other hand, pieces also have been written containing only one vowel, as e.

Lipogrammatic (li-pō-gra-mat'-ik), a. [< Gr. λίπογραμματος, λίπογραμματος, with a letter left out, < λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + γράμμα, a letter. Cf. lipogram.] Pertaining to the writing of lipograms; also, of the nature of a lipogram.

The Greeks composed lipogrammatic works, works in which one letter of the alphabet is omitted. I. Dielsch, Curios. of Lit., I. 355.

Lipogrammatism (li-pō'-gram'-gī-tizm), n. [< lipogrammatist (-ic) + -ism.] The art or practice of writing lipograms.

Lipogrammatism does not affect the rhythm or metre of verse. G. P. Marsh, Lects. on Eng. Lang., xxv.

Lipogrammatist (li-pō'-gram'-gī-tist), n. [< lipogrammatist (-ic) + -ist.] One who writes lipograms.

The lipogrammatists or letter-droppers of antiquity . . . would take an exception, without any reason, against some particular letter of the alphabet, so as not to admit it once in a whole poem. Addison, Spectator, No. 59.

Lipoma (li-pō-mā), n.; pl. lipomata (-mā-tā). [NL., < Gr. λίπος, fat, + -ωμα.] A tumor formed of fatty tissue. Also called adipoma and liparocoele.

Lipomatosis (li-pō-mā-tō'-sis), n. [< lipoma (-t) + -osis.] The excessive growth of fatty tissue in the body or any of its parts.

Lipomatous (li-pō-mā'-tus), a. [< lipoma (-t) + -ous.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a lipoma.

Lipomyxoma (li-pō-mīk-sō'-mā), n.; pl. lipomyxomata (-mā-tā). [NL., < Gr. λίπος, fat, + μύξα, mucus, + -ωμα.] In pathol., a tumor composed partly of fatty and partly of mucous tissue.

Liponema (li-pō-nē'-mā), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + νῆμα, a thread.] The typical genus of Liponemidae.

Liponemidae (li-pō-nem'-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Liponema + -idae.] A family of Hexactiniae, with numerous perfect septa and with marginal tentacles transformed by retrogression into short tubes or into stomidia. Of the three genera united as Liponemidae, Liponema comes near the Diacnema, as its stomidia may be divided into principal and accessory stomidia; Polysiphonidium has an endodermal muscle and marginal spherules; and Polysiphonia, with its mesodermal circular muscle, resembles the Paracnema.

Lipoped (li-pō-ped), a. and n. 1. a. Of or pertaining to the Lipopoda.

II. n. One of the Lipopoda.

Lipopoda (li-pōp'-ō-dā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + πούς (πούς) = E. foot.] A prime division of Rothfiera, called a class and contrasted with Parapodiata, and divided into the orders Platima, Bdelliograda, and Ehismota.

Lipoptera (li-pōp'-tē-rā), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + πτερόν, a wing, = E. feather.] A genus of pupiparous parasitic dip-terous insects of the family Hippoboscidae. The species are at first winged and live on birds; afterward they seek quadrupeds and lose their wings, whence the name. Also Lipoptena.

lip-ornament (lip'or-na-ment), n. An object inserted in the lip as an ornament, as is customary among many savage races; a labret.

Lipostoma (li-pos'tō-mā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + στόμα, mouth.] Same as Lipostomata.

Lipostomata (li-pō-stō-mā-tā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + στόμα, pl. στόμα, mouth.] The mouthless corticate Protozoa; the sporozoans or gregarines: opposed to Stomatophora. Originally Lipostoma. E. R. Lankester.

lipostomatous (li-pō-stō-mā-tus), a. [As Lipostomata + -ous.] Mouthless; astomatous; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lipostomata.

lipostomia (li-pō-stō-mī-ā), n. [NL.] Same as lipostomy.

lipostomosis (li-pō-stō-mō-sis), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + στόμα, mouth.] Absence of a mouth, stoma, or oral orifice; specifically, in sponges, lack of an oscule; the state of being lipostomatous.

lipostomatous (li-pō-stō-mō-tus), a. [As lipostomata + -ous.] Having no mouth; lipostomatous.

lipostomy (li-pō-stō-mī), n. [NL. lipostomia, < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + στόμα, mouth.] Atrophy of the mouth; an astomatous condition.

lipothymia (li-pō-thim'ī-ā), n. [NL., also written leipothymia.] Same as lipothymy.

lipothymic (li-pō-thim'ik), a. Same as lipothymous.

lipothymous (li-pō-thim'ī-mus), a. [Also written leipothymous; < Gr. λείπωμι, fainting, in a swoon, < λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, + θυμός, life, soul.] Pertaining to or given to swooning; fainting.

lipothymy (li-pō-thim'ī-mī), n. [Also written leipothymy; < NL. lipothymia, < Gr. λείπωμι, fainting, a swoon, < λείπωμι, fainting, in a swoon: see lipothymous.] In pathol., fainting; syncope.

In lipothymy or swoonings he used the friction of this finger (the ring-finger) with saffron and gold. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 4.

lipotype (li-pō-tīp), n. [< Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + τύπος, impression, type.] In zoölog., a type or form of animal life which distinguishes a given faunal area by its absence therefrom. Gill.

Lipotyphla (li-pō-tif'lā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, be lacking, + τυφλός, blind (with ref. to the blind gut, NL. cæcum).] In some systems of classification, a division of the mammalian order Insectivora, including those forms which have no cæcum, as distinguished from the Mesotyphla, which have a cæcum. Gill.

lipotype (li-pō-tīp'ik), a. [< lipotype + -ic.] Having the character of a lipotype.

lipoxenous (li-pōk'se-nus), a. [< Gr. λείπειν, λείπειν, leave, + ξένος, host, + -ous.] In bot., deserting its host. A term descriptive of some parasitic fungi, which, after a certain period, leave their host and complete their development independently, living entirely upon a reserve of food earlier appropriated from the host plant. De Bary, Fungi (trans.), pp. 333, 466.

lipoxeny (li-pōk'se-nī), n. [As lipoxenous + -y.] In bot., the desertion of its host by a parasitic fungus. See lipoxenous. De Bary.

lipped (lip't), a. [< lip + -ed.] 1. Having lips; also, having a raised or rounded edge resembling a lip; having lips of a kind specified: often used in composition.

Come on, you thick-lipped slave. Shak., Tit. And., iv. 2, 176.

A virgin purest lipped, yet in the lore Of love deep learned to the red heart's core. Keats, Lamia, l.

2. In bot., same as labiate.—3. In tech., specifically, thick-lipped; labroid: applied to the wrasse or rockfish family.—Lipped and harled, built, as a wall of stones without mortar, but with the joints afterward filled with mortar, and the whole surface plastered over with what is called rough-cast or harling. [Scotch.]

lippen (lip'n), v. [ME. lyppen, trust: origin obscure.] I. trans. To intrust. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

II. intrans. To trust; rely or depend: with to or on: as, Do not lippen to him; I was lippening on you. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Na, I had far rather Tib Mumps kenned which way I was gaun than her—though Tib's no muckle to lippen to neither. Scott, Guy Mannering, xlii.

lippening (lip'ning), a. [Appar. ppr. of lippen, peculiarly used (f).] Occasional; accidental. [Scotch.]

I aye telled the gudman ye meant weel to him; but he takes the tout at every bit lippening word. Scott, Bride of Lammermoor, xli.

lipper (lip'er), n. Same as leaper.

lipper (lip'er), n. [Appar. < lip + -er.] 1. A thin piece of blubber cut in oblong shape, with slits in it, used to wipe up gurry or slumgullion from the deck of a whaler. Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 287.—2. A large metal ladle used for scooping up the oil from the deck of a whaler. Fisheries of U. S., V. ii. 287.

lipper (lip'er), v. t. [< lipper, n.] To wipe with a lipper: followed by off: as, to lipper off the deck.

lipper (lip'er), a. and n. [Origin obscure.] I. a. Wet; rainy. [Prov. Eng.]

II. n. The spray from small waves, in either fresh or salt water. Halliwell. [North. Eng.]

Lippia (lip'ī-ā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), named after Augustus Lippi, a French physician and traveler in Abyssinia.] A genus of plants of the tribe Verbenaceae, characterized by a small membranaceous two- to four-toothed calyx, a four-lobed corolla, and a dry indehiscent fruit. They are shrubs or rarely herbs, bearing small flowers in spikes or heads. There are about 90 species, found in all warm regions, but especially abundant in America. L. citriodora is the lemon-scented verbena. See verbena.

lippie, n. See lippy.

lippling (lip'ing), n. [< lip + -ing.] The formation of a lip-like projection. Lancet, No. 3428, p. 933.

lipplitude (lip'ī-tūd), n. [= F. lipplitude = It. lipitudine, < L. lipitudine, inflammation of the eyes, < lippos, bleared-eyed.] Soreness of the eyes; blearedness; lipplitude.

lipitude (lip'ī-tūd), n. [L.: see lipplitude.] In pathol., the presence of a gummy or crusting accumulation along the edges of the eyelids.

lip-plate (lip'plāt), n. The hypostome of trilobites.

lip-protector (lip'prō-tek'tor), n. A shield to protect the lip from injury during dental operations.

lippy (lip'ī), a. [< lip + -y.] Full of lip (see lip, n., 3); impertinent and voluble in speech; saucy. [Slang.]

lippy (lip'ī), n. [A dim. of lip*, var. of leap.] An old Scotch dry measure, the fourth part of a peck: same as forpet. The lippy was the sixteenth part of the firiot, which was the fourth part of the boll. For the different sizes of those measures, see firiot and boll.

lip-reading (lip'rē'ding), n. Reading or understanding what another says by observing the movements of his lips: used in regard to the instruction of the deaf and dumb.

lip-reward (lip'rē-wārd'), n. An empty promise. Davies.

To every act she gives huge lip-reward, Lush of oaths, as falsehood of her faith. G. Marston, Sir E. Grinville (Arber Rep.), p. 64.

lip-righteousness (lip'rī'chus-nēs), n. Mere profession of righteousness. Davies.

Do not then think To trick them of their secret? for the dupes Of humankind keep this lip-righteousness. Southey, Thalaba, v.

lip-salve (lip'sāv), n. 1. In phar., a cosmetic ointment for the lips.—2. Figuratively, soft and flattering speech.

Spencer, that was as cunning as a serpent, finds here a female wit that . . . taught him not to trust a woman's lip-salve, when that he knew her breast was filled with rancour. E. Fanning, Hist. Edw. II., p. 91.

lipsotheca (lip'sō-thē-kā), n. [NL., < Gr. λείπωμι, λείπωμι, leave, + θεῖον, a shrine.] A shrine for relics; a reliquary.

lipset, v. A Middle English variant of lip. Chaucer.

lip-service (lip'sēr'vis), n. Service with the lips or in pretense only; insincere profession of good will or devotion.

lipsey (lip'sī), v. A dialectal variant of lipse, lip.

lip-spine (lip'spīn), n. In conch., a spine on the lip of a shell.

lip-tooth (lip'tōth), n. In conch., a tooth on the lip of a shell.

lipwingle (lip'wing'gl), n. A dialectal variant of lapwing.

lip-wisdom (lip'wis'dum), n. Wisdom in talk without corresponding practice.

I find that all is but lip-wisdom, which wants experience. Sir P. Sidney.

lip-wise (lip'wis), a. Garrulous. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lip-work (lip'wērk), n. 1. Lip-labor. Milton.—2. The act of kissing. B. Jonson.

lip-working (lip'wēr'king), p. a. Professing with the lips without corresponding practice; lip-laborious.

Their office is to pray for others, and not to be the lip-working deacons of other men's appointed words. Milton, Apology for Smectymnua.

liqueable (lik'wā-bl), a. [= Sp. liqueable = It. liqueabile, < LL. liqueabilis, that may be melted or dissolved, < L. liqueare, melt: see liqueate.] Capable of being liquefied or melted.

liqueament (li-kwā'men), n. [L., a liquid mixture, a sauce, < liqueare, make liquid, dissolve: see liqueate.] A liquid sauce.

And make liqueamen castimoniaill Of peres thus. Palladius, Husbandrie (R. R. T. S.), p. 90.

liqueate (lik'kwāt), v.; pret. and pp. liqueated, ppr. liqueating. [< L. liqueatus, pp. of liqueare (> It. liqueare = Sp. liquear), make liquid, melt, dissolve, < liqueare, be fluid: see liquid.] I. trans. To melt; liquefy; specifically, in metal., to separate, as one metal from another less fusible, by applying just sufficient heat to melt the more easily liquefiable, so that it can be run off from the other. Also eliquate.

II. intrans. To become liquefied or dissolved; melt.

liqueation (li-kwā'shqn), n. [= F. liqueation = Sp. liqueacion, < LL. liqueatio (n.), a melting, < L. liqueare, pp. liqueatus, melt, dissolve: see liqueate.] 1. The act or operation of liquefying or melting.—2. The condition or capacity of being melted: as, a substance congealed beyond liqueation.—3. The separation of metals differing considerably in fusibility by subjecting them, when contained in an alloy or mixture, to a degree of heat sufficient to melt the most fusible only, which then flows away, or liqueates, from the unmelted mass. This process is of great antiquity, and was up to 1830 extensively used at Mansfeld in Prussia, in the treatment of argentiferous copper and lead ores. Lead containing antimony and some other metals is also partially freed from these and prepared for further treatment by a process of liqueation. Also eliquation.

liqueation-furnace (li-kwā'shqn-fēr'nās), n. In metal., a furnace specially adapted to liqueation.

liqueation-hearth (li-kwā'shqn-hārth), n. In metal., a hearth specially adapted to liqueation.

liquefacient (lik-wē-fā'shgent), n. [< L. liquefacient (s), ppr. of liquefacere, make liquid, dissolve, < liqueare, be fluid or liquid, + facere, make. Cf. liquefy.] That which liquefies or serves to liquefy; in med., an agent, as mercury or iodine, used to produce liquefaction of solid depositions.

liquefaction (lik-wē-fak'shqn), n. [= F. liquefaction = Sp. liquefacción = Pg. liquefacción = It. liquefazione, < LL. liquefactio (n.), a melting, < L. liquefacere, pp. liquefactus, melt: see liquefacient.] 1. The act or process of liquefying, or of rendering or becoming liquid; reduction to a liquid state. The liquefaction of solids is effected by the application of heat or by solution (see solution), that of gases by cold or pressure, or by both combined (see gas). Of the gases, chlorine, ammonia, and others were first liquefied by Faraday. The experiment of Andrews with carbon dioxide led to the conclusion that for every gas there is a certain temperature such that if the temperature of the gas is above it, no increase in pressure, however great, will produce visible liquefaction. This is called the critical temperature. If the gas has this temperature a certain pressure, the critical pressure, will produce liquefaction, and the volume per unit mass at this instant is the critical volume. If the temperature of the gas is below the critical value compression produces gradual increase in pressure until (the temperature being kept constant) liquefaction begins at a definite pressure. Further decrease in volume produces very slight increase in pressure until all the gas is liquefied, after which a slight decrease in volume necessitates a large increase in pressure, liquids being, in general, almost incompressible. From these experiments it was predicted that all the so-called permanent gases could be liquefied if they could be cooled below their critical temperatures, and in fact this has been accomplished. The critical constants of some of the most important gases are as follows:

Crit. Temp. of. Boiling-Point. Crit. Pressure. Atmosphere.

H —34 —350 —246 —411 20

O —119 —182 —181 —295 51

N —146 —231 —194 —217 35

Air —140 —230 —191 —212 39

CO₂ + 31 + 86 —90 —112 77

Argon —121 —186 —187 —205 50.6

For the liquefaction of gases having only moderately low critical temperatures, freezing mixtures produce sufficient cold. Gases thus liquefied, if allowed to evaporate under low pressure, produce still greater cold which can be used in the liquefaction of other gases; or, the gas to be liquefied can be compressed, cooled as much as possible, and allowed suddenly to expand. In many cases this sudden expansion will cool the gas sufficiently to produce partial liquefaction and even solidification. By such methods Pictet and Chaillet succeeded in 1877 in liquefying oxygen, nitrogen, and hydrogen. More recently Wroblewski, Dewar, and Olszewski produced these liquids in quantities large enough to permit their critical constants to be studied. In the process later perfected by Linde, Dewar, Tripler, and others, and applied most notably to the liquefaction of air, the gas to be liquefied is compressed to a pressure of from 1,200 to 3,000 pounds per square inch, cooled to the ordinary atmospheric temperature, and then led through a long coil of pipe and allowed to escape through a small orifice. The escaped gas, cooled by expansion, is led back around the coil of pipe, cooling the compressed gas on its way to the orifice. This cooled compressed gas therefore after expansion becomes colder than the gas preceding it, and upon flowing back around the pipe produces still greater cooling of the incoming gas; hence the temperature of the escaped gas will gradually diminish until equilibrium is reached either by gain of heat from the surroundings or by liquefaction of part of the gas. If there is sufficient protection from influx of heat from the outside the liquid will accumulate and can be drawn off, in some machines at the rate of several gallons an hour. If air thus liquefied be exposed to the atmosphere the nitrogen, having the lowest boiling-point, boils away first, leaving nearly pure liquid oxygen, which boils away with sufficient rapidity to keep itself at a temperature of -181°C , its boiling-point at atmospheric pressure. Liquid air will probably find its greatest commercial application in various refrigerative processes and as a means for transporting and storing power. It cannot be a source of power, for a theoretically perfect process of liquefaction would require the expenditure of more energy than could be obtained by the evaporation of the liquid product, and practical methods are necessarily even less efficient.

2. The state of being liquefied or melted.
Liquefactive (lik-wē-fak'tiv), a. [Liquefactio (son) + -ive.] Pertaining to or producing liquefaction.

Liquefiable (lik-wē-fī-ā-bl), a. [L. liquefacere; as liquefy + -able.] Capable of being liquefied, melted, or changed to a liquid state.

Liquefier (lik-wē-fī-ēr), n. One who or that which liquefies.

Liquefy (lik-wē-fī), v.; pret. and pp. liquefied, ppr. liquefying. [OF. liquefier, F. liquifier, L. liquefacere, become liquid, pass off, liquefacere (> lt. liquefare), make liquid, melt, < liquere, be fluid or liquid, + facere (pass. feri), make; see liquid and -fy. Cf. liquefaction.] I. trans. To make liquid; melt, as a solid, or compress, as a gas, into a liquid state.

II. intrans. To become liquid.

Liquescent, liquescenty (li-kwes'gns, -gn-ai), n. [= Sp. licoescencia; as liquescent (t) + -cy.] The condition of being liquescent; aptness to melt; the state of becoming liquid.

Liquescent (li-kwes'gnt), a. [= Sp. licoesciente, < L. licoescere (t-s), ppr. of liquesco (> Fig. liquesco), become fluid, < liquere, be fluid; see liquid.] Having a tendency to liquefy; melting; becoming liquid; as, a substance naturally liquescent.

At the end of our path a liquescent
And nebulous lustre was born. Poe, Ulalume.

Liquor (li-kér'), n. [F.: see liquor, n.] 1. An alcoholic drink, usually sweet and of high flavor and perfume; a cordial.

Bitters form a class of liquors by themselves, claiming to possess certain tonic properties and a medicinal value. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 680.

Especially—(a) A strong and sweet wine like those grown in some southern places, such as Lunel, Alcant, and Cyprus, which are also called liquor wines. (b) A spirituous compound based upon brandy or pure alcohol, and wholly artificial in its composition. These liquors are in a certain sense the successors of those of the middle ages, which were supposed to be universal remedies. Their modern use is almost exclusively the gratification of the palate. See curacao, Benedictine, chartraine, maraschino, acorde de Dantzig (under eau-de-vie), anettie, and cordial.

Liquors may be distinguished as of three qualities: first, the ratafia, or simple liquor, in which the sugar, the alcohol, and the aromatic substances are in small quantities; such are anise-water, nogan, the apricot, cherry, &c., ratafia. The second are the oils or liqueurs with more saccharine and spirituous matter, as the aniseata, curacao, &c. The third are the creams or super-liqueurs, as roscilio, maraschino, Danish water, &c. Pog. Encyc.

(c) A mixture prepared for the purpose of dosing champagne, the effervescence and sweetness of the wine depending much upon its composition. It consists either of wine or of the brandy, or of a mixture of the two, with pure rock-sugar dissolved in it.

2. Same as liquor-glass.

Liquor-cup (li-kér'kup), n. A very small goblet, usually of silver or of silver gilt, used for the same purpose as a cordial-glass.

Liquor-glass (li-kér'gias), n. A very small drinking-glass intended for liquors or cordials; a cordial-glass.

Liqueuring (li-kér'ing), n. [Liquor + -ing.] The process of qualifying wine by means of liquor, as in the making of champagne.

The liqueuring is regulated by a machine, by which the quantity is measured to a nicety. Encyc. Brit., XXIV. 608.

Liquiblet, n. [ME., appar. for liquable: see liquable.] A fusible metal.

ge schal vndirtonde that wlyn not sloonly holdith in it the propriete of gold, but myche more the propriete of alle liquibles. Book of Quintus Essence (ed. Furnivall), p. 7.

Liquid (lik'wid), a. and n. [ME. liquide, < OF. liquide, F. liquide = Sp. liquido = Fig. It. liquido, < L. liquidus, fluid, liquid, moist, < liquere, be liquid, be fluid; cf. Skt. √ ri or ri, flow, run.] I. a. 1. Composed of particles that move freely among each other on the slightest pressure; of a fluid consistence; flowing, or capable of flowing; not fixed or solid.

Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!
Shak., Othello, v. 2. 280.

Hence—2. Clear or transparent, like a liquid; as, liquid eyes; liquid depths.—3. Tearful.

She . . . turned her face, and cast
A liquid look on Ida, full of prayer.
Tennyson, Princess, iv.

4. Sounding smoothly or agreeably to the ear; devoid of harshness: as, liquid melody.

With Amelia's liquid name the Nina Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. i. 51.

5. Pronounced with a smoothly sonorous and freely continuable sound: as, a liquid letter. See II., 2.—Liquid ammonia. See ammonia, 1.—Liquid confections. See confection.—Liquid debt. (a) In Scots law, a debt the amount of which is ascertained and constituted against the debtor, either by a written obligation or by the decree of a court. (b) See debt.—Liquid glue, measure, etc. See the nouns.—Liquid verb. In Gr. gram., a verb the stem of which ends in a liquid (λ, μ, ν, ρ).

II. n. 1. A substance of which the molecules, while not tending to separate from one another like those of a gas, readily change their relative position, and which therefore retains no definite form, except that determined by the containing receptacle; an inelastic fluid. The differentiation of a liquid as an incompressible fluid is not strictly correct, experiment having shown that liquids are compressible to a very limited extent. See fluid.

2. In gram., a smoothly flowing sound or letter. The name liquida (τυπη, sc. εὐφωνα or εὐφωρία, τυπη being neuter plural of τυπος, liquid, plant, easy) was given by Greek grammarians, as early as the second century B. C., to λ, μ, ν, ρ (λ, μ, ν, ρ)—that is, to consonants not mutes or sibilants—on account of their smooth and flowing sound and the pliancy with which they coalesce in pronunciation with a preceding mute. It was adopted by Roman grammarians (liquida, sc. consonantes or litteræ), and has since remained in common use. The classification is not now approved as scientific, and is obsolete.—Amniotic liquid. See amniotic.—Burnett's liquid, a solution of zinc chloride, used by Sir William Burnett, for preserving timber, canvas, and cordage from dry-rot, mildew, etc. It is also employed as an antiseptic to preserve dead bodies, and for disinfecting hospitals, ships, etc.—Diffusion of liquids. See diffusion.—Dutch liquid. See Dutch.

Liquidable (lik'wi-dā-bl), a. [= F. liquidable = Sp. liquidable; as liquid(ate) + -able.] Capable of being liquidated.

Liquidambar (lik'wid-am'bār), n. [NL. (Lindæus), < L. liquidus, liquid, + ML. ambar, ambra, amber: see liquid and amber.] 1. A genus of dicotyledonous trees of the natural order Hamamelidæ, distinguished by monoclous flowers without petals, growing in heads and surrounded by an involucre of four bracts. The carpels of the fruit are tipped by long, persistent styles, and the leaves are palmately lobed and deciduous. There are two species—one, L. orientalis of Asia Minor, furnishing the balsam called liquid storax; the other, L. styraciflua of the warmer parts of North America, extending as far north as Connecticut, Ohio, etc., abundant and at its best on bottom-lands in the south. The latter is a large tree with handsome, shining, star-shaped leaves. In hot regions it exudes a gum, sometimes called copalm (a name also given to the tree) or copal-balsam, used in the preparation of chewing-gum, and to some extent in medicine as a substitute for resin. The tree is variously named sweet-gum, star-leaved gum, liquid-amber (liquidambar) or amber-red-gum, and blodale, as well as copalm. From the corky ridges of its branches, it has been called aliquidar-tree. Fossil remains of the genus are found in the Tertiary deposits of Europe, Greenland, Alaska, California, and Colorado, and also in Japan, and one species occurs in the Cretaceous of Kansas and Nebraska. Sixteen fossil species have been described. 2. [l. c.] A tree of this genus.

Liquidambar (lik'wid-am'bār), n. Same as liquidambar, 2.

Liquidate (lik-wi-dāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. liquidated, ppr. liquidating. [ML. liquidatus, pp. of liquidare (> lt. liquidare = Fig. Sp. liquidar = F. liquider), make liquid, make clear, clarify, < L. liquidus, liquid; see liquid, a.] 1. To make clear or plain; clarify; free from obscurity. [Obsolete or rare.]

A senseless jumble, soon liquidated by a more egregious act of folly, the King with his own hand crowning the young Duke of Warwick King of the Isle of Wight.

Walpole, Anecdotes of Painting, I. ii.

2. To clear up; reduce to order or precision; settle the particulars of; adjust; as, to liquidate the affairs of a bankrupt firm. See liquidation.—3. To clear off; settle; pay; as, to liquidate a debt or a mortgage.—4. To make less harsh and offensive; as, to liquidate the harshness of sound. Imp. Dict.—Liquidated damages. See damage.

Liquidation (lik-wi-dā'shon), n. [= F. liquidation = Sp. liquidacion = Fig. liquidacio = It. liquidazione, < ML. as if liquidatio* (n), < liquidare, pp. liquidatus, liquidate; see liquidate.] The act of liquidating; the act of adjusting debts, or ascertaining their amount or the balance of them due. In a more general sense, the act or operation of winding up the affairs of a firm or company by getting in the assets, settling with its debtors and creditors, and apportioning the amount of each partner's or shareholder's profit or loss, etc.—Signing in liquidation, the act of the partner who is intrusted with the business of liquidation, in signing for the firm when necessary for that purpose. It is indicated by his writing the name of the firm and adding the words in liquidation.—To go into liquidation, to refrain from new business, and continue business only for the purpose of getting in the assets, paying obligations, and dividing the surplus, if any.

Liquidator (lik'wi-dā-tor), n. [= F. liquidateur = Sp. liquidador; as liquidate + -or.] One who or that which liquidates or settles; specifically, in Great Britain, in com., an officer appointed to conduct the winding up of the affairs of a firm or company, to bring and defend actions and suits in its name, and to do all necessary acts on behalf of the firm or company: called a receiver in the United States.

Liquidise, v. t. See liquidise.

Liquidity (li-kwid'j-ē-ti), n. [= F. liquidité = It. liquidità, < LL. liquiditas (t-s), liquidity, < L. liquidus, liquid; see liquid, a.] 1. The state or quality of being liquid; fluid consistence; capacity of flowing freely.—2. The quality of being smooth, flowing, and agreeable: said of sound, music, etc.

Liquidize (lik'wi-diz), v. t.; pret. and pp. liquidized, ppr. liquidizing. [Liquid + -ize.] To make liquid; liquify. Also spelled liquidise. [Rare.]

Liquidly (lik'wid-li), adv. In a liquid or flowing manner; smoothly; flowingly.

Liquidness (lik'wid-nēs), n. The state or quality of being liquid; fluency.

Liquidogenic (lik'wi-dj-en'ik), a. [L. liquidus, liquid, + gen, produce, + -ic.] Giving rise to liquids or forming fluid substances. [Rare.] Nature, XXXVIII. 91.

Liquid-refrigerator (lik'wid-rē-frī-jē-rā-tor), n. In brewing, an apparatus for cooling wort; a wort-refrigerator. It consists of a shallow tank, or a series of such tanks, through which is laid a pipe for cold water, the circulation of which cools the wort.

Liquor (lik'gr; L. pron. lik'kwōr), n. [Early mod. E. also liquore; the spelling with qu is a mod. accom. to the orig. L., without change of the reg. E. pronunciation; < ME. Moor, liquor, liquor, Moor, < AF. Moor. OF. Moor, Moor, liquor, Moor, Branch of Liquidambar styraciflua.

F. Liquor = Sp. Pg. Ucor = It. Liquore, < L. Ucor, fluidity, liquidness, a fluid, a liquid, < liquere, be fluid or liquid: see liquid.] 1. A liquid or fluid substance, as water, milk, blood sap, etc.

This flooring wol be blak and wynter warme,
And liquore shedde.

Palladius, Husbandrie (R. E. T. S.), p. 12.
From silver spoons the grateful liquore glide,
While China's earth receives the smoking tide.

Pope, R. of the L., iii. 100.

2. A strong or active liquid of any sort. Specially—(a) An alcoholic or spirituous liquid, either distilled or fermented; an intoxicating beverage; especially a spirituous or distilled drink, as distinguished from fermented beverages, as wine and beer.

Fetch me a stoup of liquor. Shak, Hamlet, v. 1. 68.

(b) A strong solution of a particular substance, used in the industrial arts. The liquor of any substance is that substance held in solution, and the word used absolutely has meanings differing according to the industry in which it is used. (c) An elixir.

I, and my six servants, are not able to make of this precious liquor so fast as it is fetched away from my lodging by gentlemen of your city. B. Jonson, Volpone, ii. 1.

Hence—(d) Any prepared solution, as a sugar solution for dyeing the leaves, or a solution of a dye or mordant. (e) A dilution, as in liquor ammoniac. [In technical Latin phrases pronounced lik-wor, as in liquor ammoniac, liquor potassae, etc.]—Ammoniacal liquor. See ammoniacal.—Black liquor. See black-liquor.—Bottled liquor, the scapy liquid which has been employed for the purpose of removing the silk-gum from raw silk previous to dyeing. It is a slightly alkaline and more or less concentrated solution of silk-gum. It is added to the dye-bath in dyeing silk, in order that the coloring matter may be attracted more slowly and evenly by the silk, and it also preserves the luster of the latter.—Gas-liquor. See gas.—In liquor. (a) Drunk. (b) Measured (in selling) with their natural juice, as oysters: opposed to sold. [U. S.]—Liquor ammi, the amniotic fluid. See amniotic.—Liquor ciliarium, liquor ventriculorum cerebri, the serous fluid in the ventricles of the brain. See cerebrum.—Liquor cotunnii, the fluid of Cotunnus; the perilymph of the ear.—Liquor Morgagni (so called from G. B. Morgagni, 1682–1771), a small quantity of liquid which frequently collects after death between the back of the lens and the capsule. Also called humor or aqua Morgagni.—Liquor of finta. See finta.—Liquor of libaving, a solution of biochloride of tin.—Liquor sanguinis, the plasma of the blood.—Liquor scarpae, Scarpa's fluid; the endolymph of the ear.—Liquor silicium. Same as liquor of finta.—Malt liquor, liquors brewed from malt.—Red liquor, a crude aluminum acetate prepared from pyroligneous acid, used as a mordant in calico-printing.—Spirituous liquors, liquors produced by distillation.—The grand liquor, the great elixir, or aurum potabile, of the alchemists. Nares.

Where should they Find this grand liquor that hath gilded 'em?
Shak, Tempest, v. 1. 280.

Vinous liquor, liquor made from grapes; wine. Liquor (lik'gr), v. [liquor, n.] 1. trans. 1. To moisten; drench.

The stranger reply'd, "I'll liquor thy hide,
If thou offerst to touch the string."
Robin Hood and Little John (Child's Ballads, V. 217).

2. To rub with oil or grease; anoint; lubricate.

Cart-wheels squeak not when they are liquored.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 117.

3. To treat with a liquor; apply liquor or a solution to, as in various manufacturing operations. Liquoring sugar, in refineries, consists in pouring on the top of the molds a solution of pure sugar, which, percolating through, removes all remaining coloring matter.

4. To give liquor to; supply with liquor for drinking. [Obsolete or colloq.]

O, the musicians, Master Edward, call 'em in, and liquor 'em a little.
Middleton (M. Puritan, v. 1).

II. intrans. To drink; especially, to drink spirits: often with up. [Slang.]

Liquor-gage (lik'gr-gaj), n. A gager's measuring-rod for ascertaining the depth of liquid in a cask or tank.

Liquorice, n. See licorice.

Liquorish, n. Liquorishly, etc. Obsolete spellings of licorish, etc.

Liquorish², n. An obsolete form of licorice.

Liquorist (lik'gr-ist), n. [liquor + -ist.] A maker of liquor or cordials. [Rare.]

The manufacture of these liquors constitutes the trade of the "compounder" or liquorist.

Spont. Envy, Monet, I. 225.

Liquorous, Liquorously, etc. Variant spellings of licoraceous, etc.

Liquor-pump (lik'gr-pump), n. A portable pump used to draw liquor from a cask, a barrel, or the like.

Liquor-thief (lik'gr-thief), n. A tube used to lift a small quantity of liquor from a cask through the bung-hole; a sampling-tube.

Lira (lî'ra), n.; pl. lire (-re). [It. (= F. lire), < L. lira, a balance, a pound: see lira, lire.] 1. A modern silver coin of the kingdom of Italy, divided into 100 centesimi, and worth a franc, or about 19 United States cents.—2. A gold coin of Turkey, otherwise called a Turkish pound, equal to $2.40.

Lira (lî'ra), n. [It., < L. lyra: see lyre.] A lyre; formerly, also, some related instrument. The name has been loosely applied to many instruments of the viol class, and to others having a resonance-box resembling that of the violin and violoncello; also to an instrument in which the tones are produced by properly tuned steel bars fastened in a lyre-shaped rim and struck with a hammer.

—Lira da braccio, an obsolete variety of tenor viol, having seven strings.—Lira da gamba, an obsolete variety of violoncello, having fourteen or sixteen strings.—Lira pagana, rustical, or fadecosa, a hurdy-gurdy.

Lira, n. An obsolete form of leer.

Lira (lîr), n. [ME. lîre, lyre, < AS. lîra, flesh, brawn.] Flesh; brawn. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

Lira, n. [Origin obscure.] A cloth manufactured in England in the fifteenth century, and apparently a valuable and rich fabric.

Lirella (lî-rel'la), n. [NL, dim. of L. lira, a furrow.] In bot., the narrow furrowed apothecium of some lichens, as in the genus Graphis.

Lirellate (lî-rel'at), a. [NL. lirella + -ate.] In bot., narrow with a longitudinal furrow; having the character of a lirella: said of the apothecia of some lichens.

Lirelliform (lî-rel'î-form), a. [NL. lirella, a little furrow, + L. forma, form.] In bot., lirellate; narrow and furrowed.

Lirelline (lî-rel'in), a. [NL. lirella + -ine.] In bot., lirellate; having the character of a lirella.

Lirion-fancy, lirionfancy (lîr'î-kon-fan'si), n. [Also lirionfancy; a loose compound, appar. ult. based on Gr. lîrion, lily, + phrasia, fancy.] The lily-of-the-valley, Convallaria majalis.

The tufted daisy, violet,
Heartsease, for lovers hard to get;
The honey-suckle, rosemary,
Lirionfancy, rose-parley.

Poor Robin (1746). (Nares.)

Liriodendrin (lîr'î-dên'drin), n. [Liriodendron + -in.] A stimulant tonic with diaphoretic properties, prepared from the bark of Liriodendron tulipifera.

Liriodendron (lîr'î-dên'dron), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), < Gr. lîrion, a lily (see lily), + dendron, a tree.] 1. A genus of North American trees, consisting of a single species, belonging to the order Magnoliaceae, tribe Magnolieae, characterized by extrorse anthers and a sessile gynophore; the tulip-trees. The carpels have two ovules, and the fruits are like samaras. The tree often attains a height of over 100 feet, has a close bark, large four-lobed leaves, and solitary terminal greenish-yellow flowers, shaped somewhat like a tulip and consisting of three sepals and six petals. The wood is light-yellow or brown with white sapwood, light and soft, not strong, and close- and straight-grained. The tulip-tree reaches its greatest development in the lower Washington valley and along the western slopes of the Alleghenies southward. It is the sole remaining representative of a nearly extinct type which was formerly abundant, not less than 17 fossil species being known, the greater part occurring in the Cretaceous formation in New Jersey, Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Greenland, and Bohemia, with a few in the Tertiary, chiefly of Europe.

2. [l. c.] A tree of this genus.

Liripet, n. [Also liripette, liripette = MD. liripette; < ML. liripetum: see liripetum.] Same as liripetum.

Liripionated (lîr'î-ptî'î-nâ-ted), a. [OF. liripion, liripium (see liripium), + -at + -ed.] Hooded; wearing the liripium.

Lisbon (lîs'bon), n. [Lisbon (Pg. Lisboa), the capital of Portugal.] 1. A white or light-colored wine produced in the province of Alentejo in Portugal: so called from being shipped at Lisbon.—2. A soft sugar.

Flowering branch of Liriodendron tulipifera, the tulip-tree. a, a stamen; b, fruit; c, a carpel.

representative of a nearly extinct type which was formerly abundant, not less than 17 fossil species being known, the greater part occurring in the Cretaceous formation in New Jersey, Kansas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Greenland, and Bohemia, with a few in the Tertiary, chiefly of Europe.

2. [l. c.] A tree of this genus.

Liripet, n. [Also liripette, liripette = MD. liripette; < ML. liripetum: see liripetum.] Same as liripetum.

Liripionated (lîr'î-ptî'î-nâ-ted), a. [OF. liripion, liripium (see liripium), + -at + -ed.] Hooded; wearing the liripium.

Master Janotus . . . liripionated with a graduate's hood, . . . transported himself to the lodging of Gargantua. Utopia, tr. of Rabelais, I. 12. (Duval.)

Liripium (lîr'î-ptî'î-um), n.; pl. liripia (-î). [= OF. liripion (see liripion), < ML. liripium, prob. a corruption of L.L. cleri ephippium, caparison of a cleric; cleri, gen. of clerus, a clergyman, a cleric; ephippium, < Gr. ἐπιπικρον, a saddle-cloth: see ephippium.] A hood of a particular form formerly worn by graduates; in later times, a scarf or an appendage to the hood, consisting of long tails or tippets, which passed round the neck and hung down to the feet, and was often jagged. See tippet.

With their Aristotle's breech on their heads, and his liripium about their necks.

Bechler, I. 7 (cited by Capell). (Nares.)

Liripoot (lîr'î-pûp), n. [Also lirripoop, lirripoop; in defs. 2, 3, practically an independent word, of a slang nature, and subject to arbitrary variation, as lerripoop, lerripoops, lirripoop, etc.; < OF. liripion, liripion, a graduate's hood: see liripium.] 1. Same as liripium.—2. A degree of learning or knowledge worthy the wearer of a liripoot; acuteness; smartness; a smart trick. [Slang.]

Thou maist bee skilled in thy logick, but not in thy lirripoops.

Lyte, Epitho and Phao, I. 2.

I will teach thee thy lirripoops after another fashion than to be thus malpertie cooking and biling with me that am thy gouverneur. Stanbury, Description of Ireland, vi.

3. A silly person; as, "a young lirripoop," Beau, and Fl. [Slang.]

Lirk (lîrk), v. t. [ME. lirken; cf. lirt, lirp.] 1. To jerk.

I lirke hym up with my hand,

And pray hym that he wolle stand.

MS. Porington, 10. (Hallwell.)

2. To crease; rumple; cause to hang in loose folds. Hallwell. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

Lirk (lîrk), n. [lirk, v.] A crease; a rumple; a fold. Hallwell. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

The hills were high on lîrk side,

An' the bought 't the lîrk o' the hill.

The Broom of Cowdenknowe (Child's Ballads, IV. 45).

Liroconite (lî-rok'ô-nî-t), n. [Said to be < Gr. λεῖρος, pale, + κωνία, kônia, powder, + -ite.] A hydrated arseniate of copper, occurring in sky-blue or verdigris-blue crystals in several mines in Cornwall.

Lirp (lîrp), v. t. [CF. lirt, lirk.] 1. To snap the fingers.—2. To walk lame. Somerset. (Hallwell.)

Lirp (lîrp), n. [lirp, v.] A snap, as of the fingers.

A lirp or clack with ones fingers ends, as barbers doe give.

Florida.

Lirt (lîrt), v. t. [CF. lirk.] To toss. [Prov. Eng.]

Lirus (lî'rus), n. [NL., < Gr. λεῖρος, pale, delicate, var. of λεῖρος, λεῖρος, delicate, lily-like, < λεῖρος, lily: see lily.] A genus of stromateid fishes, of compressed-ovate form, with convex profile, and six or eight short strong spines in front of the dorsal fin. L. peregrinus is the rudder-fish, log-fish, or barrel-fish, of a blackish-green color, found from Maine to Cape Hatteras. Also written Letrus. Lowe, 1830.

Lis (lîs), n.; pl. lites (lî'tîs). [L.] A controversy; a litigation.—Lis mota, a controversy started; the commencement of a controversy, without reference to the bringing of an action thereon.—Lis pendens. (a) A pending litigation. (b) A formal notice, recorded so as to affect title to land, that litigation concerning it is pending.

Lis (lîs), n.; pl. lites (lî'tîs). [F., a lily: see lily, fleur-de-lis.] In her., same as fleur-de-lis.

A cross fleury with lions and lîs in the angles.

Armstrong, No. 125, p. 162.

Now of the lites, as we shall elect to call them.

H. Jennings, Rodriguez (1819), p. 65.

Lisbon (lîs'bon), n. [Lisbon (Pg. Lisboa), the capital of Portugal.] 1. A white or light-colored wine produced in the province of Alentejo in Portugal: so called from being shipped at Lisbon.—2. A soft sugar.

Log-fish, Black Rudder-fish (Lirus peregrinus).

profile, and six or eight short strong spines in front of the dorsal fin. L. peregrinus is the rudder-fish, log-fish, or barrel-fish, of a blackish-green color, found from Maine to Cape Hatteras. Also written Letrus. Lowe, 1830.

Lis (lîs), n.; pl. lites (lî'tîs). [L.] A controversy; a litigation.—Lis mota, a controversy started; the commencement of a controversy, without reference to the bringing of an action thereon.—Lis pendens. (a) A pending litigation. (b) A formal notice, recorded so as to affect title to land, that litigation concerning it is pending.

Lis (lîs), n.; pl. lites (lî'tîs). [F., a lily: see lily, fleur-de-lis.] In her., same as fleur-de-lis.

A cross fleury with lions and lîs in the angles.

Armstrong, No. 125, p. 162.

Now of the lites, as we shall elect to call them.

H. Jennings, Rodriguez (1819), p. 65.

Lisbon (lîs'bon), n. [Lisbon (Pg. Lisboa), the capital of Portugal.] 1. A white or light-colored wine produced in the province of Alentejo in Portugal: so called from being shipped at Lisbon.—2. A soft sugar.

Lisbon out. See double-brilliant, under bril- lant.

Lisbon diet-drink. See diet-drink.

Lish (lish), a. [Also leesh, Sc. lish; perhaps connected with lish.] Stout; active. Hall- well. [Prov. Eng.]

Lisianthus (lis-i-an'thūs), n. pl. [NL. (Griseb., 1845), < Lisianthus + -ae.] A subtribe of gentianaceous plants of the tribe Chironieae, characterized by the twice-lamellate stigma, usually exserted, versatile anthers, and persistent style. It embraces 6 genera, of which Lisianthus is the type, shrubs or tall herbs, all natives of America, chiefly within the tropics.

Lisianthus (lis-i-an'thus), n. [NL. (Aublet, 1775), irreg. for "Lysianthus, intended to mean 'cathartic flower,' erroneously formed < Gr. lyseō (λυω-), loosen, dissolve, + anthos, flower.] A genus of herbs or shrubs belonging to the natural order Gentianeae and the tribe Chironieae, and type of the subtribe Lisiantheae, characterized by large and usually handsome flowers, with a campanulate calyx having appressed and often obtuse segments, and a funnel-shaped corolla with an exserted tube. There are about 60 species, almost entirely confined to tropical America. Many are cultivated for ornament.

Lisk (lisk), n. Same as lesk.

Liskeardite (lis'kaird-it), n. [Liskeard (see def.) + -ite.] A hydrous arseniate of aluminum and iron, occurring in thin incrustations of a white or bluish-white color at Liskeard in Cornwall, England.

Lisle glove. Same as Lisle-thread glove. See thread.

Lisle stocking. Same as Lisle-thread stocking. See thread.

Lisle thread. See thread.

Lisnet, n. Same as lisnen.

Lisp (lisp), v. [Also dial. lpsay; < ME. lpsen, lpsen, < AS. wlispan (not recorded) (= D. lpsen = MLG. wlpsen = OHG. MHG. lpsen, G. dim. or freq. lpseln = Sw. lpsa = Dan. lapse, lisp, < wlisp, wlps (= OHG. lisp), lisp, stammering; prob. orig. imitative.] I. intrans. 1. To pronounce the sibilant letters s and z imperfectly, as by giving the sound of th (as in this) or wh (as in this, either).

Somewhat he lpsed, for his wantonness,
To make his English sweet upon his tongue.
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T. (ed. Morris), l. 304.

2. To speak imperfectly, as in childhood; make feeble, imperfect, or tentative efforts at speaking; hence, to speak in a hesitating, modest way.

I lps'd in numbers, for the numbers came.

Pope, Prol. to Satires, l. 128.

II. trans. To pronounce with a lisp or imperfectly.

This they suck in with their milks, and in their first learning to speak lps out this denotation.

Pursh, Pilgrimage, p. 206.

Another gift of the high God,

Which, maybe, shall have learn'd to lps you thanks.
Tennyson, Geraint.

Lisp (lisp), n. [Lisp, v.] The habit or act of lisp, as in uttering th for s, and wh for s; an indistinct utterance, as of a child.

Love those that love good fashions,
Good clothes and rich — they invite me to admire 'em;
That speak the lisp of court — oh, 'tis great learning!
Fletcher (and another), Elder Brother, ll. 3.

She has naturally a very agreeable voice and utterance, which she has changed for the prettiest lisp imaginable.

Steele, Tatler, No. 27.

Lisper (lis'pēr), n. [ME. lisper; < lisp, v., + -er.] One who lps; one who speaks with a natural or affected lisp or imperfectly.

I remember a race of lpsers, fine persons, who took an aversion to particular letters in our language.
Steele, Tatler, No. 77.

Lispingly (lis'ping-li), adv. In a lisp, in a lisp manner; with a lisp.

Lispy, n. [ME. lis, lispe, lysee, < AS. lisen, and orig. lith, gentleness, mildness, ease, lenity, mercy, forgiveness, grace, favor (= Dan. lise = Sw. lisa, solace, relief), < lith, gentle, mild, soft; see lith.] So lisp for lithesome. Cf. lisa, similarly related to lith.] 1. Relief; ease; abatement; cessation.

His woful herte of penance hadde a lisa.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 510.

2. Comfort; happiness.

Thus William & his woful queen winteres fele Lisden in liss and lisa as our lord wolde.
William of Palerne (A. E. T. S.), l. 1502.

Lispy (lis), v. t. [ME. lpsen, lpsen, < AS. lisen (= Sw. lisa), soften, weaken, subdue, < lisa, gentleness, mildness, ease; see lis, n.] To ease; lighten; relieve; abate.

I praye God youre sorwe lps.

Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 210.

Lissa (lis'ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λίσσος, smooth.] 1. A genus of brachyurous decapod crustaceans, or crabs. Leach, 1815. — 2. A genus of dipterous insects, of the family Microperidae, founded by Meigen in 1826. They are slender shining black flies, most of which are rare, and whose metamorphoses are unknown. L. inaequalis is the only European form. The three North American species described by Walker were incorrectly assigned to this genus.

Lissajous curves. See curve.
Lissamphibia (lis-am-fib'i-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λίσσος, smooth, + NL. Amphibia; see amphibia.] A division of the Amphibia, embracing the naked or smooth as distinguished from the mottled batrachians: opposed to Phractamphibia.

Lisse (lisse), n. [F., also lice, < L. lissum, thrum, leash, thread of a web; see list.] In tapestry, the threads of the warp taken together. The manner in which they are disposed determines the kind of tapestry, whether haute-lisse or basse-lisse.

Lissen (lis'n), n. [Formerly also lisne; origin obscure.] A cleft in a rock. [Prov. Eng.]

In the lisse of a rock at Kingscote in Gloucestershire,
I found a bushel of petrified cockles.

Sir M. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Lissencephala (lis-en-sef'a-lā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lissencephalus; see lissencephalous.] Those mammals which have smooth brains; in Owen's system of classification, one of four prime divisions of Mammalia. The corpus callosum is present and well developed (as it is not in Lysencephala), but the cerebral hemispheres are small, leaving much of the olfactory lobes and of the cerebellum uncovered, and their surfaces are smooth, having slight, few, or no convolutions (as is not the case in Gyrencephala and Archencephala). The Lissencephala comprise the Bruta or edentates, Chiroptera or bats, Insectivora, and Rodentia. The group thus corresponds to the Insuacalia of Bonaparte and Microdonta of Dana, or the lower series of placental or monodelphous mammals, as Gyrencephala does to the higher series Eucalia. Owen's Lysencephala were the marsupial and monotreme, or didelphian and ornithodelphian mammals; his Archencephala included man alone. The Lissencephalous brain is illustrated under gyrus (fig. 1).

Lissencephalous (lis-en-sef'a-lus), a. [NL. lissencephalus, < Gr. λίσσος, smooth, + ἐνκεφαλος, brain; see encephalon.] Having a smooth cerebrum; pertaining to the Lissencephala, or having their characters.

Lissens (lis'enz), n. pl. [Cf. lissen, a cleft.] In rope-making, the ultimate strands of a rope. E. H. Knight.

Lissoflagellata (lis-ō-faj-e-lā'tā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lissoflagellatus; see lissoflagellate.] Flagellate infusorians proper, which have simply a flagellum or flagella, but no collar; a subclass of Flagellata, contrasted with Choanoflagellata, and divided into Monadidea, Euglenodea, Heteromastigoda, and Isomastigoda.

Lissoflagellate (lis-ō-faj'e-lāt), a. [NL. lissoflagellatus, < Gr. λίσσος, smooth, + NL. flagellatus; see flagellate.] Simply flagellate, as an infusorian; having a flagellum, but no collar or choana; of or pertaining to the Lissoflagellata.

Lissome (lis'um), a. [A reduction of lithesome, q. v. Cf. lis.] Limber; supple; flexible; lithic; lithesome; light; nimble; active. Sometimes written lissom.

A daughter of our meadows, yet not coarse,
Straight, but as lissome as a hazel wand.
Tennyson, The Brook.

Lissomeness (lis'um-nēs), n. The state of being lissome; flexibility; agility; lightness; lithesomeness.

Lisotrichous (li-sot'ri-kus), a. [NL. lisotrichus, < Gr. λίσσος, smooth, + τριχ (trich), hair.] Smooth-haired; lisotrichous; said of animals having hair that is cylindrical, or circular in section, and hence straight and smooth.

Lisotriton (li-sot'ri-tōn), n. [NL. (Bell, 1849), < Gr. λίσσος, smooth, + NL. triton.] A genus of smooth-skinned Salamandridae, L. punctatus is the common or smooth newt or eel of Great Britain, thus generically separated from the crested or warty newt. See Triton.

List (list), v. [Early mod. E. also lyst, lest; < ME. liston, lysten, lysten, earlier lleston, < AS. llystan (= Icel. llysta), list, listen, < llyst, hearing (cf. gehlyst, hearing) (= Icel. llyst, the ear; cf. W. llyst, l. llyst, the ear); with noun-formative -t, < Tent. √ lhu, hear, which also appears (a) with formative -n in AS. llystian (= MHG. llysenen, llysenen = Sw. llysa), listen (a form represented later by (b) ME. llysten, llystion, llystion, E. listen, in which the t is due to association with ME. llysten, E. listen); (c) with formative -sk in MD. llyschen = MLG. llyschen = MHG. llyschen, G. llyschen = Dan. llyske (> ME. llyskon), listen; (d) with formative -r in D. llystern = OHG. llystern, MHG. llystern, G. dial. llystern = Dan. llystern = Sw. llystern, harken; and (e) with formative -ja, absorbed, in OHG. llysen, MHG. llysen, listen; the Tent. √ lhu (= Aryan √ lhu, as in OBulg. llyshati, hear, llyshu, hearing, Lith. llyshyti, hear, llyskuti, harken, llysa, obedience, Skt. llyskuti, hearing, obedience) being an extension of √ lhu (= Aryan √ lhu, in L. llyuere, hear, llyclutus, heard of, famous, Gr. llybeu, hear, llyvō, heard of, famous, etc.), whence AS. llyud, E. loud, etc.: see loud, client, etc.] I. intrans. To attend; give heed; harken; listen. [Poetical.]

Let, my sons, and thou schait here
So as it hath bifalle or this. Gower.

Let, list; I hear
Some far off halloo break the silent air.
Milton, Comus, l. 480.

Go forth under the open sky, and list
To Nature's teachings. Dryden, Thanatopsis.

II. trans. To listen or harken to. [Poetical.]

Then weigh what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list his songs.
Shak., Hamlet, l. 3. 20.

Hollowing one hand against his ear,
To list a foot-fall, ere he saw
The wood-nymph. Tennyson, Palace of Art.

List (list), n. [ME. list, lyst, < AS. llyst, hearing, gehlyst, hearing; = Icel. llyst, the ear; see list, v.] 1. The sense of hearing. — 2. An attitude of attention.

In honorance of Iesu Cryst
Sithest stille & haneth lyst,
And gif ge wille to me here
Of oure ladi ge mair lere.
King Horn (A. E. T. S.), p. 75.

list (list), v. [ME. llysten, llysten, llysten, llysten (a pron. as y), desire, also impers., please, < AS. llystan, impers., please (= OS. llystian = D. llysten = MLG. llysten = OHG. llystjan, llystun, MHG. llysten, G. llysten, ge-llysten = Icel. llysta = Dan. llysto = Sw. llysta = Goth. llystōn, desire); < llyst, desire, pleasure; see llyst, n. Cf. llyst, v., a doublet of list, now depending directly on the mod. noun list.] I. trans. 1. To please; be agreeable to; gratify; suit: originally impersonal, with indirect object of the person.

Whan hem lyst, thei remewen to other Cytees.
Mandeville, Travels, p. 38.

And somme seyn that we loven best
For to be free, and do right as us lyst.
Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 80.

2. Naut., to cause to incline or lean to one side; cause to careen or heel over, as a ship by force of a side wind or by unequal stowage of cargo, etc.

II. intrans. 1. To be disposed or inclined; wish; choose; like; please: with a personal subject: absolute, or followed by an infinitive with to.

And there oure host bigan his hors ariste,
And sayde: "Lordynges, herkneth if you lyste."
Chaucer, Gen. Prol. to C. T., l. 938.

They oppress the weak, and take from them what they list by force.

Lattimer, Sermon bet. Edw. VI., 1560.

Imagining no so true property of sovereignty as to do what he list, and to list whatsoever pleased his fancy, he quickly made his kingdom a tennis-court, where his subjects should be the balls.

Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, ll.

To them that list the worlds ray shewes I leave.
Spenser, F. Q., VI. ix. 22.

The wind bloweth where it listeth. John iii. 8.

But still he lets the people, whom he seems,
Gape and cry wizard at him, if they list.
M. Arnold, Empedocles on Etna.

2. Naut., to incline to one side or careen: as, the ship listeth to starboard.

Soon she listeth to port and filled rapidly.

The Century, XXIX. 742.

list (list), n. [ME. list, lest, lyst, var. (after the derived verb list) of list, < AS. llyst, pleasure, desire; see list, v., and list, v.] 1. Desire; wish; choice; inclination.

To dyne I have no list,
Tyll I have some holde barbe,
Or some unkeith gest.

Lyall Geste of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 45).

If you would consider your state, you would have little list to sing, I wile.

Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, l. 4.

He saw false Reynard where he lay full low;
I need not swear he had no list to crow.

Dryden, Cook and Fox, l. 152.

2. Pleasure; lust.

Honestie my olde Grandfather called that, when meene lyued by law, not list.
Lyly, Euphues and his England, p. 261.

8. Naut., a careening or leaning to one side: as, the ship has a list to port.

In consequence of her list and her drop aft, the forecabin was half-empty of water.

W. C. Russell, Sailor's Sweetheart, xvi.

Giving a great list, she [a boat] rocked forward and aft several times, and went to the bottom in eight fathoms of water.

Sol. Amer., N. E., LVII. 15.

list⁴ (list), n. [< ME. liste, < AS. list, wisdom, cunning, = OS. list = OFries. list, list = D. list = MLG. LG. list = OHG. MHG. list, wisdom, prudence, cunning, artifice, G. list, cunning, artifice, = Icel. Sw. Dan. list, wisdom, skill, cunning, = Goth. list, cunning, craft, will; orig. 'cunning' in the orig. sense of that word, 'knowing'; with formative -t, < Teut. w list in AS. leornian (orig. 'learn'), learn, wisan, teach. See learn and leorn, lore, and cf. list from the same ult. root.] Cunning; craft; skill.

Blure me to kerne

And of the coupe sene.

Tha tech him of alle the liste.

King Horn (E. E. T. S.), I. 225.

list⁴ (list), n. and a. [*< ME. list, liste, list, < AS. list, a border of cloth, = D. list = MLG. liste, a border, margin, = OHG. lista, MHG. liste, G. liste, a border, strip, = Icel. lista = Dan. liste = Sw. list (cf. F. liste = Sp. It. lista, < G. or LG.), a border, strip. Not found outside of Teut. and Rom. Some uses (e. g., def. 5) of list⁴ are appar. of F. origin, the F. liste being ult. the same word, and the immediate source of E. list⁵.] I. n. 1. The outer edge of anything; a border, limit, or boundary. [Obsolete or poetical.]*

And [if] any brother or sister yat duellen wyt-out-en ye listys of thre myle from ye cite dore.

English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), p. 44.

The . . . situation . . . is in the very farthest part & list of Europe, bordering upon Asia.

Bakhtuyev's Voyages, I. 479.

I am bound to your niece, sir; I mean, she is the list of my voyage.

Shak., T. N., III. 1. 86.

Made her right [hand] a comb of pearl to part The list of such a beard as youth gone out Had left in ashes.

Tennyson, Merlin and Vivien.

2. The border or edge of cloth, forming the selvaie, and usually different from the rest of the fabric; also, such borders collectively. This, which is torn or cut off when the cloth is made up, is used for many purposes requiring a cheap material.

First Gent. Well, there went but a pair of shears between us.

Lucio. I grant: as there may between the list and the velvet.

Shak., M. for M., I. 2. 31.

Hence—3. Any strip of cloth; a fillet; a stripe of any kind.

Gartered with a red and blue list.

Shak., T. of the S., III. 2. 62.

They make blacke lists in their flesh, raising the skinne.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 420.

There is a very beautiful sort of wild Ass in this Country [the Cape of Good Hope], whose body is curiously striped with equal lists of white and black.

Dampier, Voyages (1699), I. 533.

4. The lobe of the ear; also, the ear itself.

By God, he smoot me ones on the list.

For that I rente out of his book a leat.

That of the strook myn ere was all deat.

Chaucer, Prologue to Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 634.

Le mol de l'oreille, the lug or list of th' eare. Cotgrave.

They have giuen it me soundly, I feele it vnder the list of both eares.

Dekker, Match me in London.

5. In arch., a square molding; a fillet. Also called listel.

In the beginning it [the Doric] was a very simple order, as it appears even now in some places; the capital consisting only of a large list or square stone and a large quarter round under that, and the embelature of a deep architrave of one face, a broad frieze, and a very simple cornice.

Pococke, Description of the East, II. 11. 166.

6. In corp.: (a) A narrow strip from the edge of a plank. (b) The upper rail of a railing. E. H. Knight.—7. A woollen flap used by ropemakers as a guard for the hand.—8. In tinning iron plates, a thin coat of tin applied preparatory to a thicker coat. E. H. Knight.—9. A close dense streak in heavy bread. Halliwell.

[Prov. Eng.]—10. A ridge of earth thrown up by a double-moldboard plow, as in cultivating Indian corn. [Western U. S.]—Lateral list in dipterous insects, the sides of the front, as distinguished from the central part or frontal stripe.

II. a. Made of lists or strips of woollen selvaie; made of list: as, list carpet.

I watched her glide along the gallery, her quiet tread muffled in a list slipper.

Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xvii.

That noble creature [the butterfly] came into the dining-room in a fannel gown and list shoes.

Dickens, Little Dorrit, II. 25.

list⁴ (list), v. t. [< ME. listen, listen; < list⁴, n.]

1. To border; edge. See list⁴, n., 1.

Crowns of gould and assure bendes entranse listet as grene as a mede, and the streamers down to the handes of Antony his stewards.

Martin (E. E. T. S.), II. 163.

Most of them, I mean among your Latin Epistolisers, go freighted with mere Bartholomew Wars, with trite and trivial Phrases only, listet with pedantic shreds of School-boy Verses.

Howell, Letters, I. 1. 1.

A Danish Curtax, listet with gold or silver, hung on his left shoulder.

Milton, Hist. Eng., vi.

2. To sew or put together, as strips of cloth, so as to make a variegated display of color, or to form a border.

The showery arch,

With listet colours gay, or, assure, gulcs,

Delights and puzzles the beholder's eye.

J. Phillips, Cider, II.

3. To cover with list, or with lists or strips of cloth: as, to list a door; hence, to mark as if with list; streak.

He listet the doors against approaching winter breezes.

A. T. Cooke, Somebody's Neighbors, p. 64.

4. In corp., to take off the edge of, as a board; shape by chopping preparatory to finishing, as a block or stove. E. H. Knight.—5. To ridge with raised borders of earth, as rows of Indian corn, by throwing up a furrow on each side with a double-moldboard plow. [Western U. S.]

Particularly for use on growing check-rowed and listet corn.

Sol. Amer., N. E., LVIII. 226.

6. In cotton-culture, to prepare for the crop (as land) by making a bed with the hoe, and alternating beds with alleys. [Southern U. S.]

There is much difference of opinion upon the subject of burning or listing [in preparing the land for a cotton crop].

New Amer. Farm Book, p. 261.

list⁵ (list), n. [= D. list = G. Dan. liste = Sw. lista, < OF. liste, F. liste = Sp. Pg. It. lista, orig. a border, band, strip, in present use a roll or list of names, catalogue, < MHG. liste, G. liste (= AS. list, E. list⁴), a border, band, edge, strip: see list⁴.] 1. A roll or catalogue; an enumeration of persons or things by their names: as, a list of officers or members of a society; a list of books or of clothing.

Yes: 'tis the list

Of those that claim their offices this day

By custom of the coronation.

Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 1. 15.

I would not enter on my list of friends . . .

the man

Who needlessly sets foot upon a worm.

Cowper, Task, vi. 560.

What student came but that you planned her path

To Lady Psyche?

Still her list were swell'd and mine were lean.

Tennyson, Princess, iv.

2. A book, card, or slip of paper containing a series of names of persons or things, or prepared for the noting of such names: as, a visiting-list; a washing-list.—Active list, burgess list, descriptive list. See the qualifying words.—Civil list, the list or the aggregate of the sums appropriated for the payment of the civil officers of a government; hence, the body of such officers in a country. (For the use of the phrase in Great Britain, see civil).—Free list, a list or category of particular persons who or things which are exempt from some general requirement. Specifically—(a) A list of the articles exempt from duty under existing revenue laws. (b) A list of persons allowed free admittance to any public entertainment.—Myn. List, Roll, Register, Catalogue, Inventory, Schedule. Roll applies only to persons, inventory and schedule only to things; the rest apply to both. List is much the most general. A list may be merely of names, without description or order, as a list of shops, a list of persons proscribed. Roll differs from list only in limitation to persons and in faint suggestion of its original meaning of a rolled-up paper or parchment. Register suggests an official act of some formality and fullness of detail, perhaps according to a legal or customary form: as, a register of voters, of marriages, or of deaths. Catalogue supposes orderly arrangement and some fullness of description: as, a catalogue of the paintings in a gallery, of the specimens in a museum, of the books in a library, or of the students in a college. An inventory is a list of property, generally with prices or values, made for legal or business purposes, as on a dissolution of partnership. A schedule is a list of things, made for any purpose, and showing what they are both in a general view and in some detail: as, a schedule of studies, or of assets.

list⁵ (list), v. [< list⁵, n.] I. trans. 1. To put into a list or catalogue; register; enroll.

They may be listet among the upper serving-men of some great household.

Milton.

As we have seen who were called faithful by the apostolical men, we may also perceive who were listet by them in the catalogue of heretics.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 210.

Though all th' inhabitants of sea and air Be listet in the glutton's bill of fare.

Cowley, On a Garden.

Specifically—2. To register the name of as a soldier; muster into the public service as a soldier; enlist: in this sense partly by aphoresis from enlist.

Libertinism hath erected its standard, hath declared war against religion, and openly listet men of its side and party.

A sergeant made use of me to inveigle country fellows, and listet them in the service of the parliament.

Addison, Adventures of a Shilling.

3. To enter for taxation, as property of any kind, upon the assessment-roll or a tax-book. [Local, U. S.]

II. intrans. To enter the public service by enrolling one's name; enlist: in this use partly by aphoresis from enlist.

At the age of fifteen, I went and listet for a soldier.

Goldsmith, Strolling Player.

list⁶ (list), n. [Usually in pl. lists; < ME. liste, lyete, < AF. lyete, with unorig. t (perhaps by confusion with OF. lyete, ME. lyete, E. list⁴, edge), prop. lyese, OF. lyese, lyce, F. lyce = Pr. lyasa = Sp. lyasa = Pg. lyasa = It. lyasa, lyasa, < ML. lyca (pl. lyca), barrier (lyca dwellt, barriers of a tournament, the lists), appar. (with ref. to the ropes used as barriers) orig. pl. of L. lyca, thrum, thread, a small girdle. Cf. MHG. G. lyese, cord, lace, file, bobbin; F. lyese, lace (see lyese).] One of the barriers inclosing the field of combat at a tournament; usually, in the plural (rarely in the singular), the space or field thus inclosed: now mostly used figuratively: as, to enter the lists in behalf of one's principles.

No man therefore, up payne of los of lyf,

No maner shot, polax, ne shorte knyf

Into the lytes sende ne thider bringe.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1687.

To the lists they came, and single-sword and gauntlet was their fight.

Beau. and Fl., King and No King, II. 1.

A prince whose eye is choosor to his heart

Is seldom steady in the lists of love.

Ford, Love's Sacrifice, iv. 1.

The list must be sixty paces long and forty paces broad, set up in good order, and the ground within hard, stable, and level, without any great stones or other impediments.

Duke of Gloucester, quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 112.

list⁶ (list), v. t. [< list⁶, n.] To inclose for a tournament, or for any contest: used especially in the past participle.

Then dare the boldest of the hostile train To mortal combat on the listet plain.

Pope, Iliad, vii. 56.

Ourselves beheld the listet field, A sight both sad and fair.

Scott, Marmion, l. 12.

list⁷ (list), n. [A var. of list, leak: see leak.] The flank. [Prov. Eng.]

A list of pork, a bony piece cut from the gammon.

Kenneth, M. (Halliwell.)

listel (lis'tel), n. [< F. listel, listeau, dim. of liste, a list, fillet, roll: see list⁴.] In arch., a narrow list or fillet; a register.

listen (lis'n), v. [< ME. listenen, listenen, listenen, listen; with formative -n, < listen, listen, E. list: see list⁴, v.] I. intrans. To attend closely with the design of hearing; give ear; harken; hence, to give heed; yield compliantly: as, to listen to reason.

Parys listet lyuely, let for no shame.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 3114.

I listet for the Clock to chime

Dayes latest hower.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 1.

My Lord, let me intreat you to stand behind this skreen and listen.

Congress, Double-Dealer, v. 13.

Where street met quay a fiddle's sound beguiled A knot of listening folk.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 221.

To listen after, to be eager to hear or get information regarding; inquire after.

Here comes my servant Travers, whom I sent On Tuesday last to listen after news.

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., i. 1. 29.

II. trans. To hear; attend to; give heed to.

As it is tre to a sole foly to carpe, So is it wit a wiseman his words to listen.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 5082.

Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., v. 2. 102.

At which I ceased, and listen'd them a while.

Milton, Comus, l. 561.

To listen out, to find out.

Jenkin, come hither: go to Bradford, And listen out your fellow Willy.

Greene, George-a-Greene.

listener (lis'nér), n. [< ME. listner (f); as listen + -er.] One who listens; a harkener.

Not to die a listener, I arose, And with me Philip, talking still.

Tennyson, The Brook.

lister¹ (lis'tér), n. [< list⁴, v., 5, + -er.] In agri., an implement, of the nature of a plow, by which open furrows at proper distances from each other are formed, in the bottoms of which maize or other grain is planted by a drill. The list and drill have been combined in one implement, and listing and drill-planting are simultaneously performed by this device. — list, cultivator, a cultivator specially designed for operation between the rows of listed corn.

list (lis'tér), n. [< list, v., + -er]. One who makes a list or roll; specifically, in some parts of the United States, an appraiser for the purpose of taxation; an officer whose duty it is to make lists of taxable property.

list (lis'tér), n. [ME. lister, listre, listyr, < OF. listre, for listre, < L. lector, a reader, < leger (> F. lire), read: see lector]. 1. A reader. — 2. A preaching friar; a lector.

list (lis'tér), n. See lector.

Listera (lis'te-rá), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1813), named after Martin Lister, an English physician and naturalist.] A genus of small terrestrial orchidaceous plants of the tribe Neottieae, characterized by distinct spreading sepals and petals, an entire or two-lobed lip longer than the sepals, and a very short column. The stem is simple and erect, and bears two sub-opposite leaves. There are about 10 species, growing in Europe, temperate Asia, and North America. See lilyblade.

Listerian (lis'te-ri-án), a. [< Lister (see Listerism) + -ian]. Of or pertaining to Sir Joseph Lister; specifically, pertaining to a method of antiseptic surgery introduced by him. See Listerism.

Listerine (lis'te-rin), n. [From Sir Joseph Lister, the founder of antiseptic surgery.] An antiseptic preparation consisting of a solution of benzoic acid, boric acid, thymol, etc.

Listerise, v. t. See Listerize.

Listerism (lis'te-rizm), n. [< Lister (see def.) + -ism]. An antiseptic method of operating introduced by Sir Joseph Lister, an English surgeon (born 1827). It was designed to effect the total exclusion of living germs from surgical wounds. A spray of carbolic solution was brought to play over the part under operation, that the germicidal effect might result not only on the surface of the tissues, but also in the surrounding air. After the operation the part was closely enveloped in dressings impregnated with carbolic acid or other germicide, which were disturbed as little as possible during recovery. Some of the features of the early forms of Lister's method have fallen into disuse, but the recognition of the importance of the exclusion of living germs from surgical wounds, of the danger of the introduction of germs from air, instruments, appliances of all kinds, and the hands of those operating, and of the value in this regard not only of cleanliness but of germicidal drugs, seems to be a permanent acquisition of the surgical art.

Listerize (lis'te-ríz), v. t.; pret. and pp. Listerized, ppr. Listerizing. [< Lister (see Listerism) + -ize]. To treat by Sir Joseph Lister's antiseptic method. See Listerism. Also spelled Listerise.

Patients are Listerized, to use a hospital term, just as beer and wine are nowadays "Pasteurized," to use a trade term — which means that, by their respective methods, they are sealed against the entrance of the germs of disease. Nineteenth Century, XXIV. 346.

Lister's gauze. See gauze.

listful (lis'tfúl), a. [< list, n., + -ful]. Attentive.

Who all the while, with greedy listful cares,
Did stand astonish'd at his curious skill.

Spenser, Colin Clout, l. 7.

listing (lis'ting), n. [Verbal n. of list, v.]. 1. The act of attaching a list or border, or of binding with list.

Here I must breathe awhile, to satisfy some that perhaps might otherwise wonder at such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidery or listing of one favour upon another. Sir H. Wotton, Beliquis, p. 211.

2. A list or border of cloth, etc.

Shoes bound round with listing band. Mary Howitt.

3. The act of cutting away the sapwood from the edge of a board. — 4. The strip thus cut away. — 5. In agri., the throwing up of the soil into ridges. [U. S.]

The drawback to this listing is due to the fact that close to the edges of the furrow on each side a row of weeds springs up. Sci. Amer., N. S., LVI. 2.

listing (lis'ting), n. [Verbal n. of list, v.]. 1. The act of making a list or catalogue. — 2. In land laws of the United States, an allotment or assignment of land by the government.

An attempt was made to attack the validity of the listing of the land by the general government over to the state, which is equivalent to a patent in passing to it the fee simple. California Law Report.

listing-plow (lis'ting-plon), n. A plow with a double moldboard, specially designed for listing, or throwing the soil up into ridges. [U. S.]

Listing's theorem. See theorem.

Listless (lis'tles), a. [< list, n., + -less. Cf. listless]. 1. Indifferent to or taking no interest in what happens about one; languid and unheeding: as, a listless hearer or spectator.

I, listless, yet restless,
Find every prospect vain.

Burns, Despondency.

2. Marked by languid inactivity; manifesting relaxed attention; inanimate: as, a listless attitude.

His listless length at noon-tide would he stretch.

Gray, Elegy.

With a half smile she let fall the gold
And glittering gems her listless hand did hold.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 330.

— Syn. 1. Listless, careless, supine, indolent. The listless and the careless do not care or desire; the supine and the indolent do not care enough to conquer their shrinking from activity or work. The words may all indicate a temporary state or a permanent element of character; indolent generally indicates the latter. (See idle.) Careless is not caring; supine is literally lying flat on one's back, not rousing one's self at all, ignobly indifferent; listless, indifferent and languid. Listless does not necessarily imply blame.

Listlessly (lis'tles-ly), adv. In a listless manner; without attention; heedlessly.

Listlessness (lis'tles-nes), n. The state of being listless; indifference to what is passing; languid inattention.

listly (lis'tli), a. [< list, n., + -ly]. Quick of hearing. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.] listly (lis'tli), adv. [= D. listlijk = Dan. (obs.) listelig < listly, a.] Easily; distinctly. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.] listly (lis'tli), adv. [ME. listely, < AS. listlic (= OHG. listlich, MHG. listlich), cunningly, < list, cunning, + -lic: see list and -ly]. Cunningly; slyly.

He ful listi hem ledes to that loueli schippe, et taugt hi-hende tunnes hem to hude there.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 2742.

list-mill (lis'tmil), n. In gem-cutting, a wheel covered with list or selvage of woolen material, used for polishing stones cut en cabochon. [Obsolete]. Also list-wheel.

listness, n. [Irreg. < list + -ness]. The state of listening; attention.

Then take me this errand,

And what I shal prophesy with tentue listness haroken.

Stanspaul, Aeneid, III. 254. (Davies.)

liston (lis'ton), n. [< OF. liston, < listre, a list: see list]. In her., a scroll or ribbon upon which a motto is inscribed.

list-pan (lis'tpan), n. A perforated skimmer used in tin-plate manufacture. E. H. Knight.

list-pot (lis'tpot), n. In tin-plate manuf., the last of the series of five pots used in coating the iron plates.

The list-pot, which contains a layer of melted tin about one-quarter of an inch deep.

Wahl, Galvanoplastic Manipulations, p. 518.

listred (lis'tred), n. [< W. listraid, a corn-measure, lit. a vesselful, < listre, a vessel]. A Welsh corn-measure, equal to $\frac{3}{4}$ imperial bushels, or 4 United States (Winchester) bushels. This is the statement of the parliamentary returns of 1879, where it is reported as still in use. According to Dr. Young, it was 20, 21, 22, or 24 gallons in different localities.

list-wheel (lis'thwel), n. Same as list-mill.

list-work (lis'twérk), n. A sort of appliqué work in which list is sewed upon a garment cut out of fabric of any kind, edge to edge or overlapping.

listy (lis'ti), a. [A dial. var. of lusty]. Strong; powerful. [North. Eng.] lit (lit), a. and n. [ME. lit, lyt, lut (also lite, lyte, lute, partly as abbr. of litol, lytol, litle), < AS. lit = OS. lut, litte: see litle, and cf. litel]. Little.

Listy mene and abla. Lincoln MS., l. 2. (Hallwell.)

Felaw, he seid, herkyen a lýt,

And on myne errand go thou tyt.

MS. Cantab. Fl. v. 48, l. 52. (Hallwell.)

lit (lit), n. [< ME. lit, litle, < litol, lytol, color, dye, earlier complexion, face, countenance, = AS. white, beauty, splendor, form, hue, face.] Color; dye; stain. [Prov. Eng.] lit (lit), v. t. [< ME. liten, liem, < litol, lytol, dye, color, < litr, dye, color: see lit, n.] To color; dye.

We use no clothes that are litted of diverse colours; our wives ne are nogte gayly arrayed for to please us. MS. Lincoln, A. l. 17, l. 38. (Hallwell.)

lit (lit). Preterit and past participle of lith.

lit (lit). Preterit and past participle of lith.

lit. An abbreviation of literal and literally; also of literature.

lit, n. Plural of lith.

litany (lit'a-ni), n.; pl. litanies (-niz). [Early mod. E. litanie, < ME. litanie, < OF. letanie, F. litanie = Fr. letanie = Sp. letania = Pg. ladania = It. litania, letania, letana (in F., etc., usually in pl.), < LL. litania, < Gr. litaneia, an entreating, a litany, < lithanein, rare form of lithanein, pray, < lithanein, lithanein, beg, pray; cf. lit, prayer: see lit]. 1. Primarily, a solemn prayer of supplication; a public or general supplication to God, especially in processions.

Thet putten his name in here Letanyer, as a Seynt.

Handecille, Travels, p. 177.

The morning hymns and psalmody and prayers then came all under the general term of litany, and the Arians were forbidden in this sense to make any litanies within the city, by this law of Arcadius.

Bingham, Antiq., I. xiii. 1.

2. Specifically, in liturgies, an appointed form of responsive prayer, used as part of a service or separately. The most important varieties have been the following: (a) Liturgical or missal litanies, found in the oldest liturgies or eucharistic offices, especially in the introductory division. Such are the synaxae and ekemes of the Oriental forms, consisting of a series of brief clauses, mostly beginning "In behalf of," then naming the person or thing prayed for, and concluding "let us beseech the Lord," with the response Kyrie eleison. There were originally five such litanies in the liturgy: the initial doxologia or trinitaria (the Western Kyrie, pax, and collect), the ekemes after the Gospel, the litany after the offertory, that following the great intercession by the priest after consecration, and a closing litany after communion. In the West such litanies were in use for many centuries, but they have not been retained in the Roman Church, which has, however, vestiges before the introit and the Kyrie after it. (b) In the day hours and other offices similar litanies often form part of the service in both East and West. (c) As separate offices in the Western Church, litanies have been used since the fifth century, especially in processions of clergy and people. The earliest form of these was the repetition of Kyrie eleison a great number of times without variation, the petitions of the missal litanies being omitted. Somewhat later the existing Western form was developed, beginning with the Kyrie and invocation of the Trinity, followed by invocations of saints, deprecations, obsecrations, supplications or intercessions, with other suffrages and prayers. The Anglican Litany in the Book of Common Prayer follows very closely the model just described, but omits all invocations of saints, recites generally several petitions in succession before inserting a response, and makes a few additions. (See deprecation.) 2. It is, properly speaking, a separate service, but is regularly said after the third collect at morning prayer on Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. On Sundays and holy days it immediately precedes the communion service, or else is said separately. In the Roman Catholic Church three litanies are recognised for use in public worship: (1) the Litany of the Saints; (2) the Litany of the Blessed Virgin, or Litany of Loreto; and (3) the Litany of the Most Holy Name of Jesus. See lit.

And songe the litanies

And other gode crysons.

Rob. of Gloucester, p. 408.

Hence — 3. Any earnest supplication or prayer. [Poetical].

We passed, and joined a crowd in such like guise,

Who through the town sang woful litanies.

William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 16.

Deacon's litany. See deaconia, ecmene, trinitaria, synaxe. — Lesser litany. (a) The petitions Kyrie eleison, Christe eleison, Kyrie eleison, each said thrice, as at the beginning of the eucharistic office or mass, or the same translated, "Lord or Christ, have mercy upon us." (b) The same petitions with the following versicles or prayers and responses in the litany in the English Book of Common Prayer, allowed to be omitted at discretion in the American Book. (c) The same petitions with the following versicles and responses in the Orders for Morning and Evening Prayer.

Litany-desk (lit'a-ni-desk), n. In the Anglican Ch., a movable desk at which a minister or reader kneels facing the altar, while he recites the litany. It is placed in the body of the church, in front of the door of the rood-screen or chancel. This position outside the choir or sanctuary is intended to accord with the penitential character of the litany. Also called litany-stool and (less correctly) judicium. See cut under judicium.

Litany-stool (lit'a-ni-stöl), n. Same as litany-desk.

litharge, n. An obsolete variant of litharge.

Lithargic, litharge, n. Middle English variants of lithargy. Chaucer.

lithation (lit'a-shon), n. [< L. lithatio(n)], a fortunate or successful sacrifice, < litare, make a favorable sacrifice or offering, obtain favorable omens. A sacrificing. Bailey, 1781.

Litchi (lich'i), n. [NL. (P. Sonnerat, 1776), < Chin. lichi: see litchi]. A genus of sapindaceous trees included by Benthams and Hooker in the genus Nephelium. There is but one species, which is confined to China, the eastern part of India, and the Philippine Islands, producing an edible fruit, the litchi. See litchi.

Litch-owl, n. See litch-owl.

Lit. D., Litt. D. An abbreviation of the Latin Litterarum (Litterarum) Doctor — that is, Doctor of Letters.

lit de justice (lî dè zhîs-tès'). [F.: lit, bed (< L. lectus, bed: see litter, n.); de, of; justice, justice.] Bed of justice. See bed.

lite, a. and n. [< ME. lite, lyte, lute, partly abbr. of litol, lytol, lutel, litle (cf. much, ME. muche, moche, abbr. of muchel, moche), partly from lit, lyt, litle: see lit and litle]. 1. a. Little.

It seemed that he carried lite array.

Chaucer, Prologue to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 14.

From this exploit he sayd not great nor lite,

The aged men, and boys of tender age.

Parkes, tr. of Tasso, xi. 32. (Latham.)

2. Of low rank.

He ne latte for reyne ne thonder
In sikness nor in meechief to visite
The ferreste in his parische, moche and Mte.
Chaucer, Gen. Pro. to C. T., l. 484.

II. n. A little; a small amount; a short time.

Cold water shal not greve us but a litle.
Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale, l. 254.

As for to fare thus with thi frende folly it were,
For he that loneth the lilly lye of thyne couneteth.
Piers Plowman (B), xlii. 149.

He sede me a lile bitore is deth that he was ate dede.
Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 38.

litle¹, adv. In a small quantity or degree.—Lite and lile, little by little; gradually or slowly.

Every soun
Nis but of air reverberacioun.
And evere it wasteth lite and lile (var. lile) away.
Chaucer, Summoner's Tale, l. 537.

lite² (l'it), n.; pl. lites (-tēs). [Gr. λῆτης, prayer:
see litany.] In the Gr. Oh., a religious procession accompanied with prayer; prayer for a special object made during such a procession.
-lite. [F. lith = Sp. lito = Pg. litho = It.
lito, < L. lithus, < Gr. λίθος, a stone. The form lith is directly from the L. and Gr.; and the form lite is partly from the F. lith (pron. lēt), and is partly due to conformation to the unrelated suffix -lith as used in mineralogy.] An element (a quasi-suffix) in names of minerals, signifying 'stone': same as -lith.

lith¹, a, n., adv., and v. A Middle English form of lille.

lith², n. A Middle English form of litter.

lith³, lith⁴ (l'it), n. [F. litre, < Gr. λίτρα, a pound, > LL. litra, a pound, ML. a measure of liquids (> F. litron, an old measure of capacity): see litra.] The unit of capacity in the metric system, equal to 0.88036 imperial quart, or 1.056 United States quarts; the volume of one kilogram of water at its maximum density.
It was intended to be as nearly equal as possible to one cubic decimeter, and in fact its departure from this is extremely small, and has never been satisfactorily determined. The lith is a volume ascertained by weighing.
It is not a vessel; and the temperature of the vessel that holds it is only defined for the purpose of testing standards.

literacy (lit'ē-rā-si), n. [Gr. λῆτης + -cy.]
The state of being literate; knowledge of letters; ability to read and write; possession of education; also, condition with reference to education: opposed to illiteracy.

Massachusetts is the first state in the Union in literacy in its native population.

New Eng. Jour. of Education, XVII. 54.

lithal (lit'g-rā), a. and n. [OF. lithal, F.
lithal = Sp. lithal = Pg. lithal = It. lithale, letterale, < LL. lithalis, lithalis, of or belonging to letters or to writing, < L. lithra, litra, a letter, lithra, litra, letters: see letter, n.]
I. a. 1. Consisting of, expressed by, or representing letters; alphabetic.

So have I don, after myne entent,
With lithal carootes for your sake;
Tham conveying in sable lines blake.
Rom. of Parthenay (E. E. T. S.), l. 6806.

The lithal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the alphas.

2. According to the letter of verbal expression.
(a) According to inherent or fundamental purport; free from figure or variation of meaning; exact; precise; primary: as, the lithal meaning of words used metaphorically; to use the most lithal expressions. (b) In accordance with the natural or established use of language; conformable to the most obvious intent; real; authentic:
as, the lithal meaning of an author; lithal interpretation.

Though some differences have been ill raised, yet we take comfort in this, that all Clergymen within Our Realm have always most willingly subscribed to the Articles established: which is an argument to Us that they all agree in the true, usual, lithal meaning of the said Articles.
Royal Declaration prefixed to the Thirty-nine Articles.

That is properly the lithal sense which is the first meaning of the command in the whole collection.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 121.

Lithal interpretation in Scripture as in other books results from the ordinary use and force of the words. It gives the sense which the words proximately signify according to the writer's intention. This may be either the proper or the metaphorical meaning.

J. H. Blunt, Dict. Doct. and Hist. Theol., p. 417.

3. Following the letter or exact words.

The common way which we have taken is not a lithal translation, but a kind of paraphrase, or somewhat which is yet more loose, betwixt a paraphrase and imitation.

Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Ded.

4. Exact; especially, mechanically precise: as, the too lithal execution of an order.—5. Characterized by a tendency to regard everything in a matter-of-fact, unimaginative way: as, a very lithal person.—Lithal arithmetic, algebra.—
Lithal contract, equation, etc. See the nouns.—Syn.
2. See literal.

II. n. Literal meaning.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what absurd conceits they will swallow in their lithals!

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., iv. 10.

literalisation, literalise, etc. See literalisa- tion, etc.

literalism (lit'g-rā-lizm), n. [= F. littéralisme; < lithal + -izm.] 1. Literal interpretation or understanding; adherence to the exact letter or precise significance, as in interpreting or translating.—2. In art, exact rendering or representation; unimaginative exactness.

He shunned the literalism of both form and color that jarred the ideal vision.

The Studio, III. 147.

literalist (lit'g-rā-list), n. [= F. littéraliste = Sp. (rare) lithalista; < lithal + -ist.] 1. One who adheres to the letter or exact word; an interpreter according to the letter.—2. In art, an exact copyist; one who draws or paints with unimaginative exactness.

literality (lit'g-rā-l'it-i), n. [= F. littéralité; as lithal + -ity.] The quality of being literal; literalness; verbal or literal meaning.

Those who are still bent to hold this obstinate literality.
Milton, Divorce, l. 14.

literalization (lit'g-rā-l-i-zā'shon), n. [Gr. lith- alizo + -ation.] The act of literalizing or rendering literal; the act of reducing to a literal meaning. Also spelled lithalization.

literalise (lit'g-rā-l-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. lithal- ized, ppr. lithalizing. [Gr. lithal + -ize.] To render literal; conform or adhere to the letter; interpret or put in practice according to the strict meaning of the words. Also spelled lithalise.

lithalizer (lit'g-rā-l-i-zēr), n. One who lithal-izes; one who interprets or understands lithal-ly. Also written lithaliser.

lithally (lit'g-rā-l-i), adv. In a literal manner or sense; according to the strict import of the word or words; exactly: as, the city was lithal- ly destroyed; the narrative is lithally true.

lithalness (lit'g-rā-l-nes), n. The state of being literal. (a) Literal interpretation or import. (b)
The tendency to give to everything a literal or matter-of-fact interpretation; want of imaginativeness or ideality.

The lithalness and the logic which they [the Puritans] applied to everything they applied particularly to the doctrines of providence and of prayer.

M. C. Tyler, Hist. Amer. Lit., l. 101.

litharian (lit'g-rā-r'i-an), n. [Gr. lithar +
-an.] One who is engaged in literary pursuits.
[Recent.]

Mr. J. A. Froude, the historian, is the latest litharian to lay aside, temporarily, weightier work and indulge in the writing of fiction.

The American, XVII. 301.

lithary (lit'g-rā-r-i), a. [= F. lithaire = Sp.
lithario = Pg. lithario = It. lithario, < L. lith- arius, litharius, belonging to letters or learning, < L. lithra, litra, letter, pl. letters, learning: see letter, n.] 1. Pertaining or relating to letters or literature; proper to or consisting of literature: as, lithary property; lithary fame or history; lithary conversation.

He has long outlived his century, the term commonly fixed as the test of lithary merit.

Johnson, Pref. to Shakespeare. (Latham.)

Chaucer had that fine lithary sense which is as rare as genius, and, united with it, as it was in him, assures an immortality of fame.

Lowell, Study Windows, p. 260.

The language of the Bible is fluid, passing, and lithary, not rigid, fixed, and scientific.

M. Arnold, Literature and Dogma, Pref.

2. Versed in letters; occupied with literature; especially, engaged in writing books.

He liked those lithary cooks
Who skim the cream of others' books.

Mrs. H. More.

Lithary and Scientific Institutions Act. See insti- tution.

lithate (lit'g-rāt), a. and n. [= F. lithé = Sp.
lithato = Pg. lithato = It. lithato, letterato, < L. lithatus, lithatus, lettered, learned, < lith- ra, litra, letter, pl. letters, learning: see letter, n.] I. a. 1. Having a knowledge of letters; possessing education; instructed: opposed to illithate.

The lithate sea, that doth divide Europe from Asia, the sweet lithate world
From the barbarian.

Chapman, Caesar and Pompey, v. 1.

2. Of or pertaining to letters; learned; lithary.
This is the proper function of lithate elegance.

W. Montague, Devoute Essay, l. xix. § 2.

He was the Friar Bacon of the less lithate portion of the Temple.

Lamb, Old Bencher.

It is only from its roots in the living generations of men that a language can be reinforced with fresh vigor for its needs; what may be called a lithate dialect grows ever more and more pedantic and foreign, till it becomes at last as unfitting a vehicle for living thought as monk-ish Latin.

Lowell, Biglow Papers, 2d ser., Int.

3. Marked with short, angulated lines resembling letters: applied to the surfaces of shells and insects.

II. n. 1. A man of letters; a learned or literary man.

On his monument . . . he [Sir W. Jones] sits surrounded by his company of native lithates.

Maline, Early Law and Custom, p. 2.

2. An educated man who has not taken a university degree; especially, a candidate for holy orders who has not been educated at a university. [Eng.]

We have no lithates, none of that class who in this country prepare themselves by private study, at a trifling cost, for the profession of the Church.

Ep. of Lincolnc, quoted in Quarterly Rev., XXXI. 514.

lithated, a. [Gr. lithate + -ed.] Same as lith- ate.

Most lithated judges, please your lordships
So to connive your judgments to the view
Of this debauch'd and diversivolt woman.

Weber, White Devil, III. 2.

lithatist, n. Plural of lithatus.
lithatim (lit'g-rā-tim), adv. [ML., < L. litha- tus, letter: see letter, n.] Letter for letter; without the change of a letter: usually in the phrase verbatim et lithatim.

lithation (lit'g-rā-shon), n. [As lithate +
-ion.] Representation by letters: as, the litha- tion of Oriental words in English. Compare transliteration.

lithatist (lit'g-rā-tist), n. [Gr. lithate + -ist.]
A literary person; one engaged in literary pursuits. [Rare.]

Indeed, they are never the most elegant lithatists who study longest at college. Jon Bee, Essay on Samuel Foote.

lithato (lit'g-rā-tō), n. [Sp. lithato = It. lith- ato, letterato, learned: see lithate, a., litha- tus.] Same as lithatus. [Rare.]

lithator (lit'g-rā-tōr), n. [= F. lithateur = It.
lithatore, a literary man, < L. lithator, litha- tor, a teacher of reading, an instructor, also a grammarian, critic, philologist, < lithra, litra, letter, pl. letters, letters, learning: see letter, n.] 1. A petty schoolmaster; a dabbler in learning.

They systematically corrupt a very corruptible race. . . .
a set of port, petulant lithators, to whom, instead of their proper, but severe, unostentatious duties, they assign the brilliant part of men of wit and pleasure, of gay young military sparks, and dandies at tolls.

Burke, To a Member of the Nat. Assembly.

2. A man of literary culture; a man of letters;
a literary man.

Robanus was the Poet of the Reformation, and, with Melancthon and Camerarius, its chief lithator.

Sir W. Hamilton.

Lithator, modified from lithateur, is much nearer being Anglicised. This word, but not in the sense attached to it by Burke, we have long desiderated; and the contenance it has received from Southey, Landor, Lookhart, Mr. De Quincey, and Mr. Carlyle has already availed to take off something of its strangeness of aspect.

F. Hall, Mod. Eng., p. 194.

lithature (lit'g-rā-tūr), n. [Early mod. E. also lithature (in ME. lithature, lithure, < OF. lith- ure: see letter), < OF. lithature, F. litha- tura = Sp. lithatura = Pg. lithatura = It. litha- tura, letteratura = D. lithatura = G. Dan.
lithatur = Sw. lithatur, < L. lithatura, litha- tura, a writing (as formed of letters), the alphabet, the science of language, philology, erudition, learning, < lithra, litra, a letter, pl. letters, learning: see letter, n.] 1. Learning; instruction in letters.

Worshypfull maysters, ye shall understand,
Is to you that have no lithature.

The Pardoner and the Friar (1535). (Halliwell.)

Would I had been at the charge of thy better lithature.
B. Jonson, New Inn, To the Reader.

A person who by his style and lithature seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-press in Little Britain proceeded gradually to an author.

Swift.

2. The use of letters for the promulgation of thought or knowledge; the communication of facts, ideas, or emotions by means of books or other modes of publication; literary work or production: as, the profession of lithature.

Lithature is a very bad crutch, but a very good walkingstick.

Lowell.

3. Recorded thought or knowledge; the aggregate of books and other publications, in either an unlimited or a limited sense; the collective body of literary productions in general, or within a particular sphere, period, country, language, etc.: as, the lithature of a science, art, or profession; Greek, Roman, or Elizabethan lithature.

Literature is the greatest of all sources of refined pleasure.

We become so wonted to . . . [Browning's diction] that it seems like a new dialect that we have mastered for the sake of its literature.

Husley, Lay Sermons, p. 52.
Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 286.

4. In a restricted sense, the class of writings in which expression and form, in connection with ideas of permanent and universal interest, are characteristic or essential features, as poetry, romance, history, biography, and essays, in contradistinction to scientific works, or those written expressly to impart knowledge.

Literature consists of a whole body of classics in the true sense of the word. . . . Literature consists of all the books—and they are not so many—where moral truth and human passion are touched with a certain largeness, sanity, and attraction of form.

J. Morley, Address, Feb. 26, 1887.

Light literature, books or writings such as can be understood and enjoyed without much mental exertion; writings intended primarily for entertainment, relaxation, or amusement: applied most frequently to fiction.—Foliate literature, belle-lettres. [This phrase has almost passed out of use.]—Syn. Literature, Learning, Scholarship, Erudition, Lore. Literature, the more polished or artistic class of written compositions, or the critical knowledge or appreciation of them; learning, large knowledge acquired by study, especially in the literature, history, or the like, of the past; scholarship, learning viewed as the possession of a professional or amateur scholar or student; erudition, scholastic or the more recumbent sort of knowledge obtained by profound research; lore, a rather poetic word for erudition, often in a special department: as, versed in the lore of magic.

literated (lit'e-rā-tūrd), a. [< literature + -ed.] Learned; having literary knowledge.

Gower is . . . literated in the wars.

Shak., Hen. V., iv. 7. 157.

literated (lit'e-rā-tus), n.; pl. literated (-ti). [L. literator, literator, lettered, learned. see literate.] A man of letters or erudition; in the plural, literary men in general; the literary class; learned people. [Rare in the singular.] Among foreigners in China the term literator is applied to the scholars and learned men of the country generally, especially to those who have taken one or more degrees, but are not in office and not engaged in trade.

Manifold are the tastes and dispositions of the enlightened literator, who turn over the pages of history.

Irving, Knickerbocker, p. 164.

Now we are to consider that our bright ideal of a literator may chance to be malimed.

De Quincey.

literate (lit'e-rōs), a. [< L. litorosus, litorosus, learned, lettered, < littera, littera, letter: see letter.] Distinctively literary; exercising or manifesting special care for literary form or style. [Rare.]

Amongst the French masters Daudet is always literate.

Harper's Mag. (Editor's Study), LXXVI. 479.

literosity (lit'e-rōs'i-ti), n. [< literose + -ity.] Literary character. [Rare.]

The sentiment is German, while the literosity in the poorer passages of the work is second-rate English.

Harper's Mag. (Editor's Study), LXXVIII. 322.

lites, n. Plural of lisi.

lister, n. See lister.

lith (lith), n. [*< ME. lith, lyth, < AS. lith (pl. lithu, lithu) = OS. Ofries. lith = D. lid = OHG. lid, MHG. lit = Icel. lithr = Dan. Sw. led = Goth. lithus (also with generalizing prefix go-, D. gelid = OHG. gild, MHG. gilit, G. giled), limb, joint, member; not connected, as usually supposed, with AS. lithan, go (see lead¹, lith²), for the word does not mean 'that on which one goes,' but prob. formed, with formative -th (Goth. -thu), from the \sqrt{li} of AS. lim, limb: see *limb*¹.] A limb; any member of the body; also, a joint; a segment or symmetrical part or division: as, sound in lith and limb; a lith of an orange. [Obsolete or provincial.]*

Trevelly she hath the herte in hold
Of Chaucer's large o' limb and lith.

Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 55.

O Willie's large o' limb and lith,
And come o' high degree.

Birth of Robin Hood (Child's Ballads, V. 170).

lith², n. [< ME. lith, lyth, property; cf. Icel. lythr, the common people, AS. leda, people: see leda², n.] Property.

lith³, a. A Middle English variant of light.

lith⁴, v. An obsolete variant of lith, third person singular indicative present of *lie*¹. Chaucer.

lith [= F. lith (< E. lite) = Sp. lito = Pg. litho = It. lito (< L. lithus, Gr. lithos, a stone.)] An element in some compounds of Greek formation, meaning 'stone,' as in acrolith, monolith, etc. In many names of minerals it occurs in the form -lite (which see).

lithagogue (lith'ā-gog), a. and n. [< Gr. lithos, a stone, + agyros, drawing forth, < agros, lead, carry away.] 1. a. In med., having the power of expelling stone from the bladder or kidneys.

II. n. A medicine formerly supposed to expel small calculi from the kidneys or bladder.

lithanode (lith'ā-nōd), n. [< Gr. lithos, stone, + E. anode (†).] A hard, compact form of peroxid of lead, used in storage-batteries. [A trade-name.]

lithanthrax (li-than'thraks), n. [< Gr. lithos, a stone, + anthrax, coal: see anthrax.] Stone-coal; mineral coal: in distinction from zylanthrax, or wood-coal. See coal, 2.

litharge (lith'ārj), n. [Formerly also lithargie, lithargy, lithargy; ME. litarge, < OF. litarge, F. litharge = Sp. litargio (also litargo, after F.) = Pg. lithargio = It. litargio, litargio, litargio, < L. lithargyros, < Gr. lithargyros, spume of silver, < lithos, stone, + argyros, silver: see argent.] The yellow or reddish protoxid of lead (PbO) partially fused. On cooling it passes into a mass consisting of small six-sided plates of a reddish-yellow color, and semi-transparent. It is much used in assaying as a flux, and in the composition of flint-glass, enters largely into the composition of the glass of common earthenware, and is used in the manufacture of varnishes and drying-oils.

I'll only now emboss my book with brass,
Dye 't with vermilion, deck 't with coperaas,
With gold and silver, lead and mercury,
Tin, iron, orpine, stibium, lithargy.

Sylvestor, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 2.

litharge plaster, in med., lead-plaster or dischylon.

lithate (lith'āt), n. [< lith (so) + -ate.] A salt of lithic acid. See urate. Also lithiate.

lithe (liθn or lith), a. [*< ME. lithe, lythe (also lind, lynd: see lind²), < AS. lithe, gentle, soft, = OS. lithi = MLG. linde = OHG. lindi, MHG. linte, G. lind (and gelinde) = Dan. lind, gentle, soft, mild, tender (cf. L. lentus, pliant, flexible, tenacious, tough, viscous, slow, easy, etc.: see lent³); with formative -th, < \sqrt{lin} , seen in G. dial. (Bav.) len, soft, = Icel. linr, soft, = L. lenis, soft, mild (see lenity, lenient, etc.), and in the verb, AS. linnan, etc., cease: see *lin*¹.] 1. Soft; tender; mild; calm; agreeable.*

To make lithe that erst was hard.

Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 119.

Atte places warme, in dales lithe and drie,
Ya nowe the hilly landes uppe to crea.

Palladius, Husbandrie (R. E. T. S.), p. 61.

2. Easily bent; pliant; flexible; limber.

Thou givest moisture to the thristy rostr (Of the lithe willow. Dryden, The River by Night.

Young maiden, with a lithe figure, and a pleasant voice, acting in those love-dramas. O. W. Holmes, Autocrat, II.

3. Pleasant; fine.

We are come from the kyng of this lithe ryche [kingdom],
That knowene as for conquerour crownde in urthe.

Morte Arthure (R. E. T. S.), l. 1553.

= Syn. 2. Pliable, supple, willowy.

lithe¹ (liθn), v. [< ME. lithen, lethen, < AS. lithian, become or make soft or mild, < lithe, soft: see lithe¹, a.] I. intrans. To become calm.

II. trans. 1. To make soft or mild; soften; alleviate; mitigate; lessen.

After the deith she cried a thousand sythe,
Syn he that wont hire wu was for to lithe
She moot forgoon. Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 754.

2. To relax; make less stiff.

Lome mennen limes weore lyth that tyme,
And bi-come knautes to kope þers beestes.

Piers Plowman (A), vii. 183.

The Grootians were noted for light, the Parthians for fearful, the Sodomites for gluttons, like as England (God save the sample!) hath now supplied, lithed, and stretched their throats. Rev. T. Adams, Works, l. 368. (Davies.)

lithe² (liθn), v. [< ME. lithen, lytha, < Icel. hlydha (= Dan. lytte), listen, < hlyðh, hearing, what is heard, a sound; cf. AS. hleoðhor, hearing, a sound, akin to hleað, loud, hlyst, hearing: see list¹, loud.] I. intrans. To give ear; attend; listen.

Lithe and listen, gentlemen,
All that now be hero. Old ballad.

II. trans. To listen to.

And vnder a lynde vypon a launde loned I a stounde,
To lithe the layes the louely foulis made.

Piers Plowman (B), viii. 66.

lithe³, v. i. [< ME. < AS. lithan, go: see lead¹.] To go.

He ne durste noht . . . lithen.

Ormulum, l. 874. (Bryce's Dict.)

lithectasy (li-thek'tā-si), n. [< Gr. lithos, stone, + ektasis, extension: see cystectomy.] In surg., same as cystectomy, 2.

lithely (liθn' or lith'li), adv. In a lithe manner; flexibly; pliantly.

lithemia, lithemia (li-thē'mi-ā), n. [< Gr. lithos, a stone, + aima, blood.] In pathol., an excess of uric acid in the blood. Also called uricemia.

lithemic (li-thē'mik), a. Pertaining to or affected with lithemia.

lithent, v. i. [< ME. lithen; with formative -n, < lithe, soft, mild: see lithe¹, a. and v.] To ease.

litheness (liθn' or lith'nes), n. The condition or quality of being lithe; flexibility; limberness.

lither¹ (liθn'ēr), a. [< ME. lithor, lyther, lyther, lither, Hadder, bad, wicked, false, treacherous, < AS. lythra, bad, wicked; cf. D. lodder, a wanton, adj. loddering, trifling, wanton, = G. lotterig, slovenly; see also litherly. Cf. Gr. lithēpos, free.] Bad; wicked; corrupt; lazy.

For he [Love] may do al that he can devyne,
And in lithers folke dystroye vize.

The Cuckoo and the Nightingale, l. 14.

Her-of, good god graunte me forgiveness,
Of al my lither lyuyng in al my lytyme.

Piers Plowman (C), vii. 437.

lither² (liθn'ēr), a. [Appar. an extension of lithel, in simulation of lither¹, which in the sense of 'idle' (in deriv. litherly) approaches the sense of 'pliant, supple': see lither¹.] Soft; supple; limber; pliant. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Two Talbotes, winged through the lither sky,
In thy despite shall scape mortality.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iv. 7. 21.

litherlurdant (liθn'ēr-lēr'den), n. [< lither¹ + lurdant.] Lascivious. [Old slang.]

I am alwayes troubled with the litherlurdant,
I love so to linger:

I am so lary, the moose groweth an Inch thik on the top of my finger!

Marriage of Wit and Wisdom (1879). (Halliwell.)

litherly (liθn'ēr-li), a. [< ME. litherly (†) = D. liederlijk = MLG. lidenlik = MHG. liederlich, light, trifling, frivolous, G. liederlich = Dan. Sw. liderlig, lewd, careless, slovenly, wanton, vicious, dial. also light, quick; as lither¹ + -ly.] 1. Mischievous; wicked. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

Ho [the goblin] was waspish, arch, and litherlie
But well Lord Cranstoun served he.

Scott, l. of L. M., II. 32.

2. Idle; lazy.

litherly (liθn'ēr-li), adv. [< ME. litherly, litherliche; < lither¹ + -ly.] Badly; wickedly; mischievously.

Thei hadde litherli here lond brend and destrued.

William of Palerne (R. E. T. S.), l. 2646.

A clerk hadde litherly biwet his whyte
But if he koude a carpenter bygile.

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 113.

Saise to syr Lucius, to unordly he wykkes,
Thus litherly mayneas inw to lede my people.

Morte Arthure (R. E. T. S.), l. 1268.

litherness¹ (liθn'ēr-nes), n. [< ME. lithernesne; < lither¹ + -ness.] 1. Wickedness.

Thei als wreccliche, wittirly,
Has ledde thur liffe in lithernes.

York Plays, p. 498.

2. Idleness. [Prov. Eng.]

litherness² (liθn'ēr-nes), n. [< lither² + -ness.] The condition or quality of being lither or limber.

litherous (liθn'ēr-us), a. [Also litherous, litherous; < lither¹ + -ous.] Wicked; base.

But my learning is of an other degree,
To taunt them like litherous lewde as thei bee.

Skellon, Against Venomous Tongues, l. 23.

lithesome (liθn' or lith'sum), a. [< lithe¹ + -some. Also contr. lesome.] Pliant; limber; nimble; lissome.

lithesomeness (liθn' or lith'sum-nes), n. The state of being lithe or lithesome.

lithia (liθ'i-ā), n. [< NL. < lithium, q. v.] An oxid (Li₂O) of the metal lithium. It is of a white color, and is slowly soluble in water, forming a hydrate, acid and caustic, which acts on colors like other alkalis.—Lithia emerald. See emerald.—Lithia mica. See lapis lazuli.—Lithia water, mineral water containing a considerable portion of lithia salts, found in natural springs in the United States. The name is also applied to artificial mineral waters of similar constitution.

lithiasis (li-thi'ā-sis), n. [< Gr. lithiasis, the stone (a disease), < lithos, a stone.] In pathol.: (a) A condition of the body in which uric acid is deposited in the form of stone or gravel in the urinary passages, or in gouty concretions in the tissues. (b) In a general sense, the formation of stony deposits of any kind in any part of the body.

lithiate (liθ'i-āt), n. Same as lithate.

lithiate (liθ'i-āt), v. t. [< lithium + -ate.] To impregnate with a salt of lithium.

lithic¹ (liθ'ik), a. [< Gr. lithos, or for stones, < lithos, a stone (a substance), stone (a disease), etc.; no cognate forms appear in other lan- guages. Hence -lith, -lith, in E. words.] 1. Pertaining to or consisting of stone.

As a general rule it may be asserted that the best lithic ornaments are those which approach nearest to the grace and piliancy of plants. J. Ferguson, Hist. Arch., I. 35.

2. Pertaining to stone in the bladder; uric.—Lithic acid. Same as uric acid (which see, under uric).

Lithic (lith'ik), a. [lithium + -ic.] Consisting of or related to the element lithium.

Lithic iodide gave the red line of this metal (W. L. Crookes) extending all across the spectrum.

J. N. Lockyer, Spect. Anal., p. 100.

Lithic paint, a mastic of petalite (a mineral containing lithium), sand, and litharge, used as a coating for walls. E. H. Knight.

Lithichnosos (li-thik-nō-sō's), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. lithos, a stone, + ichnos, a track, + zōon, an animal.] A name given by Prof. E. Hitchcock to the undetermined fossil animals which left their footprints in the Connecticut sandstones. Some, at first supposed to have been gigantic birds, are now believed to have been dinosaurian reptiles.

Lithification (lith'i-fi-kā'shon), n. [Gr. lithos, a stone, + L. -ficatio(n)-, < facere, make: see -ficatio, -fy.] A hardening into stone; the process of becoming stone. Rarely used, and only when it is desired to speak of the conversion of unconsolidated sediments into solid rock, without any reference to the fossils which they may contain. See petrification.

Lithification of sediments will probably take place under heavy pressure even at ordinary temperature, but is no doubt hastened by high temperature.

J. Le Conte, in Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., IV. 403.

Lithing (lith'ing), n. [Verbal n. of lithol, v.] The thickening of soup or broth. [Scotch.]

Lithiophilite (lith-i-ōf'i-lit), n. [So called as containing lithium; < NL. lithium + Gr. philos, loving, + -ite.] A variety of triphylite containing a large amount of manganese. It occurs at Branchville in Connecticut.

Lithistid (lith'is-tid), a. and n. 1. a. Pertaining to the Lithistida, or having their characters; lithistidan.

II. n. A sponge of the group Lithistida.

Lithistida (li-this'ti-dā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. as if lithistos*, assumed verbal n. of lithos, look like a stone (< lithos, a stone), + -ida.] A large group of siliceous sponges in which the spicules are more or less clearly tetraaxial and are interwoven into a dense skeleton, the stony body presenting a central gastric cavity or many vertical tubes; the stony-sponges. It contains the recent families Rhizomorinidae, Anomocladinidae, and Tetractinidae, and the fossil Megamorphinidae. In Sollas's classification the Lithistida are one of two orders of tetractinellid sponges, the other being Choristida, and are defined as Tetractinellida with branching soleres or desmas, which may or may not be modified tetrad spicules, articulated together to form a rigid skeleton. Also Lithistida and Lithistines, variously rated.

Lithistidan (li-this'ti-dan), a. and n. [Gr. Lithistida + -an.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to the group Lithistida; stony, as a sponge.

II. n. A stone-sponge of the group Lithistida.

Lithium (lith'i-um), n. [NL., < Gr. lithos, a stone.] Chemical symbol, Li or L; atomic weight, 7.03. A metallic element having a silver-white luster, quickly tarnishing in the air. It may be cut with a knife, but is less soft than potassium or sodium; it fuses at 180° C. and takes fire at a somewhat higher temperature. Lithium is the lightest of all known solid bodies, its specific gravity being 0.698. It forms salts analogous to those of potassium and sodium. It occurs only in combination, most abundantly in the minerals spodumene, petalite, amblygonite, triphylite (and lithiophilite), and lepidolite (lithia mica).

Lithy. An irregular Middle English spelling of lightly. Chaucer.

Litho (lith'ō). A common technical abbreviation of lithograph.

Lithobiblicist (lith-ō-bib'li-on), n. [NL., < Gr. lithos, stone, + βιβλίον, a book: see bible.] Same as biblicolite.

Lithobidmā (lith-ō-bi'di-dā), n. pl. [NL., < Lithobius + -idmā.] A family of centipeds of the order Chilopoda, having the body unequally segmented, with 9 larger and 6 smaller divisions, 15 pairs of legs, and long many-jointed antennae. The species are of moderate and small size, and their bite is not severe. They are common under stones, and are sometimes called scorpions in the United States. Also Lithobidmā, as a subfamily of Scorpiones.

Lithobius (li-thō'bi-us), n. [NL., < Gr. lithos, stone, + bios, life.] The typical genus of Lithobidmā, characterized by a flattened form, 2-jointed tarsi, and 40-jointed antennae. L. americanus is a common United States species. L. forficatus is the corresponding European form.

Lithocarp (lith'ō-kārp), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + καρπός, fruit.] A fossil fruit; a carpollite.

Lithochromatic (lith'ō-krō-mat'ik), a. [Gr. lithos, stone, + χρῶμα, color: see chromatic.] Pertaining to lithochromatics; relating to or produced by the application of oil-colors to stone; as, lithochromatic painting.

Lithochromatics (lith'ō-krō-mat'iks), n. [Pl. of lithochromatic: see -ics.] The art of painting in oil-colors upon stone, and of taking impressions from the stone on canvas.

Lithochromatographic (lith'ō-krō-mat'ō-graf'ik), a. [Gr. lithos, stone, + χρῶμα (-r-), color, + -γραφία, < γράφω, write.] Same as chromolithographic.

Lithochromic (lith'ō-krō'mik), a. [Gr. lithos, stone, + χρῶμα, color: see chromatic.] Same as lithochromatic.

Lithochromics (lith'ō-krō'miks), n. [Pl. of lithochromic: see -ics.] Same as lithochromatics.

Lithoclast (lith'ō-klast), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + κλάω, break in pieces.] 1. One who breaks stones.

A party of horsemen . . . were ready at the gates of the mosque to assist the lithoclast as soon as he should have executed his task.

Burckhardt, Travels in Arabia, I. 307. (Davies.)

2. An instrument used for crushing stones in the bladder, particularly for crushing stones too large for extraction in the course of a lithotomy, the instrument being introduced through the wound.

Lithoclastic (lith'ō-klas'tik), a. [As lithoclast + -ic.] Of or pertaining to the breaking of stones in the bladder.

Lithocolletidae (lith'ō-ko-lēt'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Staudinger, 1881), < Lithocolletis + -idae.] A family of tineid moths containing such important genera as Lithocolletis (the type), Tischeria, and Bedeilia. They have no ocelli, short and thin palpi, long-fringed fore wings with the middle cell closed and 7, 8, or 10 veins, and small lanceolate hind wings with very long fringes. The larvae are usually leaf-miners, but those of Chenopidia live in fungi.

Lithocolletis (lith'ō-ko-lēt'is), n. [NL. (Hübner, 1816), < Gr. λίθοκώλητρος, set with precious stones, < λίθος, stone, < κόλλητρος, verbal adj. of κόλλω, glue, fasten, < κόλλα, glue.] A large genus of tineids, typical of the family Lithocolletidae, with over 100 European and nearly as many North American species, whose larvae are leaf-miners. L. crataegella mines the leaves of the apple in the United States.

Lithocolletis crataegella. (Cross shows natural size.)

Lithocoralia (lith'ō-kō-rāl'i-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. lithos, stone, + κόραλλιον, coral: see coral.] The stone-corals.

Lithocoraline (lith'ō-kō-rāl'i-n), a. [As Lithocoralia + -ine. Cf. coralline.] Having the characters of a stone-coral; of or pertaining to the Lithocoralia.

Lithocyst (lith'ō-sist), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + κύστις, bladder: see cyst.] In zoöl., one of the sense-organs or marginal bodies of the Lucernaria or steganophthalminae medusans.

As regards the existence of a nervous system in the Hydrosca, very diverse opinions have been entertained. . . . There can be little doubt that the lithocysts, or sacs containing mineral particles, which are so frequently found in the Medusae, are of the nature of auditory organs; while the masses of pigment with imbedded refracting bodies, which often occur associated with the lithocysts, are doubtless rudimentary eyes. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 116.

Lithodendron (lith'ō-den-dron), n. [NL., < Gr. λίθοδένδρον, a tree-shaped coral, < λίθος, a stone, + δένδρον, a tree.] The typical genus of Lithodendroninae. Schweigger, 1820. Also written Lithodendrum. J. D. Dana, 1846.

Lithodendroninae (lith'ō-den-drō-ni-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lithodendron + -inae.] A subfamily of fossil carboniferous stone-corals, of the family Cyathophylloidea, typified by the genus Lithodendron.

dron: so called from their branched form and petrified state. Edwards and Haine, 1856.

Lithodendrum (lith'ō-den'drum), n. [NL.] Same as Lithodendron.

Lithodes (li-thō'dēs), n. [NL., < Gr. λίθόδης, like stone, stony: see lithoid.] The typical genus of Lithodidae, containing such species as L.

Agassiz's Deep-sea Spider-crab (Lithodes agassizii).

arcticus of northern seas, and L. agassizii. These crabs resemble maioids in general form and appearance, but belong to a different group. Latreille, 1802.

Lithodidae (li-thod'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lithodes + -idae.] A family of anomorous deep-sea crustaceans, typified by the genus Lithodes, having the carapace triangular or somewhat cordate, with elongated rostrum, no abdominal appendages, and the fifth pair of legs much reduced.

Lithodome (lith'ō-dōm), n. [Gr. λίθοδομος, a mason, < λίθος, stone, + δομεῖν, build (> δομος, a house): see dome.] 1. A shell-fish which lives in a hole made by it in a rock, as a date-shell or a piddock. See Lithodomus and Pholas.

Lithodomus. Plural of Lithodomus, 2.

Lithodomus (li-thod'ō-mus), a. [As Lithodomus + -us.] 1. Dwelling in rocks; having the characters of a lithodome: as, lithodomus mollusca.—2. Done by a lithodome; pertaining in any way to a lithodome: as, lithodomus perforations. Sir C. Lyell.

Lithodomus (li-thod'ō-mus), n. [NL.: see Lithodomus.] 1. A genus of mussels of the family Mytilidae, of small size and subcylindrical form, which burrow in rocks, and are known as date-shells. L. lithophagus is an example. Also called Lithomus and Lithophagus. See cut under date-shell.—2. [l. c.; pl. lithodomi (-mī).] A member of this genus.

Lithofracteur (lith'ō-frak'tēr), n. [F., < Gr. λίθος, a stone, + λίθ. fractor, a breaker, < L. frangere, pp. fractus, break: see fraction.] An explosive mixture, containing 55 per cent. of nitroglycerin, mixed with siliceous earth, coal, barium nitrate, sulphur, and sodium bicarbonate, used principally in blasting.

Lithogenesy (lith'ō-jen'ē-si), n. [Gr. λίθος, stone, + γενεσις, origin: see genesis.] The doctrine or science of the origin of the minerals composing the globe, and of the causes which have produced their form and disposition.

Lithogenous (li-thoj'ō-nus), a. [Gr. λίθος, stone, + -γενής, -producing: see -genous.] Stone-producing; of or pertaining to animals which form coral.

Lithoglyph (lith'ō-glif), n. [Gr. λίθογλύφος, carving stone, < λίθος, stone, + γλύφω, carve.] An incision, engraving, or sculpture in stone, especially in a precious stone; also, an engraved or incised stone.

Lithoglyphar (li-thog'li-fēr), n. One who cuts or engraves precious stones, gems, etc.

Lithoglyphic (lith'ō-glif'ik), a. [As lithoglyph + -ic.] Relating to the art of cutting and engraving on precious stones, gems, etc.

Lithoglyphite (li-thog'li-fit), n. [As lithoglyph + -ite.] A fossil that presents the appearance of being engraved or shaped by art.

Lithoglyphics (lith'ō-glif'iks), n. [Gr. λίθος, stone, + E. glyptics, q. v.] The art of cutting and engraving precious stones or gems, as in tagios, cameos, etc.

Lithograph (lith'ō-graf), n. [Gr. λίθος, stone, + γράφω, write. Cf. lithography.] A print executed by lithography.

Lithograph (lith'ō-graf), v. [Gr. λίθος, stone, + γράφω, write. Cf. lithography.] I. trans. To reproduce by means of lithography: as, to lithograph a picture.

II. intrans. To practise lithography.

Lithographer (li-thog'ra-fēr), n. One who practises lithography.

Lithographic (lith'ō-graf'ik), a. [As lithograph + -ic.] Of or pertaining to lithography; engraved upon or printed from stone; produced by or employed in lithography: as, lithographic prints; a lithographic press.—Lithographic crayon. Same as crayon, 1.—Lithographic ink. See ink.—Lithographic paper, paper used, or specially prepared, for taking impressions from lithographic stones. For ordinary use common book- and map-papers are employed, but are specially selected from those in which the bleaching-agents and substances employed in the size are in kind or quantity such as do not, by chemical reaction upon ink or stones, injuriously affect the quality of the work.—Lithographic pen, a small, very fine steel pen used in lithographic work.—Lithographic press, a printing-press adapted for striking off impressions from lithographic stones. There are lithographic hand-presses, usually working by means of a traveling carriage which is run under a horizontal scraper-bar, and lithographic power-presses, in which the pressure is applied by means of a cylinder, and which generally have automatic devices for dampening and taking the stone and for feeding and removing the paper.—Lithographic roller, a wooden or metallic taking-roller used in lithographic printing. It is wrapped in woolen cloth, and covered with leather of uniform thickness and fine quality. Hand-rollers have handles at each end, covered with loose leather sleeves, by the compression of which the printer can produce varied effects. Machine-rollers, similar in construction to hand-rollers, have stocks of metal, and are sometimes as much as 50 inches long. They are driven by friction-disks running with the bed of the press.—Lithographic slate. Same as lithographic stone.—Lithographic stone, a compact slaty limestone, of a yellowish color and fine grain, used in lithography. The best comes from the Naggy oolites of Solnhofen in Bavaria; but others are got in the oolites of England, France, and Greece, and from older rocks in Canada.—Lithographic-stone dresser, a machine for facing lithographic stones, or polishing their faces.—Lithographic varnish, a medium employed in making and also for thinning lithographic printing-ink. It is prepared from linseed-oil, heated and then burned, and retains enough of the greasy character to give the ink the qualities necessary for lithographic printing, but not enough to grease the stone or paper.

Lithographical (lith-ō-graf'i-kəl), a. [lithographic + -al.] Same as lithographic. [Rare.]

Lithographically (lith-ō-graf'i-kəl-lī), adv. By means of, or as regards, lithography.

Lithographize (li-thog'ra-fiz), v. t.; pret. and pp. lithographized, ppr. lithographizing. [lithograph + -ize.] To lithograph. [Rare.]

This picture has been lithographized.

Archæologia, XXII. 452.

Lithography (li-thog'ra-fī), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + γραφία, graphia, writing.] The art of making a picture, design, or writing upon stone in such a manner that ink-impressions can be taken from the work, and of producing such impressions by a process analogous to ordinary printing. Lithography was invented by Aloys Senefelder of Munich, about 1798. A special kind of stone is used, called lithographic stone. (See lithographic.) The design may be put upon the stone by direct drawing, by transfer from paper or from another stone, by engraving, or by transfer from a photograph. In the first process the stone is prepared by grinding to give it a grained or slightly roughened surface, on which the design is drawn with a lithographic crayon precisely as it is to appear in print, but reversed; or the surface is smoothed, and the design is made with pen or brush in lithographic ink. When the drawing is finished, the stone is etched with dilute nitric acid, and then flooded with a solution of gum arabic in water, or it is flooded with nitric-acid and gum-arabic solutions combined. The acid decomposes the soap of the crayon or ink, and leaves the marked surface of the stone in a chemical condition that fits it to absorb fatty inks. The gum-water, on the other hand, covers with an adherent film all those parts of the surface of the stone which have been left untouched by the crayon or ink. The stone is then passed on to the printer, who "washes out" the picture with turpentine, after which the image appears faintly defined in white. To print from it, an ink-roller is now passed over the stone. The wet gummed surface resists the ink and remains clean, while the design takes up the ink and readily gives it back to paper under pressure in the press. The second or autographic process is by transfer. The design, picture, map, or writing is made on prepared paper with the proper ink, dampened, laid face downward on a heated stone and pulled through the press, when the ink leaves the paper and adheres to the stone. The after-treatment is the same as in the first process. Transfers are also made from stone to stone in like manner, to save from wear the original drawing on the first stone. The third process is allied to copperplate engraving. A smooth stone is prepared with gum-water, its face is colored with lamp-black or other pigment, and the picture is scratched through the gum with a steel needle. When it is finished the stone is oiled, and the oil is absorbed wherever the surface of the stone has been laid bare by the needle. The incised design is thus made fit to take up fatty inks, which are resisted by the gummed surface so long as it is kept damp. The fourth process is that of transferring a photograph to the stone, and is called photolithography (which see). These four processes are modified and combined in a great variety of ways, yet in all, with the exception of photolithography, the method is essentially that invented by Senefelder.

Lithoid (lith'oid), a. [Gr. lithos, like stone, stony, + ειδής, eidos, form.] Resembling a stone; of a stony structure: opposed to vitreous. See devitrification.

By the progressive development of crystallites or crystals during the cooling and consolidation of a molten rock a glass loses its vitreous character and becomes lithoid—in other words, undergoes devitrification.

Geol. Text-Book of Geol. (3d ed.), p. 108.

Lithoidal (li-thoi'dal), a. [lithoid + -al.] Same as lithoid.

Litholabe (lith-ō-lab), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + λαβάνειν, labain, take, seize.] In surg., an instrument formerly employed for keeping a stone in the bladder fixed so that it could be acted upon by lithotritric instruments.

Litholapaxy (lith-ō-la-pak'si), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + λαπάξω, an evacuation, lappaossein, empty.] In surg., a form of lithotripsy; a method of crushing stone in the bladder and evacuating it.

Litholatrous (li-thol'a-trus), a. [litholatr-y + -ous.] Practising or pertaining to litholatry: as, litholatrous persons or rites. Imp. Dict.

Litholatry (li-thol'a-tri), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + λατρεία, worship: see latrēia.] The worship of stones of particular shapes. Imp. Dict.

Litholeine (li-thō'lē-in), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + λίον, lion, oil, + -ine.] A yellow oily liquid distilled from petroleum, used in eczema and parasitic skin-diseases.

Lithologic (lith-ō-loj'ik), a. [lithology + -ic.] Of or pertaining to lithology or the science of rocks; relating to stones; concerning the nature or composition of stone; petrographic.

Lithological (lith-ō-loj'i-kəl), a. [lithologic + -al.] Same as lithologic.

Lithologically (lith-ō-loj'i-kəl-lī), adv. In a lithological manner; from a lithological point of view; as regards lithologic character or structure: as, strata lithologically distinct.

Lithologist (li-thol'ō-jist), n. [lithology + -ist.] One who is versed in lithology.

Lithology (li-thol'ō-jī), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + λογία, logia, speak: see -ology.] 1. A branch of mineralogy concerned with the minute study of rocks, with the object of finding out what minerals make up the different varieties. This is done chiefly by the microscopic study of the rocks, out for this purpose into thin sections and properly mounted for examination. See petrography and petrology. 2. That department of medical science which is concerned with the study and treatment of calculi found in the human body.

Lithomancy (lith-ō-man-si), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + μαντεία, divination, mantia, a diviner.] Divination or prediction by means of stones.

As strange must be the lithomancy, or divination from this stone, whereby Helenus the prophet foretold the destruction of Troy. Str. T. Browne, Vulg. Err., II. 2.

Lithomarge (lith-ō-mārj), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + λίμαρξ, limarx, marl.] One of several imperfectly determined minerals, or mixtures of minerals, all of which are hydrous silicates of alumina, and closely related to or identical with kaolin and kaolinite. Some varieties are compact, others more or less pulverulent. The word is little used in English except as the translation of the German Steinmark, literally 'rock-marrow.'

Lithopædium (lith-ō-pē'di-um), n. [NL., Gr. lithos, a stone, + παιδίον, paidion, dim. of παῖς (païs), a child.] A dead fetus, retained, and impregnated with salts of lime.

Lithophaga (li-thof'a-gā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lithophagus: see lithophagous.] A family of bivalve mollusks containing several genera whose members burrow in rocks and other hard substances, as Saxicava, Petricola, Venerupis, etc. The term is no longer in use; the family being heterogeneous, its representatives are by modern systematists dissociated in different families, namely Saxicavidae (or Glycymeridae), Petricolidae, and Veneridae. Also called Lithophaga, Lithophagi, Lithophagidae. Lamarck, 1812-18.

Lithophagi (li-thof'a-gī), n. pl. [NL.: see lithophagous.] 1. Eaters of stone: applied collectively or indiscriminately to animals that perforate or penetrate stones or stony objects to make a nest or burrow for themselves therein. Such are the lithodorous mollusks, as date-shells (Lithodomus) and piddocks (Pholidota), various scophytes, annelids, etc. See cuts under date-shell and piddock. 2. [cap.] Same as Lithophaga.

Lithophagidae (lith-ō-faj'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., Gr. lithophaga + -idae.] Same as Lithophaga.

Lithophagous (li-thof'a-gus), a. [NL. lithophaga, Gr. lithos, a stone, + φαγεῖν, est.] 1. Eating stones; swallowing gravel, as a bird.— 2. Perforating or penetrating stones, as the Lithophaga; lithodorous.

Lithophagus (li-thof'a-gus), n. [NL.: see lithophagous.] 1. A genus of mussels of the family Mytilidae (not pertaining to the Lithophaga): same as Lithodomus, 1.

Lithophane (lith-ō-fān), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + φανής, appearing, phainesthai, appear.] A style of ornamentation adapted for lamps, decorative windows, and other transparencies, produced by impressing sheets of porcelain-glass, when in a soft state, with figures, which become visible by transmitted light.

Lithophosphor (lith-ō-fos-fōr), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + φωσφόρος, giving light: see phosphor, phosphorus.] A stone that becomes phosphorescent when heated.

Lithophosphoric (lith-ō-fos-fōr'ik), a. [lithophosphor + -ic.] Pertaining to lithophosphor, or having its nature; becoming phosphorescent by heat.

Lithophotography (lith-ō-fōt'og'ra-fī), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + Ε. photography, q. v.] Same as photolithography. Imp. Dict.

Lithophyll (lith-ō-fīl), n. [NL., Gr. lithos, stone, + φύλλον, a leaf.] A fossil leaf or impression of a leaf, or a stone containing such a leaf or impression.

Lithophyses (lith-ō-fī'sē), n.; pl. lithophyses (-sē). [NL., Gr. lithos, stone, + φύσα, bellows.] A spherulite having a concentrically chambered structure: so called by Richthofen. See spherulite.

Lithophyse (lith-ō-fī'sē), n. Same as lithophyses.

Lithophyte (lith-ō-fīt), n. [Gr. lithos, stone, + φυτόν, a plant.] Any one of the polyps whose substance is stony or hard, as corals and sea-fans. The older naturalists classed them with plants, whence the name.

Lithophytic (lith-ō-fīt'ik), a. [lithophyte + -ic.] Same as lithophytous.

Lithophytont, n. [NL.: see lithophyte.] A lithophyte.

Coral . . . is a lithophyton, or stone plant, and groweth at the bottom of the sea. Str. T. Browne, Vulg. Err., II. 5.

Lithophytous (lith-ō-fī-tus), a. [lithophyte + -ous.] Pertaining to or consisting of lithophytes.

Lithornis (li-thōr'nīs), n. [NL., Gr. lithos, stone, + ὄρνις, a bird.] The generic name proposed by Professor Owen for certain bird-remains from the Eocene clay at Sheppey in England, supposed to have been acediptrine. The species is named Lithornis cultrarius.

Lithosia (li-thō'si-ā), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1798), Gr. lithos, a stone.] The typical genus of the Lithosiidae. The palpi are short, squamous, and two-jointed; the antennae are simple, and setose in the male; and the tibiae are short and slender. There are nearly 100 species, and the genus is wide-spread. L. bicolor is common in North America. The common footman of Great Britain is L. complanata, of a dull color, expanding about 1½ inches.

Lithosia cephalica. (Cross shows natural size.)

This moth is a pure silvery-white. The fringe on the under pair of wings is long and soft.

Lithosiid (li-thō'si-id), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Lithosiidae, or having their characters.

II. n. Any member of the Lithosiidae; a footman.

Lithosiidae (lith-ō-si-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., Gr. Lithosia + -idae.] A family of bombycid moths, typified by the genus Lithosia; the footmen. They have a slender body, filiform antennae, moderate three-jointed labial palpi, ample wings, subelliptical fore wings, and unfolded hind wings with a conspicuous frenulum. The larva feed upon plants and lichens, and are often clothed with hairs arising from piligerous tubercles. There are about 100 genera, and the family is wide-spread. Also written Lithosiada, Lithosida.

Lithospermum (lith-ō-spēr'mē-s), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1845), Gr. Lithospermum + -eae.] A subtribe of plants of the tribe Boragaeae, typified by the genus Lithospermum, and characterized by having the four erect or incurved nutlets sessile and attached by the immediate base to a plane gynobase. It embraces 17 genera of herbs or low shrubs, including among them Mertensia (the lungwort), Onosmodium (the false gromwell), Myosotis (the forget-me-not), and many other well-known plants.

Lithospermous (lith-ō-spēr'mus), a. [Gr. lithos, stone, + σπέρμα, seed: see sperm.] In bot., having hard and stone-like fruit.

Lithospermum (lith-ō-spēr'mum), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700) (so called in allusion to the nuts or seeds, which are very hard and have a polished surface), Gr. lithos, stone, + σπέρμα, seed: see sperm.] A genus of plants of the tribe Boragaeae, type of the subtribe Lithospermeae, characterized by a corolla with a cylindrical tube, a usually naked throat, and a spreading limb. The stamens are included and the nutlets smooth, with a small flat surface at the base. There are about 40 species, growing throughout the warm and temperate parts of the northern hemisphere, in eastern Africa, and the western part of South America. They are rough hairy herbs, rarely undershrubs, bearing purple, blue, white, or yellow flowers, either solitary in the axils or (the upper) in leafy bracted spikes or racemes. See grummet, alcornoque, & pusseum.

lithosphere (lith'-ō-sfēr), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + σφαῖρα, sphere: see sphere.] The crust of the earth: a designation corresponding with atmosphere and hydrosphere. [Little used.] lithostrotion (lith'-ō-strō'-ti-on), n. [N.L., < L. lithostrotus, mosaic, < Gr. λίθοστρωτος, paved with stones, < λίθος, stone, + στρώω, covered, < στρώνω, spread: see strew, strow.] 1. A kind of fossil coral found in mountain limestone. Lloyd (Lloyd), 1899.—2. [asp.] A genus of fossil rugose stone-corals of the family Cyathophylloidea. Also Lithostrotium.

lithothryptic (lith'-ō-thrip'tik), a. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + θρυπτικός, able to break, < θρῖπειν, break to pieces.] Same as lithotrittic. Sometimes, erroneously, lithothryptic.

lithothryptist (lith'-ō-thrip'tist), n. [< lithothryptic + -ist.] Same as lithotritist.

lithothryptor (lith'-ō-thrip-tor), n. [< lithothryptic + -or.] Same as lithotrittor.

lithothrypty (lith'-ō-thrip-ti), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + θρῖπειν, break to pieces.] The operation of crushing stone in the bladder; lithotripsy. lithotint (lith'-ō-tint), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + E. tint.] 1. The art or process of producing pictures in colors from lithographic stones.—2. A picture so produced.

lithotome (lith'-ō-tōm), n. [< Gr. λίθοτομος, cutting stones, < λίθος, stone, + τέμνειν, τμήν, cut: see tome.] 1. A mineral which in its rough state has the appearance of a cut gem.—2. In swg., an improper name for a cystotome.

lithotomic (lith'-ō-tōm'ik), a. [< lithotome + -ic.] Of, pertaining to, or performed by lithotomy.

lithotomical (lith'-ō-tōm'ik-al), a. [< lithotomic + -al.] Same as lithotomic.

lithotomist (li-thot'-ō-mist), n. [< lithotome + -ist.] One who practises cutting for stone in the bladder.

lithotomise (li-thot'-ō-miz), v. t.; [pret. and pp. lithotomised, ppr. lithotomising.] [< lithotome + -ise.] To perform lithotomy on.

He lithotomised a man, but was unable to extract a stone. E. D. Gray, Autobiog., p. 45.

Lithotomus (li-thot'-ō-mus), n. [N.L.: see lithotome.] Same as Lithophagus or Lithodomus: a term coined to replace Lithophagus, in order to avoid the implication that the members of this genus eat the rock they excavate. Nitzsche, 1825; Voigt, 1834.

lithotomy (li-thot'-ō-mi), n. [< L.L. lithotomia, < Gr. λίθοτομία, a cutting of stones, a cutting for stone, < λίθοτομος, cutting stones, cutting for stone: see lithotome.] The operation, art, or practice of cutting for stone in the bladder.

lithotripsy (lith'-ō-trip-si), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + τριψω, rubbing, < τριβω, rub.] Same as lithotripsy.

lithotriptic (lith'-ō-trip'tik), a. [< lithotripsy (-trip-) + -ic.] Same as lithotrittic.

lithotriptist (lith'-ō-trip'tist), n. [< lithotripsy (-trip-) + -ist.] Same as lithotritist.

lithotriptor (lith'-ō-trip-tor), n. [< lithotripsy (-trip-) + -or.] Same as lithotrittor.

lithotrite (lith'-ō-trit), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + L. tritus, pp. of terere, rub: see trite.] An instrument for crushing a stone in the bladder, so as to reduce it to small particles which will pass through the urethra. Also lithotritor.

lithotritile (lith'-ō-trit'ik), a. [As lithotrite + -ic; partly confused with lithotripsy.] Of or pertaining to lithotripsy; having the property of destroying stone in the bladder.

lithotritist (lith'-ō-trit-tist), n. [< lithotrite + -ist.] One who practises lithotripsy. Also lithotryptist.

lithotrittor (lith'-ō-trit-tor), n. [N.L., < Gr. λίθος, stone, + L. tritor, a rubber, < terere, pp. tritus, rub, grind.] Same as lithotrite.

lithotrixy (lith'-ō-tri-ti), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + L. tritus, pp. of terere, rub, grind.] The operation of crushing a stone in the bladder by means of an instrument called a lithotrite.

lithotype (lith'-ō-tip), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + τύπος, impression: see type.] 1. A kind of stereotype plate produced by lithotypy.—2. A method of printing from lithographic stone in the same manner as from type, the design on the stone being etched deeply enough to admit of the use of the type-press. E. H. Knight, lithotype (lith'-ō-tip), v. t.; [pret. and pp. lithotyped, ppr. lithotyping.] [< lithotype, n.] To prepare for printing by lithotypy.

lithotypic (lith'-ō-tip'ik), a. [< lithotype + -ic.] Relating to lithotypy; printed by the lithotype process.

lithotypy (lith'-ō-ti-pi), n. [As lithotype + -y.] A peculiar process of stereotyping by pressing the types into a soft mold or matrix. On the removal of the types the hollows left by them are filled with a mixture of gum shells, fine sand, tar, and linseed-oil in a heated state. This mixture when thrown into cold water becomes hard, and forms a plate ready to be printed from. From the sand present in it, it has a stony texture.

lit-house (lit'-hous), n. A dye-house. [Prov. Eng.] lithoxyle (li-thok'sil), n. [< Gr. λίθος, stone, + ξύλον, wood.] A variety of wood-opal, which retains distinctly the form and texture of the original wood.

lithoxylite (li-thok'si-lit), n. [< lithoxyle + -ite.] Same as lithoxyle.

Lithuanian (lith'-ō-ā-ni-an), a. and n. [< Lithuania (see def.) + -an.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to Lithuania, or to its people or language.

II. n. 1. A member of a race inhabiting Lithuania, formerly an independent country south-east of the Baltic sea, afterward subject to Poland, now included in West Russia.—2. The language of Lithuania. It is one of a branch of Indo-European or Aryan tongues, usually called Letto or Lettick, and most nearly allied to Slavic. These languages are spoken in parts of western Russia and eastern Prussia.

Lithuanic (lith'-ō-an'ik), a. and n. [< Lithuania + -ic.] 1. a. Same as Lithuanian.

II. n. Same as Lithuanian, 2; in a wider sense, same as Lettic.

lithuria (li-thū'ri-ā), n. [N.L., < Gr. λίθος, stone, + οὐρον, urine.] The presence of an abnormal amount of uric acid in the urine.

lithwale (lith'-wāk), a. [Also dial. leathwale; < ME. lithwayke, lithewayke, < leothewok, < AS. lithwād, lithwād, leothwād, with plant joints, flexible, < lith (pl. lithu), a joint, + wād, yielding, weak: see lith and weak.] Limber; flexible; pliable.

lithy (lith'-i-or-thi), a. [Also dial. lithy; < lithel + -y.] 1. Litho; easily bent; pliable.

Their lithy bodies bound with limits of a shell. A. Herrings Taylor (1698). (Narr.)

2. Heavy; warm; applied to the weather. Halwell. [Prov. Eng.] lithy-tree (lith'-i-trē), n. [So called from its pliable limbs; < lithy + tree.] The wayfaring-tree, Viburnum Lantana; also, Rhus caustica.

litigable (lit'-i-gā-bl), a. [< ML. litigabilis, < L. litigare, litigate: see litigate.] Capable of being litigated, or made the subject of a suit at law.

litigant (lit'-i-gant), a. and n. [= F. litigant = Sp. Pg. lit. litigante, < L. litigan(-t)e, ppr. of litigare, litigate: see litigate.] 1. a. Disposed to litigate; contending in law; engaged in a lawsuit.

II. n. One who is a party to a suit at law.

In all the Teutonic bodies of custom except the English and the Lombardic, even when the greatest latitude of seizure is allowed to litigants out of Court, some judicial person or body must be applied to before they proceed to extremities. Maine, Early Hist. of Institutions, p. 284.

litigate (lit'-i-gāt), v.; [pret. and pp. litigated, ppr. litigating.] [< L. litigatus, pp. of litigare, dispute, quarrel, carry on a suit, < lit(-), strife, dispute, suit, + agere, drive, carry on: see lit and agent.] 1. Intrans. To carry on a suit by judicial process.

The appellant, after the interposition of an appeal, still litigates in the same cause. Asplé, Fargerson.

II. trans. To make the subject of a suit at law; bring before a court of law for decision; prosecute or defend at law, as a right or claim.

It is taken absolutely for granted that there is somewhere a rule of known law which will cover the facts of the dispute now litigated. Maine, Ancient Law, p. 81.

litigation (lit'-i-gā'shon), n. [*< L.L. litigatio(-n), a dispute, < L. litigatus, pp. of litigare (> lit. litigare = Pg. Sp. litigar, quarrel, carry on a suit: see litigate.*] 1. The act or process of litigating or carrying on a suit in a court of law or equity; a judicial contest.

It was a curious coincidence that the great breach between England and Rome should be the result of a litigation in a matrimonial suit. Stubbs, Const. Hist., i. 408.

Nothing quells a spirit of litigation like despair of success. Paley, Moral Philoa., vi. 2.

2. Any dispute or discussion dependent upon evidence for decision. [Rare.]

Whether the "museur sense" directly yields us knowledge of space is still a matter of litigation among psychologists. W. James, Mind, XII. 1.

litigator (lit'-i-gā-tor), n. [< L. litigator, < litigare, litigate: see litigate.] One who litigates.

litigious (li-tij-i-ōs'i-ti), a. [*< L. as if litigiosus(-t)e, < litigiosus, contentious: see litigiosus.] 1. The character or quality of being litigious; litigiousness.—2. In Scots law, a tacit legal prohibition of alienation, to the prejudice of a begun action or diligence the object of which is to attain the possession or to acquire the property of a particular subject, or to attach it in security of debt. Imp. Dict.

litigious (li-tij'us), a. [*< F. litigieux = *Sp. Pg. litigioso, < L. litigiosus, disputatious, contentious, < litigium, strife, dispute, < litigare, dispute: see litigate.] 1. Inclined to litigate or go to law; given to the practice of bringing lawsuits; fond of litigation; contentious.

A rich litigious lord I love to follow,
A lord that builds his happiness on brawlings.

Malcher, Spanish Curate, iii. 4.

2. Subject to or dependent upon legal contest; hence, disputable; controvertible; subject to contention: as, litigious right.

No fences, parted fields, nor marks nor bounds, Distinguish'd acres of litigious grounds.

Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, i. 194.

The Governor . . . encouraged me to buy it, saying "that such kind of lands only were lawful here to be bought and sold, and that this was not in the least litigious."

R. Knox (Arber's Eng. Garner), i. 395.

3. Of or pertaining to litigation; relating to or connected with legal contention.

They view'd the ground of Rome's litigious hall;
Once oxen low'd where now the lawyers bawl.

Dryden, Æneid, viii.

I never visit these scenes . . . without a very vehement desire to be disengaged . . . from litigious terms.

R. Choate, Addresses, etc., p. 184.

The litigious sophism, a logical puzzle, which runs thus: A law-student agreed to pay his teacher a certain sum if he won his first case. As he never had a case, his teacher sued him for the amount, thinking that if the matter was not decided in his favor in the first instance, he should necessarily win a second process for the same money, because the law-student would then have won his first case. The student, on the other hand, maintained that if the case was decided in his favor, he ought not to be compelled to pay; and if it were decided against him, then by the terms of the contract he should not pay.

litigiously (li-tij'us-li), adv. In a litigious or contentious manner.

litigiousness (li-tij'us-nēs), n. The character of being litigious; a disposition to engage in or carry on lawsuits; inclination to judicial contests.

Litopa (li-ti'-ō-pā), n. [N.L., so called as having a simple aperture, without a spout; irreg. < Gr. λῆτος, smooth, plain, simple, + ὅρυ, hole, aperture.] The typical genus of Litopidae. The species are very small. They are oceanic, and attach themselves to gulfweed by glutinous threads.

Litopidae (lit'-i-op'i-dē), n. pl. [N.L., < Litopa + -idae.] A family of tænioglossate gastropods typified by the genus Litopa; the gulfweed-snails. They are related to the Rissoidea and Cerithiidae, but have filaments developed from the epipodium and operculiferous lobe. The shell is conic, with an entire aperture (whence the name) and a truncated columella. The species are of small size, and live in various seas, chiefly on sargassum.

litiscontestatio (li-tis-kon-tēs-tā'shon), n. [< OF. litiscontestatio, < L.L. litis contestatio(-n), the formal entering of a suit by calling witnesses: L. litis, gen. of lis, strife, lawsuit; contestatio(-n), an attesting by witnesses: see contestation.] In Scots law, the appearance of parties in court to contest their rights.

litispendency (li-tis-pen'dēns), n. [< OF. litispendency, < ML. litis pendency, pendency of a suit: L. litis, gen. of lis, a suit, + ML. pendencia, pendency: see pendency.] In law: (a) The time during which a lawsuit is going on. (b) A plea that another action is pending.

litmus (lit'mus), n. [A corruption of lacmus, simulating dial. lit, dye: see lacmus.] A peculiar coloring matter procured from Rocella tinctoria and some other lichens. It is prepared chiefly in Holland by macerating the lichens with a mixture of urine, lime, and potash or soda. As a result of the fermentation, the mass finally becomes blue, when it is removed, is mixed with calcareous matter to give it consistency, and is then allowed to harden in molds. Paper dyed blue by litmus, called litmus-paper, is reddened by an acid, for the presence of which it is used as a test; its blue color is restored by an alkali. See crucid.—Litmus on rags, or lithmus on drapery, a name given to a pigment prepared by steeping coarse linen rags in the juice of Oreton tinctorium, and afterward subjecting them to the action of ammonia from urine or stable-manure. The lithmus on drapery is used especially to color the crust of certain kinds of Holland cheeses, in order to render them less liable to decay or to attacks of cheese-mites. The color of the cloths is blue, but turns red after application to the cheese.—Litterus—paper. See above.

Litonotidae (lit-ō-not-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Litonotus + -idae.] A family of hypotrichous ciliate infusorians, represented by the genus Litonotus, free-swimming, soft and flexible, and of lanceolate or elongate figure. They have a narrow and often highly elastic neck-like anterior prolongation; the entire ventral surface flat and finely ciliated throughout; the dorsal surface smooth and fibrous, and mostly convex; the oral aperture ventral; a series of larger preoral cilia mostly developed in advance of the oral aperture; the pharynx unarméd; and the trichocysts usually abundant.

Litonotus (lit-ō-nō-tus), n. [NL. (Wrzesniowski, 1870), < Gr. λίτος, smooth, + νότος, back.] The typical genus of Litonotidae. L. fasciola inhabits ponds.

litoral, a. See littoral.

Litoralia (lit-ō-rā-lī-ā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of Litoralis, of or belonging to the sea-shore.] In Fieber's classification, a subsection of aquatic hemipterous insects, including those which are subaquatic.

littēs (lit-ō-tēs), n. [NL., < Gr. λίτός, plainness, simplicity, < λίος, smooth, plain, < λίς, smooth.] In rhet., a figure in which an affirmative is expressed by the negative of the contrary. Thus, "a citizen of no mean city" means one "of an illustrious city."

litra (lī-trā), n. [NL., < Gr. λίτρα, a pound, a silver coin, prob. a dial. var. of L. libra, a pound; see libra.] A silver coin of Sicily. Compare decalitron.

litrameter (li-tram'e-tēr), n. [NL., < Gr. λίτρα, a pound (see liter), + μέτρον, a measure (see meter).] An instrument for ascertaining the specific gravity of liquids.

litre, n. See liter.

litres (lī-tēr), n. [f. litro, OF. litro, litre, prob. orig. litro* = Fr. litra = It. dial. litra], a band used in draping a church for a funeral service; prob. orig. a var. of litte, a border, band; see litte, litte.] In her., a black band, supposed to represent the knightly belt, charged with the arms of the defunct, and painted on the wall of a church or chapel at the time of the funeral. This variety of the funeral achievement was formerly considered a mark of very high dignity. It is now nearly abandoned.

litres (lit-ro), n. [Chilian.] A small tree of Chili, Rhus caustica, with very hard wood, used for axletrees, cogs, and furniture.

Litsea (lit-sē-ā), n. [NL. (Lamarek, 1789), from the Jap. name of the tree.] A genus of lauraceous trees, rarely shrubs, of the tribe Litseeae, characterized by dioecious flowers with usually a four- to six-parted involucre. There are nine, twelve, or an indefinite number of stamens in the three-parted flower, and six in the two-parted, all having four-lobed anthers. The leaves are usually alternate and coriaceous, with a pinnate venation or triple-nerved, and the staminate flowers are generally sessile, while the pistillate are often umbellid. There are about 125 species, natives of tropical and eastern Asia and Australia. L. dealbata of Australia, sometimes cultivated in greenhouses, is called brushland mist-tree.

Litseeae (lit-sē-ā-sē-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Reichenbach, 1840), < Litsea + -aceae.] A tribe of plants of the order Laurineae, based on the genus Litsea, distinguishable from the tribe Perseaeeae by having intorse anthers, and a short dense inflorescence, either subsessile or on a short peduncle. It embraces 9 genera, among which are included some of the most important of the order, such as Laurus (the laurel), Lindera (the wild allspice), and Sassafras.

litter (lit-ster), n. [f. ME. litter, litterer, lytster, lyster, a dyer; < lit + -ster.] A dyer. [Old and prov. Eng.]

No madry welde, or wod no litterers
Ne know. Chaucer, Former Age, l. 17.

litt. D. See Lit. D.

litten (lit'en), n. [Also liten; a dial. var. of leighton.] 1. A garden. Ray.—2. A churchyard. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng. in both senses.]

litter (lit'er), n. [Early mod. E. also littour; < ME. litter, littere, lyter, lytere, lytler, < OF. littere, Fr. littere = Fr. litteria, littera = Sp. littera = Pg. littera = It. littera as if lecticaria* (ML. also littera, littera, litteria, after OF.), a litter (cf. lecticarius, a litter-bearer), < lectica, a litter, sedan, < lectus (> f. lit), a bed; < √ leg = E. leg; see lectual, lectica, lectern, etc., and lie.] All the various senses are derived from the primitive sense, a 'bed' or 'couch,' whence 'a portable bed,' 'a bed for animals' (usually of loose straw), etc. It is an error to refer 'litter,' a brood, to Icel. litr, litr, a place where animals produce their young. The E. word from this source is the dial. lajter, latter, lighter, lauchter.] 1. A vehicle consisting of a bed or couch suspended between shafts, and borne by men or horses. It was formerly esteemed as an easy and fashionable method of carriage. Among the Romans the litter Ancient Roman Litter, preserved in the Capitoline Museum, Rome.

(lectica) was borne by slaves set apart for that special service; it was in common use by patricians in the time of Tiberius. In Europe horse-litters were much used before the introduction of coaches.

Make someone all thyn ote an thy peple; and when thei be alle come, do the to be bore in a lyter, and so go fight with thyn ennys; and, wite it verily, thou shalt hem venquise. Martin (E. E. T. S.), l. 92.

2. A form of hurdle-bed on which a sick or wounded person is conveyed from one point to another, as to a hospital in a city, or to a field-hospital on a battle-field. For this purpose the stretcher or hand-litter is in use, consisting of canvas, about 6 ft long by 3 feet wide, securely fastened at the sides to two hard-wood poles about 8 feet long, and convenient for rolling up. Horse- and mule-litters of various forms are used in some armies and in American frontier service.

3. A birth or bringing forth of more than one young animal at a time, as of pigs, kittens, rabbits, puppies, etc.

The thirty pigs at one large litter farrowed.

Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, vi. 256.

My mother had ij. whelps at one litter,

Both borne in Lent.

Marriage of Wit and Wisdom (1870).

4. A number of young animals brought forth at a birth: used with reference to mammals which regularly give birth to more than one young at once, as the sow, bitch, cat, rabbit, etc., and only slightly of human beings.—

5. Loose straw, hay, or the like, spread on a floor or the ground as bedding for horses, cows, or other animals.

Grooms pallets shyn fyle and make litters, ix fote on lengths with-out diwers.

Babes Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 313.

6. Waste matter, as shreds, fragments, or the like, scattered about, as on a floor; scattered rubbish; things strewn about in a careless or slovenly manner; clutter.

Strephon, who found the room was void,
Stole in, and took a strict survey
Of all the litter as it lay. Swift.

7. A condition of disorder or confusion: as, the room is in a litter.—Indian litter, an extemporized litter made by attaching three cross-pieces to two stout saplings, by means of notches and cords. The sick or wounded man is laid in his blanket, which is then knotted to the framework. In storms the man is protected by a top made with a blanket stretched over bent twigs.—To be in litter, to be in the state of bringing forth young, or of lying in with young, as a sow or a bitch.

He called me Turnoto and asked what were the price
o' pigs. I asked him, were any of his family in litter.
J. W. Palmer, After his Kind, p. 116.

litter (lit'er), v. [f. litter, n.] I. trans. 1. f. To carry in a litter.

These Pagan ladies were litter'd to Campus Martius, ours are coach'd to Hyde-Park. Gentleman Instructed, p. 112.

2. To scatter straw, hay, or other similar substance on or over for bedding.

At last he found a stall where oxen stood, . . .
But, for his ease, wall littered was the floor.
Dryden, Cock and Fox, l. 226.

3. To spread a bed for; supply with litter: usually with down.

I'll see the horse well littered.

The Suffolk Miracles (Child's Ballads, I. 321).

4. To make litter of; use for litter.

Then to their roots
The light soil gently move, and strew around Old leaves or litter'd straw, to screen from heat
The tender infants. Doddsley, Agriculture, ii.

5. To bring forth; give birth to: said of mammals which usually produce a number at a birth, as the sow, cat, rabbit, bitch, etc., or slightly of human beings.

My father named me Antolynus; who being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles.
Shak., W. T., iv. 2. 24.

6. To scatter things over or about in a careless or slovenly manner.

They found
The room with volumes litter'd round.
Swift, Cadenus and Vanessa.

II. intrans. 1. To be supplied with a bed or litter for bedding; sleep in litter: as, to litter in the straw.

The inn
Where he and his horse littered.
Habington, Castara, ii.

2. To bring forth a litter of young animals.

These [dogs] have in this City no particular owners; . . . [the Turks] thinking it nevertheless a deed of piety to feed, and provide them kennels to litter in.

Sandys, Travels, p. 45.

A horrible desert, . . . where the she-wolf still littered.
Macaulay.

litterateur (lit-ē-ra-tēr), n. [F., < L. litterator; see litterator.] A literary man; one who is engaged in literary work; one who adopts literature as a profession.

littery (lit'er-ē), a. [f. litter, n., + -y.] Consisting of litter; encumbered or covered with litter.

little (lit'l), a. and n.; compar. less, superl. least (rarely, and only in modern obs. or dial. use, littler, littles). [f. ME. litel, littel, lytel, litte, lutel, < AS. lytel, litel = OS. luttel = D. luttel = MLG. luttel = OHG. luzil, luzil, MHG. G. dial. lützel = (with a diff. base lit-, instead of lut- as in the preceding forms) Icel. littill = Dan. lille = Sw. lille, lilla = Goth. lētilla, littile; also without the suffix -el, ME. lit, lyt, < AS. lyt = OS. lut = D. (dim.) lütje = LG. lüt, dim. lütje = Icel. litt (adv.) = Sw. liten, litt = Dan. liden, lidet, lidd (adv.), litt (cf. E. dial. litte, < ME. litte, lyte, abbr. of lytel, lytel, lytel, etc.); root unknown. The word is connected by Skeat with AS. lytig, deceitful (< lot, deceit; cf. Goth. luts, deceitful, lutun, betray), as if the sense 'little' in size were derived from the sense of 'little' in spirit, 'mean,' 'base'; but this is improbable in itself, and no such transition or connection of sense appears in AS. use.] I. a. Not large or much. (a) Of small size, bulk, or compass; diminutive, absolutely or relatively: as, a little grain of sand; a little child or man; the little finger.

Thanne was the place to littell for them all,
Wherefore the Sowdon anon dede ordemay
A larger place owi vpon the playn.

Geoffrey (E. E. T. S.), l. 1392.

Presumptuous man! the reason wouldst thou know,
Why form'd so weak, so littell, and so blind?

Pope, Essay on Man, l. 36.

(b) Not large in number; having few constituent members or parts: as, a little army or fleet; a little city.

If the household be too littell for the lamb. Ex. xii. 4.

(c) Not much; of small amount, quantity, or degree; restricted; limited: as, a little food or drink; little joy or happiness; little influence.

O thou of littell faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?

Mat. xiv. 31.

There was too much talk . . . and too littell real work done.

O. W. Holmes, Emerson, v.

(d) Not of great extent or duration; not long; short in space or time; brief: as, a little way or distance; a little while.

Our littell life

Is rounded with a sleep.

Shak., Tempest, iv. 1. 157.

(e) Not great; small in consideration, dignity, consequence, etc.; petty; inconsiderable; insignificant: as, a little of fine; littell affairs; a littell accident.

I wol you telle a littell thing in prose,

That oughte lyken you, as I suppose.

Chaucer, Prolog. to Tale of Melibee, l. 21.

When thou wast littell in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel? 1 Sam. xv. 17.

These considerations have given me a kind of contempt for those who have risen by unworthy ways. I am not ashamed to be littell, when I see them so infamously great.

Dryden, Ded. of the Third Misc.

Hence—(f) Petty in character; mean; narrow; wanting breadth or largeness: as, a little soul or mind.

There are poets littell enough to envy even a poet-laureate.
Gray, Letters, i. 242.

Little assimilations. See assimilation.—Little casino. See casino.—Little case. See little-case, below.—Little fever, go, habit, office, etc. See the nouns.—Little hours. See hour.—Little pint, a pint pot; also, the contents of a pint pot.—The Little Entrance. See entrance.—The Little masters. See master.—My. (b) Minute, tiny. (c) and (d) Scanty, slender, moderate. (e) Insignificant, contemptible, weak. See littleness.

II. n. A small quantity, amount, space, or the like.

Suche other tymes when we haue lytle or nothyngs a doying elles.

Quoted in William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), Prolog., p. xxiii.

A littell that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked.

Ps. xxxvi. 16.

Walk you that way,

Whilst I in seculous meditation stray

A littell this way.

Flower, Faithful Shepherdess, ii. 4.

Man wants but little here below,
Nor wants that little long.

Goldsmith, The Hermit.

• A little, somewhat; to or in a small degree; to a limited extent; for a short time.

Long a little with thy lede, I logly biscecha.

Altketter's Poems (ed. Morris), II. 614.

Here is her picture: let me see: I think,
If I had such a fire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as in this here
And yet the painter flattered her a little.

Shak., T. G. of V., IV. 4. 192.

Pray stay a little, my lord. Shak., I Hen. IV., II. 4. 63.

By little and little, by slow degrees: gradually.—In little, on a small scale; within a small compass; in miniature; as, the history of one's life in little.

Those that would make mows at him while my father lived give twenty, forty, fifty, an hundred ducats a-piece for his picture in little. Shak., Hamlet, II. 2. 394.

Into littlet, very near; almost.

For which we han so sorwed, he and I,
That into litt both it hadde us slawe.

Chaucer, Troilus, IV. 394.

Not a little, considerably.—To make little of. See make.

little (lit'l), adv. [ME. litel, litil, lytel, etc., < AS. lytel, adv., prop. neut. acc. of the adj.: see little, a. and n.] In a small quantity or degree; not much; slightly.

Master, be well war of the scroffe of Notynggum,
For he ys lytell howr frende.

Robin Hood and the Potter (Child's Ballads, V. 22).

How very little the world misses anybody!

Macaulay, in Trevelyan, I. 285.

littlet (lit'l), v. [ME. litelen, lytolen, tutelen, lutlen, < AS. lyttan, become or make little, < lytt, little: see little, a.] I. intrans. To become little or less.

His Godhede littles not thei ho lowe litte.

Joseph of Arimathea (E. E. T. S.), p. 5.

II. trans. To make less. Compare belittle.

littlebeak (lit'l-bēk), n. A brachiopod of the genus Rhynchonella; a rhynchonellid.

little-ease (lit'l-ēz), n. A state of discomfort or misery; hence, anything that causes uneasiness; specifically, an old name for a punishment causing bodily discomfort or pain, as the stocks or the pillory, or some especially uncomfortable part of a prison, as a very small cell.

Welcome, sweet friend, to liberty of air.

How dost thou brook thy little-saw thy trunk?

Middleton, Family of Love, III. 1.

Was not this fellow's preaching a cause of all the trouble in Israel? was he not worthy to be cast in boards or little-cage?

Latimer, Sermons, fol. 105, b. (Nares).

little-endian (lit'l-en'di-an), n. [In Swift's "Gulliver's Travels," a member of the Lilliputian party which contended that boiled eggs should be cracked at the little end: opposed to big-endian.] One of a set of disputers about trifles. Also used adjectively. See big-endian.

little-go (lit'l-gō), n. See little go, under go, n.

little-gude (lit'l-gūd), n. The devil. [Scotch.]

little-neck (lit'l-nek), a. [So named from a locality on the north coast of Long Island (Little Neck), whence these originally came into favor.] A local epithet, noting young, round, hard claims of a size preferred for eating raw. They are simply ungrown quahaugs (Venus mercenaria or Meremaria violacea). The epithet is wrongly but very generally supposed to refer to the absence of the long siphon or "neck" which is conspicuous in the common clam, Mya arenaria. These young quahaugs are sometimes called pea-clams. (On the Pacific coast of the United States the name little-neck is applied to various edible clams, as Tapes straminea and T. laciniata, Chione succinea and C. sinuata. See under dimyrtan.)

littleness (lit'l-nes), n. [*ME. litolnesse, < AS. lytelnes, < lytel, little: see little and new.] The state or quality of being little, in any sense of that word.—Syn. Littleness, Meanness (see meanness); Smallness, Littleness, Pettiness, and nouns formed from adjectives given in the list under little. Smallness and littleness are general terms, but the latter is stronger, and generally implies more or less disparagement, but sometimes endowment. Pettiness is used in strong disparagement, as of that which is beneath consideration; it characterizes a mind that busies itself with insignificant or trifling things.

littleship, n. [*ME. litolleschipe, litolleschipe; < litte + -ship.] Littleness; smallness.

Hou thi litalnes is bi-spit:

Hou thi swetness is i-betun and i-bit:

Hou thi litalnesche to achary detis is of set.

Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnival), p. 240.

littlest (lit'l-est), a. The regularly formed superlative of little; least.

littleworth (lit'l-werth), a. and n. [< little + worth, a.] I. a. Of little or no value; worthless; of a bad character; destitute of moral principle. [Rare or archaic.]

He returned for answer that he would not come to a stranger. He defended himself by saying "He had once come to a stranger who sent for him; and he found him a littleworth person."

Boncell.

II. n. A worthless fellow; a blackguard.

littoral (lit'ō-ral), a. and n. [Also sometimes litoral; = F. littoral = Pg. Sp. litoral = It. litorale, < L. littoralis, belonging to the sea-shore, < litus (litōr-), sea-shore, coast, shore of a lake, bank of a river.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to a shore, as of the sea or a great lake; frequenting or living near the shore: as, littoral trade; littoral fishes or vegetation.—2. Situated or bordering on a shore: as, the littoral Provinces (Litorale or Küstenland), a division of Austria on the east coast of the Adriatic.—Littoral cord-gon. See cord.—Littoral rocks, rocks which have been laid down in the littoral zone, or within the range of influence of tides and breakers. Deposits thus formed consist chiefly of coarse materials, while those formed in deep water, or thalassic rocks, are fine-grained and often largely calcareous in character.—Littoral zone, the interval on a sea-coast between high- and low-water mark.

II. n. A littoral tract or region; the part of a country lying along the coast.

In the towns of the Albanian littoral Italian is the language of civilized intercommunication.

A. J. Evans, Illyrian Letters, p. 130.

Littorella (lit'ō-rel'ā), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1767), so called in ref. to the place of growth, < L. litus (litōr-), the sea-shore: see littoral.] A genus of plants of the natural order Plantaginaceae, distinguished from Plantago by the one-celled ovary. See shoreweed.

Littorina (lit'ō-rī-nā), n. [NL., < L. litus (litōr-), sea-shore: see littoral.] The typical genus of Littorinidae. L. littorea is the common periwinkle of Europe, which has recently become abundant on the Atlantic coast of the United States. It is used for food in some countries. In England several hundred tons are used annually. L. pallida is another species common to both continents. L. pulex of the New England coast is common on rocky shores, where it creeps over rockweed and eel-grass. It is very variable in color, either plain or marked with white, green, or brown. Further south a larger and sharper-pointed species, L. varicosa, is abundant. The generic name has been much more comprehensive than it is now, various species formerly included being now referred to other genera. Also written Littorina.

Littorinidae (lit'ō-rī-nī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Littorina + -idae.] A family of holostomatous tanioglossate gastropods; the periwinkles or sea-snails. As generally understood, they have a wide, short snout, long tentacles, eyes at the external bases of the tentacles, and a radula with nearly uniform lateral and marginal teeth. The shell is conic or subglobose, with a roundish aperture and a spiral corneous operculum. They are mostly of maritime habitat, and generally live between or near tide-levels, attached to rocks or stones. The family is now much restricted by the exclusion of several genera formerly included.

Littorina littorea, natural size.

Littre's glands. See gland.

littress (lit'res), n. [Origin unknown.] A smooth kind of cartridge-paper used in the manufacture of cards. E. H. Knight.

Lituceae (lit'ū-ē-sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (De Blainville, 1818), < Litua + -aceae.] A family referred to the cephalopoda, and composed of Spirula as well as of certain foraminifera supposed to be related to that genus.

lituary, n. An obsolete form of lectuary.

lituate (lit'ū-āt), a. [< NL. lituatus, < L. lituus, an augur's staff, a trumpet: see lituus.] In bot., forked, with the points turned outward.

litui, n. Plural of lituus.

lituiform (lit'ū-i-fōrm), a. [< L. lituus, an augur's staff, a trumpet (see lituus), + forma, shape.] Curved like a lituus.

lituite (lit'ū-it), n. [< NL. Lituites, q. v.] A fossil cephalopod of the genus Lituites.

Lituites (lit'ū-i-tēs), n. [NL., < L. lituus, an augur's staff: see lituus.] The typical genus of Lituitidae. There are several species of Silurian age.

Lituitidae (lit'ū-it-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lituites + -idae.] A family of fossil cephalopods, typified by the genus Lituites, containing the lituites, now generally associated with Nautilidae.

Lituoia (li-tū-ō-i-ā), n. [NL., dim. of L. lituus, an augur's staff, a trumpet: see lituus.] The typical genus of Lituidae. Lamarck, 1804.

Lituidae (lit'ū-ō-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lituoia + -idae.] A family of imperforate Foraminifera, with the test arenaceous and usually regular in contour, the septation of the polythalamous forms often imperfect, and the chambers frequently labyrinthine. It comprises sandy isomorphs of the simple porcellaneous and hyaline types, together with some related species. Lituaea, Lituaia, Lituoacea, and Lituoidea of the old authors are inaccurate synonyms, embracing not only the foraminiferous Lituidae, but some cephalopoda, as Spirula.

Lituidae (lit'ū-ō-i-dē-ē), n. pl. [NL.: see Lituidae.] The family Lituidae, advanced to the rank of an order of imperforate foraminifera.

litulidean (lit'ū-ō-lid'ē-an), a. and n. [NL., < Lituloidea + -an.] I. a. Lituloline, in a broad sense; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lituloidea.

II. n. One of the Lituloidea.

Litulina (lit'ū-ō-lī-nā), n. pl. [NL., < Lituloa + -ina.] A group of Lituloidea represented by the genus Lituloa and its immediate congeners, having the test composed of coarse sand-grains, rough outside and often labyrinthine.

Litulinæ (lit'ū-ō-lī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lituloa + -ina.] A subfamily of Lituloidea, with test composed of coarse sand-grains.

lituline (lit'ū-ō-lī-n), a. [< Lituloa + -inel.] Having the characters of the genus Lituloa; being or resembling one of the Lituloides.

litulite (lit'ū-ō-līt), n. [< L. as if litulotus*, dim. of lituus, a trumpet, + -ite.] A fossil lituloline foraminifer: so named from the shape. Litulolites are of microscopic size, and abundant in the Cretaceous.

litura (li-tū-rā), n.; pl. liturae (-rē). [NL., < L. litura, a smearing, erasure, blot, blur, < litare, pp. litare, smear, rub: see litiment.] In entom., an ill-defined and somewhat obscure spot, growing paler or fading into the ground-color at one end, as if daubed or blotted.

liturate (lit'ū-rāt), a. [< LL. lituratus, pp. of liturare, rub out, erase, < L. litura, a smearing, erasure: see litura.] 1. In bot., having spots formed by the abrasion of the surface: said of a plant.—2. In entom., marked with litures or indeterminate spots growing paler at one end.

liturge (li-tēr'), n. [< LL. liturgus, < Gr. leitourgós, a public servant, a minister, a Jewish or Christian priest: see liturgy.] 1. A liturgist; a Jewish priest as offering sacrifice, or a Christian priest as celebrating the eucharist or liturgy.—2. A leader in public worship; an officiating clergyman, especially one leading in the use of a fixed or prescribed liturgy.

liturgic (li-tēr'jik), a. [< LGr. leitourgikós, ministering (in the Septuagint, pertaining to the temple service), < Gr. leitourgos, liturgy: see liturgy.] Same as liturgical.

liturgical (li-tēr'ji-kal), a. [< liturgic + -al.] 1. Of or pertaining to a liturgy, in the ancient Greek sense of that word. See liturgy, 1.—2. Of or pertaining to sacrificial or eucharistic worship; in a wider sense, used in, prepared for, or pertaining to worship or religious ceremonies in general. All services of public worship have sometimes been called liturgical.—3. Specifically, pertaining to or employing a fixed or prescribed liturgy, or pertaining to public worship conducted in accordance with such a liturgy.—4. Noting a part of a public religious exercise that is explicitly directed to the deity rather than to the worshiper: opposed to didactic or homiletic.—Liturgical colors. See color.—Liturgical fan. See tabernum.

liturgically (li-tēr'ji-kal-i), adv. In a liturgical manner; as a form of public worship.

It is . . . proper that a portion of [the Bible] should be daily used liturgically in the public schools.

T. Hall, True Order of Studies, p. 148.

liturgics (li-tēr'jiks), n. [Pl. of liturgic: see -ics.] 1. The science or art of conducting public worship. Liturgics, as a branch of pastoral theology, is coordinate with polemics, catechetics, and homiletics, though in strictness it may be made to include the last.

2. Specifically, the sciences of liturgies—that is, of orders of public worship; liturgiology. It comprises the history of the origin of liturgical formulas and of their combination with one another into liturgies, and the art of using such formulas in conformity with custom or ecclesiastical rule.

liturgiologist (li-tēr'ji-ol'ō-jist), n. [< liturgiology + -ist.] One versed in liturgiology; a specialist in the study of liturgies.

Minute peculiarities, which would be of interest to professed liturgiologists.

Encyc. Brit., XIV. 708.

liturgology (li-tēr'ji-ol'ō-jī), n. [< Gr. leitourgia, liturgy, + -logia, < logos, say: see -ology.] The science or systematic study of appointed forms of public worship, especially of the ancient forms for the celebration of the eucharist. See liturgy.

liturgist (li-tēr'jist), n. [< liturgy + -ist.] 1. A leader in public worship; a liturge.—2. An authority on liturgies; a liturgiologist.—3. One who uses or favors the use of a liturgy.

liturgy (lit'ér-jī, n.; pl. liturgies (-jiz). [Formerly liturgie; < OF. liturgie, lyturgie, F. liturgie = Sp. liturgia = Pg. It. liturgia, < ML. liturgia, < Gr. leitourgia, also leitourgia, public service, a public office or duty (see def. 1), any service, esp. eccles. the service or ministry of priests, public worship; in a restricted sense, the eucharist, < leitourgia, a public servant, a minister, eccles. a priest, < leitōr, leitōr, also leitōr, leitōr, and leitōr, leitōr (rare), public (< laos, laos, people), + ergon*, do, work, < ergon = E. work: see work.]

1. In ancient Greece, particularly at Athens, a form of personal service to the state which citizens possessing property to a certain amount were bound, when called upon, to perform at their own cost. These liturgies were ordinary, including the presentation of dramatic performances, musical and poetic contests, etc., the celebration of some festivals, and other public functions entailing expense upon the incumbent; or extraordinary, as the sitting out of a trireme in case of war.

2. A form or method of conducting public worship; an appointed form for the words and acts used in the rites and ceremonies of the Christian church. The word denotes especially an appointed form for the holy communion, the hours or daily prayer, litanies, baptism, confirmation, marriage, burial, penance, visitation and unction of the sick or dying, ordinations, and other offices such as are contained in the Missal, Breviary, Ritual, Pontifical, Euchologion, Horologion, etc., of the Roman Catholic and the Greek Church, or united in one volume in the Anglican Book of Common Prayer. Liturgies seem to have originated partly in the inheritance or adoption of Jewish forms of worship and their adaptation to Christian purposes. The Book of Psalms, especially as containing inspired prayers, praises, thanksgivings, etc., furnished a large amount of liturgical material. On the other hand, the forms given by Christ, such as the Lord's Prayer, the words of institution in the eucharist, the baptismal formula, etc., became centers of development for the new and distinctively Christian parts of the offices.

3. Specifically, in liturgiology, and as the name most frequently used in the Greek Church, the form of service used in the celebration of the eucharist, or that service itself. In this last sense Latin and Roman Catholic writers generally prefer the word mass. An account of primitive Christian liturgical worship is given by Justin Martyr (in the middle of the second century A. D.), and this agrees with the Clementine Liturgy, a form referable to about A. D. 250, and so called because incorporated in the Apostolical Constitutions, a compilation attributed to St. Clement of Rome. Five great groups or families of liturgies are recognized, each of which can be referred to a single original liturgy represented by one or more direct derivatives still existing. They are: (1) The Liturgy of St. James (or of Jerusalem), also called the Hierosolymitan Liturgy, the Greek form of which has been somewhat modified by that of St. Chrysostom; it exists also in a Syrian Jacobite form, with numerous derivatives. From its Greek form came the Greek Liturgy of St. Basil (of Cappadocia), and from this the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom on the one hand and the Armenian Liturgy on the other. The liturgies of St. Basil and St. Chrysostom, together with the Liturgy of the Presanctified (see below), are known as Liturgies of Constantinople, and are almost exclusively used at the present day by the whole Greek Church. (2) The Liturgy of St. Mark (or of Alexandria), the original Catholic or Greek form of which has been influenced by that of Constantinople. It is used also to the present day in a Coptic (Egyptian Monophysite) form named after St. Cyril. The Coptic, however, use as their principal liturgy one named after St. Basil, different from that of the same name in the first group. The Ethiopian (that is, Abyssinian) forms belong to this group. (3) The Liturgy of St. Adas and Maria (or of Edessa), also known as the Liturgy of the Apostles. It is a very ancient orthodox liturgy, and is the original of the East Syrian form. It is often called Nestorian, because used by Nestorians, and because the ancient Malabar and other Nestorian liturgies are derived from it. (4) The Liturgy of St. Peter (or of Rome), the earliest extant form of which are the Gelasian and Gregorian Sacramentaries. It is the principal liturgy of the Roman or Petrine group, and has almost entirely supplanted all the liturgies in the Latin language—that is, those in this and the next group. Allied but independent forms are the Ambrosian Liturgy, which is that of the archdiocese of Milan, still sometimes used, and the liturgies or uses of the Anglo-Saxon and medieval English Church, of which the most important was the Use of Sarum. These medieval English uses are the sources of the Communion Office in the successive revisions of the Anglican Prayer-book. The Nonjurors' office of 1718 and the Scottish office of 1764 were, however, largely conformed to the Liturgy of St. James, and from these the American office derives its prayer of consecration. (5) The Liturgy of St. Paul (or of St. John), also called the Liturgy of Ephesus, is the inferred original of the so-called Ephebian Liturgies, these names being not historical or traditional, but the generally accepted result of scientific combination. These liturgies are also called Gallian or Hispano-Gallian, and are the forms, Latin in language, anciently used in Britain, Gaul, and Spain, and traced through the church at Lyons to Ephesus. The varieties used in Gaul have been supplanted since the time of Charlemagne by the Roman form, which has also been substituted since the eleventh century for the ancient liturgy of Spain, known as the Mozarabic. This last, however, as revived at the beginning of the sixteenth century by Cardinal Ximenes, is still used in three or four chapels or churches, but with some assimilation to the Roman rite.—Liturgy or Mass of the Presanctified, an office with a communion (the elements having been consecrated at a previous celebration), but no consecration, and therefore not a liturgy or mass in the strict sense of these words. Such a service (containing parts of the Liturgy of St. Chrysostom) is said in the Greek Church throughout Lent, except on Saturdays, Sundays, and the Feast of the Annunciation. In the Roman Catholic Church the rite is confined to Good Friday.

litus (lit'us), n. [ML., also litus, latus; AS. læt: see læt.] In old Saxon law, a member of the third order in the nation, the first being the nobilis, and the second the ingenuus, corresponding to the eorl, the eorl, and the læt of the Kentish laws.

The litus appears to be distinctly recognized as a member of the nation. Instead of being a mere dependent with no political rights, the remnant of a conquered alien people, he is free in relation to every one but his lord, and simply unfree as cultivating land of which he is not the owner. Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 22.

lituus (lit'ū-us), n.; pl. litui (-i). [L., an augur's staff, a trumpet; supposed to be of Etruscan origin, meaning 'crooked.'] 1. In Rom. antiq.: (a) A staff with a recurved or crooked top, used by the augurs in quartering the heavens; an augural wand. (b) An instrument of martial music; a kind of trumpet curved at the outer extremity, and having a shrill tone.—2. A spiral of which the characteristic property is that the squares of any two radii vectores are reciprocally proportional to the angles which they respectively make with a certain line which is given in position and which is an asymptote to the spiral. This name was given by Cotes (died 1716).—3. [cap.] In ool.: (a) A genus of cephalopods: same as Spirula. Breyer, 1792. (b) A genus of gastropods: same as Cyclostoma. Martyn, 1784.

liant, n. A Middle English form of lion.
livable (liv'ə-bl), a. [Also liveable; < live + -able.] 1. Capable of being lived, or of being spent or passed in more or less content. [Rare.] Life at the moment was livable without it (human intercourse); for there was no bar between her and her lover. Geo. MacDonald, What's Mine's Mine, p. 333.
2. Capable of being lived in; fit for residence. [Rare.] They were quite livable quarters. M. Collins, The Ivory Gate, i. 194.

I doubt if there was ever anywhere a livable house . . . that was not the creation of a refined woman. Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 875.

live (liv), v.; pret. and pp. lived, ppr. living. [ME. liven, liven, luvien, libben, < AS. lifan, lifian, leofian, libban (pret. lyfode) = OS. libbian = OFries. leva, liva, libba = D. MLG. LG. leven = OHG. loben, MHG. G. loben = Icel. lifa = Dan. leve = Sw. leva = Goth. livan (pret. lifa), live, in Icel. also remain, be left (cf. Goth. af-lifjan, be left); a secondary verb, from the stem of AS. lifan* (in comp. belifan = OS. libban = OFries. libba = D. lijven = OHG. libban, MHG. beliben, libben = Dan. blive = Sw. blifva), remain, be left, whence also ult. AS. lif, life, lifan, leave, lif, what is left: see life, leave, lives.] I, intrans. 1. To continue in being; remain or be kept alive; not to die, perish, or be destroyed: said of both animate and inanimate things, corporeal or incorporeal.

The trespass still doth live, albeit the person dye. Spenser, F. Q., II. viii. 28.
Mothinks the truth should live from age to age. Shak., Rich. III., III. i. 74.

The Skiff was much overloaded, and would scarce have lived in that extreme tempest had she been empty. Quoted in Capt. John Smith's True Travels, i. 217.

If I live till May come twelvemonth, you are sure of me again. Cotton, in Walton's Angler, II. 273.

In the upper church also, the columns of the elder building have . . . lived through all repairs. Z. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 62.

2. To have life; possess organic vitality; be capable of performing vital functions: said of animals and plants.

In that See of Libya no Fische: for thei mowe not live ne dure, for the grst hete of the Honne. Mandeville, Travels, p. 144.

What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? Ps. lxxxix. 48.
Take not away the life you cannot give: For all things have an equal right to live. Dryden, Pythag. Philos., i. 706.

The bones of some vast bulk that lived and roared Before man was. Tennyson, Princess, III.

3. To use or pass life; direct the course of one's life; regulate one's manner of existing: as, to live well or ill, in either a physical or a moral sense.

Ensamble suthly forto gife To them that in his law wuld live. Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 120.

To be a Christian was not to fight for the Faith, but to live by it. Stillington, Sermons, II. III.

Unblemished let me live, or die unknown. Pope, Temple of Fame, i. 522.

True men who love me still, for whom I live. Tennyson, Guinevere.

Hence, used absolutely.—4. To make full use of life or its opportunities; get the greatest advantage or enjoyment from existence.

He who, secure within, can say, To-morrow, do thy worst, for I have lived to-day. Dryden, Imit. of Horace's Odes, III. xxix. 65.

Live while you live, the episcure would say, And seize the pleasures of the present day; Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries, And give to God each moment as it flies. Doddridge, Epigram on his Family Arms.

Of him [Charles XII. of Sweden] we may say that he led a life more remote from death, and in fact lived more, than any other man. Emerson, Courage.

5. To abide; have or make an abiding-place; dwell or reside; have place: as, to live in a town; to live with one's parents.

There was one Anna, a prophesess: . . . she was of a great age, and had lived with an husband seven years from her virginity. Luke II. 36.

The tears live in an onion that should water this sorrow. Shak., A. and C., i. 2. 176.

It is certainly a very happy temper to be able to live with all kinds of dispositions. Steele, Spectator, No. 593.

A horror lived about the tarn, and elve Like its own mist to all the mountain side. Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

6. To have means of subsistence; receive or procure a maintenance; get a livelihood: as, to live on one's income.

They which preach the gospel should live of the gospel. 1 Cor. ix. 14.

Vto. Dost thou live by thy labor? Clo. No, sir, I live by the church. Shak., T. N., III. 1. 2.

No ill men, That live by violence and strong oppression, Come thither. Fletcher, Bonduca, IV. 2.

7. To feed; subsist; be nourished: with by before the means or method, and on or upon (sometimes with) before the material: as, cattle live on grass and grain; to live on the fat of the land. It behoveth the Men to bere Vitalls with hem that schalle duren hem in the Desertes, and other necessaries for to live by. Mandeville, Travels, p. 58.

I had rather live With cheese and garle in a windmill, far, Than feed on caters and have him talk to me In any summer-house in Christendom. Shak., 1 Hen. IV., III. 1. 161.

Sell their presented partridges and fruits, And humbly live on rabbits and on roots. Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. II. 52.

I speak the truth as I live by bread! Tennyson, Lady Clare.

8. In Script., to have spiritual life, either here or hereafter; exist or be sustained spiritually. The just shall live by faith. Gal. III. 11.

Forgive my grief for one removed; . . . I trust he lives in thee, and there I find him worthier to be loved. Tennyson, In Memoriam, Int.

Living at heck and manger. See heck.—To live and look; to live: a pleonastic phrase. Ac yf ich may lyve and loke ich shal go lerne bettere. Piers Plowman (O), xl. 87.

To live but and ben. See ben.—To live by one's fingers' ends. See finger.—To live by one's hands. See hand.—To live fast. See fast.—To live in a glass house. See glass.—To live in clover. See clover.—To live like fighting-cocks. See fighting-cock.—To live on the cross. See cross.—To live out, to be away from home in domestic service. [Colloq. and local, U. S.] She came to this city, and lived out as a cook. New York Tribune, quoted in Bartlett.

She has never lived out before. Mrs. Tennyson, The Hidden Path, p. 72.

To live under, to be tenant to.—To live under canvas. See canvas.—To live up to, to order one's life in accordance with; not live below the standard of: as, to live up to one's theories.

Editors of mortals alone live up to the apostolic injunction, and, forgetting the things that are behind, ever press forward to those which are before. Contemporary Rev., XLIX. 655.

—Syn. 5. Sofourn, Continue, etc. See abide. II. trans. 1. To continue in constantly or habitually; pass; spend: as, to live a life of ease. Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise . . . To scorn delights, and live laborious days. Milton, Lycidas, l. 72.

But let me live my life. Tennyson, Audley Court.

2. To act habitually in conformity to. It is not enough to say prayers, unless they live them too. Parker.

To live down, to live so as to disprove; efface or remove by one's subsequent conduct the effects of (a calumny, grief, or mistake). Leaving her husband to ponder how she and he had each lived their sorrow down. Jefferies, Live It Down, II.

Write down that rubbish you can't—live it down you may. Bulwer, My Novel, I. 7.

Are you not yet
Belenting? ha' you blood and spirit in those veins?
You are no image, though you be as hard
As marble: sure, you have no Heart; if you had,
Twould send a lively and desiring heat
To every member. Sen. and Ft. Woman-Hater, M. 3

Hence—2. The bay or glossy ibis, Falcinellus igneus, which when adult has the plumage chiefly liver-colored or hepatic.

The ibis is adopted as part of the arms of the town of Liverpool. . . This is termed the liver.

Montagu, Dict. Brit. Birds (ed. Newman).

The glossy ibis or liver.

A. E. Brehm.

Brown liver, a liver colored dark reddish-brown, olive-brown, or black from severe malarial poisoning.—Degraded liver, in human pathol., an abnormal condition in which the liver is divided into a number of lobes as in the gorilla.—Floating liver, a displaced and movable liver.—Granular liver. See granular.—Hobnailed liver. See hobnailed.—Line of the liver. See line of health, under liver.—Liver of antimony, a combination of triarsenic acid with a basic sulphid of another metal.—Liver of sulphur, a mixture of polysulphides of potassium, or potassium polysulphide. It is made by heating sulphur with potassium carbonate in a closed vessel. The composition of the fused liver-colored mass is variable.—Longitudinal ligament of the liver, the broad ligament.

liver³ (liv'ér), v. t. [< ME. liveren, leveren, < OF. liverer, F. liver = Sp. Pg. librar = It. librare, liberare, liberare = L. leveren = G. lifern = Dan. levero = Sw. levera, deliver, give up, < L. liberare, set free, liberate, deliver, ML. also (with other forms librare, librare, after Rom.) give up; see liberate and deliver. Hence liver³.] To deliver. [Old and prov. Eng.]

And to his men he heard hym hole and fere.

M. S. Lancelotti, 208, fol. 2. (Halliwell.)

liver⁴, a. [Appar. liv¹, or liv², + -er; but perhaps, by aphoresis, from deliver, a.] Lively.

Those that saw Robin Hood run

Said he was a liver old man.

Robin Hood and the Old Man (Child's Ballads, V. 259).

liver⁵ (liv'ér), n. A fabulous bird borne upon the arms of Liverpool, England, traditionally supposed to have given a part of the name of that city. It has been variously identified. See liver², 2.

liverance (liv'ér-ans), n. [< ME. liverance, < OF. liverance, liverance, deliver, < liver, deliver; see liver³. Cf. deliverance.] A delivery or deliverance. Halliwell. [North. Eng.]

liver-color (liv'ér-kul'or), n. A color resembling or suggesting that of raw calf's liver freshly cut, somewhat smeared with blood, and seen at a little distance; a red of very low luminosity, and of moderately full chroma. A color-disk composed of 3, scarlet iodide of mercury and 11 intense velvet-black might be called a fine liver-color tending toward maroon. The liver itself is decidedly yellower, grayer, and brighter. Ridgway defines liver-color by a wash of Schönfeld's Indian red, which is matched by the following color-disk formula: scarlet, 14; bright chrome-yellow, 2; white, 4; velvet-black, 80. This inclines toward terra-cotta.

liver-colored (liv'ér-kul'ord), a. Of the color of liver; hepatic; of the color called liver-color; said especially of ceramic ware, as a certain variety of old Chinese porcelain and its imitations.

liver-complaint (liv'ér-kom-plānt'), n. Disease of the liver.

livered (liv'ér-d), a. [< liver² + -ed².] 1. Having a liver (of the kind specified): used in composition: as, a poor-lived or fat-lived cod-fish.—2. Of some character attributed to a state of the liver: as, white-lived, lily-lived, milk-lived (all meaning 'cowardly').

But I am pigeon-livered, and lack gall

To make oppression bitter.

Shak., Hamlet, II. 2. 605.

3. Heavy or underbaked. Halliwell. [South. Eng.]

liverer (liv'ér-ér), n. [< liver² + -er².] A servant in livery. Davies.

Their sumptuous suits of liveries.

Patten (Arber's Eng. Garner, III. 74).

livereson, n. [ME. liveresone, < OF. livereson, livereson, livereson, etc., F. livereson, delivery, livery; see liver², liveraison, liberation.] Livery. Prompt. Parv., p. 309.

liver-fluke (liv'ér-flók), n. A trematoid worm, Distoma hepatica. See Distoma and fluke.

liver-growth (liv'ér-grôn), a. Suffering from enlargement of the liver.

I suffer'd him to be open'd, when they found that he was what is vulgarly call'd liver-growth.

Boehm, Diary, Jan. 27, 1658.

liveried (liv'ér-id), a. [< liver² + -ed².] Wearing a livery, or uniform dress. See livery.

A thousand liveried angels lacky hen.

Milton, Comus, l. 455.

livering (liv'ér-ing), n. [< ME. livering; < liver² + -ing².] A kind of pudding or sausage made of liver or pork.

Two bloodynge, I trow, a livering betweene.

Townley's Mysteries, p. 80. (Halliwell.)

Livering, white-skinned as ladies.

Chapman.

liverleaf (liv'ér-léf), n. [So called from a fancied resemblance of the three-lobed leaves to the liver.] A spring flower of the genus Anemone, in two species, sometimes regarded as forming a genus Hepatica. The leaves are all from the root, heart-shaped and three-lobed. The delicate flowers are single on hairy stalks, colored blue, pink, or white. The round-lobed or kidney liverleaf is A. Hepatica (Hepatica triloba). (See cut under Hepatica.) The sharp-lobed or heart liverleaf is A. acutifolia. [Local, U. S.] liver-ore (liv'ér-ór), n. An impure liver-brown variety of cinnabar; hepatic cinnabar.

liver-pyrites (liv'ér-pi-rít'áz), n. A massive form of iron pyrites (marcasite, and sometimes also pyrite and pyrrhotite), having a dull liver-brown color.

liversick (liv'ér-sik), a. Having a diseased liver—that is, in love: from the old notion that the liver is the seat of love.

Demon, my friend, once liverick of love.

Sp. Hall, Satires, II. vii. 47.

liver-spots (liv'ér-spots), n. pl. A disease, pityriasis versicolor. See pityriasis.

liverstone (liv'ér-stón), n. [= G. leberstein (tr. NL. lapis hepatica), so called by Cronstedt with ref. to the color, or perhaps to the similarity to liver-pyrites (G. leberites), which gives off sulphur fumes when heated.] A variety of the mineral barite which gives off a fetid odor when rubbed or heated to redness.

liver-wing (liv'ér-wing), n. In cookery, the right wing of a bird having the liver tucked into it in cooking, preferred by epicures.

Mr. Pumblechook helped me to the liver wing and to the best slices of tongue. Dickens, Great Expectations, xix.

liverwort (liv'ér-wört), n. [< ME. liverwort; < liver² + wort¹.] 1. Any plant of the cryptogamic family Hepaticæ. In general appearance they differ from mosses in having the stems bilateral, and the leaves usually two-ranked, though often there are rudiments of a third rank, never with a midvein.

2. One of several other plants that suggest the liver by their form, or are supposed to be useful in diseases of the liver. Among them are the common agrimony, Agrimonia eupatoria, and the liverleaf, Anemone hepatica.—Horned liverwort, a name sometimes given to any of the plants of the order Anthocerotaceæ of the family Hepaticæ. They are small, terrestrial, annual plants, with flaccid thallose vegetation, and bilobed, mostly erect, pod-like capsules. Also called hornwort.—Noble liverwort, Anemone hepatica. (See also ground-liverwort, stone-liverwort, water-liverwort, wood-liverwort.)

livery¹ (liv'ér-i), a. [< liver² + -y¹.] Resembling the liver: as, a livery color, texture, etc. livery² (liv'ér-i), n. [pl. liveries (-ies).] [< ME. livercy, livercy, liveray, liverce, livercy, liverce, liverce, liverce (= Sp. librea = It. librea = ML. ref. librea, libra), livercy, < AF. liverce, liverce, OF. liverce, liverce, F. liverce, delivery, livercy, < ML. liberata, delivery, livercy, lit. a thing delivered, fem. (acc. res, a thing) of liberatus, pp. of liberare, give up, deliver; see liver³.] 1. Delivery; allowance; grant; permission.

Said, what are ye that make here maistris,

To loose these beasts with-out liverie!

York Plays, p. 308.

2. In law: (a) The act of giving possession and delivery. Chiefly used in the phrase livery of seisin—that is, the act of putting a person in corporal possession of a freehold by giving him the ring, latch, or key of the door; or, if land, by delivering him a turf or twig, accompanied by a form of words or (as always in later times) a written document expressing the transfer of possession; or, in either case, doing any act before witnesses which clearly places the party in possession. It formerly accompanied all conveyances of land, but is now confined in England to that conveyance called a feoffment. It is unknown in American law.

Alienation of feudal holdings, when it came to be allowed, was subject to the condition of being notorious. This was assured by requiring an actual delivery of possession before witnesses and on the land itself: a proceeding accompanied with different forms in different countries and districts, and known by the general name of investiture. In England it was called livery of seisin. F. Pollock, Land Law, p. 72.

(b) The charter or deed of possession accompanying the delivery.—3. Release from constraint or control; deliverance.

Death fewer liveries gives

Than life.

Chapman.

It concerned them first to sue out their livery from the unjust wardship of his encroaching prerogative. Milton.

4. Delivery (of blows).

William as a wof man was euer here & there,

& leide on swiche livers lense me fortothe.

That his daies were don that of him hent a dent.

William of Palerne (E. E. T. S.), l. 3822.

5. (a) An allowance of food or other provisions stately given out; a ration, as to a family, to servants, to horses, etc.

Edward IV.'s Esquiers for the Body, III. had "for wynter liverye from All Hallowentide (Nov. 1) tyll Eysyng, one percher wax, one candell wax, ij candells Paris, one tallwood and dimidium, and wages in the countynghouse." Quoted in Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 211.

(b) Keeping on a certain or regular allowance at a certain rate; regular keeping and attendance: now used only of horses: as, to keep a horse at livery.

What Livery is, we by common use in England knowe well enough, namelye that it is allowance of horse-meat, as they commonly use the word in stabling; as, to keepe horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of livering or delivering forth their nightlie foodes.

Spenser, State of Ireland.

6. (a) A regular distribution of uniform garments, badges, etc., to any body of men; hence, a uniform style prescribed for the dress of a body of servants, followers, or associates.

Commaunde ge that your gentillmen yomen and other dayly here and were there robes in your presence, and namely at the mete, for your worshippe, and not colde robes and not cording to the liverye, nother were they colde schoone ne flyd. Babees Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 222.

The term livery was . . . gradually restricted to the gift of clothing, the gift of food and provisions being known as allowances or corrodes; the clothing took the character of uniform or badge of service. As it was a proof of power to have a large attendance of servants and dependents, the lords liberally granted their livery to all who wished to wear it, and the wearing of the livery became a sign of clientship or general dependence.

Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 470.

(b) A badge, cognizance, garment, or entire costume of uniform fashion formerly marking the retainers of a feudal lord, the followers of a military superior, or the members of a company, as a gild or corporation; at the present time, the dress worn by servants, especially men servants, when of peculiar fashion and indicating whom it is that they serve. Such liveries usually take their colors from the heraldic tinctures used in the armorial bearings, or with modifications. Thus, if the master's arms include a field or, the color of the livery-coat, instead of yellow, may be drab; so in England red, being the color of the royal livery, is avoided by all subjects, and maroon or chocolate is substituted for it when gules is prominent in the arms of the employer. (c) Figuratively, any characteristic dress, or a dress assumed for or worn upon a particular occasion; hence, characteristic covering or outward appearance: as, the livery of May or of autumn.

The spring, the summer,

The chiding autumn, angry winter, change

Their wonted liveries. Shak., M. N. D., II. 1. 113.

Now came still evening on, and twilight gray

Had in her sober livery all things clad.

Milton, P. L., iv. 539.

7. A livery-stable. [U. S.]—8. Same as livery company: as, the London liveries.—Livery companies. See company.—Livery of seisin, the delivery of property into possession. See lat. 2 (a).—Statute of Liveries. See statute.—To sue one's livery, in old Eng. law, to issue the writ which lay for the heir to obtain the seisin of his lands from the king.

He came but to be Duke of Lancaster,

To sue his livery and beg his peace.

Shak., I Hen. IV., iv. 3. 62.

livery² (liv'ér-i), v. t.; pret. and pp. liveried, ppr. liverying. [< liver², n.] To clothe in or as if in livery.

His rudeness so with his authorised youth

Did liverie falseness in a pride of truth.

Shak., Lover's Complaint, l. 105.

He had 116 servants in liveries, every one liveried in greene attin doublets. Evelyn, Diary, Nov. 3, 1633.

livery-coat (liv'ér-i-kót), n. A coat forming part of a livery-dress—especially, in modern times, of that of a man servant.

livery-collar (liv'ér-i-kol'ar), n. A collar of an order or of honorary distinction, as the collar of SS, the collar of the Bath, etc.

livery-colors (liv'ér-i-kul'grz), n. pl. Colors adopted by a person or family of rank and importance for the livery of the household, and also for decorative purposes. Thus, the colors of the Tudor princes of England were white and green (Boisde); those of the Stuarts scarlet and gold, etc.

livery-cupboard (liv'ér-i-kub'ard), n. A stand with two or three shelves formerly used in the dining-room, on which the liveries (food, drink, etc.) intended for distribution were placed.

livery-fish (liv'ér-i-fish), n. A North of Ireland name of the striped wrasse.

livery-gown (liv'ér-i-goun), n. The gown forming part of a livery-dress, especially that worn by a London liveryman.

liveryman (liv'ér-i-man), n.; pl. liverymen (-men). 1. One who wears a livery; specifically, a freeman of the City of London, who, having paid certain fees, is entitled to wear the characteristic dress or livery of the company to which he belongs, and also to enjoy certain other privileges, as the right to vote in the election of the lord mayor, sheriffs, chamberlain, etc.—2. One who keeps a livery-stable.

livery-office (liv'ér-i-of'is), n. An office appointed for the delivery of lands. Wharton.

livery-servant (liv'ér-i-sér-vant), n. A servant who wears a livery; hence, a servant not of the highest grade, as that of steward or the like. Compare servant out of livery, under servant.

livery-stable (liv'ér-i-stá-bl), n. A stable where horses are kept for hire and vehicles are let.

livery-tablet (liv'ér-i-tá-bl), n. A side table or cupboard. Fuller, Pisgah Sight, V. i. 18.

lives, n. 1. Plural of life.—2. An obsolete genitive of life.

live-spindle (liv'spin'dl), n. In a lathe, the rotating spindle in the head-stock by which power is imparted, as distinguished from the dead-spindle in the tail-stock.

livetide, n. [live, for life, + tide.] Fortune; living. Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 245. (Davies.)

live-well (liv'wel), n. The well of a fishing-smack in which fish are kept alive.

livid (liv'id), a. [F. livide = Sp. livido = Pg. It. livido, < L. lividus, black and blue, < Werre, be livid.] 1. Black and blue, like a contusion. The term is applied, with the strong exaggeration usually characterizing the use of color-names, to the color of a person "black in the face" from strangulation, or having a cold, death-like complexion from rage, fear, or suffering; or to a light which imparts a death-like aspect to the face. Thus, a face illuminated by the yellow monochromatic light produced by the burning of an alcoholic solution of common salt is said to present a livid appearance.

At this the blood the virgin's cheek forsook;
A livid paleness spreads o'er all her look.

Pope, B. of the L., III. 90.
A thousand flambeaux . . . turned all at once that deep gloom into a livid and preternatural day.

Poe, Tales, I. 371.
On livid brows of agony
The broad red lightning shone.

Whittier, The Slave Ship.
2. In soil, pale purplish-brown, more or less translucent, resembling the color of a bruised surface of flesh.

lividity (li-vi'di-ti), n. [F. lividité, < ML. lividitas (-t)s, lividness, < L. lividus, livid: see livid.] The state of being livid; the peculiar darkness of color exhibited by bruised flesh.

The signs of a tendency to such a state [the strabularian] are darkness or lividity of the countenance [and] dryness of the skin.

Arbuthnot, Aliments, VI. § 23.
lividness (liv'id-nes), n. Same as lividity.

living (liv'ing), n. [ME. living, luyng, libbing; verbal n. of live, v.] 1. The act or the condition of existing; the state of having life; power of continuing life.

There is no living without trusting somebody or other in some case.

And do you think this is living, to be involved in so many miseries, and to wallow in so great iniquities?

N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquies of Erasmus, I. 265.
2. Period of life; term of existence.

To spend her [a nun's] living in eternal love.

Shak., Lover's Complaint, I. 233.
3. Manner or course of life: as, holy living.

The younger son . . . wasted his substance with riotous living.

Luke xv. 13.
Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life.

Str. J. Hayward.
4. Means of subsistence; estate; livelihood.

For to drawn up all thing
That nede was to her libbing.

Arthur and Merlin, p. 33.
And ther living ys mynystred unto them twyes a Day from the seyd Monte Syon.

Turkington, Diarie of Eng. Travell, p. 39.
She of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living.

My duty toward my neighbour is . . . to learn and labour truly to get mine own living.

Book of Common Prayer, Catechism.
Specifically—(a) An ecclesiastical office by virtue of which the clerk or incumbent has the right to enjoy certain church revenues on condition of discharging certain services prescribed by the canon, or by usage, or by the conditions under which the office has been founded. (See induction, §.) In the reign of Henry VIII. a system of "pluralities" was established, whereby the same clerk might hold two or more livings; but in the reign of Victoria this privilege, which was attended with great abuses, has been repeatedly abridged; and no clerk may now hold two livings unless the churches so attached are within three miles of each other, and the annual value of one of them does not exceed one hundred pounds.

We see some parents, that have the donations or advowsons of Church livings in their hands, must needs have some of their children . . . thrust into the ministry.

Sp. Sanderson, Works, III. 125.
He obtained licence from the King that the University might purchase advowsons of spiritual livings.

Fuller, Hist. Cambridge, II. 32.
Your peculiar institution of church livings—which (as I understand it) makes it possible that a priest of the oracle of God may be a mere functionary.

J. W. Palmer, After his Kind, p. 225.

(b) The income from a benefice; ecclesiastical revenue.

They [the clergy] have great labors, and therefore they ought to have good livings, that they may commodiously feed their flock.

Lastimer, Sermon of the Plough.
(c) The seat of the office; a parish.

I shall pass part of next summer at my living, and in all probability come over to Edinburgh.

Sydney Smith, To Francis Jeffrey.
5. A farm. [Prov. Eng.]

My lands and livings are not small,
My house and lineage faire.

The Child of Eile (Child's Ballads, III. 231).
High living. See Mgh.—Syn. & Living, Livelihood, Subsistence, Sustainance, Support, Maintenance. These words differ essentially, as their derivations suggest. To make a living or a livelihood is to earn enough to keep alive on with economy, not barely enough to maintain life, nor sufficient to live in luxury. Livelihood is a rather finer and less material word than living. Subsistence and sustainance refer entirely to food: subsistence is that which keeps one in existence or animal life; sustainance is that which holds one up. Support and maintenance, like living and livelihood, cover necessary expenses. To guarantee a man his support is to promise money to cover all expenses proper to economical living, or such living as may be agreed upon. Maintenance may be applied to expensive living. An honest livelihood; a bare living; bare subsistence; scanty sustainance; ample support; an honorable maintenance at the university.

living (liv'ing), p. a. [Altered from ME. livend, lifand, < AS. lifende, ppr. of lifan, live: see live, v.] 1. Being alive; having life or vitality; not dead: as, a living animal or plant.

The Lord God . . . breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul.

Gen. ii. 7.
2. In actual existence; having present vigor or vitality; now in action or use; not lifeless, stagnant, inert, or disused: applied to things: as, living languages; a living spring; living faith.

To live a life half dead, a living death.

Milton, S. A., I. 100.
Then flash'd the living lightning from her eyes.

Pope, E. of the L., III. 155.
It is the living question of the hour, and not the dead story of the past, which forces itself into all minds.

O. W. Holmes, Old Fol. of Life, p. 73.
3. Furious; fierce: applied by seamen to a gale: as, a living gale of wind.—4. Existing in the original state and place; being as primarily formed and situated: only in the phrases living rock, living stone.

I now found myself on a rude and narrow stairway, the steps of which were out of the living rock.

Moore.
The forms they hewed from living stone
Survive the waste of years, alone.

Bryant, The Greek Boy.
Living force. See vis viva.—Living language. See language.—The living, one who is or those who are alive: usually with a plural signification: as, in the land of the living.

The living will lay it to his heart.

Ecol. vii. 2.
Living-chamber (liv'ing-chám'ber), n. The chamber or cavity of a shell in which an animal lives, as distinguished from that part from which the body of the animal has receded during the growth of the shell: said especially of fossil cephalopods.

livingly (liv'ing-li), adv. [Living + -ly.] In a living state or manner; by the course or way of life.

Of course no sane man can help cherishing the liveliest desire to grow in the knowledge of the Divine perfection, and livingly to illustrate it in the tenor of his own personal history.

H. James, Suba. and Shad., p. 303.
Livingness (liv'ing-nes), n. [Living + -ness.] The state of being alive; possession of energy or vigor; animation; liveliness: as, the livingness of one's faith.

living-room (liv'ing-róm), n. A room for general family use; a sitting-room. Also called in New England keeping-room. [Local, U. S.]

The cabin was furnished with two entrance doors. I rapped at one, and in a moment it opened, and Joe ushered me into the living-room.

Gilmore, My Southern Friends, p. 149. (Bartlett.)
Accordingly each family sets up one or other of these dwellings in its living-room. Art Jour., March, 1888, p. 72.

Livingstonite (liv'ing-stón-it), n. [Named in honor of David Livingston, a Scottish missionary and explorer of Africa (1813-78).] A sulphid of mercury and antimony occurring in prismatic or columnar forms of a lead-gray color and metallic luster: found in Mexico.

livish (liv'ish), a. [ME. livilsh, lifsh; < life + -ish.] Somewhat live or alive; lively.

If there were true and livish faith, then would it work love in their hearts.

Beacon's Works, 1843, p. 37. (Halliwell.)
Livistone (liv-is-tó-né), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1827), named for Patrick Murray of Livistone, near Edinburgh.] A genus of fan-palms of the tribe Corypheae, distinguished by the terminal styles and stigmas, the petals and sepals being valvate in the bud, and by the distinct or slightly coherent globose carpels. The flowers are hermaphrodite, and consist of three sepals and a three-lobed corolla, six stamens and three carpels, of which generally but one matures and forms the fruit. The leaves are fan-shaped and generally split on the edges, and are borne on spiny petioles. There are about 14 species, found in eastern and tropical Asia, the Malay archipelago, New Guinea, and eastern Australia. L. australis, the Australian or Victorian cabbage-tree, is native as far south as Victoria.

Livonian (li-vó-ni-an), a. and n. [< Livonia (see def.) + -an.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to Livonia; Lettish.

2. n. 1. A native or an inhabitant of Livonia, one of the Baltic provinces of Russia; specifically, a member of the primitive race of Livonians.—2. The language formerly spoken by the Livonians.

livor (liv'vgr), n. [L. livor, lividness, envy, < Werre, be of a bluish color, be envious: see livid.] 1. Envy; malignity.

Out of this root of envy spring those feral branches of faction, hatred, livor, emulation.

Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 167.
2. pl. The parts of skin in a corpse discolored by the hypostatic accumulation of blood.

livraison (li-vrá-zón'), n. [F., < ML. liberatio(-n-), a giving, L. a setting free, liberation: see liberation and liber. Cf. livreson, an obs. E. form of the same word.] One of several parts of a printed work issued at intervals in advance of the completion of the whole; a number of a book published in parts, or of a periodical; a fascicle: used only or chiefly of French publications.

I shall send you several livraisons of the Encyclopédie.

Jefferson, Correspondence, II. 62.
livre (liv'vèr), n. [F., = Sp. Pg. libra = It. libbra, libra, < L. libra, the Roman pound; cf. Gr. λίτρα, a pound: see libra.] An old French coin and money of account, now superseded by the franc. The value of the livre tournois, or livre of Tours, by comparison of the gold coinage of 1735-1735 with the present United States gold coinage, was 124 cents, and by comparison of silver coin of the same periods it was 134 cents. The livre parisis, or livre of Paris, in use until 1667 conjointly with the livre tournois, was worth one quarter more than the latter.

lixivial (lik-siv'i-ál), a. [= F. lixiviel = Sp. lejivial = It. lissiviale, < L. lixivius, lixivium, lye: see lixivium.] 1. Obtained by lixiviation; impregnated with alkaline matter extracted from wood-ashes.—2. Containing or consisting of salts so extracted.—3. Of the color of lye; resembling lye.—4. Having the qualities of alkaline salts extracted from wood-ashes.—Lixivial salts, in chem., salts obtained by passing water through wood-ashes, or by pouring water on wood-ashes.

lixivate (lik-siv'i-át), v. t.; pret. and pp. lixivated, ppr. lixivating. [< ML. lixivatus, pp. of lixivare, form into a lye, < L. lixivium, lye: see lixivium.] To subject to the process of lixiviation; form into lye; impregnate with salts from wood-ashes: as, lixivated water.

[Lime] is obtained by pouring an excess of concentrated sulphuric acid on the water obtained by burning different fuel, lixivating the ashes, and concentrating the liquor.

Dungham, Diet. Mod. Science.
lixivate (lik-siv'i-át), a. [< ML. lixivatus, pp.: see the verb.] 1. Pertaining to lye or lixivium; of the nature of alkaline salts.

The fixed nitre is of an alcalisate nature, and participates the qualities belonging generally to lixivate salts.

Boyle, Works, I. 370.
2. Impregnated with salts from wood-ashes.

lixivation (lik-siv-i-át-shón), n. [= F. lixiviation = Pg. lixiviação = It. lixiviazione, < ML. lixivatio(-n-), < lixivare, make into lye: see lixivate.] The operation or process of extracting alkaline salts from ashes by percolation of water; the process of leaching. For the application of leaching or lixiviation to the treatment of metalliferous ores, see Augustin's process, Patera process, Russell's process, Sturges's process, all under process.

lixivious (lik-siv'i-us), a. [< L. lixivius, also lixivus, made into lye: see lixivium.] Lixivial.

lixivium (lik-siv'i-um), n. [< L. lixivium, also lixivia, lye, neut. and fem. respectively of lixivus, made into lye, < lixi, ashes, lye.] Water impregnated with alkaline salts extracted from wood-ashes; lye: sometimes applied to other extracts.

I have found wonderful benefit in bathing my head with a decoction of some hot and aromatic herbs, in a lixivium made of the ashes of vine-branches.

Boehm, To Doctor Beale. lixt. An obsolete form of lixt, second person singular indicative present of lixi. Chaucer.

lixa (li'xá), n. The white or blue-backed mullet, Mugil curema.

lizard (liz'árd), n. [ME. lezarde, lezarde, < OF. lezard, lezard, lizard, F. lizard = Sp. Pg.

lizard (> E. aligarto, now alligator) = It. lacerta, lacerta, < L. lacertus, lacerta, & lizard. Cf. lizard. 1. A scaly four-legged reptile without a shell; a squamate quadruped saurian; a saurian or lacertilian. In popular language a lizard is almost any reptile except a frog, toad, snake, or turtle; and ordinary book usage is equally indefinite. Thus, skinks, stallions, geckos, chameleons, basilisks, monitors, agamas, iguanas, alligators, crocodiles, etc., are all lizards; pterodactyls are flying-lizards; dinosaurs, plesiosaurs, and mosasaurs are huge extinct lizards. But the word is most frequently used as the name of the small lacertilians, as those of the family Lacertidae and some others, which have no special names of their own. See Lacerta, Lacertidae.

Our Author saw one Lizard as big as a man, with scales on her back like Oysters. Purshes, Pilgrimage, p. 333.

Lizards, the green lightnings of the wall, . . . With such prodigious eyes in such small heads! Mrs. Browning, Aurora Leigh, vii.

2. Any member of the old order Sauria or modern order Lacertilia. Such are the reptiles known as slow-worms, glass-snakes, horned toads, etc. Many of these have no limbs, or no obvious ones, and are therefore not lizards in sense 1.

3. Naut., a piece of rope with a thimble or bull's-eye spliced into one or both ends, used in a vessel as a leader for ropes.—4. [cap.] A certain small constellation. See Lacerta, 2.—5. A crotch of timber or a forked limb used in place of a sled for hauling stone: a form of stoneboat.—6. In her., a beast like a wildcat, usually represented as spotted: a rare bearing.—Anguine lizard. See anguine.—Broad-backed lizard, the varanians or monitors.—Croaking lizard, a gecko common in Jamaica, Thelodactylus loricatus; so called from the noise it makes. It is nocturnal. Also croaking gecko.—Froiled lizard. See frill lizard.—Scaly lizard, a pangolin or scaly ant-eater. See manis.

lizard-bait (liz'ard-bät), n. The lesser sand-lance. [Prov. Eng.] lizard-fish (liz'ard-fish), n. 1. A ganoid fish of the group of sauroids.—2. A fish of the genus Synodus, of which there are several species, as the sandpike, S. foveatus, found from Cape Cod southward. S. luteiceps occurs on the Californian and Mexican coasts.

lizard-seeker (liz'ard-së'ker), n. An American ground-cuckoo, Sauvothera vestula, or some other member of the subfamily Sauvotherinae.

lizard-stone (liz'ard-stön), n. A name for the serpentine marble obtained in Cornwall, England, in the vicinity of Lizard Point. It is made into chimney-pieces, ornaments, etc.

lizard's-tongue (liz'ard-tung), n. A name of several orchids included in the genus Spiranthes, formerly regarded as forming a genus Sauvagesium.

lizard-tail, lizard's-tail (liz'ard-, liz'ardz-täl), n. 1. An herbaceous plant, Saururus cernuus, growing in marshes in North America. The name was suggested by its nodding spikes of white flowers. Also called broadsword (which see).—2. A plant, Piper poltatum, of the West Indies.

lizard-tailed (liz'ard-täld), a. Having long fragile arms or rays, likened to the tail of a lizard: specifically applied to the ophiurans.

lizard (li-zä'ri), n. Same as alcant.

lizzia (liz'ä-ä), n. [NL.] A genus of gymno-blastic scalefish or jellyfishes, with 32 marginal tentacles arranged by fives and threes, and the young produced by direct budding from the polypite. L. octopunctata is an example.

lama (lä'mä or lyä'mä), n. [Also lama and glama as the L. generic or specific name; < Peruv. llama.] 1. An even-toed ruminant ungulate quadruped, Auchenia glama or llama, or Lama peruviana, of South America, of the order Ungulata, suborder Artiodactyla, superfamily be descended from the guanaco. The llama is also called the American camel, and has been known to Europeans since 1544. It was the only beast of burden in America before the arrival of the Spaniards, and is still used as such in the Andes, the formation of its feet enabling it to walk on slopes too rough or steep for any other animal. It is about 3 feet high at the shoulder, and so closely allied to the alpaca that the latter is sometimes regarded as a finer-wooled variety of it.

2. The wool of the llama. It is used in making stuffs for women's wear, lace, tassels, etc.

Her (the Lady Mayoresa's) petticoat was of llama and gold. First Year of a Sultan's Reign, p. 63.

llan. [W. llan, an inclosure, a church.] A church: a very frequent element in place-names in Wales, and occurring also in England and Scotland, as in Llandaff, Llangollen, Llanidloes, Llanark.

Llandello group (lan-di'lä grüp). [See def.] A division of the Lower Silurian, first described by Murchison as occurring at Llandello in Carmarthenshire, Wales, and also found in Pembroke-shire and Radnorshire. The group consists of dark-colored flags, sandstones, and shales, and is between 2,000 and 3,000 feet thick. It contains many of the characteristic fossils of the lowest division of the Silurian, especially trilobites of genera included in Barrande's "primordial fauna," such as Asaphus, Calymene, and Ogygia.

Llandoverly group (lan-dö've-ri grüp). [See def.] A series of rocks, so named by Murchison because well developed near Llandoverly in Carmarthenshire, Wales. The group consists of sandstones, grits, and conglomerates, having a maximum thickness of 2,500 feet. It is divided into two subdivisions, the Lower Llandoverly beds, and the Upper Llandoverly beds or the May Hill sandstone. By some geologists the Upper and the Lower Llandoverly and the Llanon shales are grouped together as the May Hill series, and are considered as forming the lowest division of the Silurian, the fossiliferous strata below this being called Cambrian. At one time the division between the Lower and Upper Silurian was taken between the Upper and Lower Llandoverly. See Silurian.

llanero (lya-nä'rö), n. [Sp., < llano, a plain: see llano.] An inhabitant of the llanos of South America. The llaneros are principally converted Indians or descendants of Indians and whites, and are distinguished for activity, ferocity, ignorance, and semi-barbarous habits. They are for the most part shepherds or herdsmen.

llano (lä'nö or lyä'nö), n. [Sp., a plain, < L. planus, level: see plain and plano.] In some of the Spanish or originally Spanish parts of America, a treeless level steppe or plain. The llanos in the northern part of South America surround the lower and middle course of the Orinoco, and are separated by the great forest-belt of the Amazon from the region of the pampas further south. Many parts of these llanos bear little or no vegetation, except on the banks of rivers and during the seasons of inundation, when they are transformed into seas. In the intermediate season they are luxuriant pastures for great herds of cattle. The Llano Escondido or Staked Plain of the United States is a vast arid plateau in the former Spanish possessions of Texas and New Mexico.

Like the greater portion of the desert of Sahara, the northernmost of the South American plains—the Llanos—are in the torrid zone; during one-half of the year they are desolate, like the Libyan sandy waste; during the other they appear as a grassy plain, resembling many of the steppes of Central Asia.

Humboldt, Aspects of Nature (trans.), p. 30.

LL. B. An abbreviation of the Latin (Middle or New Latin) Legum Baccalaureus, Bachelor of Laws.

LL. D. An abbreviation of the Latin (Middle or New Latin) Legum Doctor, Doctor of Laws.

llan (lä'n), n. The plichard. [Cornwall.] llestraid, n. [W.: see llestrad.] Same as llestrad.

Lloyd's (loidz), n. [See def.] The name (which has become in some degree generic) of an association in London, consisting of members and subscribers, for the transaction of marine insurance for all parts of the world through individual underwriters, and the promotion of shipping interests in general. The association has occupied Lloyd's Rooms in the Royal Exchange since 1774. These rooms were originally called the New Lloyd's Coffee-House, from a house established by Edward Lloyd in Tower street, in the latter part of the seventeenth century, where merchants and underwriters met to transact business. About 1693 the establishment was removed to Lombard street for the convenience of merchants of the highest class doing business in the old city. About 1770 the place came into the possession of the society of marine underwriters, together with "Lloyd's List" (formerly "Lloyd's News"), a newspaper devoted to shipping intelligence, that was founded about 1735, probably by Lloyd, and has been published daily since 1800. The society retained the official title Lloyd's Coffee-House until 1871, when it was for the first time incorporated by act of Parliament, under its present shortened name. Its operations are so extensive and important that the name has been adopted by several continental associations for maritime and mercantile enterprises, the principal of which are the Austrian Lloyd at Trieste and the North German Lloyd at Bremen.

Lloyd's was then (in Anne's reign) in Lombard Street, and indeed to this day, on Lloyd's policies, is stated that this policy shall have the same effect as if issued in Lombard Street.

J. Ashton, Social Life in Reign of Queen Anne, I. 234.

Lloyd's agent, one of a class of agents, in nearly all parts of the world, acting for the committee of underwriters at Lloyd's, who transmit maritime information of all kinds, report disasters, etc. They are generally local merchants, shippers, or others concerned with maritime business.—Lloyd's bond. See bond.—Lloyd's Register, of British and Foreign Shipping, an annual work, published by an association of members of Lloyd's, containing the names of vessels alphabetically arranged, and ranked in different classes (as A1, etc.) according to their qualifications, their title to be in any class being determined by the report of surveyors, and by certain rules as to their construction, their state of repair, age, etc.

lo (lō), interj. [< ME. lo, loo, < AS. lā, a common interj. of surprise, calling, or mere greeting. Confusion of lā, ME. lo, with lō, ME. lōk, impv., look, is supposed to have given to its now usual implication of 'behold'; but the difference of form is too great to make any such confusion probable.] Look! see! behold! observe!—used to invoke or direct the particular attention of a person to some object or subject of interest.

Lo, ge lordes, what leute did by an emperoure of Rome, That was an vncrustens creature as clerkes syndeth in books. Piers Plowman (B), xl. 149.

Lo, Adam, in the felds of Damascene, With Goddes owen finger wrought was he. Chaucer, Monk's Tale, I. 17.

Why, lo you now, I have spoke to the purpose twice. Shak., W. T., I. 2. 105.

Lo² (lō), n. [From the well-known lines of Pope, "Lo! the poor Indian, whose untutored mind," etc. ("Essay on Man," l. 99), the word Lo being humorously taken as the name of "the poor Indian." A North American Indian. [Humorous, U. S.]

loa (lō'ä), n. A larval nematode worm infesting the eye; the larval stage of the eye-thread-worm, Malaria oculi.

loach (lōch), n. [Also loche; < F. loche = Sp. locha, loja, loach: origin unknown.] 1. A small European fish, Cobitis (Nemachilus) barbatula, Common Loach (Nemachilus barbatulus).

of the family Cobitidae; hence, any fish of that family. The common loach inhabits small clear streams, and is esteemed a delicacy. It is also called beardy. The spinous loach or groundling is a smaller species, Cobitis taenia.

The miller's thombe, the hiding loach, The perch, the ever-nibbling roach, W. Browne, Britannia's Pastorals, I. 1.

Scarcely a stone I left unturmed, being thoroughly skilled in the tricks of the loach. . . . For being gray-spotted, and clear to see through, . . . he will stay quite still where a streak of weed is in the rapid water, hoping to be overlooked. R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, vii.

2. A European fresh-water gadoid fish, the burbot or eel-pout, Lota maculosa. See cut under burbot.—3. A simpton. Nares.

And George redeemed his cloak, rode merrily to Oxford, having coin in his pocket, where this loach spares not for any expense. Joets of George Psalt.

load¹ (lōd), n. See lade¹.

load² (lōd), n. [< ME. lode, lode, a burden carried in a vehicle, lit. a carrying, a particular use of lode, a way, course, carrying: see lade¹. In the orig. sense the word is more commonly spelled lode, while in the later senses the exclusive spelling is load, and the word is now associated with lade¹.] 1. That which is carried; a burden laid on or placed in anything, or taken up, for conveyance; specifically, a suitable or customary burden; the amount or quantity that can be or usually is carried: as, a ship's load; a cart-load; wood and hay are often sold by the load.

Of stree [straw] first ther was leyd ful many a lode. Chaucer, Knight's Tale (ed. Morris), I. 3080.

Come, now towards Chertsey with your holy load. Shak., Rich. III., I. 2. 22.

Later in the fall, certain of the Count's vassals came to the river in one of the great boats of the Po, with a load of brush and corn-cobs for fuel. Hoselle, Venetian Life, vii.

2. That which is upborne or sustained; a burden; a weight resting on or in anything; as, a load of fruit on a tree; a load of learning in the mind.

What think you of a duchess? have you limbs To bear that load of title? Shak., Hen. VIII., II. 2. 23.

From their foundations loosening to and fro, They pluck'd the seated hills, with all their load. Milton, P. L., vi. 664.

Barth, on whose wide-spreading base The wretched Load is laid of Human Race. Congress, Tears of Ameryllis.

Llama.

Telepoda, family Camelidae, closely related to the camel of the Old World, but smaller, without a hump, and woolly-haired. Like the camel, it is known only in the state of domestication; it is supposed to

And all that freedom's highest aims can reach
Is but to lay proportion'd loads on each.

Goldsmith, Traveller, l. 374.

Especially—3. That which is hard to be sustained or endured; an oppressive or grievous burden: as, a load of debt; a load of guilt.

Who hast of sorrow thy full load besides.

Milton, S. A., l. 214.

Sin doth not lie like a heavy weight upon their backs, so that they feel the load of it.

Stillinger, Sermons, II. iii.

Men who prefer any load of infamy, however great, to any pressure of taxation, however light.

Sydney Smith, American Debts. (Bartlett.)

4. The charge of a firearm: as, a load of buckshot.—5. A quantity of strong drink imbibed, or sometimes of food taken, that oppresses, or is more than can be borne comfortably or with propriety: as, he went home late with a load on. [Slang.]

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought till they have laid all their care to rest with a bottle.

Shir R. L. Excerpt.

6. A unit of measure or weight. By the statute of Edward I., de ponderibus et mensuris, a load (carrus) of lead is 1,500 pounds, and sometimes 168 stone, and in the Peak, 80 fathoms or 2,100 pounds, and of wheat the same. By statutes of George I., a load of wood is 50 cubic feet, and a load of hay 2,016 pounds. By a statute of 27 George III., a load of burthen is 68 bundles. Other loads are merely customary. Dr. Young says a load of wheat is 40 bushels; of earth or gravel, 1 cubic yard; of lime, 28 bushels; of oak-bark, 5,040 pounds; of sand, 36 bushels. A load of lead ore in Derbyshire is 9 dishes of from 14 to 16 pints each.

7. In mech., the pressure upon any part or the whole of a structure. It consists of the internal load, or permanent load, the weight of the part itself and its fixed attachments, and the external load, arising from pressures of other bodies upon its surface. (The word is not properly used to signify a quantity of weight.)

A structure has to support both its own weight and also any load that may be placed upon it. Thus a railway bridge must at all times sustain what is called the permanent load, and frequently, of course, the weight of one or more trains.

R. S. Ball, Exper. Mechanica, p. 172.

To lay on load! See lay, -Syn. 1 and 2. Freight, cargo, lading.—3. Pressure, dead-weight, incumbrance, clog.

*load*² (lôd'), v. [*load*², n.; in part a var. of the original verb lade, in imitation of the noun *load*²: see lade.] I. trans. 1. To lay a burden on; charge with a load; furnish with lading or cargo; lade: as, to load a camel or a horse; to load a cart or wagon. [The past participle laden is obsolete.]

Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the weary beast.

Isa. xvi. 1.

By turns they oase the laden swarms, or drive
The drone, a lazy insect, from their hive.

Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

2. To lay as a burden; place upon or in something for conveyance: as, to load cotton on a lighter; to load cargo.

There was no talk, no hope, no works, but dig gold, wash gold, refine gold, loads gold.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's True Travels, l. 160.

3. To weigh down; impose something upon, either good or bad; pile; heap; encumber or oppress: with with: as, to load the stomach with sweets; to load the memory with details.

Those honours deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house.

Shak., Macbeth, l. 6. 17.

Essex loaded Bacon with benefits, and never thought that he had done enough.

Macaulay, Lord Bacon.

4. To make heavy by something added or appended; charge, as with something extraneous: as, to load a whip; to load dice.

He has a conscience,
A cruel stinging one, I warrant him,
A loaden one.

Fletcher, Loyal Subject, v. 1.

At the ripe age of fourteen years I bought a certain odd-gal, got a friend to load it.

R. L. Stevenson, A Penny Plain, 2d Coloured.

5. To make heavy, as a liquid; especially, to falsify, as wine, by mixing with it distilled liquor of some sort, usually accompanied with sugar and other ingredients, for the purpose of making a thin wine appear heavy and full-bodied; also, to increase the weight of, as paper, or textile fabrics, by the addition of clay, starch, or other extrinsic matter.

It is an intolerable nuisance to have to dress, and go out seven or eight miles to cold entries, and loaded claret, and sweet port.

Thackeray, Lovell the Widower, iii.

If the paper is to be loaded—that is, adulterated with clay or cheap fibres—these are added in the beater as the fibre swirls round and round.

Harper's Mag., LXXV. 130.

6. To place a charge in; charge, as a gun with powder and shot.

Many a Whig that day loaded his musket with a dollar out into slugs.

Scott, Old Mortality, xvi.

The sportsman should be careful . . . to ascertain the charge best suited to his weapon, and to have his cartridges so loaded.

Encyc. Brit., XXI. 885.

7. In painting: (a) To mix with white: said of a pigment which in this way is made more solid and opaque. (b) To paint heavily; apply (color) in solid opaque masses.

Names of white enamel are loaded upon the surface, with a view to further treatment.

Art Jour., N. S., XI. 10.

Deck-loading Act, a British statute of 1842 (5 Vict., sess. 2, c. 47) forbidding the loading of cargoes of timber on the decks of certain classes of ships.—Loaded dice. See die.—To load one's self, on the stock-exchange, to buy heavily of stock. See unload.

II. intrans. 1. To put or take on a load or charge: often with up: as, the travelers loaded and started early; the ship loaded up with a miscellaneous cargo.—2. To charge a gun or guns: as, the troops loaded and fired rapidly. Steady they load, steady they fire, moving right onward still.

T. O. Davis, Fontenoy.

3. To become loaded or burdened; clog up: as, oysters are apt to load with sand.

*loaded*¹, a. An obsolete variant of loaded.

*loaded*² (lô'ded), p. a. 1. Coated with external growths, as shells; clogged up: said of oysters. [Rhode Island.]—2. Full of liquor; drunk. [Slang.]

loader (lô'dér), n. 1. One who or that which loads: as, a truck-loader. Specifically—(a) A little machine for loading shells or cartridges for a breech-loading shot-gun; a loading-machine. (b) In agri., etc., any device for laying a load upon a wagon, sled, or cart: as, a hay-loader, a log-loader, etc.

2. A red-finned herring. [Prov. Eng.]—3. A term in dicing, of uncertain meaning.

Every vice is a loader; but that [lust] is a ten.

Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, vi., Arg.

loading (lô'ding), n. [Verbal n. of *load*², v.]

1. The act of putting on a load.—2. A cargo; a burden; lading; also, anything that makes part of a load.—3. Anything that is added to a substance or material in order to give it weight or body: as, the China clay or pearl-white used for loading note-paper.—4. In art, a heavy charge of opaque color. See *load*², v. t., 7.

Loading is the use of opaque colour in heavy masses which actually protrude from the canvas and themselves catch the light, as the mountains do on the moon.

P. G. Hamerton, Graphic Arts, p. 304.

5. In insurance, that part of the charge or premium on a policy which constitutes its share of the expenses of management.

The terms loading and "margin" have come to bear a somewhat extended meaning. They are now used to designate the difference between the premiums payable by the assured and the net premiums deduced from any table that may be employed for the time.

Encyc. Brit., XIII. 178.

loading (lô'ding), p. a. Made so as to be loaded (in the way specified): as, a breech-loading or a muzzle-loading gun.

loading-bar (lô'ding-bär), n. In gun., a bar of iron about two feet long, made with a ring at one end and a screw at the other, for carrying and loading shells. Also called carrying-bar.

loading-funnel (lô'ding-fun'el), n. See funnel.

loading-machine (lô'ding-mä-shén'), n. A machine for loading cartridge-shells. It has a revolving wheel on which the shells are fed in; the requisite amount of powder is admitted to each shell from the powder-pan by means of a funnel above, and the bullet or charge of shot is forced into the neck of each shell as the wheel advances in its revolution.

loading-plug (lô'ding-plug), n. A rammer for loading shells and extracting caps from spent capsules.

loading-tongs (lô'ding-tóngz), n. sing. and pl. In gun., a pair of tongs used to set the shell home in a siege-howitzer.

loading-tray (lô'ding-trä), n. In milit. engin., a stout iron support upon which a heavy shot or shell is placed, and by suitable mechanism brought into the opening in the breech of a large breech-loading gun, as an assistance in charging the gun.

load-line (lôd'lin), n. [Appar. < *load*² + *line*²; but perhaps < *load*¹ = *lade*¹ + *line*².] Naut., a line drawn on the side of a vessel to show the depth to which a suitable or allowable load will cause her to sink in the water. Among English seamen known as Plimsoll's mark. See mark.

There shall be a load-line or conspicuous mark on each vessel, showing the depth of loading and of surplus buoyancy.

R. J. Hinton, Eng. Radical Leaders, p. 307.

Nor did it occur to the "practical" politicians who provided a compulsory load-line for merchant vessels, that the pressure of ship-owners' interests would habitually cause the putting of the load-line at the very highest limit, and that from precedent to precedent, tending ever in the same direction, the load-line would gradually rise in the better class of ships.

H. Spencer, Man vs. State, p. 25.

*loadman*¹, n. See lodeman.

*loadman*² (lôd'män), n. A carter. Halliwell.

loadmanage, n. See lodemanage.

load-penny (lôd'pen'i), n. A market toll or tax anciently levied on loads in the towns of England for public revenue.

The gift of its [Worcester's] market-dues, wain-shilling and load-penny, was the costliest among the many boons which Ethelred and Athelstan showered on Malpas Wertrith.

J. R. Green, Conq. of Eng., ix.

loadsmant, n. See lodeman.

loadstar, n. See lodestar.

loadstone, n. See lodestone.

loadum (lô'dum), n. [Appar. for load 'em: see quot. from Florio.] An old game at cards.

Cárice l'asino [It., load the ass], a play at cards which we call lodum.

For to converse with Scandal is to play Losing Loadum; you must lose a good Name to him, before you can win it for yourself.

Congress, Love for Love, l. 11.

Now some at cards and dice do play
Their money and their time away;
At loadum, cribbage, and all-four.

Poor Robin (1785). (Nares.)

*loaf*¹ (lôf'), n.; pl. loaves (lôvz). [ME. loaf, loof (pl. loaves), < AS. hlaf, bread, a loaf of bread, = OHG. hlaiba, laiba, laib, leip, MHG. leip, G. laib = Isel. hleifr = OSw. lev = Dan. lev = Goth. hlaifs, hlaibe, bread: the common Teut. term for 'bread,' older than the word bread. The Lith. klepas, Lett. klaipus, bread, are prob. < *OBulg. khlēbъ = Russ. khlēbъ, bread, and these Slav. forms with Finn. leipa, Estonian leip, bread, are prob. from the OTeut. The word loaf appears disguised in the orig. compounds Lammus and prob. lord and lady.] A portion of bread baked in one lump or mass; a regularly shaped or molded mass of bread; hence, any shaped or molded mass of cake, sugar, or the like.

The enemy of Helle . . . seyde Dic ut lapides isti panes fiant: that is to seye, Sey that these stones be made Loaves.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 98.

There shall be in England seven halfpenny loaves sold for a penny.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., iv. 2. 72.

A hot smoking loaf of rye-and-Indian bread.

H. B. Stowe, Oldtown, p. 190.

Holy loaf. (a) In the Gr. Ch., same as holy lamb. See lamb. (b) In the medieval ch. in England, the blessed bread; a eulogia.

The Parishioners of every Parish shall offer every Sunday, at the time of the Offertory, the just value and price of the holy loaf . . . to the use of their Pastors and Curates, and that in such order and course as they were wont to find and pay the said holy loaf.

Book of Common Prayer (1549) (rubric).

Loaded lettuce, headed lettuce.

Lactuca crepus (L.), loafed or headed lettice.

Nomenclator (1885). (Nares.)

Loaves and fishes, figuratively, temporal benefits, as money or office: in allusion to the miraculous loaves and fishes distributed by Christ to the multitude who followed him, and his words (John vi. 26), "Ye seek me, not because ye saw the miracles, but because ye did eat of the loaves, and were filled."

The consequence must be, that although every one of these four orders [of the Florentine government] must be divided at once into factions for the loaves and fishes, yet the nobility, by their superior influence in elections, would have the whole power.

J. Adams, Works, v. 12.

*loaf*² (lôf'), v. [Appar. first in the noun loafer (< G. läufer = E. waper, loper); < G. laufen, dial. lofen = D. loopen = E. leap], run, wander or lounge about: see *leap*¹, *lope*¹.] I. intrans. To idle away one's time; lounge; dawdle; play the vagabond; stroll idly and without purpose.

To loaf: this, I think, is unquestionably German. Laufen is pronounced lofen in some parts of Germany, and I once heard one German student say to another "Ich loaf [lofe] hier bis du wiederkehrst," and he began to saunter up and down—in short, to loaf.

Lowell, Biglow Papers, 2d ser., Int.

Shoelacks are compelled to a great deal of unavoidable loafing; but certainly this one loafed rather energetically, for he was not and frantic in his play.

H. Kingsley, Ravenshoe, xii. (Devon.)

I loafs and invite my Soul;
I lean and loafs at my ease, observing a spear of summer grass.

Walt Whitman, Leaves of Grass, p. 26.

How can you go down to the beach by yourself amongst all those loafing vagabonds, who would pick your pocket or throw stones at you? W. Black, Princess of Thule, xiv.

II. trans. To pass or spend in idleness, as time; spend lazily; dawdle: with away: as, to loaf away whole days.

The Senate has loafed away the week in very gentlemanly style. New York Commercial Advertiser, Dec., 1848.

loafer (lô'fer), n. [See *loaf*².] An idle man, lounge, or aimless stroller, of whatever social condition; specifically, one who is too lazy to work or pursue regular business, and lounges about, depending upon chance or disreputable means for subsistence.

"The thought is not new to me; I have read Washington Irving." "Prince of intellectual loafers," said Grayhurst.

loaferish (lō'fēr-ish), a. [< loafer + -ish.] Of or pertaining to a loafer; like or characteristic of a loafer.

Four pleasant ruffians in the loaferish postures which they have learned as fawning waiting for jobs.

Huvels, Venetian Life, xix.

loaf-sugar (lōf'shūg'yr), n. Sugar refined and molded into a conical mass.

loam (lōm), n. [Early mod. E. also lome; also dial. lame, lūm; < ME. lom*, lam, < AS. lām = OS. lōmo, leimo = D. loem = MLG. LG. lom = OHG. leimo, MHG. leime, leim, G. leim, but usually lehm (after LG.), loam, clay; akin to AS. lūn, etc., line, and to L. limus, mud; see lime.] 1. A soil consisting of a natural mixture of clay and sand, the latter being present in sufficient quantity to overcome the tendency of the clay to form a coherent mass. That which is ordinarily called loam is fine-grained, homogeneous, and "light"—that is, not densely compacted together. Carbonate of lime is usually present in small quantity, and also organic matter. See marl, soil, and loam.

At the higher and farther sides of those upper ovens are trenches of loam.

Sandys, Travels, p. 98.

The soil was a dark brown loam, and very rich.

B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 61.

2. In founding, a mixture of sand, clay, sawdust, straw, etc., used in making the molds for castings. The compound must be plastic when wet, and hard, air-tight, and able to resist high temperatures when dry. Specifically called casting-loam.

3. A vessel of clay; an earthen vessel.

And so into the loams of meth and tube of brine and other liquor he bestowed the parts of the dead carcasses of his brother's servants.

Holmes, Hist. Eng., vii. 7.

Loam-and-sand core. See core.

loam (lōm), v. t. [< loam, n.] To cover or coat with loam; clay.

With the ashes of bones tempered with oil, Camels hairs, and a clay they have, they loam them so well that no weather will pierce them.

Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 82.

The joint ends and girders, which he in the walls, must be loamed all over to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar.

F. Mason, Mechanical Exercises.

loam-beater (lōm'bē'tēr), n. In foundry-work, an instrument for compacting loam in loam-molding; a molder's rammer.

loam-board (lōm'bōrd), n. A foundry's tool and templet used in making cores of loam. It is a board out to the shape of the core, and is used both to hold a supply of loam for the operation, and as an aid in turning the dried core down to the exact shape. Also called striker.

loam-cake (lōm'kāk), n. In foundry-work, a cake, plate, or disk of compacted loam used to cover in a loam-mold. It is provided with holes or gates through which the molten metal enters the mold, and with other holes or vents for free exit of air from the mold.

loam-mold (lōm'mōld), n. A mold made from casting-loam. Such molds are used for castings of iron and brass.

loam-molding (lōm'mōl'ding), n. In foundry-work, the making of loam-molds in general. The term is used especially of the act of striking up the surfaces of molds by means of templets controlled by parallel guides, or, in case the surfaces are cylindrical, by a central pivot and radial arms, to which the templets are attached. Sometimes cores are formed on a barrel or central cylinder, and then turned on the barrel by means of a tool resting on the loam-board.

loam-plate (lōm'plāt), n. In foundry-work, a flat ring or plate of cast-iron, used in constructing a loam-mold, one or more of which are used to support and clamp together the brickwork which supports the softer parts of the mold.

loam-work (lōm'wērk), n. In foundries, the processes of making loam-molds, and casting iron, brass, etc., in them. Very fine castings are obtained by these processes.

loamy (lō'mi), a. [< loam + -y.] 1. Consisting of loam; of the nature of or resembling loam: as, loamy soil.

And if it want binding, [mix] a little loamy earth.

Bulfinch, Calendarium Hortense, May.

2. Damp. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]

loan (lōn), n. [< ME. lone, lane, lan, < AS. lān (in comp. lānlānd, for usual lānlānd), usually lān, a loan, grant, gift, lāf, = OFries. lōn = D. leen, a grant, lief, = MLG. LG. lān = OHG. lāhan, MHG. lāhen, G. lehen, lehn, a lief, = Icel. lān, a loan, lān, a lief, = Dan. lān = Sw. lān, a loan (prob. = Skt. rekṣas, estate, wealth), akin to AS. lāhan, lān = OHG. lāhan, MHG. lāhen, G. lehen = Icel. lā = Goth. leihwan, lend, orig. 'leave,' = Ir. leicim, leave, = Lith. lėti, leave behind (cf. OBulg. otī-letī, remainder), = L. linguere (perf. liqui, pp. notus*), leave, also in comp. relinguere, leave behind, = Gr. λεπτεν, λερεν, leave, = Skt. √ rich, leave, let go, give up. Hence ult. lend. From the L. verb (linguere) are ult. E. delinquent, relinquish, relic, reliot, reliquary, derelict, etc., and from the same root license, licit, illicit, leisure, etc. From the Gr. verb (leisw) are ult. E. ellipse, ellipsis, words in lypo, etc.] 1. A grant; gift; reward.

They may now, God be thanked of his loans! / Maken hir jubilee, and walke allone.

Chaucer, C. T. (Summoner's Tale), l. 11, 908 (ed. Gilman).

2. That which is lent; anything furnished on condition of the future return of it, or of the delivery of an equivalent in kind; especially, a sum of money lent at interest.

I love hym that this lone has lente, / For he may stynte oore stryve.

And fende vs fro alle ille. York Plays, p. 58.

Advantaging their loan with interest / Of ten times double gain of happiness.

Shak., Rich. III., iv. 4. 332.

What's er is double the Strange and Needy one, / Is not a gift (indeed), but 'tis a Loan.

A Loan to God, who payes with interest.

Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II, The Vocation.

The person whom you favoured with a loan, if he be a good man, will think himself in your debt after he has paid you.

Steele, Spectator, No. 346.

3. The act of lending or the condition of being lent; a lending: as, to arrange a loan.

I do not doubt / To find, at some place I shall come at, arms / On loan, or else for pledge.

Tennyson, Geraint.

[In civil law, when the loan was made of things which could be returned only by their material equivalent, it was called mutuum; when made of things which could be returned in the identical form, it was called commodatum.]

4. Permission to use; grant of the use: as, a loan of credit.—Gratuitous loan, in law, same as commodate.—Loan and trust company. See banks, 4. — Public loan, money borrowed by, or the lending of money to, the state at a fixed rate of interest.

loan (lōn), v. [< loan, n.] The older verb, from the same noun in its older form, is lend, q. v.] 1. trans. To lend. [An objectionable use, rare in Great Britain.]

Loan for lend, with which we have hitherto been blackened, I must resort upon the mother island, for it appears so long ago as in "Albion's England."

Lovell, Biglow Papers, 2d ser., Int.

The practice of loaning money. Westminster Rev.

II. intrans. To lend money or other property; make a loan. [U. S.] loan (lōn), n. [ME. lone, a var. of lane, > E. lane: see lane.] 1. A lane. [Scotch and prov. Eng.]

The Captain of Bewcastle, and Jephtha's John, / Coming down by the foot steps of Catwiddie's loam, / Fray of Suport (Child's Ballads, VI. 130).

And darker gloaming brought the night: . . .

The kye stood rowlin' 't the loam.

Burns, The Two Dogs.

2. An open space between fields of corn, left untilled as a passage for cattle; hence, a place near a village for milking cows. Also loaning. [Scotch and New Eng.]

loanable (lōn'ā-bl), a. [< loan + -able.] Capable of being loaned; specifically, capable of being, or intended to be, loaned out at interest.

Free capital, loanable for a certain interval, is equally available for all classes of industry.

Jevons, Pol. Econ. (2d ed.), Pref., p. 55.

This . . . is distinctly visible among powerful classes in the North-Eastern States, which are the great possessors of loanable capital.

N. A. Rev., CXIII. 214.

loaning (lō'ning), n. [< loan + -ing.] Same as loan, 2.

Ye might hae heard him a mile down the wind— / he routed like a cow in a fremd [strange] loaning.

Scott, Old Mortality, xiv.

loan-office (lōn'ōf'is), n. 1. A public office at which loans are made or arranged.—2. A pawnshop, or pawnbroker's establishment.

loan-word (lōn'wērd), n. [< loan + word; an imperfect adaptation of G. lehnwort, a 'lend-word,' < lehen, lend (see lend and loan), + wort, word.] A borrowed word; a word taken into one language from another. [Rare.]

In the 15th century it [s] crept in from the French, and its use is even now pretty nearly restricted to foreign loan words, as zebulon, zedekiah, nigam, rest, etc.

Jeanes Taylor, The Alphabet, II. 142.

Loase (lō'a-sj), n. [NL., of S. Amer. origin.] A genus of dicotyledonous polypetalous herbs, of the natural order Loaseae, characterized by either opposite or alternate leaves and a capsule three- or five-valved at the apex, rarely twisted. The flowers are pentamerous, with succulent petals, two to five scales, and ten filiform abortive stamens, besides numerous perfect ones. There are about 50 species, growing throughout tropical America, with the exception of northern Brazil and Guiana.

Loaseae (lō'a-sj-sj), n. pl. [NL., < Loase + -ae.] A synonym of Loaseae, still in common use.

loaseaceous (lō'a-sj-shi-us), a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the order Loaseae.

loased (lō'a-sj), n. A plant of the order Loaseae; in the plural, the order. Lindley.

Loaseae (lō'a-sj-sj), n. pl. [NL. (A. L. de Jussieu, 1804), < Loase + -ae.] An order of dicotyledonous plants composed of 10 genera and about 100 species, confined, with one exception, to warm and tropical America. They are herbaceous plants, often climbing, and usually covered with bristly hairs, secreting an acrid juice. The flowers are perfect and regular with an adherent calyx, a four- or five-parted corolla, an indefinite number of stamens, and usually a one-celled ovary with a single filiform style. From their stinging properties, many are known as Chick nittles.

loath, loth (lōth), a. and n. [< ME. loth, looth, lath, < AS. lāth, causing evil, evil, hateful, odious, grievous, also bearing hate, hostile, = OS. lāth, lād = OFries. lāth, lād = D. leed = MLG. lēt, leit = OHG. leid, hateful, painful, hostile, MHG. leit, G. leid, hateful, painful, = Icel. leidir = Sw. Dan. lād, hateful, odious (cf. It. laido = Sp. OPg. laido = Pr. lāt = F. laid, hateful, odious, < G.); as a noun (neut. of the adj.), AS. lāth, evil, wrong, = D. leed, evil, wrong, = MLG. lēt, leit = OHG. MHG. G. leid, evil, pain, = Dan. lede = Sw. leda, disgust, loathing, tedium; prob. from the verb represented by OHG. lidan, MHG. liden, G. leiden, suffer, supposed to be connected with OHG. lidan = AS. līhan = Goth. leihan, go, travel: see lade, lead.] The spelling loth is rather more common than loath in the adj.; but loath is common and is more in accordance with analogy (cf. oath), while derivatives of the verb, loathe, etc., are always spelled with oa. The forms are therefore more conveniently put together.] I. a. 1. Hateful; disliked; detested.

Alas! my lyff me is full loth, / I lyffe ouere lange this lare to lere.

York Plays, p. 50.

Men seyn right thus, "Alwey the nye slye / Maketh the lerre leere to be loth."

Chaucer, Miller's Tale, l. 307.

2. Feeling extreme unwillingness or aversion; very unwilling; reluctant; averse.

"My right lady," quod this woful man, / "Whom I moost drede, and love as I best kan, / And lothest were of al this world displeas."

Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, l. 585.

Loth he was to falsen his promyse of couenaunt.

Martin (E. E. T. S.), III. 435.

They would be loth to set earthly things, wealth or honour, before the wisdom of salvation. Milton, True Religion.

Thus aged men, full loth and slow,

The vanities of life forgo. Scott, Rokeby, v. 1.

Lief or loath. See loaf.

II. n. Evil; harm; injury.

Mele and drynke I gaf hem bothe, / And bad hem kepe hem ay fro lothe.

Cursor Mundi, MS. Coll. Trin. Cantab. l. 81. (Hallwell.)

loathe (lōth), v.; pret. and pp. loathed, pp. loathing. [< ME. lothen, < AS. lāthan = OS. lāthōn = OHG. leidōn, be evil, hateful, lathan, hate (= OS. a-lathan, disgust, = OHG. leidan, hate, = Icel. leidha, disgust), disgust, < lāth, hateful, loath: see loath, a.] I. intrans. 1. To be hateful or loathed; excite nausea, disgust, or abhorrence.

Where medicines loathe, it irks men to be healed.

Chapman, Byron's Tragedy, iv. 1.

2. To feel nausea, disgust, or abhorrence.

"This is more vile," he made reply,

"To breathe and loathe, to live and sigh."

Tennyson, Two Voices.

II. trans. 1. To dislike greatly; hate; abhor.

Herby satan saved his credit, who loves to tell lies, / but loathes to be taken in them.

Fuller, Church Hist., VI. iv. 2.

All affectation. 'Tis my perfect scorn;

Object of my implacable disgust.

Compter, Task, II. 416.

2. To cause to dislike or avoid; disgust.

[They] loathe men from reading by their covert, slanderous reproaches of the Scriptures.

Abp. Parker.

How heartily he serves me! his face loathes one, / But look upon his care, who would not love him?

Middleton, Changeling, v. 1.

3. To feel disgust at; especially, to have an extreme aversion to, as food or drink.

Gladly gaze thit tiths & thin offryngs bothe, / The poore & the beedered, like thou not lothe.

Rubens Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 37.

Each country hath observed their own peculiar customs in this food, some loathing that which others esteem dainty.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 28.

Loathing the honey'd cakes, I long for bread.

Conway.

loath (lō'wē), n. One who loathes or abhors. loathful (lōw'fūl), a. [Formerly also lothful; < ME. lothful (?), lothful; < loath + -ful.] 1. Full of loathing; abhorring; hating.

Which when he did with loathful eyes behold,
He would no more endure.

Spenser, Mother Hub. Tale, l. 1212.

2. Exciting loathing or disgust; loathsomeness; hateful. [Now rare.]

And loathful idleness he doth detest.

The canker worms of everie gentle breast.

Spenser, Mother Hub. Tale, l. 734.

The surface of the upper portion of the body (of a gigantic earthworm) shows a bright green color, of variable intensity, but otherwise it is a loathful animal.

Science, IV. 422.

loathing (lō'wēng), n. [< ME. lothing; verbal n. of loathe, v.] Extreme disgust; abhorrence.

A surfeit of the sweetest things

The deepest loathing to the stomach brings.

Shak., M. N. D., II. 2. 123.

loathing (lō'wēng-lī), adv. [< loathing + -ly.] With loathing or extreme disgust or abhorrence.

loathliness (lōw'li-nes), n. [Formerly also loathliness; < loathy + -ness.] The quality of being loathly; loathsomeness.

The beauty of virtue, and the deformity and loathliness of vice.

Sir T. Rhyol, The Governour, III. 24.

The more ill savour and loathliness we can find in our bosom sins, the nearer we come to the purity of that Holy One of Israel, our Blessed Redeemer.

Rp. Hall, Remains, p. 183. (Latham.)

loathly (lōw'li), a. [Formerly also lothy; dial. also loathy, lothy; < ME. lothli, lothyli, lothlich, lothelich, lodli, lodlich, etc., < AS. lōthlic, hateful, < lōth, hateful, + -lic, E. -ly.] Loathsome; disgusting. [Archaic.]

Thou art so loathly and so cold also.

Chaucer, Wife of Bath's Tale, l. 242.

Her face most fowle and filthy was to see,

With squinted eyes contrarie wayes intended,

And loathly mouth, unmeets a mouth to be.

Spenser, F. Q., IV. 1. 27.

The loathly toad out of his hole doth crawl.

Drayton, Polyolbon, II. 165.

loathly (lōw'li), adv. [Formerly also lothy; < ME. lothy, lothy, < AS. lōthlic, hatefully, < lōthlic, hateful; see loathy, a. In def. 2, modern, < loath + -ly.] 1. In a loathsome manner; disgustingly.

He shal him travells day and night

And lothy his body drig.

Cursor Mundi, MS. Coll. Trin. Cantab. f. 44. (Halliwell.)

So loathly wretched a street as this same Cowgate.

The Atlantic, III. 323.

2. Unwillingly; reluctantly.

Private tongues, of kinsmen and allies,

Inspired with comforts, lothy are endured.

H. Jonson, Sejanus, III. 1.

This shows that you from nature loathly stray.

Donna.

loathness (lōth'nes), n. [< ME. lothnes, loithnes; < loath + -ness.] The state of being loath; unwillingness; reluctance.

Thof it be laifull to ladys and other les women, get it ledis vnto loithness and vile werkes.

Destruction of Troy (R. E. T. S.), l. 2949.

And the fair soul herself

Weigh'd between loithness and obedience, at Which end o' the beam should bow.

Shak., Tempest, II. l. 130.

After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and loithness to speak.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

loathsomeness (lōw'sūm-nes), a. [< ME. loithsum; < loath + -some.] Such as to cause loathing or excite disgust; disgusting; odious; detestable.

Thou canst he her persuade to leave that lewd

And loithsum life.

Spenser, F. Q., III. x. 51.

But this mole-eyed, dragon-tailed abomination (a crocodile) . . . was utterly loithsum.

G. W. Currie, Nile Notes of a Howadji, xv.

loathsomely (lōw'sūm-lī), adv. [< loathsomeness + -ly.] In a loathsomeness manner; disgustingly.

loathsomeness (lōw'sūm-nes), n. [< loathsomeness + -ness.] The quality of being loathsomeness, or of exciting strong dislike or disgust.

Heed must be taken that such rules or sentences be choicely made, and not often used, least excessive broad loathsomeness.

Pattenham, Arts of Eng. Poets, p. 197.

loathy (lō'wli), a. [< loath + -y. Cf. loathy, a.] Loathsome. [Obsolete or archaic.]

The loathy floor of liquid mud lay bare beneath the mangrove forest.

Kingsley, Westward Ho, p. 331.

lobes, n. Plural of leaf.

lob (lob), n. [Also lobb; < ME. lobbe (in comp. lobbe-belling); perhaps < W. lob, a dull, unwieldy fellow. Cf. AS. lobbe, a spider (see lop); Icel. lobbi, a shaggy long-haired dog. Cf. also looby, lubber.] 1. A dull, sluggish person; a lout. [Obsolete or archaic.]

Farewell, thou lob of spirits [Puck]; I'll be gone.

Shak., M. N. D., II. l. 16.

But as the drone the honey hive doth rob,

With woorthy books so deals this idle lob.

Gascoigne, A Remembrance.

This is the wonted way for quacks and cheats to gull country lobes. Sp. Gauden, And-Bal-Berith (1661), p. 12.

2. The last person in a race. [Prov. Eng.]—3. Something thick and lumpy; a lump.—4. A thick, soft mixture. See the quotation, and compare lobbily.

Before the yeast is placed in the tun (in brewing), it is mixed with a small quantity of wort, and left in a warm place until fermentation commences, when the mixture, termed lobb, may be added to the gyle in the tun.

Spence, Ensay. Manuf., I. 402.

5. A lobworm.—6. The pollack.

The lob alluded to in the statute of Herringes (31 Edward III., A. D. 1357) evidently meant this fish.

Day, Fishes of Great Britain, I. 297.

7. The coalfish.—8. [< lob, v.] In cricket, a low slow ball.—9. In lawn-tennis, a play by which one of the contestants knocks the ball over the head of his opponent into the back part of the court.—Lob lie-by-the-fire. See the quotation.

Lob lie-by-the-fire—the Lubber-Rend, as Milton calls him—is a rough kind of Brownie or House Elf, supposed to haunt some north-country homesteads, where he does the work of the farm-labourers, for no grander wages than "to earn his cream-howl duly set."

It was said that a Lob lie-by-the-fire once haunted the little old hall at Lingborough.

Mrs. J. H. Bury, Lob lie-by-the-fire, Int.

lob (lob), v.; pret. and pp. lobbed, ppr. lobbing. [< lob, n.] 1. trans. To throw (a lump or ball, etc.); toss gently or with a slow movement; specifically, in lawn-tennis, to strike (the ball) over the head of one's opponent into the back part of the court.

Suppose . . . that firing with reduced charges is required, that shall are being lobbed from behind a parapet at high angles into a work.

Ensay. Brk., XI. 513.

2. To kick. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. intrans. To be tossed with a slow movement, as a cricket-ball or a shot.

Great escapes and some wounds from lobbing round-shot already.

W. H. Russell, Diary in India, I. 303.

lob (lob), v.; pret. and pp. lobbed, ppr. lobbing. [Var. of lob.] 1. intrans. To hang down; drop or droop.

II. trans. To hang wearily or languidly; allow to drop or droop.

And their poor jades

Lob down their heads. Shak., Hen. V., IV. 2. 47.

lobar (lō'bār), a. [< lobe + -ar.] Of or pertaining to a lobe, as of the brain or lungs: as, lobar emphysema.

In the cases of lobar and of lobular pneumonia that I have examined, none of the urines have turned red.

Lancet, No. 3427, p. 830.

Lobar pneumonia. See pneumonia.

lobata (lō-bā'tā), n. pl. [NL, neut. pl. of lobatus, lobed; see lobate.] A division, ordinal or subordinal, of the class or order Ctenophora, including those comb-bearing hydroids or ctenophorans which have a pair of oral lobes: distinguished from Tentata and Saccata. The lobata are composed of such forms as Eurhamphæa, Bolina, Mnemisa, Calymma, and Ocyrod.

lobate (lō'bāt), a. [< NL. lobatus, lobed, < lobus, a lobe; see lobe.] 1. Having a lobe or lobes; lobated; lobose; lobed; lobulate: as, a lobate leaf; a lobate fin or foot; a lobate rhizopod or ctenophoran.—2. Having the form of a lobe: as, a lobate part or process.—Lobate fin, in lōth. See the quotation.

The numerous dermal fin-rays [of Polypterus] . . . are connected with the rounded periphery of the broad and elongated disk formed by the skeleton of the fin; and the scaly integument is continued to the basis of the fin-rays, which thus seem to fringe a lobe of the integument. Hence the fin is said to be lobate.

Huxley, Anat. Vert., p. 123.

Lobate foot, in ornith., a bird's foot of which the toes are separately lobed, as in the coot, phalarope, or grebe.

lobated (lō'bāt-ed), a. Same as lobate.

lobately (lō'bāt-lī), adv. [< lobate + -ly.] In lob, in such a manner as to form lobes.—Lobately areolate, in bot., having crenatures or indentations so deep as to form a series of small lobes.

lobation (lō-bā'shon), n. [< lobate + -ion.] The formation of lobes; the act or process of forming or dividing into lobes; the state of being lobed.

Lobation is usually associated with semipalmation, as is well seen in the grebe. In the snipe-like phalarope, lobation is present as a modification of a foot otherwise quite cursorial. The most emphatic cases of lobation are those in which each joint of the toes has its own flap.

Cowles, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 121.

lobb (lob), n. See lob.

lobber (lob'er), v. 4. Same as lopper. [Local, U. S.]

lobbing (lob'ing), n. [Verbal n. of lob, v.] Tumult; uproar.

What a lobbing maketh thou,

With a twenty devil!

Marriage of Wit and Wisdom (1870). (Halliwell.)

lobbish, a. [< lob + -ish.] Clownish; lubberish.

Their lobbish guard, who all night had kept themselves awake with prating how valiant deeds they had done when they ran away, . . . awaked them.

Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, IV.

lobby (lob'i), n.; pl. lobbies (-iz). [*< OF. lobie, < ML. lobba, lobium, lauba, a portico, covered way, gallery, < OHG. lobā, lobp, MHG. lobbe, G. laube, an arbor, < OHG. lobb, MHG. lobp, G. laub = E. leaf, q.v. Cf. ledge and lower, from the same source.] 1. An inclosed space surrounding or communicating with one or more apartments. (a) A small hall or waiting-room serving as the entrance into a principal apartment, where there is a considerable space between such apartment and a portico or vestibule; especially, such a hall or anteroom in a theater or adjacent to a legislative or audience chamber.

If you find him not within this month, you shall nose him as you go up the stairs into the lobby.

Shak., Hamlet, IV. 3. 20.

Go, bunk about, and run thyself into the next great man's lobby.

Fletcher, Plain Dealer, III. 1.

(b) Naut., an apartment immediately before the captain's cabin.

2. Persons who occupy or resort to the lobby or the approaches to a legislative chamber for the purpose of transacting business with the members, and especially of influencing their official action or votes. [U. S.]

lobby (lob'i), v.; pret. and pp. lobbed, ppr. lobbing. [< lobby, n.] 1. intrans. To frequent the lobby of a legislature or other deliberative body for the purpose of influencing the official action of members; solicit votes from members, whether in the lobby or elsewhere. [U. S.]

Lobbying should be made the object of incessant war and corrective enactment, until it is driven from legislative halls.

N. A. Rev., CXL. 511.

II. trans. To promote or carry by solicitation of legislative favor or votes: as, to lobby a measure through Congress. [U. S.]

lobbyist (lob'i-ist), n. [< lobby + -ist.] One who frequents the lobby or the precincts of a legislature or other deliberative assembly, with the view of influencing the votes of members. [U. S.]

But the arrangements of the committee system have produced and sustain the class of professional lobbyists, men, and women too, who make it their business to "see" members and procure, by persuasion, importunity, or the use of inducements, the passing of bills, public as well as private, which involve gain to their promoters.

J. Bryce, American Commonwealth, I. 154.

lobby-member (lob'i-mem'ber), n. A lobbyist; one who makes a business of influencing the action or votes of a legislature. [U. S.]

lob-coast, n. Same as lobcock.

Cares not a groate

For such a lob-coast.

The Wit of a Woman (1804). (Nares.)

lobcock (lob'kok), n. [< lob + cock, used as a diminutive.] A stupid, sluggish, inactive person; a lob.

Such a calfe, such an asse, such a blocke, . . . such a lobcock.

Udall, Roister Doister, III. 2.

lob-dotterel (lob'dot'er-el), n. A loutish fool.

Grouthead gnat-snappers, lob-dotterels, gaping change-lings.

Truquhart, tr. of Babelais, I. 23.

lobe (lob), n. [< F. lobe = Sp. Pg. It. lobo, < NL. lobus, a lobe, < Gr. lobos, the lobe of the ear or of the liver, the pod of a leguminous plant; prob. also λεπίς, a scale, husk, peel, λεπέρ, peel; see lepis.] A rounded and more or less globular projection or part. (a) In anat., a large natural division of an organ, as of the liver, lungs, brain, etc.; also, the lower soft part of the ear; the lobule. Especially—(1) One of several definite and considerable parts of each half of the cerebrum, or each hemisphere of the brain, separated superficially by certain well-marked fissures or sulci. In ordinary language these lobes or major divisions are the frontal, parietal, and occipital, or the fore, middle, and hind divisions. But by carefully considering the course of the three great fissures of each hemisphere, namely the Sylvian, the Rollandic, and the parieto-occipital, we find these to demarcate four cerebral lobes, named frontal, parietal, temporo-parietal, and occipital; and by considering the two main forks of the Sylvian fissure, a fifth lobe is recognizable, called the central lobe, insula, or island of Reil. Again, the frontal lobe is sometimes regarded as two; then six lobes are recognized by name, called prefrontal, postfrontal, parietal, temporal, occipital, and central (the last being the insula). These lobes only concern the topography of the surface of the cerebrum, and are in no way related to the fundamental segments or primitive divisions of the brain as a whole, being all of them parts of the prosencephalon alone. Lesser divisions of the lobes are called convoluted, gyrus, or gyri. (2) In the cerebellum, a group or cluster of folia demarcated by unusually deep rimulae or fissures.

Lobate Ctenophoran (Eurhamphæa vestiligera).

Certain of the interfoliar crevices are so deep or so distinct as to warrant the recognition of the intervening groups of folia or lobes.

Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, p. 125.

(b) In bot., a rounded projection or division of a leaf, fruit, or other organ of a plant. (c) In soil., a projection or part which is imperfectly separated from another part: as, the lobes of the maxilla in insects. (d) In mach., the larger or more prominent part of a cam-wheel. — Anterior lobe of the cerebrum, the anterosuperior lobe. — Anterior superior lobe of the cerebrum, the anterosuperior lobe. — Anterosuperior lobe of the cerebrum, the anterior portion of the upper surface of one of the other cerebral hemisphere, divided into the anterior and posterior crescentic lobes. Also called quadrato or aquosa lobe and lobus quadrangularis. — Biventral lobe. Same as digastric lobe of the cerebrum. — Caudate lobe of the liver. See caudate. — Central lobe of the cerebrum, the anterior division of the superior vermis, behind the lingula and in front of the monticulus. Also called lobulus centralis. — Central lobe of the cerebrum. Same as insula. — Crescentic anterior and posterior lobe, the two divisions of the anterosuperior lobe of the cerebrum. Also called lobus or lobulus lunatus anterior and lobus or lobulus lunatus posterior. — Cuneate lobe, the cuneate gyrus, the triangular tract on the median surface of the occipital lobe of the cerebrum bounded by the parieto-occipital and calcarine fissures. — Digastric lobe of the cerebrum. See caudate. — Epiastria lobes. See epigastric. — Faliform lobe, the limbic lobe together with the lamina septulocollis; dentate convolution and fornix. — Frontal lobe of the carapace. See frontal. — Frontal lobe of the cerebrum, the anterior lobe of the cerebrum separated from the parietal by the fissure of Rolando, or central fissure. — Gastric, genital, hepatic, hypogastric, intermaxillary lobes. See the adjectives. — Inferior posterior lobe of the cerebrum. (a) The lobus semilunaris inferior. (b) The lobus semilunaris inferior together with the slender lobe. — Lateral lobes. See lateral. — Limbic lobe, the gyrus fornicatus and gyrus hippocampi taken together. — Marginal lobe, lobulus, or gyrus, the convolution on the median surface of the cerebrum bounded below by the callosomarginal fissure. It is the median portion of the superior frontal convolution with the paracentral lobule. — Occipital lobe, the posterior portion of the cerebrum marked off from the parietal lobe by the parieto-occipital fissure. — Olfactory lobe, that process of the cerebral hemisphere which consists of the olfactory tract, and the olfactory bulb in which it ends. — Orbital, procephalic, etc., lobes. See the adjectives. — Parietal lobe of the cerebrum, the middle lobe of the vault of the cerebrum, separated from the frontal by the central fissure and marked off from the occipital by the parieto-occipital fissure. It is divided by the intraparietal fissure into a superior and an inferior parietal lobe. — Posterior superior lobe of the cerebrum, the posterosuperior lobe. — Posterosuperior lobe of the cerebrum, the posterior lobe of the upper surface of the cerebrum. Also called semilunaris lobe or lobus semilunaris superior. — Quadrato lobe, the anterosuperior lobe of the cerebrum. — Quadrato lobe of the cerebrum, that part of the median surface of the cerebrum which lies between the parieto-occipital fissure and the posterior part of the callosomarginal fissure. Also called quadrato lobule and gyrus. — Semilunaris lobe, the posterosuperior lobe of the cerebrum. — Slender lobe, the lobe of the under surface of the cerebellar hemisphere which lies between the biventral lobe in front and the inferior semilunaris lobe behind. Also called lobus or lobulus gracilis. — Square lobe, the anterosuperior lobe of the cerebrum. — Subpeduncular lobe. Same as convoluted. — Temporoparietal lobe, the lobe of the cerebrum which occupies the middle cerebral fossa of the skull: it is separated from the frontal and parietal lobes by the fissure of Sylvius. Also called temporal lobe. — Uncinate lobe, the uncinate gyrus, the anterior hooked extremity of the hippocampal gyrus.

lobe-berry (lōb'ber-ē), n. The fruit of the sea-side grape, Coccoloba uvifera, of the West Indies.

lobed (lōbd), a. [lobe + -ed]. Having a lobe or lobes; lobate; lobose; specifically, in bot., said of a leaf when the division extends not more than half-way to the middle, and either the sinuses or lobes are rounded; in entom., having a single lobe or lobe-like projection. Sometimes used, like lobate, to indicate a division into two or more lobes. — Lobed joint of an antenna, a joint expanded laterally at the apex into a lobe. — Lobed prothorax, a prothorax having an anterior rounded projection over the mouth. — Lobed prothorax, a prothorax having a posterior projection of the upper surface, between the elytra, often concealing the scutellum.

lobefoot (lōb'fūt), n.; pl. lobefoots or lobefoot (-fūts or -fēts). A lobe-footed bird or lobiped: as, the northern lobefoot, Lobipes hyperboreus. See Lobipes.

lobe-footed (lōb'fūt'ed), a. Having lobate feet; lobiped, as a coot, grebe, or phalarope.

lobulet (lōb'let), n. [lobe + -let]. In anat., soil., and bot., a little lobe; a lobule.

Lobelia (lō-bē'li-ā), n. [NL., named after Matthias de Lobel, a Fleming, botanist and physician to James I. of England.] 1. A genus of gamopetalous plants, the type of the natural order Lobeliaceae, distinguished by having the corolla-tube split down almost to the base, without a spur, and with a capsule which is two-valved at the summit. The plants are herbs, rarely shrubby, with alternate leaves, and irregular five-parted flowers either axillary or in racemes. There are about 300 species, found in all warm and temperate regions, with the exception of central and eastern Europe and western Asia. Numerous species are cultivated for the beauty of their flowers.

Cardinal-flower (Lobelia cardinalis). 1. Inflorescence. 2. Lower part of stem. a. flower; b. stamen-tube; c. pistil; d. upper part of the pistil and stamen-tube; e. transverse section of the fruit.

ers, which are usually blue, scarlet, or purple. L. cardinalis is the cardinal-flower, and L. syriatica is sometimes called the blue cardinal-flower. (See cardinal-flower.) L. Dortmanna grows in the water of shallow lakes in northern Europe and America, and is called water-lobelia. L. coronaria is called blue's-horn on account of its forked leaves. L. Erinus of the Cape of Good Hope is the common little spreading lobelia of conservatories and gardens. L. fulgens and L. splendens from Mexico are conspicuous cultivated species. The official lobelia formerly employed as an emetic is L. inflata. It contains an acrid narcotic poison. It is a wide-spread American species.

2. [L. c.] A plant of this genus.

Lobeliaceae (lō-bē-li-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. L. de Jussieu, 1811), < Lobelia + -aceae.] An order of gamopetalous plants, typified by the genus Lobelia, embracing 28 genera, of which 24 belong to the tribe Lobelieae and 4 to the tribe Cypheae. The order includes about 540 species, growing in nearly all but the frigid regions of the globe. Five of the genera occur in North America. The plants of this order have been placed by many botanists in the Campanulaceae, from which, however, they chiefly differ in their syncousiduous flowers, which ally them to the Compositae.

lobeliaceous (lō-bē-li-ā'shi-us), a. Pertaining to or resembling the Lobeliaceae.

lobeliad (lō-bē-li-ād), n. [Lobelia + -ad.] A plant of the order Lobeliaceae; used in the plural, the order itself. Indley.

Lobelieae (lō-bē-li-ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Presl, 1836), < Lobelia + -eae.] A tribe of plants of the natural order Lobeliaceae, characterized by an irregular corolla, and having the anthers joined in a tube about the style. They are principally herbs with alternate leaves and the flowers axillary or growing in racemes. The group includes 24 genera, found principally in tropical or subtropical climates. The principal genus, and type of the tribe, is Lobelia.

lobeline (lō-bē-līn), n. [Lobelia + -ine]. An acrid poisonous principle procured from Lobelia inflata, said to resemble nicotine.

lobe-plate (lōb'plāt), n. Same as solo-plate.

lobl, n. Plural of lobus.

lobiols (lō'bi-ōl), n. [NL. lobulus, dim. of lobus, lobe: see lobe.] In bot., one of the small lobes into which the thallus of some lichens is divided.

lobiped (lō'bi-ped), a. and n. [NL. lobipes (-ped-), < lobus, a lobe (see lobe), + L. pes (ped-) = Gr. ποῖς (pod-) = E. foot.] 1. A lobe-footed, as a bird; having lobate feet.

II. n. A lobe-footed bird.

Lobipes (lō'bi-pēs), n. [NL.: see lobiped.] 1. A genus of phalaropes of the family Scolopacidae, whose type is the northern phalarope, Lobipes hyperboreus; the lobefoots. Cuvier. — 2. A genus of reptiles. Waringer, 1843.

loblolly (lōb'lol-i), n. [lōb + lolly]. 1. A loutish or foolish person.

This lob-lolly with slanting lips would be making lous. Bretton, Grimmell's Fortunes, p. 9. (Dialect.)

2. Naut.: (a) Water-gruel or spoon-meat.

Whole grits boiled in water till they burst, and then mixt with butter and so eaten with spoons, which . . . seamen call simply by the name of loblolly.

Merkham, (Hallmark.)

(b) Medicines collectively. Also written, erroneously, loplolly.

The roughness of the language used on board a man of war where he [Dr. Johnson] passed a week on a visit to Captain Knight, disgusted him terribly. He asked an officer what some place was called, and received for answer that it was where the loplolly man kept his loplolly: a reply he considered as disrespectful, gross and ignorant. Mrs. Pizani, Anec., p. 288 (Boswell's Johnson, ed. HM, [1878].)

loblolly-bay (lōb'lol-i-bā), n. The popular name of the Gordonia Lasianthus, of the natural order Ternstroemiaceae, an elegant ornamental tree of the southern United States. Also called tan-bay.

loblolly-boy (lōb'lol-i-boi), n. Naut., a ship-surgeon's attendant, who compounds the medicines and assists the surgeon in his duties. In the United States navy called bayman or nurse.

I . . . suffered from the rude insults of the sailors and petty officers, among whom I was known by the name of Loblolly Boy. Smollett, Roderick Random, xviii.

loblolly-pine (lōb'lol-i-pin), n. A tree, Pinus Todd, growing in sterile soil in the southern Atlantic and Gulf States of North America. It yields fuel and inferior lumber, and to a small extent turpentine. It is also called old-field pine, and a better variety rosemary-pine.

loblolly-sweetwood (lōb'lol-i-swēt'wūd), n. A tree, Solidophyllum Jacquinii, [West Indies].

loblolly-tree (lōb'lol-i-trē), n. A tree of the genus Cupania, of the natural order Sapindaceae, especially C. glabra; also a tree, Pisonia subcordata, of the order Nyctagineae.

lobo (lō'bō), n. [Sp., a wolf; < L. lupus, a wolf: see wolf.] A large gray wolf of the southwestern United States, Canis lupus occidentalis.

loboite (lō'bō-it), n. [Named by Berzelius after the Chevalier Lobo da Silveira.] In mineral., a magnesian variety of vesuvianite or idocrase occurring in Norway.

Lobophora (lō-bōf'ō-rā), n. pl. Same as Mar-siphalida.

Lobosa (lō-bō'sā), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lobosus, lobose: see lobose.] An order of the class Rhizopoda, characterized by their shapelessness and the constant protrusion of lobose processes called pseudopodia; the normal amoeboids or lobose protozoans: contrasted with Filosa. The order distinguishes the amoebiform protozoans from the Radiolaria, Heliozoa, Foraminifera, etc.

lobose (lō'bōsā), a. [NL. lobosus, < lobus, a lobe: see lobe.] Having many or large lobes; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lobosa: as, the lobose protozoans.

We have left a certain small number of independent lobose Gymnomys which it is most convenient to associate in a separate group. Encyc. Brit., xlix. 842.

Lobostomatinae, Lobostominae (lō-bōstō-mā-tī'nē, lō'bōstō-mī'nē), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λοβός, lobe, + στόμα (stoma-), mouth, + -inae.] A subfamily of bats of the family Phyllostomatidae, having simple nostrils without nose-leaf, but the chin with leaf-like appendages, and having 2 incisors in each upper and lower half-jaw, and 2 premolars above and 3 below on each side. There are two genera, Chilomyotis and Mormops.

Lobotes (lō-bō'tēs), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1829), so called with ref. to the soft parts of the dorsal, anal, and caudal fins, likened to one 8-lobed fin; < Gr. λοβός, a lobe: see lobe.] The typical genus of Lobotinae, having bands of villiform teeth on the jaws, and an anterior series of larger conical teeth. L. surinamensis is the flasher or tripletail, a large fish, 2 or 3 feet long, found in all warm seas, and north on the Atlantic coast of the United States to Cape Cod.

Lobotes surinamensis.

Lobotidae (lō-bōt'ī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lobotes + -idae.] A family of sparoid fishes, typified by the genus Lobotes, having the vomer, palatines, and tongue toothless, the profile concave, the caudal fin convex, and the dorsal fin tion, police, etc.—Local board, a board of officers whose powers are local; more specifically, in Eng. law, a board of officers elected by the rate-payers of a district to administer some part of the local affairs therein.—Local chamber. Same as observed.—Local circuit, in telegr., a circuit in a telegraph-station containing the recording or other receiving instrument and a battery, and also a delicate relay operated by the line-current, by means of which the signals are repeated in the local circuit, the recorder or sounder being operated by the battery in that circuit.—Local-circuit battery, a battery used in a local circuit.—Local color. See color.—Local court, a court whose jurisdiction is territorially limited to a comparatively small district, such as a single county, city, or town.—Local currents, currents due to local action; also, in telegr., currents in a local circuit.—Local degree, equation. See the noun.—Local government, the regulation and administration of the local affairs of a city or district by the people of it, as distinguished from such regulation and administration by authority of the state or nation at large.—Local Government Act. (a) An English statute of 1888 (51 and 52 Vict., c. 38), relating to the public health and sanitary control, whose provisions take effect in particular places only when the act is adopted by the local authorities. It has been frequently amended. (b) An English statute of 1888 (51 and 52 Vict., c. 41), initiating a system for the local self-government of the various counties of England and Wales (or in some cases divisions of a county), and of a large number of boroughs (and in the case of London of a district consisting of parts of three counties), and organizing in each a government under the control of its people, for municipal purposes. Its chief feature is the transfer from departments of the imperial government, to a county council in each, of the regulation of local affairs, such as highways, health, education, etc. The scheme of reform begun with the act of 1888 was completed by the Local Government Act of 1894.—Local Government Board, a department of the English government under the act of Parliament of August, 1871 (34 and 35 Vict., c. 70), having supervision of the laws relating to the public health, the relief of the poor, registration of births, etc., and other matters of local government, including (under 35 and 36 Vict., c. 79) highways and turnpikes.—Local immunity. See immunity.—Local improvement, improvements by public works, such as bridges, parks, etc., which benefit chiefly a particular locality rather than the state at large.—Local law. See statute.—Local legislation, local statute, such legislation or statute as is in terms applicable not to the state at large, but only to some district or locality and to the people therein. See legislation.—Local motion, motion in the ordinary sense of change of place; locomotion, as opposed to augmentation, diminution, and deformation.—Local option, the determination by vote of the people of a town or other minor political community as to whether or not any license to sell intoxicating liquors shall be granted; a principle of law established in some of the United States and advocated in others. The principle has also obtained recognition in England.—Local preacher. (a) In the Met. Episc. Ch., one who is licensed to preach within a certain district, generally as an assistant to the pastor and as a candidate for ordination. (b) In England, a dissenting clergyman who preaches at different places. Hallivell.—Local probability, a branch of mathematics which considers the mean values of geometrical magnitudes conforming to certain conditions, and the like. For example, it is a proposition in local probability that if three points are taken at random within a triangle, the mean of the small triangle will be one twelfth that of the large one.—Local problem, a problem in which the thing sought is a geometrical locus.—Local proposition, in logic, a proposition consisting of two clauses united by a local adverb; as, "Where there is smoke there is fire."—Local sign, in psychol., something which is supposed to distinguish the impressions made upon one nerve-termination from those made upon another, and which serves especially to render possible, or to facilitate, the perception of objects as extended in space. The theory of local signs was propounded by H. Lotze. See the quotation.

Every impression of color—for example, red—produces on all places of the retina which it reaches the same sensation of redness. In addition to this, however, it produces on each of these different places, A, B, C, a certain accessory impression, α , β , γ , which is independent of the nature of the color seen, and dependent merely on the nature of the place excited. This second local impression would therefore be associated with every impression of color r , in such manner that $r\alpha$ signifies a red that acts on the point A, $r\beta$ signifies the same red in case it acts on the point B. These associated accessory impressions would, accordingly, render for the soul the clue by following which it transposes the same red, now to one, now to another spot, or simultaneously to different spots in the space intimated by it. . . . The foregoing is the theory of local signs. Lotze, Short Psychology (trans.).

Local space, an extended volume: opposed to a space of time.—Local time, time reckoned from the instant of transit of the mean sun (or, in the case of sidereal time, of the first point of Aries) over the local meridian.—Local value, the value pertaining to the place of a digit in the ordinary system of arithmetic.

II. n. 1. A local item in a newspaper. [U. S.]—2. In telegr. (a) A local-circuit battery. (b) The circuit itself, including everything belonging to the current in an office or station except the fine-wire and the instruments included in the line-circuit.

locale (lō'kal'), n. [F. local, a locality: see local. The spelling is false, appar. in simulation of morale.] A place, spot, or locality; specifically, a site or scene, considered with reference to circumstances connected with it.

But no matter—lay

The locale where you stay.

Berkham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 237.

localization, localise. See localization, localise. localism (lō'kal-izm), n. [F. local + -ism.] 1. The state or condition of being local or localized; limitation to a place or to a locality; also, the influence exerted by a locality.

Some occult law of localism by which associated forms often become impressed with mutual resemblances. Nature, XXX. 238.

2. Attachment to a locality, or a peculiar limited phase of thought or feeling growing out of such attachment; provincialism; in general, any product of local influences: as, the localism of one's views or affections.

Congress is simply an aggregate seething and struggling of a great number of localisms—rarely or never losing themselves in the stream of national or patriotic feeling. S. Bowles, in Merriam, II. 423.

3. A mode of speaking or acting peculiar to a place; a local idiom, phrase, or custom.

localistic (lō'kal-ist'ik), a. [F. local + -istic.]

1. Relating or pertaining to localization; of localized character or quality.

The confirmation of the localistic theory of cholera . . . can no longer be put in question. Pop. Sci. Mo., XX. 386.

2. Having the character of localism or a localism.

locality (lō'kal-i-ti), n.; pl. localities (-tiz). [= F. localité = Sp. localidad = Pg. localidade = It. località, < L.L. localita (-t)s, locality (as a quality of bodies), < localis, belonging to a place: see local.] 1. The condition of being in a place; position or situation in general; the immediate relation of an object to a place.

Fond Fancy's eye,
That only gives locality and form
To what she prizes best.

W. Mason, English Garden, III.

2. Any part of space; a situation; position; particularly, a geographical place or situation: as, a healthy locality; the locality of a mineral, plant, or animal. Compare habitat, 2.

My first rambles, moreover, had a peculiar charm, which knowledge of locality has since taken away. Hovells, Venetian Life, II.

3. Legal restriction as to place or location.

4. In phren., the faculty to which is ascribed the power of remembering the details of places and the location of objects.—Absolute locality, that which belongs to a body irrespective of the locality of any other body.—Degree of locality. See degree.—Locality of a widow, in Scots law, the lands inherited by a widow under her contract of marriage.—Relative or respective locality, the spatial relations of a body to other bodies.

localizable (lō'kal-i-zā-bl), a. [F. localise + -able.] Capable of being localized, located, or fixed in or referred to a place.

The feelings claimed as emotions, which are not localizable in the bodily framework. H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, p. 78.

localization (lō'kal-i-zā'shun), n. [F. localise + -ation.] 1. The act of localizing, or the state of being localized.

The contrast as to the centralization or localization of administrative power . . . between England and other civilized countries. Sir E. Creasy, Eng. Const., p. 332.

Specifically—2. The reference, in perception, of a sensation to some part of the body (as the place where it originates), or to some point in space outside of the body (as a quality of a perceived object).

Perception as a psychological term has received various, though related, meanings for different writers. It is sometimes used for the recognition of a sensation or movement as distinct from its mere presentation, and thus is said to imply the more or less definite revival of certain residua or re-presentations of past experiences which resembled the present. More frequently it is used as the equivalent of what has been otherwise called the "localization and projection" of sensations—that is to say, a sensation presented either as an affection of some part of our own body regarded as extended or as a state of some foreign body beyond it. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 62.

Also spelled localisation. Localization of cerebral functions, the existence of peculiarly close relations between the functions of the various peripheral nerves and certain limited areas of the cerebral cortex, so that the removal of one of these areas will involve the abolition of the voluntary control of the efferent nerves of a certain part, or, if sensory nerves are concerned, will preclude sensation from following their stimulation. On the other hand, stimulation of these same areas will give rise to a sensation as if in the part, or to definite muscular actions in the part.

localize (lō'kal-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. localized, ppr. localizing. [F. local + -ize.] 1. To make local; fix in, or assign to, or restrict to, a particular place; determine the locality or limit the extent of.

Thus everywhere to truth Tradition clings,
Or Fancy localizes Powers we love.

Wordsworth, Fancy and Tradition.

Specifically—2. To refer (a sensation) in perception to some point of the body or to some point in space outside of the body. See localization, 2.

If we turn away our eyes, we cease to see the flame at which we have been looking, but the after-image remains and is projected upon the wall, and continues still localized in the dark field of sight even if we close our eyes altogether. J. Ward, Encyc. Brit., XX. 62.

Also spelled localise.

localizer (lō'kal-i-zēr), n. [F. localise + -er.] A small coil of definite resistance placed at each station of an electric fire-alarm system, which is brought into the circuit when the alarm is given, thus enabling the observer at the receiving-station to know the locality from which the alarm is sent.

locally (lō'kal-i), adv. With respect to place; in place: as, to be locally separated or distant. locate (lō'kāt), v.; pret. and pp. located, ppr. locating. [L. locatus, pp. of locare, place, put, set, let, etc., < locus, a place: see local. Cf. allocate, allow, collocation, etc.] 1. trans. To fix in a place; establish in a particular spot or position; place; settle: as, to locate one's self in a certain town or street.

She was already "of a certain age," and, despairing of a lover, accepted the good old country squire, and was located for the rest of her life as mistress of Lonsdale Abbey. Ferrars, Julian Home, p. 35.

2. To fix the place of; determine the situation or limits of: as, to locate the site of a building; to locate a tract of public land by surveying it and defining its boundaries; to locate a land-claim; to locate (lay out) the line of a railroad. [Chiefly U. S.]

That your Majesty would grant to his petitioners . . . by the name of the Mississippi Company, 2,500,000 acres of land . . . to be located between the thirty-eighth and forty-second degrees of north latitude. Arthur Lee, Petition to King in Council (1768). (Barlett.)

II. intrans. To reside; place one's self or be placed; adopt or form a fixed residence.

Beneath whatever roof they locate, they disturb the peace of mind and happiness of some confiding female. Dickens, Pickwick, xviii.

location (lō'kā'shon), n. [= F. location = Sp. locacion = Pg. locação = It. locazione, < L. locatio (-n), a placing, < locare, pp. locutus, place: see locate.] 1. The act of placing or settling: as, the location of settlers in a new country.—2. Situation with respect to place; place.

To say that the world is somewhere means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.

3. The act of fixing by survey, or otherwise determining, the site or bounds of a piece or tract of land (as under a claim for a specified quantity of public land), laying out the line of a railroad or canal, or the like. [Chiefly U. S.]—4. That which is located; a tract of land with boundaries designated or marked out. [U. S.]

A location is held to be that quantity of mining ground which one person may legally acquire by location, in one body. Shinn, Land Laws of Mining Districts, p. 51.

An odd corner of a great township such as they measure off in these wilds, where they take in, with some eligible locations of intervals land, miles also of pathless forest. Mrs. Whitney, Leslie Goldthwaite, vi.

5. In civil law, a leasing on rent.—Contract of location, a contract of hiring either of the use of a chattel or of services in respect to a chattel, the possession of the chattel being in either case transferred for the purpose. Where the possession and use of the thing is hired, the contract is called locatio rei or locatio conductus rei. Where the possession is transferred to one whose service in respect to the thing is hired, as where goods are delivered to a carrier, the contract is called locatio operum or locatio operis mercium venditorum; or, if the service involves a resulting change in the thing, as where cloth is delivered to a tailor to make a garment, locatio operis faciendi.—Definitive location. See definitive.

locative (lō'kā-tiv), a. and n. [= OF. locatif, < ML. locutivus, < L. locare, place: see locate.] I. a. 1. In gram., indicating place, or the place where or wherein: as, a locative adjective; a locative case.—2. In anat. and zool., serving to locate or to indicate location or relative situation in a series. Thus, the name metencephalon or midbrain is locative of the part between extremes of a series.

The advantages of locative names. Buck's Handbook of Med. Sciences, VIII. 617.

II. n. In gram., a case-form indicating location; as existing in the original Indo-European or Aryan language, and preserved in some of its descendants, especially the Sanskrit. In Latin and Greek it is not ordinarily recognized as a separate case, but is found in a number of isolated examples, and in the former language in the established use of certain case-forms (generally called genitives and adjectives) of names of places.—Locative absolute. See absolute, a. 11.

locator (lō'kā-tor), n. [L. locator, one who lets, an undertaker, < locare, pp. locatus, place, let: see locates.] 1. One who locates land, or who settles upon land by claim of right or legal possession. [U. S.]

Here no locator encroaches upon his neighbor's claim. The Century, XXV. 585.

2. In law, the hirer in a contract of location. loc. cit. An abbreviation of the Latin loco citato, 'in the place (already) cited.' Sometimes further abbreviated l. c.

locellate (lō-sel'āt), a. [locellus + -ate.] Divided into locelli.

locellus (lō-sel'us), n.; pl. locelli (-i). [L., a little place, a compartment, dim. of loculus, a little place: see loculus.] In bot., a secondary cell, forming a subdivision of a loculus, whether in an anther or a seed-vessel.

*loch*¹ (lōch), n. [Gael. loch, a lake: see lake.] In Scotland, a lake in the general sense, or a lake-like body of water, as one of the narrow or partially landlocked arms of the sea, especially on the west coast, resembling the Norwegian fjords. In Ireland usually lough.

One burnish'd sheet of living gold,
Loch Katrine lay beneath him roll'd.

Scott, L. of the L., l. 14.

Kingsburgh conducted us in his boat across one of the lochs, as they call them, or arms of the sea, which flow in upon all the coasts of Sky. Bonwell, Journal, p. 244.

*loch*² (lok), n. [Also lochoch; = F. lok, looch, look = Sp. loog = Pg. looch = It. loc, locco, < Ar. lo'og, an eluctuary, a lincture, < la'ag, liok.] A lincture.

Lochaber ax. A battle-ax having a long handle or staff, used by the Scottish Highlanders. In the typical form the blade is narrow, but of great length in the direction of the shaft, and projects beyond the end of the shaft either in a long point or with a hook.

lochan (lōch'an), n. [Gael. lochan, dim. of loch, a lake: see loch.] A small loch; a pond. [Scotch.]

A pond or lochan, rather than a lake. H. Miller.

loche, n. An obsolete or archaic spelling of loch.

*Lochia*¹ (lō'ki-ā or lō'ki-ā), n. [G. Gr. Λοχία, also Λοχία, an epithet of Artemis, fem. of λόχος, also λοχίος, belonging to childbirth, from λόχος, a lying-in, childbirth (also an ambush, etc.: see Lochites), < λόγος, lay, mid. lie: see lie.] 1. In Gr. myth., a surname of the goddess Artemis (Diana), as the protectress of women in childbirth.—2. [NL.] A genus of noctuid moths of the subfamily Comminæ, based upon the Australian L. apicalis. Walker, 1865.

*Lochia*² (lō'ki-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. Λοχία, evacuations following childbirth, neut. pl. of λόχος, belonging to childbirth: see Lochia.] In med., the evacuations from the womb and vagina which follow childbirth.

Lochial (lō'ki-āl), a. [Lochia + -al.] Of or pertaining to the lochia.

Lochites (lō'ki-tēs), n. [NL. (Foerster, 1856), < Gr. Λοχίτης, a fellow-soldier, a comrade, one of the same company, < λόχος, a company, band of troops, prop. a party in ambush, lit. a lying in wait, an ambush: see Lochia.] 1. A genus of parasitic Hymenoptera, of the chalcid subfamily Toryminæ. The species are parasitic upon gall-making Cynipidae. Only European species have been described, although the genus is also represented in North America.

2. A genus of South American thamnophiline birds. Cabanis and Heine, 1857. Also called Nelus.—3. A genus of robber-flies of the family Asilidae. Schiner, 1866.

loch-moulinet (lōk'mō-li-nē'), n. A form of electric log in which a telephone is substituted for the indicator, and a species of mill-wheel for the screw. See electric log, under *log*².

loci, n. Plural of locus.

*lock*¹ (lok), n. [ME. lok (pl. lokkes), < AS. loc, a bolt, bar, fastening, inclosure, fold, close, ending = OFries. lok = MLG. lok = OHG. loh, MHG. lock, an inclosure, prison, dungeon, concealed place, hole, aperture, G. lock, a dungeon, a hole, aperture, = Icel. lok, a cover, lid, a locker, an end, conclusion, = Sw. lock = Dan. laag, a lid, = Goth. luk*, in comp. seluk, an opening; cf. ME. loke, < AS. loca, m., a bolt, bar, inclosure, = OD. loke = Icel. loka, a lock, latch, fastening; from the orig. strong verb, AS. lōcan (pp. locon), etc., close, lock: see *lock*², v.] 1. Anything that fastens something else; specifically, an appliance for securing in position a door, gate, window, drawer, lid, etc., when closed, by means of a key, or of some secret contrivance requiring manipulation by one to whom it is known; hence, any device that prevents movement. The essential parts of an ordinary lock are a bolt, wards, tumbler, and a spring. The bolt is a bar which slides or catches in an opening made to receive it. The spring serves to maintain the bolt in one of two positions—that is, either extended or retracted—corresponding to locking and unlocking. The wards are strips of metal placed within the lock and designed to obstruct the passage of all keys except the one fitted to them.

The tumbler is a pivoted bar, or other device, used to hold the bolt in one position, and intended to render it difficult to operate the lock except by the right key. Locks are made in a great variety of styles and shapes, and for many different positions and uses. The security of locks in general depends on the number of impediments or wards that are interposed between the key and the bolt which secures the door.

A cap-case for your linen and your plate,
With a strange lock, that opens with Amen.
Plancher (and another), Noble Gentleman, v.

2. A forelock; a cotter or key. E. H. Knight.—3. In firearms, a piece of mechanism which explodes the charge. This is effected either by striking a sharp blow which explodes a fulminating powder or strikes sparks from a flint, etc., or by communicating fire directly to the priming, as in the old match-lock.

4. A form of brake or drag for the wheels of a vehicle, used to prevent them from turning in descending steep hills; a lock-chain or skid-chain.—5. The swerving to the right or left of the fore-carriage, deviating from the line of direction of the hind wheels and the trend of the carriages proper. It is called the hau or geo lock respectively, according as it is to the left or right of the driver. E. H. Knight.—6. In plastering, the projection of the plaster, cement, etc., behind the laths, which serves to prevent it from scaling off.—7. A place shut in or locked up; an inclosure; a lockup.

Shuts up th' unwieldy centaur in the lock. Dryden.

8. A barrier to confine the water of a stream or canal; an inclosure in a canal, with gates at each end, used in raising or lowering boats as they pass from one level to another. When a vessel is descending, water is let into the chamber of the lock till it is on a level with the higher water, and thus permits the vessel to enter; the upper gates are then closed, and the lower gates being gradually opened, the water in the lock falls to the level of the low water, and the vessel passes out. In ascending, the operation is reversed. See out canal-lock.

9. A fastening together; a closing of one thing upon another; a state of being fixed or immovable; also, a grapple in wrestling; a hug.

All Albemarle Street closed by a lock of carriages. De Quincey.

They must be practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tug or grapple, and to close. Milton, Education.

Bramah lock [named from its inventor, Joseph Bramah of London (1749-1814)], a form of bank-lock. Its chief characteristic is a series of sliding tumblers, notched at different parts of their length, the raising of which by a key having a bit shaped in correspondence with the notches releases the lock-bolt and leaves it free to move in locking or unlocking.—Burglar-alarm lock. See burglar-alarm.—Chain-lock, a form of seal-lock.—Chain of locks. See chain.—Combination-lock, a bank- or safe-lock, the principal features of which are the following: Two or more disks, each with a similar notch in its periphery, are mounted upon a spindle, which, in locking or unlocking the safe, is turned by a knob. One disk and an exterior dial-plate are fastened to the spindle; the other disks turn on the spindle. The disks are separated by intervening washers or collars, and each has a pin projecting from its flat face laterally toward the adjacent disk. The pins are arranged in relation with the dial and the peripheral notches in such manner that in turning the spindle, according to a given system or combination, first in one direction and then in the other, to make certain letters or numbers on the dial successively coincide with a mark on a ring which circumscribes the dial, the peripheral notches in the disks are, by the successive engagement with each other of the laterally projecting pins, brought into line with each other. When this is done, the obstructing mechanism which has previously held the bolt falls into the aligned notches, and the bolt is left free to move as may be desired. The positions of the disks, and consequently of the pins, may be changed at will to correspond with the different figures or letters on the dial: this is called changing the combination. The number of such changes is only limited by the law of permutation as applied to the number of disks and the number of letters or figures on the dial. Such a lock may have two systems of dials, spindles, and disks, each controlling the one bolt of the lock, and each of which may be set on a different combination. In this way, as a measure of greater security, it may be arranged that the presence of two persons (each knowing only one combination) may be needed to operate the lock. Also called permutation-lock.—Dead lock. (a) A lock the bolt of which can be turned in either direction by a key, as distinguished from one in which the spring throws the bolt in one direction only, as in a spring-lock. (b) See dead-lock.—Dormant lock, a lock the bolt of which does not close automatically.—Double lock in a canal, two single locks of equal capacity arranged side by side, and connected, one with the other, by sluice with gate. Water flowing from either, when full, may be made Tumbler-lock.

The bolt has two square notches, a, b, in its upper edge; b, tumbler, pivoted at one end, and having a projecting stump, c, at the other, which falls into one of the notches, according to the position of the bolt.

by the sluice to enter the other till the same level is reached in both. The sluice being then closed, and the lower lock-gates opened in the lock it is desired to empty, the remainder of the water flows out into the lower pound of the canal. Thus, while one lock is emptying, one half its water may be used to half fill the other. Therefore only one half the water taken from the upper pound of the canal, required in locking a given number of boats through a single lock, is needed when a double lock is used.—Draw-bolt lock, a lock the bolt of which can be drawn by means of a knob, except when it is locked with a key.—Lock of water, the measure equal to the contents of the chamber of the locks by which the consumption of water on a canal is estimated.—Lock, stock, and barrel, the whole gun; hence, the whole of anything.

Take it all in all, it is rotten; lock, stock, and barrel, there is not an inch of it sound.

T. Benton, Speech on the National Bank.

Permutation-lock, a lock in which the moving parts are capable of transposition, so that, being arranged in any concerted order, it becomes necessary before the bolt can be shot to bring the tumblers into that order. E. H. Knight.

Pin-tumbler lock, a lock in which the tumblers have the form of pins or short rods, which slide in one direction in holes or ways by their own gravity or by the action of springs, and in the opposite direction by the action of the key when the latter is pushed into the lock. The "Yale" lock is of this variety.—Puzzle-lock, a more or less simple form of lock constructed on the combination principle and used as a puzzle, the solution consisting in finding the combination which locks or unlocks it. The greater the complexity of the lock, the more difficult is the solution of the puzzle. See combination-lock.—Rebounding lock, a gun-lock provided with a device whereby the hammer of the lock, after striking the nipple, is immediately thrown back into the half-cock position.—Reversible lock, a lock of which the latch-bolt may be turned over, so as to cause the beveled side to face in either direction, thus allowing the application of the lock indifferently to either side of a door.—Roman lock, a lock having a simple bolt with a binder-spring to hold the bolt in any position in which it is placed, until a force is applied strong enough to overcome the spring.—Rural lock, a cheap kind of lock with a wooden case. E. H. Knight.—Scandinavian lock, a form of lock for fastening hampers upon staples. Both arms of the bow are withdrawn from the lock when it is opened.—Seal-lock, a lock which, when locked, cannot be opened without breaking a seal, thus indicating whether it has or has not been tampered with: used for freight-cars, mail-bags, express companies' inclosures, custom-house purposes, etc. One of the most effective seal-locks has means for attaching a small square of variegated glass over the keyhole in such a manner that the square cannot be removed except by breaking. A photograph of the glass seal previously taken is a complete check on any attempt to substitute another for it, as the pattern of streak and color in each seal is entirely fortuitous, and different from any other.—Time-lock, a lock in which, when locked, the bolt is held by a stop-plate or other detaining device so that it cannot be unlocked before the expiration of a given time. The stop is controlled by clockwork in such manner that it disengages the bolt only at the time for which it has been previously adjusted by mechanism analogous to that of an alarm-clock.—To be at lock, to be in a difficulty. Hallivell, (Prov. Eng.)—Yale lock, a safety-lock in which is used, in place of wards, a special form of pin tumbler admitting of a great variety of combinations, so that the chance of opening the lock except with the right key is rendered very small. The key is flat or corrugated in longitudinal lines, and the key-opening in the lock is very small, to guard against the use of false keys or the blowing in of powder for exploding the lock. (See also case-lock, cheek-lock.)

*lock*¹ (lok), v. [ME. locken, lokken (= Icel. loka, also lykja = Sw. lycka = Dan. lukke), lock; a secondary form, after the noun lock, taking the place, in mod. E., of the orig. strong verb remaining in the E. dial. louk, < ME. louken, lowken (pret. loc, pl. luken, pp. loken), < AS. lōcan (pret. lode, pl. locon, pp. locon), shut, close, fasten (also in comp. a-lōcan, separate, be-lōcan, ge-lōcan, shut, fasten, on-lōcan, un-lōcan, unlock, to-lōcan, unlock), = OS. lōkan (in comp. bi-lōkan, lock, ant-lōkan, unlock) = OFries. luka, luika, lōka = D. luiken = OHG. lūkan, MHG. lūchen = Icel. luka, shut, close, = Goth. lūkan*, in comp. ga-lūkan, close, shut up, us-lūkan, unlock. Hence *lock*¹, n., locket, etc.] I. trans.

1. To close; shut; now, specifically, to close and fasten by means of a lock and key: as, to lock a door or a trunk.

They wanne with moche woo the wallies winnins,
Mene lepen to anone and lokkeden the gates.

M.S. Cott. Calig. A. II., l. 118. (Hallivell.)

And went unto the dore
To enter in, but found it locked fast.

Sponser, F. Q., III. xii. 27.

2. To fasten so as to impede motion: as, to lock a wheel.

Loken in every lth. Chaucer, Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 55.

3. To shut (up) or confine with or as if with a lock, or in an inclosed place; close or fasten (in); with up or in.

Do you lock your self up from me, to make my Search more curious? Congress, Way of the World, IV. 5.

Then seek to know those things which make us blest,
And having found them, lock them in thy breast.

Str. J. Denham, Prudens.

A still salt pool, lock'd in with bars of sand.
Temple, Palace of Art.

4. To close or make fast; press closely together, as separate portions; fix steadfastly or immovably: as, the streams are locked by ice.

The louds listened full well, that lay in his bedde,
Thay he lockes his liddes, ful lyttel he sleepes.
Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (M. E. T. A.), l. 2007.

She lock'd her lips: she left me where I stood.
Tennyson, Fair Women.

5. To join or unite firmly, as by intertwinning, interlinking, or infolding: as, to lock arms.

Lock hand in hand; yourself in order set.
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 81.

6. To embrace closely; infold.

Lock'd in each other's arms we stood.
M. Arnold, Poema, II. 87.

7. To furnish with a lock.

His locked, letter'd, brow brass collar
Show'd him the gentleman and scholar.
Burns, The Two Dogs.

8. In fencing, to seize, as the sword-arm of an antagonist, by turning the left arm round it, after closing the passade, shell to shell, in order to disarm him.—9. To shut out; prevent from gaining access (to).

Is there who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls
With desperate charcoal round his darken'd walls?
Pope, Prolog. to Satires, l. 12.

10. To enable to pass through a lock, as in a canal. See *lock*¹, n., 8.

Vessels are locked down from the sea into the [North Holland] canal.
Encyc. Brit., IV. 788.

locked jaw. Same as lockjaw.—To lock out, to close the gates or doors against; specifically, in labor-disputes, to withdraw employment from (workmen or other employees in a body) as a means of coercion.—To lock up, (a) To close or fasten by or as if by locking: as, to lock up an empty or unoccupied house; to lock up a form of type (that is, to fasten it securely in a chase by driving up or tightening the galleys). (b) To confine; restrain or secure by locking or fastening in: as, to lock up a prisoner; to lock up silver. (c) To secure or place in such a position as not to be available for use: as, his money was locked up in unprofitable enterprises.

II. intrans. 1. To become fast; admit of being fastened or locked: as, the door will not lock.—2. To unite closely by mutual insertion of parts.

Either they lock into each other, or slip one upon another's surface.
Boyle.

lock² (lok), n. [ME. lok (pl. lockes, lokkes), < AS. looc (pl. loocas), a lock of hair, = OS. locka = OFries. lok = D. lok = OHG. loc (pl. locch), MHG. loc (pl. locke), G. Locke, a curl or ringlet, = Icel. lokkr = Sw. lock = Dan. lok (not recorded in Goth.), a lock of hair; orig. perhaps 'a curl': cf. Icel. lykkr, a loop, bend, crook; Gr. λυγρός, a pliant twig, λυγρὸν, λυγρὸν, bend, twist, λυγρὸς, flexible.] 1. A tuft of hair or wool; anything resembling such a tuft; a tress; used absolutely in the plural, hair collectively.

With him ther was his sone, a yong squyer, . . .
With lokkes crulle as they were leyd in prease.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T., l. 81.

Chloe, those locks of raven hair—
Some people say you dye them black;
But that's a libel, I can swear.
For I know where you buy them black.
Greek Anthology, tr. by Lord Neaves.

Such long locks had she that with knee to chin
She might have wrapped and warmed her feet therein.
Swinburne, Two Dreams.

2. A tuft or small quantity, as of hay or some similar substance; a small quantity of anything; a handful; specifically, in Scots law, the perquisite of the servant in a mill, consisting of a quantity of meal, regulated by the custom of the mill.

For so good clothes ne're lay in stable
Upon a lock of hay.
Sp. Corbet, Journey into France.

I take it on me as a thing of mine office [of miller] to maintain my right of multure, lock, and goupin.
Scott, Monastery, xiii.

What mean the gladness of the plain,
The mirth that shakes the beard of grain,
This joy of eve and morn,
And yellow locks of corn?
Whittier, The Battle Autumn of 1862.

3. A love-lock.

And one Deformed is one of them I know him: a wears a lock. Shak., Much Ado, III. 3. 188.
Cen. He has an exceeding good eye, madam.
Met. And a very good lock. B. Jonson, Epicene, IV. 2.

French lock. Same as love-lock.

lockage (lok'aj), n. [*lock*¹ + -age.] 1. Materials for locks in a canal or stream; works which form a lock.—2. Toll paid for passing a lock in a stream, as the Thames in England.—3. Elevation or amount of elevation and descent made by the locks of a canal.

lock-band, lock-bond (lok'band, -bond), n. In masonry, a course of bond-stones.

lock-bay (lok'bä), n. The space of water inclosed between the gates of a lock.

lock-bolt (lok'bölt), n. A bolt set in action by a knob on one or both sides of a door, thus performing the function of a latch, or made by means of a spring or other locking device to perform the function of a lock.

lock-bond, n. See lock-band.

lock-chain (lok'chän), n. 1. A chain used to lock the wheels of a vehicle by securing the rim to some part which does not rotate; also, a chain which secures to the vehicle a skid-plate on which the wheel rides during a descent.—2. A chain used to fasten a padlock to a door or gate.

lock-chamber (lok'chäm'ber), n. In canals, the area of a lock inclosed by the side-walls and gates.

lockchest (lok'chest), n. Same as lockcheater.
lockcheater (lok'ches-ter), n. [ME. lockcheater, lockcheater, lokester, also called lok-dore; origin obscure; cf. OF. Locke, a dew-anail (Cotgrave).] A wood-louse. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]

Lockcheater, wyrm, idem quod lokodere infra [var. loocester or lokodester].
Prompt. Parv., p. 810.

lock-cramp (lok'kramp), n. A tool used to hold back the spring in putting together the parts of a gun-lock.

lock-down (lok'doun), n. A contrivance used by lumbermen for fastening logs together in rafting. [American.]

Locke level. See *level*¹.

lockent. An obsolete strong past participle of *lock*¹.

locker¹ (lok'er), n. [ME. lokere, irreg. locure (= D. lokker), a close receptacle; < *lock*¹ + -er.] 1. One who or that which locks up.—2. A close receptacle, as a chest, a drawer, a compartment, or a cupboard, that may be closed with a lock. The word is now most frequently applied to such receptacles for the use of individual members of a company of men, as on board a ship or in a regimental armory.

Also there ys ij lockers of ij quarters of a yard long full of bonyes of Innocentes whyche kyng Herodys slew.
Torkington, Diary of Eng. Travell, p. 9.

3. A recess or niche near an altar in some Roman Catholic churches, intended as a depository for water, oil, etc.—Boatswain's locker (naut.), a chest in which are kept tools and small stuff for rigging.—Chain locker. (a) See chain-locker. (b) A bar-room or grocery. Macy. [Naut. slang.]—Davy Jones's locker. See Davy Jones.—Not a shot in the locker (naut.), not a penny in the pocket.—Shot-locker (naut.), a strong frame of plank near the pump-well in the hold, where shot are deposited.

locker² (lok'er), v. [ME. lokkeren, lokren, curl; prob. < *lock*².] 1. intrans. 1st. To curl.

II. trans. To entangle; mat together. Hallwell. [North. Eng.] lockerram, n. See lockram.

locker-up (lok'er-up), n. One who locks up; specifically, a jailer or turnkey.

locket (lok'et), n. [F. loquet (= It. lucochetto), a fastening, dim. of loque, a lock, of LG. origin: see *lock*¹, n.] 1st. A small lock; a catch or spring to fasten a necklace or other ornament.—2. A little hinged case worn as an ornament, often pendent to a necklace or watch-guard, designed to contain a miniature portrait, a lock of hair, or other keepsake.—3. That part of a sword-sheath where the hook is fastened, usually a mounting of metal, secured to or inclosing the scabbard at a point much nearer to the mouth than to the chape.

lockfast (lok'fast), a. Secured or firmly fastened by some locking device, as a door, chest, press, nut, etc. [Chiefly Scotch.] lock-faucet (lok'fä'set), n. Any form of faucet requiring a key to open it.

lock-gate (lok'gät), n. A gate for opening or closing a lock in a canal, or sometimes in a river. The gates at the ends of the lock-chamber are called respectively the head- and the tail-gate, or the upper and the lower gate.

lock-hatch (lok'hach), n. The sluice-board or sliding gate in a sluiceway. E. H. Knight.

lock-hole (lok'höl), n. 1st. A keyhole.

Then up she rose, put on her clothes,
And keekit through at the lock-hole.
Lockmaben Harper (Child's Ballads, VI. 9).

2. In a gun-stock, the recess into which the lock fits.

lock-hook (lok'hök), n. A metal hook to which a spring is attached to lock it so that it will not unfasten; a snap-hook. Lock-hooks are used on board vessels on the ends of the sheets of light sails, and for bending balloon-sails to stays in yachts.

Lock hospital. See hospital.

lock-house (lok'hous), n. A house in which a lock-keeper lives.

A red lock-house covered with creepers.
The Century, XXXVIII. 492.

Lockian (lok'i-an), a. and n. [< Locke (see def.) + -ian.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to John Locke, one of the greatest of English metaphysicians (1632–1704). His chief work, the starting-point of modern philosophy, is "An Essay concerning Human Understanding" (1689). He there takes the position—a novel one in his time, in the elaborate form in which he held it—that the theory of cognition must be the basis of philosophy; and he accordingly devotes this treatise to an inquiry "into the original, certainty, and extent of humane knowledge, together with the grounds and degrees of belief, opinion, and assent." In the first book he argues against the existence of innate ideas, and maintains that all knowledge is derived from experience, namely from sensation, the external, or reflection, the internal mode of experience. In the second book he undertakes a survey of all our elementary ideas, analyzing and criticizing each. He also treats of the origin of true and false ideas; and has an important chapter on the association of ideas, a phrase due to him. The third book analyzes the functions of language. The fourth treats of knowledge and probability. Every question of philosophy is touched upon in the course of the work. Leibnitz in 1704 wrote an extended, running commentary of a hostile character on Locke's work, entitled "Nouveaux essais sur l'entendement humain."

II. n. A follower of John Locke. Also Lockist.
Lockianism (lok'i-an-izm), n. [< Lockian + -ism.] The philosophical doctrines of John Locke.

The Treatise is a reductio ad absurdum of the principles of Lockianism.
Encyc. Brit., XXI. 888.

locking gowan. See gowan.

locking-pallet (lok'ing-pal'et), n. In chronometers and watches having the detached escapement, a tooth, usually a jewel, of the detent which engages successively the teeth of the scape-wheel, the detent being caused to disengage by the action of the balance, and to reengage the next tooth by the action of a spring.

locking-plate (lok'ing-plät), n. 1. In a vehicle, the wear-iron or guard placed on the perch to prevent injury from the forward wheels in turning short; a rub-plate. In a gun-carriage it is a thin flat piece of iron nailed on the sides to prevent the wood from wearing away, and serving as a point of attachment for the locking-chain.

2. A nut-lock.—3. In a clock, the count-wheel or notched disk which controls the number of strokes of the striking mechanism.

Lockist (lok'ist), n. [< Locke (see def. of Lockian) + -ist.] Same as Lockian.

lockjaw (lok'jä), n. In pathol., tetanus; trismus. See tetanus.

lock-keeper (lok'kë'për), n. 1. One who tends a lock on a canal or stream.—2. The box on a door-jamb into which the bolt of a lock protrudes when shot. Car-Builder's Dict.

lock-lanyard (lok'lan'yärd), n. See lanyard, 1 (b).

lockman (lok'man), n.; pl. lockmen (-men). 1st. A public executioner: so called because one of his dues was a lock or ladleful of meal from every caskeyl exposed for sale in the market. Imp. Dict.—2. An officer in the Isle of Man who executes the orders of the governor, much like an under-sheriff.

The Constable, Coroners, or Lockman (Guilley-gilash, an officer answering to a constable in England, whose business it is to serve summonses, etc.) of such other Parishes as for the first time to warne and require such Beggars back to their own Parishes.

Statute of 1664, quoted in Ribton-Turner's Vagrants and Vagrancy, p. 448.

lock-nail (lok'näl), n. Same as hammer-nail.

lock-nut (lok'nüt), n. A supplementary nut screwed down upon another to prevent it from shaking loose; a jam-nut, check-nut, or pinch-nut. E. H. Knight. Compare nut-lock.

lockout (lok'out), n. The act of excluding a person or persons from a place by locking it up; the condition of such exclusion. Specifically.—(a) The exclusion of a teacher by his pupils, in sport or rebellion, or of pupils by their teacher, by way of discipline. (b) A refusal on the part of an employer to furnish work to his employees in a body, intended as a means of coercion. See strike.

When capitalists refuse to grant so large a proportion of the product for labor as the laborers have heretofore received, and will not continue to supply capital on any terms which laborers will accept, the result is a lockout.
N. A. Rev., CXLIII. 818.

lock-paddle (lok'pad'l), n. A small sluice that serves to fill or empty a lock.

lock-piece (lok'pëss), n. 1. In mining, a piece of timber used in supporting the workings.—2. In gunn., a lug for the attachment of a gun-lock, formed on the rear part of the barrel, near the vent, in guns of the older varieties.

lock-plate (lok'plät), n. The metal plate on the side of a small-arm which supports the mechanism of the lock and protects it from dust and injury.

lock-pulley (lok'pū'lī), n. A pair of pulleys so made that they can rotate separately or together, as desired, by means of a pin in one of them which locks into a hole in the face of the other.

lock-rail (lok'rāl), n. 1. The middle transverse rail of a door, at about the level of the hand, on or in which the lock is generally set. — 2. In some door-frames, a crosspiece dividing the doorway from an open space above it in which a glazed sash is usually placed; a transom.

lockram (lok'rām), n. and a. [Also lockrum, formerly also lockeram, early mod. E. lokeram; < F. locreman, a kind of unbleached linen, so called from the place where it was made, Locean, in Brittany, < Bret. Lok-Roman, lit. cell of (St.) Ronan, < lok, cell, + Ronan, Ronan. For the sense 'nonsense,' cf. similar uses of buckram, bombast, fustian.] I. n. 1. A kind of linen, usually of a coarse and cheap sort.

Lockram for shetes and smokes and shirtee.

Str. T. Blyot, The Governour, Appendix A.

Edge me the sleeves with Coventry blue, and let the linings be of ten-penny lockram. Greene, James IV.

Why should I bend to her?—is it because her kirtle is of silk, and mine of blue lockram? Scott, Abbot, II.

2. Nonsense; gibberish. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.] II. a. 1. Of lockram.

Thou thoughtst, because I did wear Lockram shirts I do no wit. Glaphorne, Wit in a Constable, IV. 1.

2. Talking gibberish.

After he'd made a little Pause,

Again he stretch'd his Lockram Jaw.

Edward Ward, Hudibras Redivivus (1707), I. ix.

lock-saw (lok'sā), n. A compass-saw with a tapering flexible blade, used for cutting in doors the seats for locks.

lock-sill (lok'sil), n. In hydraul. engin., same as clap-sill.

locksmen (loks'men), n.; pl. locksmen (-men). A person who has the care of locks and keys; a turnkey.

Who would have said the young sprightly George Douglas would have been contented to play the locksmen here in Lochleven, with no gayer amusement than that of turning the key on two or three helpless women? Scott, Abbot, XIII.

locksmith (lok'smith), n. [ME. lokamyth; < lock + smith.] An artificer whose occupation is to make locks.

The king (Louis XVI.) worked at the locksmith's trade, designed maps, or passed whole days in hunting. Duruy, History of France, p. 524.

locksmithery (lok'smith-er-ī), n. The art or trade of lock-making.

lock-spit (lok'spit), n. A small cut with a spade, or a trench opened with a spade or a plow, to mark out a line of work, as in fencing, railway-engineering, or the like. [Eng.]

lock-spitting (lok'spit-ing), n. The act of making a lock-spit. [Eng.]

Sets out the circuit with a plough, which we call lock-spitting. Ogilby's Virgil (1663), p. 313. (Nares.)

lock-step (lok'step), n. A marching-step, executed by several men arranged in as close file as possible, in which each person follows exactly the step of the person before him. When prisoners march in this manner the hands of every man after the first are placed on the shoulders of the one in front of him.

lock-stitch (lok'stich), n. and a. I. n. A stitch, made by some sewing-machines, in which two threads are so locked at each stitch that the work will not unravel.

II. a. 1. Produced by means of this stitch, as a seam. — 2. Producing this stitch, as a sewing-machine.

lock-string (lok'string), n. A cord so attached to the hammer of the lock of a cannon that by pulling it the hammer is made to strike on a percussion primer and so fire the gun.

lock-tool (lok'tōl), n. A clamp used in putting together the parts of a gun-lock.

lock-tortoise (lok'tōr'tis), n. Same as box-tortoise.

lockup (lok'up), n. 1. The act of locking up, or the state of being locked up. See to lock up, under lock, v. t.

To be indifferent in the presence of a lock-up of eight per cent. of the money in circulation within a year is simply a confession of ignorance of the principles of monetary science. New Princeton Rev., V. 82.

2. A room or place in which persons under arrest are temporarily confined.

Who oft, when we our house lock up, carouse

With tipping tipstaves in a lock-up house.

H. and J. Smith, Rejected Addresses, xvii.

lock-weir (lok'wēr), n. See weir.

lockwork (lok'wērk), n. The machinery or parts of a lock. [Rare.]

M. Francotte, of Liège, has recently manufactured the Martini breech-action in such a manner that the lockwork may be easily removed for cleaning without the use of any tools. W. F. Greener, The Gun, p. 144.

locky (lok'ī), a. [lock + -y.] Having locks or tufts. Sherwood. [Rare.]

lockyer (lok'yēr), n. [ME. lokyer; < lock + -yer, -ier.] The name remains in the surname Lockyer.] A locksmith.

loco (lō'kō), n. [Short for loco-weed.] 1. Same as loco-weed. — 2. A disease of animals resulting from eating loco-weeds. The brain of the animal is affected; it commonly loses both flesh and strength, and death ensues, though not necessarily soon. See loco-weed.

loco (lō'kō), v. t. [loco, n.] To poison with the loco-weed or crazy-weed. [Western U. S.]

We referred to a curious affection which exists among horses in north-western Texas, known as "grass-staggers," which is caused by eating the "loco-weed," which gives rise to the saying that the horses are locoed. Science, XIII. 176.

lococession (lō'kō-sesh'on), n. [L. locus, a place, + cessio (-n-), a yielding: see locus and cession.] The act of giving place. [Rare.]

loco citato (lō'kō si-tā'tō), [L. locus, abl. of locus, place; citato, abl. of citatus, pp. of citare, cite: see locus and cite.] In the place (previously) cited. Generally abbreviated loc. cit. or l. c.

locodescriptive (lō'kō-dē-skrip'tiv), a. [L. locus, a place, + E. descriptive.] Describing a particular place or places. Maunder. [Rare.]

loco-disease (lō'kō-di-zēz'), n. A disease of horses resulting from eating the loco-weed or crazy-weed. Also called grass-staggers. See loco, v. t. [Western U. S.]

locofoco (lō'kō-fō'kō), n. [A manufactured term, ignorantly made in 1834 on the model of locomotive, a word just then becoming familiar, and supposed by the inventor of the word locofoco to mean 'self-moving,' whence locofoco, intended to mean 'self-lighting,' < L. locus, place, + focus, a hearth (ML. a fire): see locus and focus.] 1. A kind of self-lighting cigar: so called in New York in 1834. — 2. A friction-match. — 3. [cap.] In U. S. Hist., one of the equal-rights or radical section of the Democratic party about 1835; by extension, in disparagement, any member of that party. The name was given in allusion to an incident which occurred at a tumultuous meeting of the Democratic party in Tammany Hall, New York, in 1835, when the radical faction, after their opponents had turned off the gas, relighted the room with candles by the aid of locofoco matches. The locofoco faction soon disappeared, but the name was long used for the Democratic party in general by its opponents. Often in the abbreviated form Loco (pl. Locoes).

Here's full particulars of the patriotic locofoco movement yesterday, in which the whigs was so shamed up. Diakins, Martin Chuzzlewit, xvi.

On the next day the "Courier and Enquirer" dubbed the equal rights party the locofocos, and the name clung to them. W. G. Sumner, Andrew Jackson, p. 371.

locomotion (lō'kō-mō'shən), n. [= F. locomotion = Sp. locomoción = Pg. locomocão = It. locomozione, < L. locus, a place, + motō (-n-), a moving: see locus and motion.] Movement from place to place; progressive motion, as of a living being or a vehicle; the act of moving from point to point; also, the capability of moving in this manner.

A clock, a mill, a lathe moves; but, as no change of the place of the machine is produced, such motion is not locomotion. Brand and Cox.

Every act of locomotion implies the expenditure of certain internal mechanical forces, adapted in amounts and directions to balance or out-balance certain external ones. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 23.

The subjection of the whole civilized world to a single rule removed the chief obstacles to locomotion. Lecky, European Morals, I. 247.

locomotive (lō'kō-mō'tiv), a. and n. [= D. lokomotief = G. lokomotive = Dan. Sw. lokomotiv = F. locomotif = Sp. Pg. It. locomotivo, a., locomotiva, n., < L. locus, a place, + ML. motivus, moving: see motive.] I. a. 1. Moving from place to place; changing place, or able to effect change of (its own) place: as, a locomotive animal.

The Spanish troops, . . . surrounded by their women and constantly increasing swarms of children, constituted a locomotive city of considerable population. Molloy, Dutch Republic, II. 543.

In one of the locomotive forms, as a medusa, the course taken, otherwise at random, can be described only as one which carries it towards the light, where degrees of light and darkness are present. H. Spencer, Data of Ethics, § 20.

2. Having the power to produce motion, or to move (something else) from place to place: as, a locomotive organ of the body; a locomotive engine. — 3. Of or pertaining to locomotion; locomotory.

I shall consider their motion, or locomotive faculty, whereby they convey themselves from place to place. Darwin, Physico-Theology, IV. 2.

Locomotive engine. See II. — Locomotive person, in soot, the necroticized of a hydroid polyp. Gegenbaur. — Locomotive power, any kind of moving power, but especially steam, applied to the transport of loads on land. See railway. — Locomotive pupa. See pupa.

II. n. A steam-engine which travels on wheels turned by its own power; specifically, an engine designed and adapted to travel on a railway; a railroad-engine. Locomotives designed to travel upon the ground or ordinary highways and to draw loads are more commonly called traction-engines; and those used upon common roads and designed to carry passengers are called steam-wagons or steam-carriages. (See traction-engine and steam-carriage.) American locomotives are distinguished from those constructed in other countries by the exterior position of the cylinders, the absence of heavy framing, the use of bogies, a system of suspension by means of bars or levers, and certain minor features, such as the cow-catcher and single headlight. The essential parts of a locomotive are the boiler (usually long, horizontal, and of the "locomotive type" (see locomotive-boiler), with many tubes, the running-gear or wheel-system, and the engine proper, this being a double-cylinder, reversing, high-pressure motor, of which the exhaust-steam is thrown into the smoke-stack to urge the draft of the fire. The various wheel-systems employed have given rise to special types of locomotives. See passenger-locomotive, switching-locomotive, tank-locomotive, etc., below. See also cut under passenger-engine. — Black-trunk locomotive, a locomotive having a truck with a pair of wheels under its rear end, as well as a truck in front of the driving-wheels. Such locomotives are used for sharp curves and steep grades. — Belgian-tank locomotive, a locomotive having a tank on each side of the boiler. — Compound locomotive, a form of locomotive in which is embodied the principle of the compound steam-engine. — Compressed-air locomotive, a locomotive which is driven by compressed air carried in strong tanks filled by compressors at stations. In some compressed-air locomotives the air is heated on its way to the cylinders, either by the direct application of heat or by the injection of steam. Such locomotives have not come into practical use. — Consolidation locomotive. See consolidation.

— Double-ender locomotive, a locomotive which has the rear of the tender provided with a pilot, or cow-catcher, so that it may be run with either end in front. It has a two-wheel truck in front of the driving-wheels, the latter being usually two in number. — Double-piston locomotive, a locomotive each cylinder of which has two pistons with rods projecting from each end, and working on crank-pins set at 180 degrees from each other. Steam is admitted alternately to and exhausted from the space between the pistons and the spaces between the pistons and the cylinder-heads. The transmission of power from the piston-rods to the crank-pins is through cross-heads and connecting-rods, and, as the crank-pins are always moving and receiving their increments of power in opposite directions, a balancing of strains results. An attempt has been made to remove in this way some of the internal disturbing forces of the locomotive. The practical difficulties of the system have, however, been fatal to its extensive adoption. Also called double-cylinder locomotive. — Double-truck tank locomotive, a locomotive which has two trucks, and carries boiler and tender on a single frame. The cylinders are attached to the truck that carries the boiler, the wheels of this truck being the driving-wheels. The other truck supports the tender. A common form has six coupled driving-wheels on the forward truck, and a six-wheeled truck at the rear under the tank. Called in the United States Mason's locomotive. — Fireless locomotive, a locomotive driven by steam generated from highly heated water carried in strongly constructed tanks. From such water, on a reduction of pressure upon it, saturated steam will be generated under the law of related pressure and temperature of saturated steam. The supply of heated water is provided and pumped into the tanks at stations, and the tanks are protected from rapid loss of heat by heat-insulating material. — Four-cylinder locomotive, a locomotive with four cylinders and two systems of driving-wheels. The four-cylinder locomotive known as Fairlie's has two boilers with a double fire-box between them, the two parts of the fire-box being separated by a water-leg, and the whole being carried on two center-pin trucks. Meyer's four-cylinder locomotive has a single boiler and fire-box, and the cylinders are located near the middle of the boiler.

— Freight-locomotive, a locomotive for drawing freight-trains. Great tractive power at the sacrifice of speed is attained in freight-locomotives, through their adhesive weight, large cylinders, and driving-wheels small as compared with the driving-wheels of passenger-locomotives. — Geared locomotive, a locomotive in which the motion of the engine is conveyed by gearing to the traveling-wheels, as in many traction-engines and road-rollers. (A. H. Knight.) Geared locomotives having toothed driving-wheels, the teeth of which engage a rack, are used for steep grades in mountain railways. — Mine-locomotive, a locomotive for use in mines, and peculiarly constructed to adapt it to run successfully on slippery tracks. With great adhesive weight, it has also all its wheels coupled. — Mogul locomotive, a type of freight-engine with three coupled driving-wheels on each side, and a swinging two-wheeled truck in front. The front pair of drivers are made without a flange, to facilitate the passing of curves of short radius. — Passenger-locomotive, a locomotive for drawing passenger-cars. Speed is sought at the sacrifice of power in passenger-locomotives, the peculiar characteristics of which are large driving-wheels and engines having short strokes in comparison with the diameters of their pistons. — Saddle-tank locomotive, a locomotive which has its tank placed upon and extending downward over the sides of the boiler, after the manner of a saddle. — Street-locomotive, a locomotive adapted to use in public streets. It has a short wheel-base, powerful brakes, and mechanism for muffling the exhaust as to render the latter noiseless. It is frequently combined with a passenger-car in one and the same vehicle.—Switching-locomotive, a freight-locomotive having the peculiarities of its class carried to an extreme point, to adapt it to the heavy work of starting and slowly moving heavy trains in switching at stations. Called in England shunting engine.—Tank-locomotive, a locomotive permanently connected with its tender.—Ten-wheeled locomotive, a locomotive with six coupled driving-wheels and a four-wheeled truck in front of the driving-wheels.

locomotive-balance (lō-kō-mō'tiv-bal'ans), n. The spring used in place of a weight to control the safety-valve of a locomotive.

locomotive-boiler (lō-kō-mō'tiv-boi'ler), n. A form of boiler in which the fire-box is connected by a number of flues with the smoke-box under the chimney: so called because commonly used in locomotive engines.

locomotive-car (lō-kō-mō'tiv-kär), n. A locomotive and a railway-carriage combined in one.

locomotiveness (lō-kō-mō'tiv-ness), n. Same as locomotivity.

locomotive-pump (lō-kō-mō'tiv-pump), n. The feed-pump which supplies water to the boiler of a locomotive.

locomotivity (lō-kō-mō'tiv-ti), n. [= F. locomotivité; as locomotive + -ity.] The power of locomotion; ability to change place. [Rare.]

The most superb edifice that ever was conceived or constructed would not equal the smallest insect, blest with sight, feeling, and locomotivity. Bryan. (Latham.)

locomotor (lō-kō-mō'tör), n. and a. [NL. locomotor, < L. locus, place, + motor, a mover; see locus and motor. Cf. locomotion, locomotive.] L. n. One who or that which moves from place to place; anything that has or gives the power of locomotion. [Rare.]

If the hue-and-dry were once up, they [kangaroos] would show as fair a pair of hind shifters as the expertest locomotors in the colony. Lamb, Ellis, p. 182.

The theory of compensation between electric locomotors working upon the same circuit was advanced several years ago by Werner Siemens. Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXIV. 270.

II. a. In physiol., of or pertaining to locomotion; having the function of locomotion: as, a locomotor organ; a locomotor function.—Locomotor ataxia. See ataxia.

locomotorial (lō-kō-mō'tō-ri-al), a. [< locomotory, locomotorium, + -al.] Of or pertaining to the locomotorium, or to locomotion; locomotor. [Rare.]

locomotorium (lō-kō-mō'tō-ri-um), n.; pl. locomotoria (-ä). [NL., neut. of locomotorius, locomotor; see locomotor.] In biol., the motive apparatus or motor mechanism of the body, consisting of the muscles as the active agents of locomotion, and of the bones as the passive fulcrums and levers by which muscular power is applied.

locomotory (lō-kō-mō'tō-ri), a. [< NL. locomotorius, < locomotor, locomotor; see locomotor.] Pertaining to or concerned in locomotion; possessing the power of moving or of causing motion; locomotive.

loco-plant (lō-kō-plant), n. Same as loco-weed.
loco-restive (lō-kō-res'tiv), a. [< L. locus, a place, + E. restive, q. v.] Staying in one place: a correlative of locomotive. [Humorous and rare.]

Your loco-restive and all your idle propensities, of course, have given way to the duties of providing for a family. Lamb, Correspondence (ed. 1870), p. 10. (Encyc. Dict.)

loco-weed (lō-kō-wēd), n. [< Sp. loco, mad, crazy (of uncertain origin), + E. weed.] Any one of several leguminous plants producing the loco-disease in animals. Among them are Astragalus mollissimus and A. Hornii, with several other species of the genus, and Oxytropis Lambertii. The poisonous element has not been satisfactorily determined. Also called crazy-weed.

Locrian (lō'kri-an), a. and n. [< L. Locri, < Gr. Λοκρί, a people in Greece, also a city, L. Looris, < Gr. Λοκρίς (> L. Looris), Looris, their country.] L. a. Pertaining to Locris in Greece, or to the city of Locri in Magna Græcia.—Locrian mode. See mode.

II. n. An inhabitant of Locris in Greece; specifically, one of those who occupied the three detached divisions of ancient Locris on the Malian and Eubæan gulfs and on the gulf of Corinth, called respectively the Riponemidian and Opuntian Locrians and the Ozolian Locrians.

loclament (lōk'ā-lā-ment), n. [< L. locula-mentum, a case, box, cell, < loculus, a cell: see loculus.] In bot., same as loculus.

loclamentum (lōk'ā-lā-men'tum), n.; pl. loclamenta (-tā). [L.: see loclament.] In bot., same as loculus.

locular (lōk'ā-lār), a. [< LL. locularis, kept in boxes, < L. locus, a box, cell: see loculus.]

In bot., soöl., and anat., having one or more loculi or cells: used chiefly in compounds, as unilocular, bilocular, etc.

loculate (lōk'ā-lāt), a. [< loculus + -ate.] Having loculi or cells.

loculated (lōk'ā-lāt-ed), a. [< loculate + -ed.] Same as loculate.

locule (lōk'āl), n. [< L. loculus, a cell: see loculus.] A loculus or cell.

loculi, n. Plural of loculus.

loculicidal (lōk'ā-lī-āl'dal), a. [< L. loculus, a cell (see loculus), + caedere, cut.] In bot., dehiscing through the back of the loculus or cell of a seed-vessel—that is, by the dorsal suture of the carpel. Compare septicidal.

loculicidally (lōk'ā-lī-āl'dal-i), adv. In a loculicidal manner. Encyc. Brit., IV. 149.

loculose, loculosus (lōk'ā-lōs-lus), a. [< L. loculosus, full of little cells, < loculus, a cell: see loculus.] In bot., soöl., and anat., divided by internal partitions into loculi or cells.

loculus (lōk'ā-lus), n.; pl. loculi (-li). [L., a little place, a compartment, box, cell, dim. of locus, a place: see locus.] 1. A little place or space; a cell; a chamberlet; generally, in bot., anat., and soöl., one of a number of small compartments or cells, separated from one another by septa, as in the tests of foraminifera; specifically, in corals, one of the spaces between the septa of the calcified cup or theca. Specifically, in bot.: (a) An anther-cell; the sac or theca containing the pollen. (b) The cell, or one of the cells, in a fruit, in which the seed is lodged. Compare locustula.

2. In ancient catacombs and tombs of some types, a small separate chamber or recess, for the reception of a body or of an urn, etc. When the body had been placed in the loculus the opening was closed with a slab of marble, or was otherwise built up. See cuts under chamber and columbarium.—Archimedean loculus, a puzzle consisting of an ivory square cut into fourteen pieces, to be put together after having been taken apart.

locum-tenency (lō'kum-tē-nēn-si), n. The office or employment of a locum-tenens; the holding of a place by temporary substitution. [Rare.]

Wanted, by an M. B. and C. M., Edinburgh, an indoor assistantcy or Locum Tenency. Lawet, No. 3410, p. 84 of Adv'ts.

locum-tenens (lō'kum-tē-nēnz), n. [ML., < L. locum, acc. of locus, place, + tenens, prp. of tenere, hold: see locus and tenant. Hence, through F., lieutenant.] One who holds the place of another; a deputy or temporary substitute.

locupletely (lōk'ā-plēt-i), adv. [< "locupletus" (= OF. locuplet, < L. locuples (-plet-), rich in lands, rich, opulent, < locus, a place, + "plere", fill, plenus, full: see complete, etc.) + -ly.] Richly.

Bedfoumentized most locupletely. Nashe, Lenten Stuff.

locus (lō'kus), n.; pl. loci (-ā). [< L. locus, OL. stlocus, a place. From L. locus are ult. E. locative, locality, etc., lieu, lieutenant, etc., locate, allocate, allow, collocate, couch, dislocate, etc.] 1. A place; spot; locality.—2. In anat., some place, specifically named by a qualifying term.—3. In math., a curve considered as generated by a moving point, or a surface considered as generated by a moving line; the partly indeterminate position of a point subject to an equation or to two equations in analytical geometry; a curve considered as generated by its moving tangent or by a moving curve of which it is the envelop; any system of points, lines, or planes defined by general conditions, and, in general, partly indeterminate.—4. In optics, the figure formed by the foci of a set of pencils of converging or diverging rays; an optical image.—5. A place or passage in a writing; in the plural, a collection of passages, especially from the Scriptures or other ancient writings, methodically selected and arranged as bearing upon some special topic or topics of study; a catena; a book or work consisting of such a selection.—Congregation of loci. See congregation.—Cuspidal locus. See cuspidal.—Genius loci. See genius.—Geometric locus, a locus in sense 3, above.—Linear locus. See linear.—Locus caeruleus, a darkish tract extending upward from the fovea anterior on the floor of the fourth ventricle of the brain. It is caused by the substantia ferruginea.—Locus classicus (pl. loci classicus), a standard passage, especially in an ancient author; a passage which exemplifies the meaning of a word or affords information with special clearness or fullness, or which is the principal or only original authority on a subject, and is accordingly regularly cited in books on that subject.—Locus delicti, in law, the place where an offense was committed.—Locus in quo, the place in which: a short phrase used in law, in actions of trespass, to designate the area of land upon which the trespass is alleged to have been committed: as, the locus in quo was part of an abandoned highway.—Locus niger, the substantia nigra (which see, under substantia).—Locus perforatus anticus, the anterior perforated space at the base of the brain, near the entrance of the Sylvian fissure.—Locus perforatus posterior, the posterior perforated space, or pons Varolii.—Locus penitentiae, a point or space of time for repentance: in law, a point in a person's course at which it is not yet too late to change his legal position; the possibility of withdrawing from a contemplated obligation or wrong before being committed to it.—Locus sigilli, the place of the seal: a phrase (usually abbreviated to L. S.) used in making a copy of a sealed instrument, to indicate where a seal was affixed to the original, and in some of the United States allowed to be used as and instead of a common law seal.—Locus standi (literally, place of standing), recognized place or position; specifically, in law, right of place in court; the right of a party to appear and be heard on a question before a tribunal.—Nodal locus, the locus of the nodes of a system of curves.

locust (lō'kust), n. [< ME. locuste = F. locuste = Pg. It. locusta = AS. lopust, < L. locusta, a locust, a shell-fish. Cf. lobster, ult. from the same source.] 1. One of the orthopterous saltatorial insects of the family Acridiidae, popularly known as grasshoppers, and more correctly called short-horned grasshoppers. Thus, Rocky Mountain locust is a common, popular, and book name of Caloptenus or Melanoplus spretus, also popularly known by its other name of the western or hateful grasshopper. Locusts, in this sense, are allied to the long-horned grasshoppers and the crickets, but differ from them in having shorter antennae and bodies and limbs more robust. Their hind legs are large and strong, which gives them great power in leaping. Their mandibles and maxillae are strong, sharp, and jagged, and their food consists of the leaves and green stalks of plants. They have colored elytra and large wings, disposed when at rest in straight folds. They fly well, but are often conveyed by winds to distances which they could not have attained by their own power. Their ravages are well known. Locusts are eaten in many countries, roasted or fried. They are often preserved in lime or dried in the sun. The most celebrated species is the migratory locust of the East, Pachytylus migratorius. It is about 2½ inches long, greenish, with brown wing-covers marked with black. Migratory locusts are most commonly found in Asia and Africa, where they frequently swarm in countless numbers, darkening the air in their excursions, and devouring every blade of the vegetation of the land they alight on.

Locust (Pachytylus migratorius), about half natural size.

2. An orthopterous saltatorial insect of the genus Locusta, family Locustidae.—3. A homopterous insect of the genus Cicada, family Cicadidae, such as the harvest-fly, Cicada thibica, and the seventeen-year locust, or periodical cicada, Cicada septendecim. See cut under Cicadidae. [U.S.]—4. A cockchafer; a beetle. [North. Eng.]—Bald locust, a locust of an undetermined species.

And the bald locust after his kind. Lev. xi. 22.
Glamy locust, Brachymyia magna, a large flightless grasshopper, 2½ inches long, found in Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, and other western parts of the United States. See Brachymyia.—Green-striped locust, Tragacopta (or Chimacopta) viridis, a grasshopper of large size and showy coloration, occurring all through the United States and Canada.—Lobe-crested locust, an acridid of the genus Tropidacris, which comprises some of the largest insects known, certain of the Central and South American forms having a wing-expanse of 8 or 9 inches. The only United States representative is T. dux, which occurs in Texas.—Red-thighed locust, Caloptenus junceus, one of the commonest of all grasshoppers in the United States, a near relative of the Rocky Mountain locust, but non-migratory, and slightly smaller and shorter-winged.—Rocky Mountain locust, Caloptenus (or Melanoplus) spretus, otherwise called hateful grasshopper, inhabiting permanently portions of Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho, and the adjoining British possessions, and migrating in immense swarms through several of the Western States and territories, doing incalculable damage. It is a little over an inch long, and of a grayish-green color, with wings which when closed reach some distance beyond the end of the abdomen. See cuts under Caloptenus.—Seventeen-year locust, the periodical cicada.

locust (lō'kust), v. i. [< locust, n.] To devour and lay waste like locusts; ravage. [Rare.]

This Philip and the black-faced swarms of Spain . . . Come locusting upon us, eat us up. Tempsong, Queen Mary, II. 1.

locust (lō'kust), n. 1. A well-known tree of the United States. Robinia Pseudacacia, with thorny branches, delicate pinnate leaves, and dense clusters of white heavily scented flowers. The wood is heavy, hard, strong, and very durable, and useful for treenails, posts, turnery, etc. The tree is extensively planted for ornament, and also as a timber-tree. It suffers from attacks of the locust-borer. Also called black or yellow locust, and false or bastard acacia. The related R. neomexicana is also called locust. The locust-tree of Guiana and the West Indies is Hymenoc. Courbaril. In the West Indies, Bryonia coriacea and B. cinerea of the Malignaceae are also called locust. 2. The carob-tree, Ceratonia Siliqua. See Ceratonia and carob.—3. The wood of the locust-tree.—4. A club or billy used by policemen: so called because commonly made of locust-wood. [Local, U. S.]—Bastard locust of the West Indies, Chilodactylus.—Bristly locust, or moss-locust, Robinia hispida, a shrub with pink flowers cultivated from the Alleghanies. —Glammy locust, Robinia viscosa, a small tree with clammy branchlets and leaf-stalks, and larger flowers than the bristly locust, from the same region. (See also honey-locust and water-locust.)

Locusta (lō-kus'tā), n. [L.: see locust¹.] 1. A genus of orthopterous insects founded by Linnaeus (1748), made type of the Locustaria of Latreille (1807). (a) The Locusta of Latreille is characterized by a slender form with long tegmina not ocellated in the male, the abdomen of the male ending in two long incurved processes, ample wings, and acuminate front. Locusta in this sense is strictly an Old World genus. (b) The Locusta of Leach (1817) corresponds to Latreille's Chilodactylus, and belongs to the family Aceritidae—a circumstance which has led to great confusion, for the law of priority in nomenclature prevents the adoption of Leach's use of the generic name Locusta, with the result that the true locusts are not Locustidae, but Aceritidae.

2. [L. c.; pl. locustae (-tā).] In bot., the spikelet of grasses.

Locustae (lō-kus'tā), n. pl. [NL., pl. of L. locusta, a marine shell-fish, a lobster: see locust¹.] A division of macrurous decapod crustaceans, such as the Palinuridae, or spiny lobsters.

Locustariae (lō-kus'tā-ri-ā), n. pl. In Latreille's classification, a group of orthopterous insects; the locustarians, corresponding to the modern family Locustidae (b).

locustarian (lō-kus'tā-ri-ān), n. [Locusta + -arian.] A locust-like insect; one of the Locustariae, as sundry green or long-horned grasshoppers, katydids, etc.

locust-bean (lō-kus'tā-bēn), n. The fruit of the carob-tree. See Ceratonia.

locust-berry (lō-kus'tā-ber-ī), n. The fruit of the West Indian locust, Byrsonima coriacea; also, the tree itself.

locust-bird (lō-kus'tā-bērd), n. The rose-colored starling, Pastor roseus: so called from its devouring locusts. H. B. Tristram.

locust-borer (lō-kus'tā-bōr-ēr), n. A longicorn beetle, Cyllene robinia or C. picta, which bores the locust-tree. See cut under Cyllene.

locust-eater (lō-kus'tā-ē-ter), n. A book-name of birds of Swainson's genus Gryllivora, as G. gryllivora, the long-tailed locust-eater; a dayal. See Copsichus, Lalage.

Locustella (lō-kus'tel-ā), n. [NL. (Kaup, 1829), < F. locustelle: see locustella¹.] A genus of small sylvine birds, the locustelles.

locustelle (lō-kus'tel-ā), n. [F. locustelle, so called with ref. to its note, which resembles that of the grasshopper, dim. of locuste, < L. locusta, grasshopper, locust: see locust¹.] A grasshopper-warbler; one of several small sylvine birds of Europe which make a chirring, sibilant, or stridulous noise like that made by a grasshopper. The term is indefinite, but specially applies to the little species of a modern genus Locustella, including Poimodorus, Sibilatrix, Luscinola, etc. An early if not the original locustelle was the bird figured by Grasshopper-warbler (Locustella certhiola).

Daubenton in "Fringes enluminées" (1778), called la locustelle by Montbeillard (1778), the Locustella naevia of Boddaert (1783), or Sylvia locustella of Latham (1789), now Locustella naevia or L. locustella. It inhabits temperate Europe and northern Africa. Another locustelle is L. luscinioides, or Sav's warbler. Both of these are British. L. certhiola, here figured, is Asiatic.

Locustidae (lō-kus'ti-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Locusta + -idae.] A family of Orthoptera. (a) First used by Stephens in 1832, and applied to the family now called Aceritidae (which see). (b) Now identified with the Locustaria of Latreille. In this sense it contains many winged and wingless genera, the former living on trees, bushes, and grass, the latter among stones and in dark places. The winged forms are known as green grasshoppers and katydids, and the wingless ones as stone-orchids. The antennae are very long and thread-like; the tarsi are usually four-jointed. The female has a strong, exerted ovipositor, usually more or less curved and saber-shaped. The elytra of the male have a stridulating apparatus at the base. The species are found all over the world, attaining great size in the tropics. The European species usually oviposit in the ground, but in America many lay their eggs upon leaves and twigs, and sometimes penetrate the crevices of the soft parts and stems of plants for this purpose.

locust-shrimp (lō-kus't-shrimp), n. Same as mantis-shrimp. See Squilla, Stomatopoda.

locust-tree (lō-kus't-trē), n. [*locust*¹ + tree.] See locust².

locution (lō-kū'shən), n. [= F. locution = Pr. locutio = Sp. locucion = Pg. locução = It. locuzione, < L. locutio(n), a speaking, < locutus, pp. of loqui, speak. Cf. allocation, elocution.] 1. The act of speaking.

Dentition and locution are for the most part contemporaries. Smith, Portraiture of Old Age.

2. Discourse; form or mode of speaking; phraseology; a phrase.

I hate these figures in locution.

These about phrases for'd by ceremony.

Mardon, Sophonisba, l. 2.

locutory (lōk'yū-tō-ri), n.; pl. locutories (-riz). [= Sp. Pg. It. locutorio, < ML. locutorium, a room for conversation in a monastery, < L. locutor, a speaker, < L. loqui, pp. locutus, speak: see locution.] A room for conversation; especially, a place in a monastery where the monks were allowed to converse with those who were not connected with the monastery, when silence was enjoined elsewhere.

So came she to the grate that they call

(I trowe) locutory. Sir T. More, Works, p. 1170.

lodamit, n. See lodium.

lodanum, n. See ladanum, laudanum.

lode¹ (lōd), n. [Also less commonly load; < ME. lode, lōd, a way, path, course, also a carrying, burden (whence *E. load*²), < AS. lād, a way, course, journey, carrying, carriage, sustenance (= OHG. leita, a procession, = Icel. leið = Sw. led, a way, road, course), < Lithan (pret. lith) = OS. lithan = OHG. lidan = Icel. líða = Goth. leiðan], go, travel: see *load*¹. Lode, in a deflected sense and var. spelling, appears as load, a burden (see *load*²); also in comp. lifelode, now *livelihood*², and in dial. form *lade*².] 1. A way; path.—2. A reach of water; an open ditch for carrying off water from a fen.

It was by a law of sewers decreed that a new drain or lode should be made and maintained from the end of Chaucelors lode unto Tyney Smethe.

Dugdale's Imbanking, p. 275. (Halliwel.)

Down that dark long lode . . . he and his brother skated home in triumph. Kingsley.

3. A metalliferous deposit having more or less of a vein-like character—that is, having a certain degree of regularity, and being confined within walls. Lode as used by miners is nearly synonymous with the term vein as employed by geologists, etc. The word would not be used for a flat or stratified mass. See vein and ore-deposit.—Champion lode, the most productive lode in a mining district. The term is Cornish in origin, and is little used in the United States. See mother-lode. Also called master-lode.—Boovan lode, a lode having no gossan on its back or outcrop. See vein. *lode*², n. A Middle English form of *load*². loded, *loaded*¹ (lō'ded), a. [lode(stone) + -ed².] Magnetized by being brought into contact with lodestone.

Great Kings to Wars are pointed forth,
Like loaded Needles to the North.

Prior, Alma, li.

lodeman, loadman¹ (lōd'man), n. [ME. lodeman, < AS. lāðman, a leader, a guide, < lād, a way, course, + man, man: see *load*¹ and man.] Same as lodesman.

lodemanage, loadmanage (lōd'man-āj), n. [ME. lodemenage, < OF. lodmanage, usually lamanage, lamanage, pilotage, < laman, a pilot, from a LG. form cognate with ME. lodeman: see lodeman and -age.] Pilotage. Courts of lodemanage are held at Dover in England for the appointment of the Cinque Port pilots.

His herbergh and his mone, his lodemenage.
Chaucer, Gen. Prolog. to C. T. l. 403.

lode-ship (lōd'ship), n. A small fishing-vessel. Coles, 1717.

lodemanant, loadsmant (lōd'z'man), n. [ME. lodesman, lodesmon, lodyeman; < lode's, poss. of *lode*¹, + man.] A pilot.

Akyng hem anon

If they were broken or nught woe-begon.

Or hadde nede of lodemen (var. lodman) or vitayle.

Chaucer, Good Women, l. 1488.

A lodeman [in Cowell] . . . being a pilot for harbour and river duty. Boyer, Brit., XII. 98.

lodestar, loadstar (lōd'stār), n. [ME. lodesterre (also lodesterne, ladesterne = Icel. leiðarsjárna); < *lode*¹ + star. Cf. MD. leidesterre = MHG. leitsterne, G. leitstern = Dan. ledestjerne = Sw. ledstjärna, lodestar; as *load*¹ + star.] A star that leads or serves to guide; especially, the pole-star: often used figuratively.

Schilpe-mene . . .

Lukkes to the lodesterne where the lyghte shalles.

Morie Arthure (R. E. T. S.), l. 751.

Loadstone to hearts, and loadstar to all eyes.

Sir J. Davies, Immortal of Soul, Ded.

What lode-star's friendly ray

When thine is hid, shall guide the vessel's way?

Bryant, The Ascension.

lodestone, loadstone (lōd'stōn), n. [*lode*¹ + stone.] 1. A variety of magnetite, or the magnetic oxid of iron, which possesses polarity and has the power of attracting fragments of iron. See magnet.

Renowned Load-stone, which on Iron acts,

And by the touch the same aloof attracts.

Sylvester, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, l. 3.

They had also another trick, by a Load-stone placed in the Roofe, to draw vp the yron Image of the Sunne, as it did then bid Scraps farewell.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 584.

2. A leading-stone for drains. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

lodestuff (lōd'stuf), n. In mining, vein-stuff; all the material which composes the mass of a lode or vein, including both gangue (or vein-stone) and the ore which is associated with it. See vein.

lodge (lōj), n. [ME. logge, loge, luge, < OF. loge, F. loge, a lodge, hut, cottage, = It. loggia, a gallery, < ML. lobia, laubia, a gallery, covered way: see lobby, from the same ML. source.] 1. A hut; a cottage; a house affording merely the simplest accommodations; a temporary habitation; with reference to the North American Indians, a hut constructed of poles and branches, skins, or rough boards.

Thar loges & thare tents vp thei ran bigge.

Rob. of Brunne, p. 67.

And he saw thame ga naked, and duells in luges and in caves, and thaire wyfes and thaire childe away fra thame.

MS. Lincoln A. l. 17, l. 30. (Halliwel).

The daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers.

Isa. l. 3.

O for a lodge in some vast wilderness.

Cowper, Task, li. 1.

There have been strange moorhens about my camp. They have been tracked into my lodge.

J. F. Cooper, Last of Mohicans, xxviii.

2. A small house in a park, forest, or demesne; a gate-house; also, a small house or cottage connected with a larger house: as, a porter's lodge.

Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge. Shak., M. W. of W., l. i. 115.

3. Any covered place of shelter, as a den or cave in which wild beasts lurk; in hunting, the shelter of the buck or doe.—4. The place in which a body of workmen were employed; a working-place or workshop, especially one of masons or builders.

For the lord that he ys bonde to,
May fache the prynces wher-ever he go.

So yf yn the logge he were ytake,

Muche deesse hyt myght ther make.

Quoted in English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), Int., p. cxxxix, note.

The lodge [the German word is "Hütte." It meant as well the workshop as the place of meeting, which in those days were identical] itself of the architect was very similar to our factories; it consisted of one or more workshops in which the workmen worked together.

English Gilds (E. E. T. S.), Int., p. cxliv.

5. A place of meeting for members of a secret society, as that of the Freemasons or the Odd Fellows; hence, a body of members of such a society meeting in one place, in either an individual or a representative capacity, in the latter case constituting a district or a grand lodge; also, among the Freemasons, a meeting, session, or convention of such a body.—6. A collection of similar objects situated close to one another.

The Maldives, a famous lodge of islands.

Defoe.

7. In mining, the bottom of a shaft or of any other cavity where the water of the mine has an opportunity to collect, so that it may be pumped out. The word sump is much more commonly used in the United States.—Grand lodge, the principal lodge or governing body of Freemasons. It is presided over by the grand master, and has the power of granting charters of affiliation, enforcing uniformity of ceremonial, and settling all disputes that may arise between lodges under its charge. The officers of the grand lodge are chiefly delegates from the respective lodges. A similar institution exists among the Good Templars.

lodging (lōj), v.; pret. and pp. lodged, ppr. lodging. [ME. loggen, logen, lugen, < OF. loger, F. loger, lodge, house, < loge, a lodge, hut, cottage: see lodge, n.] I. trans. 1. To furnish with a lodge or habitation, especially a temporary one; provide with a transient or temporary place of abode; harbor.

Ye may say to alle men that yow asko who was lodged with yow, that it was the kynge Looth and his four comen.

Morte Arthure (R. E. T. S.), li. 688.

Alexander and his cots had lugged thame apone the water of Strume. M.S. Lincoln A. 1. 17, f. 6. (Halliwell.)
My lord was lodged in the Duke's Castle.
Hovell, Letters, I. vi. 2.

2. To set, lay, place, or deposit, as in a place of rest, or for preservation or future action: as, to lodge money in a bank; to lodge a complaint in court.

And that one talent which is death to hide Lodged with me useless.
Milton, Sonnet on his Blindness.

I lay all night in the cave where I had lodged my provisions.
Swift, Gulliver's Travels, III. 1.

3. To find an abode for; assign a residence to; put in possession.

Selden lodges the Civil Power of England in the King and the Parliament.
Selden, Table-Talk, Int. p. 11.

4. To plant or implant; infix; fix or settle; place: as, to lodge an arrow in one's breast.

So can I give no reason, nor I will not,
More than a lodged hate, and a certain loathing.
Shak., M. of V., IV. 1. 60.

5. To bring to a lodgment; beat down; lay flat: said especially of vegetation.

Though bladed corn be lodged, and trees blown down;
Though castles topple on their warders' heads.
Shak., Macbeth, IV. 1. 55.

6. To entrap, as in a place of lodgment.

Suet. Are those come in yet that pursue bold Caratach?
Pet. Not yet, sir, for I think they mean to lodge him;
Take him I know they dare not, 'twill be dangerous.
Pletcher, Bonduca, IV. 1.

The deer is lodged, I've track'd her to covert;
Rush in at once.
Addison, Cato, IV. 2.

II. intrans. 1. To have a lodge or an abode, especially a temporary one; be furnished with shelter and accommodation.

Than thei leged and pight teyntes and pavilions, and hem rested, and lette the hosts be wached.
Mervin (R. E. T. S.), II. 100.

He lodged with one Simon a tanner.
Acts x. 4.

2. To have an abiding-place; dwell; have a fixed position.

And dwells such rage in softest bosoms then?
And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.

3. To be deposited or fixed; settle: as, a seed lodged in a crevice of a rock.

Nor let thy soul contrive Against thy mother's sight: leave her to heaven,
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge.
Shak., Hamlet, I. 5. 87.

4. To be beaten down or laid flat, as grain.

Its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be milled.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

lodgesable (loj'g-bl), a. [Sometimes also lodg-able; < lodge + -able.] Capable of affording a temporary abode. [Rare.]

At the furthest end of the Towne East-ward the Ambassador's House was appointed, but not yet (by default of some of the King's Officers) Lodgables.
Sir J. Finett, Finett's Philoxenis (1656), p. 164.

lodged (lojd), p. a. In herd., represented as lying at rest upon the ground, as a buck, hart, hind, etc. Also harbored and couchant.

lodge-gate (loj'gät), n. A gate where there is a lodge or house for the porter or gate-keeper.

lodgement, n. See lodgment.

lodger (loj'er), n. One who lodges; especially, one who lives in a hired room or rooms in the house of another.

Call'st thou me host?
Now, by this hand, I swear, I scorn the term;
Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.
Shak., Hen. V., II. 1. 33.

Lodger franchise, in Eng. law, a right to vote conferred by statute in 1867 upon persons occupying lodgings in boroughs of an annual rental value of at least £10; extended to counties and assimilated to the household franchise in 1884.

lodging (loj'ing), n. [< ME. loggyng, loggyng, loggyng; verbal n. of lodge, v.] 1. A place of temporary residence; especially, a room or rooms hired for residence in the house of another: often used in this sense in the plural with a singular meaning. In Great Britain persons "in lodgings" are charged for rooms and attendance, and sometimes purchase their own provisions, but far more frequently are served by the landlady in their own rooms with provisions purchased and cooked on their order.

And fourth withall to their loggyng they went,
The best that they cowde fynde to their entent.
Gomerides (E. E. T. S.), I. 637.

I pray, as we walk, tell me freely, how do you like your lodging, and my host and the company?
J. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 61.

Life in lodgings, at the best of times, is not a peculiarly exhilarating state of existence.
Mrs. J. H. Riddell, City and Suburb, xxi.

2. Place of abode; harbor; cover.

Byre become! fraught with vertues richest treasure,
The nest of love, the lodging of delight.
Spenser, Sonnets, lxxvi.

3. Place of rest. [Rare.]

Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging. Ray, Works of Creation.

lodging-car (loj'ing-kär), n. On a railroad, a car fitted with bunks, used as a sleeping- or dwelling-place for employees. [U. S.]

lodging-house (loj'ing-hous), n. A house in which lodgings are let; generally, a place other than an inn or hotel where travelers lodge.

lodging-knee (loj'ing-nä), n. See knee, 3 (a).

lodgment, lodgement (loj'ment), n. [< lodge + -ment.] 1. The act of lodging, or the state of being lodged: as, the lodgment of money in a bank; the lodgment of grass or grain by a storm.

There is a great lodgment of civilized men on this continent.
Everett, Orations, I. 218.

It would have been a worthy exploit indeed, if the arms of Venice, by that time a great Italian power, had driven out the Turk from his first lodgment on Italian soil.
E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 219.

2. A deposit, as of an accumulated mass; a settling: as, the lodgment of mud in a tank.—

3. A place where persons or things are lodged; a lodging.

Certain publick Lodgments founded in Charity for the use of Travellers. Maunderell, Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 2.

4. Milit., a position or foothold gained from and held against an enemy, as by an invading or a besieging army: as, to effect a lodgment on the enemy's coast, or within the enemy's lines.

lodh-bark (löd'bärk), n. The bark of an East Indian shrub or tree, Symplocos racemosa, used in dyeing.

lodicle (lod'ikl), n. Same as lodicule.

lodicule (löd'ik'ü-l), n. Same as lodicle.

lodicule (lod'ik'ül), n. [< L. lodicula, dim. of lodis (lodice), a coverlet.] In bot., one of the scales which occur in the flowers of some grasses, inserted on the receptacle just outside the stamens. Also called squamula and paleola.

Lodicea (lod'is'ä-jä), n. [NL. J. La Billa-diäre, 1807], corruptly for Laodicea, named after Laodice, a daughter of Priam, king of Troy.]

A genus of palms of the tribe Borasseae. It is distinguished by numerous stamens and many flowers in each cavity of the spathe or fleshy spike. There is but one species, L. Sechellarum, a native of the Seychelles Islands, a magnificent palm, growing to a height of nearly 100 feet, and bearing at the summit a crown of fan-shaped leaves some of which are 20 feet long and 12 feet broad. At the age of 30 years the palm bears its first fruit, which reaches maturity 10 years later. See double coconut, under coconut.

lodomyt, n. [A corruption of lodanum, laudanum.] Laudanum.

A porr upon their lodomy
On me had sic a sway;
Four o' their men, the bravest four,
They bore my blade away.
Lany Johnny Mör (Child's Ballads, IV. 277).

loellingite (löl'ing-it), n. [< Lölling (in Carinthia) + -ite.] A native arsenide of iron, FeAs₂; a mineral closely related to arsenopyrite or mispickel.

loemography (lë-mog'ra-f), n. See loimography.

loess (lës or lö'es), n. [< G. löss, loess.] In geol., originally, a certain loamy deposit in the valley of the Rhine; now, by extension, any detrital accumulation more or less resembling the original loess occurring in other parts of the world.

The loess is a very fine loam, very homogeneous in character, showing hardly any indication of stratification, and containing in numerous localities large quantities of land and fresh-water shells, as well as bones of land-animals. In northern China it covers a vast area and is developed to a great thickness, and, being deeply eroded by the rivers, has given rise to a very remarkable topography. In the regions where the loess occurs it is the most recent of the formations. The theories of its origin are numerous, and the subject is one of great complexity, so that "some skilful geologists, peculiarly well acquainted with the physical geography of Europe, have styled the loess the most difficult geological problem."

(Lyell). Much that is called loess by some geologists is certainly river-mud deposited in the ordinary manner. Lyell connects the loess of the Rhine valley with glacial action; and Richthofen considers it as beyond dispute that the loess of China is a subaerial deposit, borne by the wind to its present resting-place.

lofter, v. i. An obsolete form of laugh.

loft (lôft), n. [< ME. loft, the air (esp. in the phr. a loft, on loft), an upper room, < leel, loft, now spelled loft, the air, sky, an upper room, = Sw. Dan. loft, ceiling, loft, garret, = AS. lyft, the air: see lyft. Cf. aloft.] 1. The air; the sky: same as lyft. See on loft (below), aloft.

Lguond in the lofts with lordships in heuyn.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 3719.

2. A room or space between a ceiling or flooring and the roof immediately above it; the space below and between the rafters; a garret.

32 schal lunge in your lofts, & lyge in your eae.
Str Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), I. 1086.

3. A floor or room above another or others; an upper story; especially, in the United States, one of the upper stories of a warehouse or other mercantile building, or of a factory.

And hym she rogeth and awaketh softe,
And at the wyndow lep he fro the lofts.
Chaucer, Good Women, I. 2700.

Futychus . . . fell down from the third loft and was taken up dead.
Acts xx. 9.

4. A gallery or an elevated apartment within a larger apartment, as in a church, hall, barn, etc.: as, an organ-loft; a hay-loft.

I also to the hall, and with much ado got up to the loft, where with much trouble I could see very well.
Pope's Diary, Nov. 15, 1666.

Cook of the loft. See cook of the walk, under cook.—On loft, on high; aloft. See aloft.

If thou be in place where good ale is on lofts, . . . Meurabl thou take ther-of.
Rubens Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 39.

loft (lôft), v. t. [< loft, n.] To furnish with a loft.

—Lotted house, a house of more than one story. [Scotch.] loft (lôft), v. i. To lift; in golf, to elevate (the ball). [Scotch.] lofter (lôf'tër), n. A lofting-iron.

loftily (lôf'ti-l), adv. 1. In a lofty manner or position; in an elevated place; on high.—2. In a lofty spirit; with elevated feeling or purpose; eminently; arrogantly; haughtily.

loftiness (lôf'ti-nes), n. 1. The state or quality of being lofty or high; remarkable height or elevation.—2. Elevation of character, sentiment, or feeling; the state of being elevated, as by high thought, or puffed up, as by pride or vanity; grandeur; sublimity; haughtiness; arrogance.

We have heard the pride of Moab, . . . his loftiness, and his arrogancy.
Jer. xlviii. 20.

Three poets in three distant ages born: . . . The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd; . . . The next in majesty; in both the last.

Dryden, Lines under Milton's Picture in P. L. (Vol. 1688).

There may be a Loftiness in Sentiments where there is no Passion.
Addison, Spectator, No. 338.

—Syn. 2. Pride, Presumption, etc. See arrogance.

lofting (lôf'ting), n. [< loft + -ing.] Upper part; ceiling.

As he is awakening him, the timber passage and lofting of the chamber hastily takes fire.
Quoted in Child's Ballads, VI. 175.

lofting-iron (lôf'ting-i'ërn), n. In golf, a form of club used in lofting a ball. See cut under golf-club.

lofty (lôf'ti), a. [< loft + -y. Cf. G. löftig, aerial.] 1. Raised in space or dimensions; lifted high up; elevated; very high.

Cities of men with lofty gates and towers.
Milton, P. L., xi. 640.

See lofty Lebanon his head advance.
Pope, Messiah, I. 25.

2. Elevated in condition, character, or quality; raised above the common level; characterized by eminence, dignity, sublimity, etc.; exalted; impressive.

Thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity.
Isa. lvii. 15.

He knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
Milton, Lycidas, I. 11.

A stern and lofty duty.
Whittier, Lines on the Death of S. O. Torrey.

3. Elevated in conceit; manifesting pride or arrogance; haughty; ostentatious.

The lofty looks of man shall be humbled.
Isa. ii. 11.

Lofty and woe to them that loved him not.
Shak., Hen. VIII., IV. 2. 53.

—Syn. 1. High, etc. See tall.—2. Sublime, exalted, stately, majestic. See grand.—3. Arrogant, magisterial.

log (log), n. and v. [*< ME. log (not found), < leel, lög, a felled tree, a log (= Sw. dial. läga, a felled tree, a tree blown down), lit. a tree that "lies" prostrate, < lugga = Sw. lugga, lie: see lie. Cf. D. log, heavy, unwieldy (see loggy, loggy); E. log (< Sw. logg), a ship's log, and law (AS. laga, leel, lög), from the same ult. source.] I. n.

1. A bulky piece or stick of unhewn timber; a length of wood as cut from the trunk or a large limb of a tree; specifically, an unsplit stick of timber with buttled ends ready for sawing.

So was he brought forth into the grane beside the chapel win the tower, & his head laid down upon a long log of timber, and there stricken ut.
Sir T. More, Works, p. 54.

2. Figuratively, a dull, heavy, stolid, or stupid person.

What a log is this,
To sleep such make out!
Ben. and Fl., Captain, II. 2.

Christmas log. See Christmas.

II. a. Constructed of logs; consisting of logs: as, a log cabin; a log fort or bridge.—Log cabin, a cabin or hut built of logs, unhewn or hewn, notched near the ends and laid one upon another, and having the interstices filled with mud or plaster.

Log cabins are often used as dwellings in poor or thinly settled regions where timber abounds.—Log-cabin campaign, in U. S. hist., the electoral canvass for the presidency in 1840, in which representations of log cabins and barrels of hard cider were carried in the processions of the partisans of William Henry Harrison. One of his opponents, wrongly attributing to him a humble origin, had spoken of him as one who had lived in a log cabin and drunk hard cider, and the expression was caught up by his adherents and made a party cry.—Log-cabin quilt, a patchwork quilt of a particular design. [U. S.]

Reluctantly she slipped her book under the log-cabin quilt, and said "Come in." Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 36.

Log canoe, a canoe hollowed out of a single log.—Log house, a house built of logs fitted together, and smoothed on the inside, or on both sides. Log houses in new or thickly wooded regions of North America are often of considerable size and well finished.

log¹ (log), v.; pret. and pp. logged, ppr. logging. [log¹, n.] I. trans. To cut into logs.

When a Tree is so thick that after it is log'd it remains still too great a Burthen for one Man, we blow it up with Gunpowder. Dampier, Voyages, II. ii. 80.

II. intrans. To cut down trees and get out logs from the forest for sawing into boards, etc.: as, to engage in logging.

log² (log), n. [= D. G. lag, < Sw. logg = Dan. log, a ship's log, a piece of wood that 'lies' in the water; diff. from leel lag, a felled tree (> El. log¹), but from the same ult. source, namely leel, lagga = Sw. lugga = Dan. lugga, etc., lie: see lie¹.] 1. Naut., an apparatus for measuring the rapidity of a ship's motion.

The most common form consists of a log-chip, or thin quadrant of wood, of about five inches radius, fastened to a line wound on a reel. When the log-chip is thrown overboard, its motion is retarded on striking the water, and its distance from the ship, measured after a certain time on the line (which is allowed to run out), gives approximately the speed of the ship. The chip is loaded with lead on the arc side to make it float upright. At 13 or 15 fathoms from the ship a white rag marks off the stray-line, a quantity sufficient to let the log-chip get clear of the vessel before time is marked. The rest of the line, which is from 150 to 200 fathoms long, is divided into equal parts by bits of string stuck through the strands and distinguished by the number of knots made in each, or in some similar way, as by colored rags; hence these divisions are called knots. The length of a knot must bear the same proportion to the length of a nautical mile (see mile) that the time during which the line is allowed to run out bears to one hour. Thus, using a twenty-eight second glass, 28:3600::47.3 feet (the usual length of a knot): 6080 feet (the usually received length of a sea-mile). Many other devices have been invented to perform the functions of the log, which generally include a brass fly or rotator connected with mechanism acting as an index. In some cases the whole machine is towed astern of the ship, and must be hauled in to be examined; with the towed-log, the register is fastened to the taffrail and the fly is towed astern.

Hence—2. The record of a ship's progress, or a tabulated summary of the performance of the engines and boilers, etc.; a log-book.—Electric log, an apparatus devised for measuring the speed of water-currents, or the speed and distance traveled by ships at sea, with the aid of electricity. With the second kind mentioned under electric, the distance run is indicated by a pointer on a dial, which shows the number of turns made by a screw towed behind the vessel. Electrical conductors are incased in the tow-line, and the circuit is closed at intervals of a stated number of turns, thus operating an indicator on deck. Electric logs have not come into practical use.—Ground-log, a form of log adapted for showing the direction and speed of passage of a vessel over the ground in shoal water. It consists of an ordinary log-line, with a hand-lead of 7 or 9 pounds substituted for the log-chip. When used, the lead remains fixed at the bottom, and the line shows the path and speed of the ship and the effect of any current which may exist.—Log-log, in the United States navy, the original manuscript of a ship's log.—To leave the log. See leave.

log³ (log), v. t.; pret. and pp. logged, ppr. logging. [log³, n.] 1. To record or enter in the log-book.—2. To exhibit by the indication of the log, as a rate of speed by the hour: as, the ship logs ten knots.

log⁴ (log), v. t. [The appar. orig. of the freq. form loggers, q. v. Cf. also loggan.] To move to and fro; rock. See logging-rock.

Log Cabin.

Log and Reel.

log⁴ (log), n. [Heb. loga.] A Hebrew liquid measure, the seventy-second part of a bath, or about a pint. It seems to have been of Babylonian origin, being one sixtieth of a maxis.

He shall take . . . three tenth deals of fine flour for a meat offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil.

Lev. xiv. 10.

log. The abbreviation of logarithm. Thus, log. 8 = 0.4771213 is an equation giving the value of the logarithm of 8.

logan, n. See loggan.

Loganiaceæ (lō-gā-ni-ā'sē-s), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Logania, the typical genus, + -aceæ.] An order of gamopetalous exogones, characterized by opposite, usually entire leaves, with stipules which adhere to the leaf-stalks or are combined in the form of interpetiolar sheaths. The flowers usually grow in terminal or axillary cymes, and are four- or five-parted, with an inferior calyx, the stamens inserted on the corolla-tube, and a fruit which is capsular, drupeaceous, or a berry. The order includes 30 genera and about 350 species, either herbs, shrubs, or trees, which are dispersed throughout tropical and subtropical regions. The plants are bitter and highly poisonous; the poison-nut, Strychnos nux-vomica, belongs to this order, and several other species are used in medicine. Besides Logania, an Australian genus and type of the order, it includes Gelsemium, the yellow jessamine of the southern United States, and Spigelia, the pinkroot or worm-grass.

logædic (log-ā-s'dik), a. and n. [LL. logædicus, < LGr. λογαδικός, logædic, < Gr. λόγος, speech, prose (see Logos), + αἰσθητός, song: see ode.] 1. a. Literally, prose-poetic; in anc. pros., noting a variety of trochee or iambic verse in which dactyls are combined with trochees or anapests with iambs; so called because this apparent irregularity seems to approach the non-observance of metrical laws characteristic of prose. These dactyls and anapests are not, however, full dactyls or anapests of four times or more, but cyclic dactyls or anapests of only three times, equivalent therefore in measure to trochees or iambs. A single long syllable is also used in some places in several forms of logædic verse to represent a complete foot. This long is equal not to two but to three shorts, and is therefore equivalent to a trochee. Irrational longs—that is, longs reduced to the value of a short—also occur in the theses. A basis sometimes precedes the series. Recent metricians use the epithet logædic of mixed meters (see mixed) in general. Ancient writers classed many logædic meters as Ionic, opionio, chorambic, epichorambic, or antispastic. Among the more familiar logædic meters are the Glyconic, Pherecratic, Asclepiadic, Sapphic, and Alcaic. See basia, 3, and opætic, 3.

II. n. A verse of the character defined above.

logarithm (log-ā-rithm or -rithm), n. [Cf. F. logarithme = Sp. logaritmo = Pg. logaritmo = It. logaritmo = D. G. logarithme = Dan. logarithme = Sw. logarithm (< E.); < NL. logarithmus (NGr. λογαριθμός), < Gr. λόγος, proportion, ratio (see Logos), + ἀριθμός, a number: see arithmetical.] (a) An artificial number, or number used in computation, belonging to a series (or system of logarithms) having the following properties: First, every natural or positive number, integral or fractional, has a logarithm in each system of logarithms; and conversely, every logarithm belongs to a natural number, called its antilogarithm. Second, in each system of logarithms, the logarithms corresponding to any geometrical progression of natural numbers are in arithmetical progression: that is, if each natural number of the series is obtained from the preceding one by multiplying a constant factor into this preceding one, then each logarithm may be obtained from the preceding one by adding a constant increment or subtracting a constant decrement. This is shown, for the system of Napier's logarithms, in the following table. It must be said that logarithms are, in general, irrational numbers, and their values can only be expressed approximately, being carried to some finite number of decimal places. (Owing to the neglected places, it will often happen that the difference between two logarithms, obtained by subtracting the approximate value of one from that of the other, is in error by 1 in the last decimal place.

Natural numbers.	Logarithms (Napier's system).	Successive differences.
45.3099..	123025851	23025851
453.5933..	100000000	23025851
4539.9930..	7974149	23025851
45399.9298..	58943298	23025851
453999.2976..	39252447	23025851
4539999.9763..	7949599	23025851
45399999.7625..	-15129255	23025851

It will thus be seen that if four numbers, A, B, C, D, are in proportion, so that A:B = C:D, then their four logarithms satisfy the equation, log A - log B = log C - log D; so that, to work the rule of three with logarithms, we simply substitute for each number its logarithm and proceed as usual, only that in every case we perform addition instead of multiplication and subtraction instead of division; and the result is the logarithm of the answer; (b) As now understood, a system of logarithms, besides the two essential characters set forth above, has a third, namely that the logarithm of 1 is 0. This being admitted, a simpler definition can be given of the logarithm, viz.: a logarithm is the exponent of the power to which a number constant for each system, and called the base of the system, must be raised in order to produce the natural number, or antilogarithm. Thus (base) $x = a$. At the time logarithms were invented fractional exponents had not been thought of, and even decimals, as we conceive them, were little used, the decimal point not having yet appeared; consequently, the last definition of the logarithm, which is now the usual one, was not at first possible. With logarithms in the modern sense, the rule for solving proportions still holds, but is secondary to the following fundamental rule: The sum of the logarithms of several numbers is the logarithm of the continued product of those numbers. For example, let it be required to determine the circumference of the earth in inches, knowing that its radius is 3968 miles. We take out from a table of logarithms the logarithms of all the numbers which have to be multiplied together, as follows:

Names of quantities.	Natural numbers.	Common logarithms.
Radius of the earth in miles.....	3968	3.5974688
Ratio of diameter to radius.....	2	0.3010300
Ratio of circumference to diameter	3.1415927	0.4971489
One mile in feet.....	5280	3.7233399
One foot in inches.....	12	1.0791812

The sum of these logarithms is 9.1974805, which we find by the table to be the logarithm of a number comprised between 157500000 and 1575001000. To obtain a closer approximation, we should have to carry the logarithms to more places of decimals; but this would be useless, since the radius of the earth is only given to the nearest mile. From this fundamental rule several subsidiary rules follow as corollaries. Thus, to divide one number by another, subtract the logarithm of the divisor from that of the dividend, and the antilogarithm of the remainder is the quotient; to take the reciprocal of a number, change the sign of the logarithm, and the antilogarithm of the result is the reciprocal; to raise a number to any power, multiply the logarithm of the base by the exponent of the power, and the antilogarithm of the product is the power sought; to extract any root of a number, divide the logarithm of that number by the index of the root, and the antilogarithm of the quotient is the root sought. For example, what is the amount of $1 at interest at 6 per cent. compounding yearly for 1,000 years? We must here raise 1.06 to the thousandth power. The common logarithm of 1.06 is 0.025305863; 1,000 times this is 25.3058633, which is the logarithm of 202284 followed by 19 ciphers, or say 20 quadrillions 22840 trillions, in the English numeration. To give an idea of the advantage of logarithms in trigonometrical calculations, it may be mentioned that to find the altitude of the sun from its hour-angle and declination with logarithms requires seven numbers to be taken out of the tables and two additions to be performed, while the solution of the same problem with a table of natural sines requires, as before, the taking out of seven numbers from the tables, and besides eight additions and two halvings. There are two systems of logarithms in common use, the hyperbolic, natural, or Napierian, or Neparian (not Napier's own) logarithms in analysis, and common, decimal, or Briggian logarithms in ordinary computations. The base of the system of hyperbolic logarithms is 2.718281828459. This kind of logarithm derives its name from its measuring the area between the equilateral hyperbola, an ordinate, and the axes of coordinates when these are the asymptotes; but the chief characteristic of the system is that, x being any number less than unity,

$$\log(1+x) = x - \frac{1}{2}x^2 + \frac{1}{3}x^3 - \frac{1}{4}x^4 + \text{etc.}$$

Thus, the hyperbolic logarithm of 1.1 is calculated as follows:

x 0.100000000	$\frac{1}{2}x^2$ 0.005000000
$\frac{1}{3}x^3$ 0.000833333	$\frac{1}{4}x^4$ 0.000025000
$\frac{1}{5}x^5$ 0.000008000	$\frac{1}{6}x^6$ 0.000000167
$\frac{1}{7}x^7$ 0.000000014	$\frac{1}{8}x^8$ 0.000000001
0.100383347	0.005025168
0.0953585168

$$\log 1.1 = 0.0953585179$$

By the skillful application of this principle, with some others of subsidiary importance, the whole table of natural logarithms has been calculated. The logarithms of any other system, in the modern sense, are simply the products of the hyperbolic logarithms into a factor constant for that system, called the modulus of the system of logarithms; and each system in the old sense is derivable from a system in the modern sense by adding a constant to every logarithm. The base of the common system of logarithms is 10, and its modulus is 0.4342944819. A common logarithm consists of an integer part and a decimal: the former is called the index or characteristic, the latter the mantissa. The characteristic depends only upon the position of the decimal point, and not at all upon the succession of significant figures; the mantissa depends entirely upon the succession of figures, and not at all upon the position of the decimal point. Thus,

log 12345	4.0914911
log 123.45	3.0914911
log 12.345	2.0914911

The characteristic of a logarithm is equal to the number of places between the decimal point and the first significant figure. Logarithms of numbers less than unity are negative; but, negative numbers not being convenient in computation, such logarithms are usually written in one or other of two ways, as follows: The first and perhaps the best way is to make the mantissa positive and take the characteristic only as negative, increasing, for this purpose, its absolute value by 1, and writing the minus sign over it. Thus, in place of writing -0.5010300, which is the logarithm of $\frac{1}{2}$, we may write 1.0989700. The second and most usual way is to augment the logarithm by 10 or by 100, thus forming a logarithm in the original sense of the word. Thus, -0.5010300 would be written 9.9989700, the characteristic in this case being 9 less the number of places between the decimal point and the first significant figure. Logarithms were invented and a table published in 1614 by John Napier of Scotland; but the kind now chiefly in use were proposed by his contemporary Henry Briggs, professor of geometry in Gresham College in London. The first extended table of common logarithms, by Adrian Vlacq, 1628, has been the basis of every one since published. Abbreviated l. or log.—Arithmetical complement of a logarithm. See arithmetical.—Binary logarithms. See binary.—Briggsian, common, or decimal logarithm. See above.—Circular logarithm, an imaginary logarithm. See above.—Division by logarithms. See division.—Gaussian logarithms. See Gaussian.—Logistic logarithm, the logarithm of a number of seconds subtracted from the logarithm of 86400, the number of seconds in an hour.—Natural, hyperbolic, Neperian, or Neperian logarithm. See above.—Negative index of a logarithm, one that is affected with the negative sign. Such are the indices of the logarithms of all numbers less than unity.—Parabolic logarithm, a real logarithm.—Quadratic logarithm, the exponent of a power of 2 which power of 2 is itself the exponent of a power of the decimal anti-logarithm of 2-10, the power being the number of which the first exponent is the quadratic logarithm. That is, if $a = 10^x$ and $a^2 = N$, then x is the quadratic logarithm of N , written LqN .

logarithmic (log'a-rith-met'ik), a. [< log-arithm + -ic, after arithmetical.] Same as logarithmic. [Rare.] logarithmical (log'a-rith-met'i-kal), a. [< logarithmic + -al.] Same as logarithmic.

logarithmic (log'a-rith'mik), a. [< logarithm + -ic.] Of or pertaining to logarithms; consisting of logarithms.—Logarithmic curvature, the ratio of the distances from the points of contact of two infinitely neighboring tangents to their point of intersection. This ratio is unity at an ordinary point, and on an algebraic curve is always rational.—Logarithmic curve, the logarithmic curve, under logistic.—Logarithmic ellipse, hyperbola, etc. See the nouns.—Logarithmic plus and minus, two algebraic signs, + and -, such that $a = 8 \frac{1}{2}$ and $a = 8 \frac{1}{2} \gamma$ signify that $\log \tan (\frac{1}{2} \pi + 45^\circ) = \log \tan (\frac{1}{2} \pi + 45^\circ) + \log \tan (\frac{1}{2} \pi + 45^\circ)$, the upper sign for + and the lower for -.—Logarithmic spiral, a curve-line somewhat analogous to the common logarithmic curve. It intersects all its radiants at the same angle, and the tangent of this angle is the modulus of the system of logarithms which the particular spiral represents. Its involute and evolute are also logarithmic spirals. Also called logistic spiral.

Logarithmic Spiral.

logarithmical (log'a-rith'mi-kal), a. [< logarithmic + -al.] Same as logarithmic.

logarithmically (log'a-rith'mi-kal-i), adv. By the use or aid of logarithms.

logarithmotechny (log'a-rith'mô-tek-ni), n. [< E. logarithm (NGR. λογάρημος) + Gr. τέχνη, art.] The art of calculating logarithms.

logarithm, n. See logget.

log-beam (log'bēm), n. In a sawmill, the traveling frame which supports the log and feeds it to the saws.

log-board (log'bôrd), n. [< log² + board.] A pair of boards shutting together like a book, formerly used instead of a log-slate.

log-book (log'bûk), n. [= Sw. logbok = Dan. logbog; as log² + book.] 1. The official record of proceedings on board ship: so called from the register which it includes of the indications of the log. It is a journal of all important items happening on shipboard, contains the data from which the navigator determines his position by dead-reckoning (which see), and is, when properly kept, a complete meteorological journal. On board merchant ships the log is kept by the first officer; on board men-of-war, by the navigator. 2. In the board schools of Great Britain, a book for memoranda kept by the principal of the school, in accordance with the requirements of the Education Act.

log-butter (log'but'ër), n. A heavy drag-saw used in squaring or butting the ends of logs.

log-cabin (log'kab'in), n. See log cabin, under log¹.

log-ship (log'ship), n. The board, in the form of a quadrant, attached to a log-line. See log². Also, erroneously, log-ship.

log-cock (log'kok), n. The pileated woodpecker of North America, Hylotinus or Cepophanes pileatus, more fully called black log-cock.

loger, n. and v. A Middle English form of lodge.

log-fish (log'fish), n. The barrel-fish, Larus perotiformis. Also called rudder-fish.

log-frame (log'frām), n. A sawmill machine for cutting timber into planks; a deal-frame.

logan (log'an), n. [Also logan; < log².] A logging-rock or rooking-stone.

logabi, n. See logget.

loger, n. and v. A Middle English form of lodge.

logger (log'ër), n. [< log¹ + -er.] A man employed in getting out logs or timber from the forest, and sometimes in getting them down rivers to market. [U. S. and Canada.]

There were a couple of loggers on board, in red flannel shirts, and with rifles. Lowell, Fire-side Travels, p. 110.

logger² (log'ër), a. [< log¹ + -er, here used collectively. Cf. loggy, logy.] Heavy; stupid. Compare loggerhead.

My head too heavy was and logger
Even to make a Pettiflogger.

Cotton, Burlesque upon Burlesque.

logger³ (log'ër), v. i. [Freq. of log³. Cf. Dan. logre, wag the tail.] To move irregularly, as a wheel that is loose on its axle. [Prov. Eng.] loggerhead (log'ër-hed), n. [< logger² + head.] 1. A blockhead; a dunce; a dolt; a thickskull.

Now was he to you, loggerheads,
That dwell near Castlederry,
To let awa' sic a bonny lass,
A highlandman to marry.
Linn's Ballads (Child's Ballads, IV. 75).

You in the mean time, you silly Loggerhead, deserve to have your Bones well thrash'd with a Fool's staff, for thinking to stir up Kings and Princes to War by such Childish Arguments. Milton, Ans. to Salmasius, Pref., p. 17.

2. A spherical mass of iron with a long handle, used after being heated for various purposes, as to liquefy tar, to ignite the priming of a cannon, etc. Also called loggerheat.

Here doted a fire of beechen logs, that bred Strange fancies in its embers golden-red,
And nursed the loggerhead whose hissing dip,
Timed by nice instinct, creamed the mug of flip.
Lowell, Fits Adam's Story.

3. A post in the stern of a whale-boat, with a bell-shaped head, around which the harpoon-line passes; a snubbing-post.—4. The hawk-billed turtle, a marine species of the genus Thalasseochelys, as the American loggerhead, T. caouana or carretta, or the Indian, T. olivacea; also, the alligator-turtle of the southern United States, Macrochelys lacertina.—5. The small gray or Carolinian shrike, Lanius ludovicianus, a bird of the family Laniidae, resident and abundant in the southern parts of the United States, and sometimes as far north as New England. It is about 8½ inches long (the wing and tail each 4 inches), slate-colored above and white below, with the wings and tail black and white, the scapulars and upper tail-coverts bleached a little, and each side of the head marked by a black bar, the two bars meeting on the forehead. The bird is a geographical race of the common white-rumped shrike, L. excubitorides, and its habits are the same as those of other butcher-birds.

6. A flycatcher. [West Indies.]—7. The chub. [Local, Eng.]—8. A kind of sponge found in Florida.—9. pl. The knapweed, Centaurea nigra; also, the blue-bottle, C. cyanus.—At loggerheads, engaged in bickerings or disputes; contending about differences of opinion or the like.

At last the divine and the poet, traditionally at loggerheads, have a common bond of suffering.

Stedman, Vict. Poets, p. 12.

To fall or go to loggerheads, to come to blows.

loggerheaded (log'ër-hed'ed), a. [< loggerhead + -ed.] Dull; stupid; doltish.

You logger-headed and unpollish'd grooms!
What, no attendance? Shak., T. of the S., IV. 1. 122.

loggerheat (log'ër-hêt), n. Same as loggerhead.

loggett, n. [Also loggat, logat; dim. of log¹.] 1. A small log or piece of wood.

Now are they tossing of his legs and arms,
Like loggets at a pear-tree.
B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub, IV. 6.

2. pl. An old English game, played by fixing a stake in the ground and pitching small pieces of wood at it, the nearest thrower winning; skittle-pins. It was at one time prohibited by statute, under Henry VIII.

Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggets with them? Shak., Hamlet, V. 1. 100.

[I have seen it (loggate) played in different counties, at their sheep-shearing feasts, where the winner was entitled to a black fleece, which he afterwards presented to the madd to spin, for the purpose of making a petticoat, and on condition that she knelt down on the fleece to be kissed by all the rustics present.

Stevenson, note on the above passage.]

loggia (loj'gā), n.; pl. loggie (-o). [It., = E. lodge, q. v.] In Italian arch.: (a) A gallery or arcade in a building, properly at the height of one or more stories, running along the front or part of the front of the building, and open on at least one side to the air, on which side is a series of pillars or slender piers. Such galleries afford an airy and sheltered resting-place or outlook, and are very characteristic of Italian palaces. Among famous loggias are those of the Vatican, decorated by Raphael and his scholars. Compare belvedere. See out in next column.

(b) A large ornamental window in the middle of the chief story of a building, often projecting from the wall, as seen in old Venetian palaces.

logging¹ (log'ing), n. [Verbal n. of log¹, v.] The business of cutting and getting out logs or timber from a forest. [U. S. and Canada.]

logging², n. A Middle English form of lodging.

logging-ax (log'ing-aks), n. A heavy ax used in cutting off logs.

logging-bee (log'ing-bē), n. Same as log-roll-ing, 1.

Loggia, Ospedale Maggiore, Milan.

A logging-bee followed the burning of the fallow, as a matter of course. In the bush (Canada) where hands are few . . . these gatherings are considered indispensable [1832]. Susanna Moodie, Boughting It in the Bush, II. 52.

logging-camp (log'ing-kamp), n. An encampment of loggers or persons engaged in logging during winter. [U. S. and Canada.]

logging-head (log'ing-hed), n. In a steam-engine, the working-beam. E. H. Knight.

logging-rock (log'ing-rok), n. A rock so balanced on its base that it logs or rocks to and fro very easily, as by the force of the wind.

log-glass (log'glās), n. A fourteen- or twenty-eight-second sand-glass, used with the log-line to ascertain the speed of a ship. See log².

loght, n. An obsolete form of loch¹ or lough¹, and of low³.

loghead (log'hed), n. A thick-headed or stupid person; a loggerhead. [Rare.]

Not being born purely a Loghead (Dummkopf), thou hadst no other outlook. Carlyle, Sartor Resartus, p. 112.

log-headed (log'hed'ed), a. Stupid. Davies.

For well I knew it was some mad-headed chylid
That invented this name, that the log-headed knave might be begilded.
R. Edwards, Damon and Pythias.

log-house (log'hous'), n. See log house, under log¹, n.

logic (loj'ik), n. and a. [Formerly logick, logique, < ME. logike, < OF. (and F.) logique = Sp. lógica = Pg. It. logica, < L. logica, logice, < Gr. λογική (occurring first in Cicero), logic; properly fem. of λογικός (> L. logicus), of or pertaining to speech or reason or reasoning, rational, reasonable, < λόγος, speech, reason; see Logos.] I. n. 1. The science of the distinction of true from false reasoning, with whatever is naturally treated in connection therewith. See the phrases below.

The definition of logic has been much disputed, and many definitions of the word have been given. There was much discussion in ancient and medieval times of the questions whether logic was a mode of knowing, or an instrument of science, or an art, or a practical science, or a speculative science. There was also a great diversity of opinion as to the subject-matter of logic, some holding that it had to do with words, others that it treated of the ens rationis, or that which has its existence in thought, and still others that it related to argumentation, or some instrument of knowing. In modern times, especially since Kant, the real divergence of conception has been much greater, one party holding that the main business of logic consists in developing the true theory of the process of cognition, and a second that its chief work is to separate inferences into classes distinguished by their form, while a third maintains that the form and the matter of thought have to be evolved together.

Logics hath eke in his degree
Between the truth and the falsheds
The pleyne wordes for to shede.
Gower, Conf. Amant., vii.

He that knoweth reason to be in man, and the same given by the great might of God, must needs confess the Logique also is in man, and that only by God. For there is none other difference betwixt the one and the other but that Logique is a Greke worde and Reason is an Englishe worde. . . . Logique is an arte to reason probably on bothe partes of al matters that be putte forth, so farre as the nature of every thing can beare.

Sir T. Wilson, Rule of Reason (1552).

[Dialectic and organon are generally synonyms of logic, though they have been variously distinguished at different times.]

2. Reasoning, or power of reasoning; ratiocination; argumentation; used absolutely, reason; sound sense.

Ignorance in stiffs,
His cap well lined with logic not his own.
With parrot tongue perform'd the scholar's part.
Cooper, Thak, II. 787.

Abstract logic, the general theory of logic (also called logica doctus, general and theoretical logic); opposed to concrete logic, or logic as an element of active thought in the prosecution of science (also called logica usus, practical and practical logic). The terms logica usus and doctus are derived from logos utens, he who draws conclusions, and logos doctus, he who frames demonstrations. But the corresponding distinction of the branches of science is not very clear, and the terms are often used vaguely and incorrectly. — Acquired logic, or logica doctus, the correct knowledge or strictly scientific part of the rules of reasoning, as opposed to logica utens, or the natural faculty of reasoning. — Applied logic, rules for the direction of the understanding under the psychological conditions to which it is subjected; that part of logic which shows how to avoid prejudice, how to escape various erroneous tendencies, etc. — Aristotelian logic. See Aristotelian. — Artificial logic. (a) The acquired habit of distinguishing truth from falsehood; the science, art, or organon of logic; also called acquired logic; opposed to natural logic (a). (b) The science of the necessary rules of thought; also called scientific logic; opposed to natural logic (a). — Calculus of logic. See calculus. — Concrete logic. See abstract logic. — Deductive logic, that branch of logic which takes no account of probability or other quantitative considerations. — Formal logic. See formal. — Material logic. See material. — Inductive logic, the logic of scientific reasoning. — Material logic, the logic which takes into account either the laws of the process of human cognition or the matter to which the thought is directed. — Natural logic. (a) The natural faculty of distinguishing truth from falsity; also called natural logic. (b) The logical doctrine applicable to natural things; opposed to the logic of faith, which is applicable to supernatural things (a distinction used in discussions on the Trinity). (c) An anthropological science which treats of the rules of the natural use of the understanding. — Objective logic. (a) The body of doctrines of which logic is built up; also called systematic logic; opposed to habitual logic, which is any individual's knowledge of those doctrines. (b) The logic of objective thought, or thought as it exists in the external world. (c) The science which expounds the laws by which our scientific procedure should be governed, so far as these lie in the contents, materials, or objects about which our knowledge is conversant. Also called material logic. — Particular logic. See universal logic. — Pure logic, the general laws of thought; opposed to applied or modified logic, the laws of logic applicable to this or that kind of mind as shown in empirical anthropology, such as the doctrine of Reason concerning ideas. — Scientific logic. Same as artificial logic (b). — Subjective logic, the opposite of objective logic in any sense. — Subjectivist logic, or subjectivist logic, formal logic, a system of logic whose only aim is to give thought a subjective agreement with itself, such, for example, as the system of Mansell; opposed to objective logic, which aims at rules for making or siding thought to agree with the reality. — To chop logic. See chop. — Universal logic, the general logical doctrine applicable to all matter; opposed to particular logic, the doctrine of the application of the formulas of logic to particular cases — for example, to necessary, contingent, probable, and impossible matter.

II. a. Pertaining to God the Son as the Logos or Word of God. [Rare.]

The Fathers, rejecting all savour of a bloody sacrifice, have no scruple of speaking about the Eucharist as a sacrifice in the other sense; they call it a "logic sacrifice" (θυσία λογική), for the Logos is the Word of God, Jesus Christ. Baring-Gould, Our Inheritance, p. 382.

logical (lɒj-i-kəl), a. and n. [logic + -al.] I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to logic; used or taught in logic: as, logical subtleties.

They are put off by the names of virtues, and natures, and actions, and passions, and such other logical words. Racine, Nat. Hist., § 98.

2. According to the principles of logic; so stated or conceived, as an argument, that the form guarantees its validity; unobjectionable from the point of view of logic; consistent; as, logical reasoning; a logical division of a subject; a logical definition. — 3. Skilled in logic; furnished with logic; given to considering the processes of reason as to their forms or genera, and critically as to their validity and cogency; applied especially to an analytical mind or a methodical habit. — Logical abecedarium. See abecedarium. — Logical abstraction. See abstraction. — Logical actuality, the satisfying of the principle of sufficient reason. — Logical addition. See addition. — 1. Logical algebra. See algebra. — Logical conviction, intellectual conviction; the settlement of individual belief by reason. — Logical distinctions, the accurate logical analysis of a conception. — Logical division. (a) See division. (b) The division of a genus into species. — Logical induction. See induction. — 5. Logical machine. See machine. — Logical medicine, dogmatic or methodic medicine; opposed to empiric medicine. — Logical moments of judgment, the different modes of uniting representations into one consciousness. — Logical necessity. See necessity. — Logical part, a species considered relatively to its genus. — Logical perfection, the perspicuity, harmony, and completeness of a science; opposed to material perfection. — Logical possibility, the possibility of that which does not involve contradiction. — Logical presumption, ampliative inference; a scientific induction or hypothesis. — Logical privation, the absence of a form that ought to be in a subject; opposed to physical privation, or the absence of a form that is sometimes in a subject. — Logical reflection, the comparison of concepts. — Logical truth. (a) The truth of a proposition; the agreement of a judgment with the reality. (b) Self-consistency. — Logical whole, a genus considered as having its species as parts. — Syn. 1. Dialectic. — 2. Coherent, consistent. — 3. Analytical, methodical.

II. n. Used only in the phrase little (small) logicals. These are the logical doctrines of supposition, ampliation, restriction, distribution, the expostions, consequences, obligations, insolubles, etc.

They (the Utopians) have not devised one of all those rules of restrictions, amplifications, very wittily invented in the small logicals which here our children in every place do learn. Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), II. 7.

logicality (lɒj-i-kəl-i-ti), n. [logical + -ity.] The quality of being logical; correctness or consistency of reasoning; logicalness.

logicalization (lɒj-i-kəl-i-zə-shən), n. [logicalize + -ation.] The act of logicalizing or making logical. [Rare.]

The mere act of writing tends in a great measure to the logicalization of thought. Poe, Marginalia, xvi.

logicalize (lɒj-i-kəl-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. logicalized, ppr. logicalizing. [logical + -ize.] To make logical. [Rare.]

Thought is logicalized by the effort at . . . expression. Poe, Marginalia, xvi.

logically (lɒj-i-kəl-i), adv. According to logical principles, or by formally valid inference: as, to argue logically.

logicalness (lɒj-i-kəl-nes), n. The quality of being logical.

logic-chopping (lɒj-i-k-ɒp-ɪŋ), n. Quibbling or sophistical reasoning. See to chop logic, under chop, v. t.

logic-fisted, a. Close-fisted. [Rare.]

One with an open-handed freedom spends all he lays his fingers on; another with a logic-fisted gripingness catches at and grasps all he can come within the reach of. Kennet, tr. of Erasmus's Praise of Folly, p. 87.

logician (lɒj-i-jən), n. [logic + -ian.] 1. One who is skilled in logic or in argument; a teacher or professor of logic.

First, like a right cunning and sturdy logician, he denies my argument, not mattering whether in the major or minor. Milton, Colerston.

Aristotle, who was the best Critick, was also one of the best Logicians that ever appeared in the World. Addison, Spectator, No. 291.

2. In medieval universities, a student of arts in the second class or lecture; one who was preparing for the baccalaureate, being above the summatists and below the physicians.

logicianer (lɒj-i-jən-ər), n. [logician + -er.] Same as logician, 1.

There is no good logicianer but would think, I think, that a syllogism thus formed of such a thieving major, a runaway minor, and a traitorous consequent must needs prove at the weakest to such a hanging argument. Palmer (Arber's Eng. Garner), III. 137.

logicize (lɒj-i-sz), v. t.; pret. and pp. logicized, ppr. logicizing. [logic + -ize.] To exercise one's logical powers; argue. Also spelled logice. [Rare.]

Intellect is not speaking and logicizing; it is seeing and ascertaining. Carlyle.

logist (lɒj-ɪks), n. [Pl. of logist: see -ics.] The science or principles of logic.

logie (lɒj-i), n. [Origin obscure. Cf. logy.] A bit of hollowed-out pewter polished in various convolutions and used as theatrical jewelry. [Theatrical slang.]

logist (lɒj-ɪst), n. [LL. logista, < Gr. λογιστής, a reckoner, an accountant, < λογίζεσθαι, reckon, < λόγος, an account: see Logos.] An expert accountant. Bailey, 1731.

logistic (lɒj-ɪs-tik), a. and n. [= F. logistique, < Gr. λογιστικός, skilled in calculating (fem. λογιστική, the art of calculation), < λογιστής, a calculator, < λογίζεσθαι, compute, < λόγος, calculation, proportion: see logic, Logos.] I. a. 1. Logical. Berkeley. — 2. Skilled in or pertaining to computation and calculation.

Plato's dislike of the Sophists extended to the subjects which they taught, and he is on many occasions careful to distinguish the vulgar logistics from the philosophical arithmetic. J. Gow, Hist. Greek Mathematics.

3. Proportional; pertaining to proportions.

— Logistic arithmetic. See II. — Logistic line or curve, a curve whose ordinates increase arithmetically while its abscissas increase geometrically. Also called logarithmic curve. See the figure. — Logistic logarithm. See logarithm. — Logistic spiral. Same as logarithmic spiral. See logarithmic.

II. n. (a) The art of calculation, with the fingers, with an abacus, with characters, or otherwise; practical or vulgar arithmetic. (b) Sexagesimal arithmetic. — Specious logistic, the art of calculating by means of geometrical constructions.

logistical (lɒj-ɪs-ti-kəl), a. [logistic + -al.] Same as logistic.

logistics (lɒj-ɪs-tiks), n. [Pl. of logistic: see -ics.] 1. Same as logistic, especially in sense (b). — 2. That branch of military science which relates to the movement and supplying of armies, and all arrangements necessary for and matters connected with the carrying on of campaigns, including the study of present or possible fields of war in their topographical and other relations; according to some, the science of strategy and arms in general.

log-line (lɒg-lɪn), n. [= Sw. loglina = Dan. logline; as log + line.] Naut., a line or cord, from 150 to 200 fathoms in length, fastened to the log-chip by means of three legs of cord, and wound on a reel, called the log-reel. See log. logman (lɒg-mən), n.; pl. logmen (-men). 1. A man who carries logs.

The very instant that I saw you, did my heart fly to your service: for your sake Am I this patient log-man. Shak., Tempest, III. 1. 97.

2. One employed in cutting and conveying logs to a mill. [Local, U. S.]

log-measurer (lɒg-mezh-ər-er), n. An instrument for gaging logs and reducing the measure in the rough to board-measure, in running feet, after making due allowance for losses in squaring, etc.

logocracy (lɒg-ɒk-rə-si), n. [Gr. λόγος, word (see Logos), + κρατειν, govern, < κράτος, strength.] Government by the power of words. [Rare.]

In this country every man adopts some particular slang-whanger as the standard of his judgment, and reads everything he writes, if he reads nothing else: which is doubtless the reason why the people of this logocracy are so marvelously enlightened. Irvine, Balmaguidi, xiv.

logocyclic (lɒg-ɒ-sik-lik), a. [Gr. λόγος, ratio, proportion, + κύκλος, circle.] An epithet occurring only in the phrase logocyclic curve, a crunodal circular cubic. It may be constructed by increasing and diminishing the radius vector of a variable point on a straight line by the distance of that point from the point of the line nearest to the origin. The equation of the curve is $(x^2 + y^2)(2a - x) = a^3x$.

It resembles the folium of Descartes, but has a rounder loop.

logodadaly (lɒg-ɒ-ded-əl-i), n. [LL. logodadalia, < LGr. λογοδοαδάλια, < Gr. λογοδοαδάλος, skilled in tricking out a speech, < λόγος, word, + δαδάλος, cunningly wrought: see dedal.] Verbal legerdemain; a playing with words, as by passing from one meaning of them to another. [Rare.]

For one instance of mere logomachy, I could bring ten instances of logodadaly or verbal legerdemain. Coleridge.

logogram (lɒg-ɒ-gram), n. [Gr. λόγος, word, + γράμμα, a letter: see grammar.] 1. A word-sign; a single written character, or a combination of characters regarded as a unit, representing a whole word. A logogram may be pictorial — that is, it may be an ideogram, such as the astronomical signs ☉ for the sun and ☾ for the moon; or it may be phonetic in its immediate origin — that is, it may be a single letter or set of letters standing as an abbreviation for the complete word, as c for cent, for skilling; or, lastly, it may be such a letter or set of letters transferred from one language to another, losing its phonetic value, but still representing the same idea, as z or th for the Latin z or th, signifying and pronounced pond.

2. A versified puzzle containing synonyms of a number of words derived from a single word by recombining its letters, the solution depending upon the guessing of the derived words from the synonyms, and the discovery from the former of the original word. Thus, from curtain may be derived curt, cut, nut, etc., for which may be used in the puzzle dog, short, shell, fruit, etc.

logograph (lɒg-ɒ-graf), n. [Gr. λόγος, word, + γράφειν, write.] 1. A written word; a character or series of characters representing a word. See logographic, 1, and logography, 1. — 2. A word-writer; an instrument for recording spoken sounds.

Barlow has constructed an apparatus for recording the sounds of the human voice, which he calls a logograph. Smithsonian Report, 1880, p. 261.

logographer (lɒg-ɒ-grə-fər), n. [logography + -er.] 1. In anc. Gr. lit., a prose-writer; especially, a historian. Under the name of logographers are commonly classed the early Greek historians before Herodotus. This school of writers began with Cadmus of Miletus, about 550 B. C., and continued for over a century. They wrote in the Ionic dialect, and most of them were Ionians by birth.

2. One who is skilled in logography. logographic (lɒg-ɒ-graf-ik), a. [Gr. λογογραφικός, concerning the writing of speeches, < λογος, a writer of speeches: see logography.] 1. Pertaining to written words; consisting of characters or signs each of which singly represents a complete word.

English is, like Chinese, not alphabetic in its dress, but logographic; and there is no man living in England or America, who has learned or can learn to read it: that is, to pronounce anything and everything written in it. T. H. H. True Order of Studies, p. 102.

2. Pertaining to logography. logographical (lɒg-ɒ-graf-i-kəl), a. [logographic + -al.] Same as logographic.

logographically (log-ō-graf'i-kal-i), adv. In a logographic manner; by means of logography.

The Times is usually dated from the 1st of January 1788, but was really commenced on the 18th January 1788, under the title of The London Daily Universal Register, printed logographically. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 417.

logography (lō-gog'ra-fī), n. [= F. logographie, < Gr. λογγραφία, a writing of speeches, prose or historical writing, < λογγράφος, a writer of speeches, a historian or prose-writer, later a secretary or accountant, < λόγος, a speech, + γράφειν, write.] 1. A method of printing in which short words of frequent occurrence, roots, prefixes, suffixes, etc., are cast on single types, called logotypes. It was this system (then patented) that was originally used (from 1788) in printing the newspaper which afterward became the London "Times." Logography was soon abandoned, but there have been attempts to revive it.

2. A method of reporting speeches word for word without the use of stenography, tried in the French National Assembly for two years, 1790-92. It required the employment of twelve or fourteen reporters, each in succession taking down a few words on paper so marked, as to show the proper sequence. It was abandoned as cumbersome and liable to great error.

logograph (log'ō-grif), n. [Also logographe, and erroneously logogryph; = F. logographe = Sp. It. logogrifo = Pg. logogrifo, < Gr. λόγος, word, + γράφω, a fishing-basket, a riddle.] A riddle; specifically, a riddle formed by the arbitrary or confused mingling of parts or elements, which have to be recombined in proper order for the answer.

The charade is of recent birth, and I cannot discover the origin of this species of logoglyphes.

I. D'Iraqui, Curios. of Lit., I. 338.

logomachist (lō-gom'g-kist), n. [< logomachy + -ist.] One who contends about words, or who uses words merely as weapons or instruments of contention.

Nor . . . was Protagoras a shallow logomachist, asserting the difficulties of human knowledge without a profound investigation. J. Owen, Evenings with Skeptic, I. 187.

logomachy (lō-gom'g-ki), n. [= F. logomachie = Sp. logomachia = It. logomachia, < LGr. λογμαχία, war about words, < λογμαχος, a fighter about words, < Gr. λόγος, word (see Logos), + μάχεσθαι, fight, μάχη, a fight.] 1. Contention in words merely, or a contention about words; a war of words.

What terrible battles yelp'd logomachies have they occasioned and perpetuated with so much gall and ink-shed. Sterne, Tristram Shandy, II. 2.

2. A game played with cards each bearing one letter, with which words are formed.

logomania (log-ō-mā'ni-ā), n. [NL., < Gr. λόγος, word (see Logos), + μανία, madness; see mania.] Aphasia in its most general sense.

logometer¹ (lō-gom'e-tēr), n. [NL., < Gr. λόγος, ratio, proportion (see Logos), + μέτρον, measure; see *meter*².] 1. A logarithmic scale. The natural numbers, generally from one power of 10 to another, are laid down at distances along the scale from a fixed point proportional to their logarithms. In Palmer's computing scale, made about 1845, there was a circle turning in its plane in a fixed circle, and the limbs of both were divided logarithmically, the numbers from 100 to 1000 occupying the circumference. It was a very useful instrument. Nystrom's calculator had curves engraved upon a metallic disk, and an arm with graduations on its edge turned about the center of the disk. The "magic square" sold in New York about 1883 was a square divided into square compartments, and was equivalent to a long scale cut up into many equal pieces placed side by side; and the measurement was made by the two edges of a square card or bit of paper. It was cheap and useful.

2. A scale for measuring chemical equivalents. logometer² (log-om'e-tēr), n. [Irreg. < *log*³ + Gr. μέτρον, measure; see *meter*².] A patent log for ships.

logometric (log-ō-met'rik), a. [As *logometer*¹ + -ic; cf. metric.] Of or pertaining to a logometer used in ascertaining or measuring chemical equivalents: as, a logometric scale.

logometrical (log-ō-met'ri-kal), a. [< logometric + -al.] Same as logometric.

Logos (log'os), n. [< L. logos, < Gr. λόγος, that which is said or spoken, a word, saying, speech, also the power of the mind manifested in speech, reason, account, reference, analogy, proportion, ratio, condition, etc., in N. T. ὁ λόγος, the Reason or Word (as a person) (see def.), < λέγειν, speak, say, tell, = L. legere, read; see legend, lecture. Hence logic, etc.] 1. In theol., the Divine Word; the transcendent Divine Reason as expressed in a distinct personality; the Second Person in the Trinity, both before and after the incarnation: so called as expressing God both to God himself and to his creatures, as language expresses reason and as reason is expressed by language. The word Logos (λόγος) is used by Plato of reason as a manifestation of or emanation from the Supreme Being. Philo Judæus, using ideas and language partly Platonic and partly scriptural, derived especially from the Septuagint, developed these in a form that suggests the Christian doctrine of the Logos. St. John, especially in the first chapter of his Gospel, first distinctly gives the Christian doctrine, assigning distinct personality to the Logos. Some early Christian writers distinguish between the Logos as Immanent (λόγος ἐνδιάθετος), or the Divine Reason still remaining in the bosom of the Father, and the Logos as uttered (λόγος προφορικός), or the Word sent forth to the world.

2. In the philosophy of Heraclitus and the Stoics, the rational principle that governs and develops the universe.

Taken broadly, the doctrine of the Logos may be said to have run in two parallel courses—the one philosophical, the other theological; the one the development of the Logos as reason, the other the development of the Logos as word; the one Hellenic, the other Hebrew. Encyc. Brit., XIV. 808.

Spermatic logos, in the Stoic phîlos., a principle of generation resident in matter.

logothete (log'ō-thēt), n. [< MGr. λογοθέτης, one who audits accounts, < Gr. λόγος, account (see Logos), + θετός, verbal adj. of τίθεμαι, put; see thesis.] 1. Properly, an accountant; hence, an officer of the Byzantine empire, who might be (a) the public treasurer, (b) the head of any administrative department, or (c) the chancellor of the empire.—2. In the Gr. Ch., the chancellor or keeper of the patriarchal seal of the Patriarch of Constantinople.

logotype (log'ō-tip), n. [< Gr. λόγος, word (see Logos), + τύπος, an impression; see type.] A type on which are cast the letters of a word or syllable; a single type used in place of several types. See logography, 1.

log-perch (log'pêrch), n. A percoid fish, Perca caprodes, the largest of the fresh-water fishes known in the United States as darters (Etheostominae). It attains a length of from 6 to 8 inches, and is common in the Great Lakes and southwestern streams. Also called hogfish, hog-molly, and rockfish.

log-reel (log'rēl), n. Naut., a reel on which the log-line is wound. See *log*².

logroll (log'rōl), v. i. [< log-roll-er, log-roll-ing.] To engage in log-rolling in the political sense.

In the Greek epic, the gods are partisans, they hold caucuses, they lobby and log-roll for their candidates. Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 28.

log-roller (log'rō'ler), n. 1. In a sawmill, a steam-power machine for loading logs upon the saw-carriage.—2. One of a number of politicians in a legislative body, united by an agreement, implied or expressed, to further each the other's schemes in consideration of a return in kind; a person habitually addicted to political log-rolling. [U. S.]

log-rolling (log'rō'ling), n. 1. A joining of forces for the purpose of handling logs: (a) For rolling the logs into heaps for burning after the trees have been felled to clear the land. Sometimes many neighbors were invited to assist, and a merry-making followed. (b) In lumbering, for rolling logs into a stream, where they are bound together and floated down to the mills. (c) For collecting logs for building purposes. [U. S. and Canada.]

Other rude pleasures were more truly characteristic of the [Kentuckians'] local environments—the log-rolling and the quilting, the social frolic of the harvesting, the merry parties of flax-pullers, and the corn-husking at night-fall. Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 554.

Hence—2. Mutual aid given by persons to one another in carrying out their several schemes or gaining their individual ends: used especially of politicians and legislators. [U. S.]

As will be seen subsequently, I do not think that corruption, in its grosser forms, is rife at Washington. When it appears, it appears chiefly in the milder form of reciprocal jobbing or (as it is called) log-rolling. J. Bryce, American Commonwealth, I. 150.

Another general delusion is the belief in log-rolling. The topic is well worn and needs few remarks. If by log-rolling is meant that reviewers praise people in hopes of being praised in turn, then the taunt is empty. Few people are quite so very mean or so ignorant of human nature as to log-roll in that sense. The American, XVII. 350.

log-scale (log'skāl), n. A table showing the quantity of lumber one inch thick, board-measure, obtainable from a round log, the length and the diameter beneath the bark being given. E. H. Knight.

log-slate (log'slāt), n. Naut., a double slate, marked and ruled on its inner side, like a log-book, on which the log is first recorded. The entries are daily copied from the slate into the log-book. In the United States navy the slate has been replaced by a paper book, so as to preserve the original record.

log-turner (log'tēr'nēr), n. In a sawmill, a machine for moving a log sidewise upon the saw-carriage. It consists of a steam-cylinder with a long piston-rod, the end of which engages and turns the log.

logwood (log'wūd), n. [< *log*¹ + *wood*¹: so called because imported in logs. Cf. barwood.] 1. A tree, Hamamelis virginica, found in many parts of the West Indies, where it has been introduced from the adjoining continent, especially from Honduras, on which account it has been called Campeachy wood. It belongs to the natural order Leguminosæ, suborder Campechiales. This tree has a crooked, deformed stem, growing to the height of from 20 to 40 feet, with crooked, irregular branches armed with strong thorns.

Branch with Fruits of Logwood (Hamamelis virginica). a, inflorescence; b, flower.

2. The wood of this tree. It is of a firm texture and a red color, whence the name bloodwood, and so heavy as to sink in water. It is much used in dyeing, and its coloring matter is derived from a principle called hematoxylin. Logwood contains, besides, resin, oil, acetic acid, salts of potash, a little sulphate of lime, alumina, peroxid of iron, and manganese. It is employed in calico-printing to give a black or brown color, and also in the preparation of some lakes. An extract of logwood is used in medicine as an astringent.

3. The bluewood, Condalia obovata. [Texas.]—Bastard logwood, Azadirachta indica, a tree of Jamaica.—Campeachy logwood. See def. 1.—Logwood-black. See black.—Logwood-blue, a color produced by logwood-extract on wool mordanted with alum and cream of tartar. It is similar in tone to indigo-blue. The same color is produced on cotton mordanted with acetate of copper, but is now seldom used, on account of its fugitive character.

logy (lō'gi), a. [Prob. < D. log, heavy, unwieldy, slow, stupid, akin to E. *log*¹. Cf. equiv. loggy.] Heavy; slow; stupid. Bartlett. [Local, U. S.]

lochoch (lō'hok), n. Same as *loch*².
loignet, n. [OF., var. of lygne, line; see *line*².] A line, cord, or tether; specifically, in falconry, a strip of leather attached to the foot of a bird of prey when not secure in its perch.

The logne it is so long
Of Bialaculi hertes to lura.
Rom. of the Rose, l. 3385.

loimic (loi'mik), a. [Prop. laemic*, < Gr. λαϊμικός, pestilential, < λαίμα, plague.] Pertaining to the plague or to pestilential diseases. Thomas.

loimography (loi-mog'ra-fī), n. [Prop. laimgography, < Gr. λαϊμός, plague, + -γραφία, < γράφειν, write.] A description or history of the plague or of pestilential diseases. Dunglison; Thomas.
loimology (loi-mol'ō-jī), n. [Prop. laimgology, < Gr. λαϊμός, plague, + -λογία, < λέγειν, speak; see -ology.] The sum of human knowledge concerning the plague or concerning plagues or pestilential diseases. Dunglison; Thomas.

loin (loin), n. [Early mod. E. also loyme, Sc. lungle, lunyle; < ME. loine, < OF. logne, longe, loin, F. longe, a loin, as of veal, < LL. lumbea*, fem. (or neut. pl.) of lumbus*, adj., < L. lumbus (> It. lombo = Sp. lomo = Pg. lombo = F. lombes, pl.), loin; perhaps = AS. londen, etc., loin; see *lende*¹.] The part of an animal which lies between the lowest of the false ribs on each side and the upper part of the ilium or haunch-bone; one of the lateral parts of the lumbar region: commonly used in the plural (often figuratively, with reference to this part of the body being the seat of the generative faculty and a symbol of strength), except as the name of a piece of meat from the lumbar region of an animal, as a loin of veal.

My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.
My father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions. 1 Ki. xii. 10, 11.

Brave son, derived from honourable loins!
Shak., J. C., II. 1. 322.

loin-cloth (loin'klōth), n. A piece of stuff, skin, or other material worn as clothing about the loins, or more exactly about the hips.

Loisaleuria (loi-sē-lī-ri-ā), n. [NL. (Desvaux, 1818), named after Loisleur Deslongchamps, a French botanist.] A genus of ericaceous plants of the tribe Rhodoreae, characterized by a campanulate corolla, on which the five stamens are inserted, and by having the leaves opposite. There is but one species, L. procumbens, a small, depressed, evergreen, shrubby plant, much branched and tufted, bearing a small cluster of white or rose-colored flowers from a terminal scaly bud. The plant is found on the alpine summits of Europe and North America, and in the arctic regions. It is called alpine or swallow ascia. See ascia, 3.

loiter (loi'tēr), v. [< ME. loitern, < OD. I. leiteren, linger, loiter, trifle; cf. OD. loteren, delay; LG. luderen = G. dial. loddern, loiten, be sluggish; AS. loddere, a beggar, = MLG. loddere = Ice. loddari, a worthless fellow; AS. lodrunn, trifling, nonsense, = OHG. lotar, empty, idle, MHG. loter, G. lotter, in comp., loose, worthless, lotter-bude, a worthless fellow; perhaps ult. connected with lous!.] I. intrans. To linger; be unduly slow in moving; delay; be dilatory; spend time idly.

Where have you been these two days loitering?

Shak., T. G. of V., iv. 4. 48.

—syn. To lag, tarry, saunter, dilly-dally.

II. trans. To consume or waste, as time, idly or carelessly; used with away: as, he loitered away most of his leisure.

loiterer (loi'tēr-ēr), n. One who loiters; an idler.

Ye lords, I say, that live like loiterers, look well to your offices.

Lattimer, Sermon of the Plough.

loitering (loi'tēr-ing), p. a. 1. Delaying; idle.

—2. Causing delay; inducing idleness.

Let it [a set form of prayer] be granted to some people while they are babes in Christian gifts, were it not better to take it away some after, as we do loitering books and interlinear translations from children?

Milton, Apology for Smectymnuna.

loiteringly (loi'tēr-ing-lī), adv. In a loitering manner; as a loiterer.

loiterer, n. A lazy loitering fellow.

If the loiterers be gone springing into a tavern, He fetch him reeling out.

Lyly, Mother Bombie. (Halliwell.)

loki, n. A Middle English form of lock.

lockchester, n. An obsolete form of lockchester.

lokdoer, n. [ME.: see lockchester and lugdore.]

A certain worm.

loke (lōk), n. [*< ME. loke, < AS. loca, a bar, bolt, an inclosure: see lock!., n.] 1. A wicket; hatch. — 2. A close narrow lane; a cul-de-sac. — 3. A private road or path. [Prov. Eng. in all uses.]

loke, loket, Middle English forms of the past participle of lock.

loke, n. An obsolete or dialectal form of lock.

loke, v. A Middle English form of lock.

loke, n. [ME., also lok, lake, lak, lac, < AS. lūc, sport, play, contest, also a gift, sacrifice: see lake!., n.] 1. Play; sport: same as lake!., 1. — 2. A gift; an offering.

lokeway (lōk'wā), n. Same as loke!., 2.

My house is bounded on the north by a lokeway leading from — to —.

N. and Q., 7th ser., VI. 191.

Loligidae (lō-lī-gī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Loligo + -idae.] Same as Loliginidae. P. P. Carpenter.

Loliginel (lō-lī-jin'ē-lī), n. pl. [NL.] Same as Loliginidae.

Loliginidae (lō-lī-jin'ē-dē), n. pl. [< Loligo (Loligin-) + -idae.] A family of decapod cephalopods, typified by the genus Loligo, with eyes covered by a transparent extension of the cephalic integument and lidless, arms of the fourth pair hectocotylized, and an internal corneous gladius. In these squids or calamaries the body is conical, tapering behind; the fins are large, sometimes extending the whole length of the body; the tentacular arms have four rows of suckers toward the end, the others two; and the cuttle is slim and flattened. The living genera are Loligo, Lolotus, Lolipoda, and Septoteuthis. See calamary and squid.

Loliginoidae (lō-lī-gī-nōi-dē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Loligo (Loligin-) + -oidae.] A superfamily of decapod cephalopods, with lidless eyes covered by a transparent extension of the skin of the head, an internal corneous gladius, and arms of the fourth pair hectocotylized.

Loligo (lō-lī-gō), n. [NL., < L. loligo, a cuttlefish.] The typical genus of the family Loliginidae. L. vulgaris is the common European squid. L. pealei, L. galei, and L. brevis are American species.

loligopoid (lō-lī-gōp'oid), n. A squid of the family Loligopidae.

Loligopidae (lō-lī-gōp'oid-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Loligopsis + -idae.] A family of decapod cephalopods of slender form, with small head, large fins, non-retractile tentacles, suckers two-rowed, and siphon without valves. The leading genera are Loligopsis, Leachia, Pyrgopsis, Taonius, and Cranchia. Also called Taonidae and Cranchiidae.

Loligopinae (lō-lī-gōp'oid-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Loligopsis + -inae.] The Loligopidae as a subfamily of Teuthidae.

Loligopsis (lō-lī-gōp'oid-ē), n. [NL., < Loligo + Gr. ὤψω, look, appearance.] The typical genus of Loligopidae.

lollion (lō-lī-on), n. [< L. lolium, darnel: see Lolium.] A plant of the genus Lolium; darnel; tares.

They had no pleasure to hear the Scribes and the Pharisees; they stank in their nose; their doctrine was unnecessary; it was of lollions, of declinations of aniseed, and cummin, and such gear.

Lattimer, Works, I. 200.

Lolium (lō-lī-um), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1737), < L. lolium, darnel, cockle, tares.] A genus of grasses of the tribe Hordeae and subtribe Triticeae. It is characterized by the many-flowered spikelets, which are in two ranks, alternate sessile, and with their edges facing the axis of the spike. More than 90 species have been enumerated, but they may be reduced to 6; they are native in Europe, the northern part of Africa, and temperate Asia, but they have been introduced in many other places. L. perenne, the ray, or rye-grass, is a good pasture or meadow-grass. The best variety is called Italian rye-grass. L. temulentum, the darnel, or bearded darnel, has been supposed to have noxious properties, to which the name temulentum, drunken, alludes. See darnel.

loll (lōl), v. [< ME. lollen, lounge, limp about, rest, also flap, wag, < MD. lollen, sit over the fire. Akin to lull: see lull.] I. intrans. 1. To lie or lean at ease; recline or lean idly, or in a careless or languid attitude.

He that *loll*eth is lame other his leg out of loyalty.

Piers Plowman (C), x. 215.

Folding our hands within our arms, we both *loll*ed upon the counter.

Sterne, Sentimental Journey, p. 66.

Fortune is . . . seen . . . as often trundling a wheelbarrow as lolling in a coach and six.

Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, lxx.

Rupert gave her a glance most bewitchingly tender, *Loll*d back in his chair, put his toes on the fender.

Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, II. 33.

2. To hang loose and extended, as the tongue protruded from the mouth of a dog or a cow.

His chyn with a chol [now] lolla.

Piers Plowman's Creed (F. E. T. S.), I. 224.

The triple porter of the Stygian seat
With lolling tongue lay fawning at thy feet.

Dryden.

The dreary black sea-weed lolls and wags.

Lowell, Appleton.

II. trans. 1. To hang up or out; allow to hang out, as the tongue.

Hilt hath ytake fro Tyborne twenty strunge theenes; Ther lewede theenes heu lollid vp lōke how thei been sawede!

Piers Plowman (C), xv. 181.

Mierce tigers couched around, and *loll*ed their fawning tongues.

Dryden.

2. To fondle; dandle. [North. Eng.]

He *loll*d her in his arms,

He *loll*d her on his breast.

North Country Ballads. (Halliwell.)

3. To box (one's ears). [Prov. Eng.] — 4. To utter unctiously.

The sun-shine of the Word, this he extoll'd:

The sun-shine of the Word, still this he *loll*d.

Colgrave, Wits Interpreter (1671), p. 282. (Nares.)

loll (lōl), n. [< loll, v.] 1. One who lounges and lolls about; a loafer.

Then let a knave be known to be a knave, . . .

A lolle a lolle, a heavy loll a lolle.

Bretton, Pasquill's Madcappe, p. 10. (Davies.)

2. A pet; a spoiled child; a child that is much fondled. [Prov. Eng.]

Lollard (lōl'ārd), n. [< ME. Lollard (ML. Lollardus), < MD. Lollaerd, one who mumbles prayers and hymns, whence a name applied to a semi-monastic sect in Brabant (see def.), this name being subsequently transferred in English to the followers of Wyclif; with suffix -ard (E. -ard), < lollen, sing softly, hum: see lull. In form and sense it seems to have been confused in ME. with loller, an idler, a vagabond: see loller.] 1. One of a semi-monastic society for the care of the sick and the burial of the dead, which originated at Antwerp about 1300. Also called Collite. — 2. One of the English followers of Wyclif, adherents of a wide-spread movement, partly political and socialistic, and in some respects anticipating Protestantism and Puritanism, in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries.

They were also called Bible men, from their reverence for the Bible. They differed on some points both among themselves and from Wyclif, but in the main condemned the use of images in churches, pilgrimages to the tombs of saints, the temporal lordship of the clergy, the hierarchical organization, papal authority, religious orders, ecclesiastical decorations, the ceremony of the mass, the doctrine of transubstantiation, waging of wars, and capital punishment. Some of them engaged in seditious proceedings, and they were severely persecuted for more than a hundred years, especially after the adoption of a special statute ("De heretico comburendo") against them in 1401. Lollards were very numerous at the close of the fourteenth century, and perhaps formed later part of the Lollardian party in the Wars of the Roses.

lollard (lōl'ārd), n. [< loll + -ard, after Lollard and loller.] One who lolls; an idler.

A lollard indeed over his elbow-ushion in almost the seventh part of forty or fifty years teaches them scarce the Principles of Religion.

Milton, Touching Hirelings.

Lollardism (lōl'ārd-izm), n. [< Lollard + -ism.] Same as Lollardy.

Lollardist (lōl'ārd-ist), a. [< Lollard + -ist.] Pertaining to or characteristic of the Lollards, or of their principles and doctrines.

Lord Salisbury, Sir Thomas Latimer of Braybrooke, and several others had chaplains who were Lollardist preachers.

Bayne, Brit., XIV. 511.

Lollardry (lōl'ārd-ri), n. [< ME. lollardrie; < Lollard + -ry.] Same as Lollardy.

I shall do my entire payne and diligence to put away, cease, and destroye, all manner heresies and errors, clepid openly lollardries, within my bully.

English Gods (E. E. T. S.), p. 417.

Lollardy (lōl'ārd-i), n. [< ME. Lollardie; < Lollard + -y.] The principles or doctrines of the Lollards.

Causeth for to bringe

This new secte of lollardie.

Gower, Conf. Amant., Prolog.

Lollardy was smouldering in secret; the heavy burdens of the nation were wearily borne.

Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 335.

loller (lōl'ēr), n. [< ME. loller, lollere; < loll + -er.] 1. One who lolls; an idler; a vagabond; a loafer.

For alle that han here hele and here eyen synne,

And lymes to laboure with, and lollers lye synne,

Lyeen a-gens goddes lawe.

Piers Plowman (C), x. 102.

One of the fashionable lollers by profession.

Mrs Edgeworth, Glaiside, xi. (Davies.)

2. A Lollard. See Lollard!., etymology and definition.

"I smelle a loller in the wynd," quod he.

Chaucer, Prolog. to Shipman's Tale, l. 12.

lolling (lōl'ing), p. a. Hanging down; leaning or lying at ease.

It is their common use to shane or els to sheare
Their heads, for none in all the land long lolling locks doth weare.

Hallbutt's Voyages, I. 387.

lollingite, n. See loellingite.

lollingly (lōl'ing-lī), adv. In a lolling manner.

She [Doorya] has four arms, with one of which she carries the skull of a giant; her tongue protrudes, and hangs lollingly from the mouth.

Buckle, Civilisation, I. 11.

lollipop, n. See lollypop.

lollok (lōl'ok), n. [< loll + -y.] A lump or large piece. [Prov. Eng.]

lollop (lōl'op), v. t. [< loll, with term. appar. as in dallop, wallop.] To loll or lounge idly; move heavily or be tossed about. [Colloq., Eng.]

Next in lollop'd Sandwich, with negligent grace,

For the sake of a lounge, not for love of a place.

Sir C. H. Williams, Placebook for the Year 1745.

For four long hours, therefore, we lolloped about in the trough of a heavy sea, the sails flapping as the vessel rolled.

Lady Brassey, Voyage of Sunbeam, I. 1.

lollypop (lōl'op-i), a. [< lollop + -y.] Given to lounging or lolling. [Colloq., Eng.]

loll-poop (lōl'pōp), n. A lazy lounging fellow. [Prov. Eng.]

lollpoop (lōl'pōp), v. t. [< loll-poop, n.] To loll or lounge; set lazily.

And now to view the loggerhead,

Cudgell'd and lollpooping in bed.

Homer's Iliad, Burlesqued (1732). (Nares.)

lolly (lōl'i), n. [A dial. word of various trivial applications, esp. in comp., as in lollybanger, lollypop, lollylolly, etc.] 1. A lump or lumpy mixture: a sense indicated by the compounds lollybanger, lollypop, lollylolly, and the variant lollok. — 2. Soft ice ground up by the rubbing of shoes together.

lolly (lōl'i), n.; pl. lollies (-lī). [< lolly.] A titmouse: as, the black-capped lolly, Parus major. [Local, Eng.]

lollybanger (lōl'i-bang-ēr), n. Very thick gingerbread enriched with raisins. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

lollypop, lollipop (lōl'i-pop), n. [< lolly + pop.] 1. A coarse sweetmeat, made of sugar and treacle, usually with the addition of butter and flour; taffy. [Eng.]

The pallid countenance . . . indicated too surely the irremediable and hopeless votary of lollypop—the opium-eater of school-boys. Dunstable, Coningsby, ix.

I would . . . never give those children lollypop, nor peep, . . . nor the theatre characters, nor the paint-box to illuminate the same. Thackeray, Lovel the Widower, I.

2. pl. Sweets; bonbons; candies. [Eng.]

"Hard-bake," "almond toffy," "halfpenny lollypop," "black balls," the cheaper "bull's eyes," and "squibs" are all made of treacle.

Mayhew, London Labour and London Poor, I. 215.

Parambulating vendors of lollypops and drinks jostled against each other, while gypsies were wending their way in and out telling fortunes.

T. C. Crawford, English Life, p. 163.

loma (lō'mā), n.; pl. lomata (-mā-tā). [NL., < LGr. λῶμα, hem, fringe.] In ornith., a lobe, flap, margin, or fringe bordering the toe of a bird. This membranous bordering may be continuous, constituting the loma continuus, or lobed or scalloped, the loma lobatum. A toe furnished with lomata is called digitus lomatus.

Lomandra (lō-man'drā), n. [NL. (Labillardière, 1804), so called in allusion to the margins of the circular anthers; < LGr. λῶμα, hem, fringe, + Gr. ἀνδρῶν (andron), a male (mod. bot. a stamen).] A genus of monocotyledonous plants of the natural order Liliaceae, the type of the tribe Lomandreae. It is characterized by a very short or creeping rootstock, leafy stems, often branched, and daisy-like flowers in paniculate heads or dense spikes, the pistillate with a three-lobed ovary containing three ovules. There are 29 species, growing in Australia, one of which has been reported from New Caledonia; all are rush-like herbs, with rigid linear leaves and small flowers. The genus has long been known by the name Xerotes given to it by Robert Brown in 1810, which has to give way under the rule of priority.

Lomandreae (lō-man'drā-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Labillardière, 1804), < Lomandra + -ae.] A tribe of monocotyledonous plants of the order Liliaceae. It is characterized by having the segments of the perianth glume-like or membranous, or the inner set small and petaloid, and versatile anthers attached at the back. The tribe includes 4 genera, of which Lomandra is the type, and 43 species, all but one confined to Australia. This group has been generally placed in the natural order Juncaceae, as allied to the rushes, but the latest revisions indicate a closer affinity with the lily family.

Lomaria (lō-mā'ri-ā), n. [NL. (Willdenow, 1809), < LGr. λῶμα, hem, fringe, + -aria.] A genus of polypodiaceous ferns, having the sori linear in a continuous band next the midrib of the pinnae in the fertile frond, the indusium formed of the revolute margin of the frond, and the fronds dimorphous. About 45 species are known, mostly natives of the south temperate zone. L. Spheana, the hard-fern, is the only North American species. See hard-fern.

lomaroid (lō-mā'ri-oid), a. [Lomaria + -oid.] Pertaining to or resembling the genus Lomaria.

lomastome (lō'mā-stōm), n. and a. [LGr. λῶμα, hem, fringe, + στόμα, mouth.] I. n. In oonoh., a member of any one of several different groups of Helicoidae, as Helix caruscolensis, H. metaformis, etc., having the peristome reflected.

II. a. Having a reflected lip or border of the peristome, as a snail.

lomata, n. Plural of loma.

lomatine (lō'mā-tin), a. [LGr. λῶμα, hem, fringe; see loma.] Margined, fringed, or lobate, as the toes of a bird. See loma. Cones.

Lombard (lom'bārd, formerly lum'bārd), n. and a. [Early mod. E. also Lumbard; < ME. Lombard, Lumbard, < OF. Lombard, Lombart, F. Lombard = Sp. Pg. It. Lombardo (ML. Lombardus, after Rom.), a Lombard (in OF. and ME. usually a Lombard or any Italian trading in France or England), < L. Lombardus, Lombardus, usually in pl. Lombardi, Lombardi, Gr. Λομβάρδοι, Λομβάρδοι, a people of northern Germany west of the Elbe, who are mentioned by Tacitus, and who in later times established themselves in the northern part of Italy, called thence Lombardy; appar. 'Long-beards' (AS. Langbeardas, Icel. Langbardhar), < OTeut. (OHG.) lang, = E. long, + burt = E. beard. Some take the second element to be MHG. barte, an ax (the same as the second element of halberd, q. v.). See also quot. from Smith's Class. Dict. Hence *Lombard*². I. n. A native or an inhabitant of Lombardy in Italy; more specifically, a member of the Germanic tribe (Lombards) who about A. D. 568, under Alboin, conquered the part of northern Italy still called Lombardy, and founded the kingdom of that name, which was afterward extended over a much larger territory, and was finally overthrown by Charlemagne in 774.

Paulus Diaconus, who was a Lombard by birth, derives their name of Lombards from their long beards; but modern critics reject this etymology, and suppose the name to have reference to their dwelling on the banks of the Elbe, inasmuch as Borde signifies in Low German a fertile plain on the bank of a river, and there is still a district in Magdeburg called the lange Börde. Smith's Class. Dict.

II. a. Of or pertaining to Lombardy or the Lombards.

And stern and sad (so rare the smiles
(Of sunlight) look'd the Lombard piles.
Tennyson, The Daisy.

Lombard as applied to any art is an absolute misnomer, if supposed to be derived from the barbarous tribes who crossed the Alps under Alboin, . . . since they, like the Goths, were ignorant and unlettered. It was not because the new style of architecture, which sprang up in Italy during their dominion, originated with them, that the name of Lombard was applied to the manner of building then prevalent, but because the greater part of the southern as well as the northern Italian provinces were comprehended under the name of Lombardy.

C. C. Perkins, Italian Sculpture, Int. p. x.

Lombard architecture, the local form which the Romanesque style of architecture assumed in the north of Italy, characteristic of the buildings erected from the end of the sixth to the beginning of the thirteenth century, and constituting a connecting-link between the Roman architecture of Italy and the medieval styles of more northern countries. The style was molded particularly by Byzantine influences, but was not unmodified by the northern intellectual element brought in by the Lombard conquerors. A feature of the early Lombard architecture is the artistic development of the vault, that constructive member which was destined to become the formative principle of medieval styles in general. In Lombard monumental pillars consisting of several shafts arranged round a central mass, and buttresses of small projection, appear to have been employed very early. The use of the dome to surmount the junction of the choir, nave, and transepts is frequent.

Lombard² (lom'bārd, formerly lum'bārd), n. [Early mod. E. also Lumbard (> *lumber*², q. v.); < ME. lumbard = OD. lombaerd, a broker, lombaerde, a broker's shop, < OF. lombard, a broker, lombardo, a broker's shop; so called from the numerous Lombards or Italians in England who were engaged in money-lending; see *Lombard*¹. Cf. *lumber*².] I. a. A banker or money-broker or lender. The Lombards were the original occupants of Lombard Street, now the financial center of London, the name of which is used to signify in general the London money-market. The bankers of London who were Lombards or Italians by race continued to be recruited by immigration till the time of Queen Elizabeth, when most of them returned to Italy.

This merchant, which that was ful war and wys,
Crenewed hath and payd eek in Parys
To certein Lumbardes redy in hir lond.
The somme of gold, and hadde of hem his bond.
Chaucer, Shipman's Tale, l. 367.

At an early period the leadership of the Lombards was for a while assumed by the Cornali, a noble family of Florence.

F. Martin, Hist. of Lloyd's, p. 21.

2. [I. c.] A bank for loans; a broker's shop; a pawnbroker's shop. See *lumber*².

A Lombard unto this day signifying a bank for usury or pawns.
Fuller, Ch. Hist., III. v. 10. (Davies.)

The royal treasure he exhausts in pride and riot; the jewels of the Crown are in the Lombard.

E. Fennell, Hist. Edw. II., p. 27.

This suit was made up for a noble lord on the last birthday, and conveyed thither (to a Lombard) the very next morning after it had appeared at court.

The Cornetman, No. 117.

Hence—3. [I. c.] A public institution for lending money to the poor at a moderate interest on articles deposited and pledged; a mont-de-piété.—Lombard Street to a China orange, very long odds, as in a wager.

"It is Lombard-Street to a China Orange," quoth Uncle Jack. "Are the odds in favour of fame against failure really so great?" . . . answered my father.

Bulwer, Cartons, iv. 3.

lombard², n. [ML. lumbardus, prob. so called with reference to Lombardy (see *Lombard*¹). It could be a "corruption" of bombard only by misprint.] Milit., a cannon of heavy caliber in the later middle ages and in the sixteenth century; probably derived from northern Italy.

Lombardier (lom-bārd-ēr), n. [*Lombard*² + -er.] A Lombard or broker.

They are tolerated for advantage of Commerce, wherein the Jews are wonderful dexterous, tho' most of them be only Brokers and Lombardiers. Hovell, Letters, I. l. 33.

lombard-house (lom'bārd-hous), n. Same as *lombard*², 3.

Lombardic (lom-bārd'ik), a. and n. [= F. Lombardique = Sp. Lombardico = Pg. It. Lombardico, < ML. Lombardicus, < Lombardus, Lombard; see *Lombard*¹.] I. a. Pertaining to or characteristic of Lombardy or of the Lombards; in art, of or pertaining to the school of Lombardy.

Correggio, uniting the sensual element of the Greek schools with their gloom, and their light with their beauty, and all these with the Lombard colour, became . . . the captain of the painter's art as such.

Ruskin, Lectures on Art.

Lombardic architecture. See Lombard architecture, under *Lombard*¹, a.—Lombardic school, in painting, the school including the kindred styles of the cities of Lombardy, and chiefly of Milan, during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The manner of the Lombard painters was, in general, somewhat cold; but they displayed great facility and much fertility and grace. The greatest names of the school are those of Andrea Mantegna (1431-1506), early established at Mantua, and Leonardo da Vinci (1452-1519), the universal genius; while Bernardino Luini (about 1465-1540), the delightful artist and follower of Leonardo, must not be forgotten. The famous Correggio (1494-1534) of Parma had not so wide a reputation during his lifetime, and may be regarded in some respects as an isolated genius.—Lombardic script. See II.

II. n. A particular type of writing derived from the Roman cursive, and retaining many of the features of the older majuscule and uncial. It is characteristic of the greater number of Italian manuscripts dating from the seventh to the thirteenth century.

Lombardy poplar. See poplar.

lome¹, n. An obsolete form of *loom*¹. Palgrave.
lome² (lōm), adv. [ME., < AS. gelōme = OHG. gilōmo, often. Cf. *lomo*¹.] Frequently.

For in here liknesse ours lordes lome hath be knowe;
Witness in the Paaske-wake when he seode to Emma.
Piers Plowman (C), xlii. 121.

loment (lō'ment), n. [ME. loment, < L. lomentum, a mixture of bean-meal and rice used as a cosmetic, also a blue color (NL. a loment), < lavare, pp. lauium, lotus, wash; see *lave*².] I. a. A mash or mixture.

The wyne browne eschaungeth into white Yf that me putte in it lomentis of bene.

Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. 3), p. 200.

2. In bot., a legume which at maturity breaks up by transverse articulations into one-seeded indehiscent joints. See legume, 2.

lomenta, n. Plural of lomentum.

Lomentaceae (lō-men-tā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1792), fem. pl. of lomentaceus; see lomentaceus.] A former suborder of Cruciferae, the siliqua of which resembles a lomentum in having each seed divided from its neighbor by a transverse dissepiment. The radish (Raphanus) and the sea-rocket (Cakile) belong to this suborder, and now typify the two tribes, Raphanaceae and Cakileae, respectively, which modern authors adopt in its place.

lomentaceous (lō-men-tā'shūs), a. [Lomentaceus, resembling a loment, < lomentum, a loment; see loment.] Resembling or being a loment; bearing lomentis; belonging to the Lomentaceae.

Lomentaria (lō-men-tā'ri-ā), n. [NL. (Lyngbye, 1819), < lomentum, a legume (with constricted joints), + -aria.] A small genus of red seaweeds, typical of the tribe Lomentarieae, having filamentous, branching, hollow fronds with constricted joints formed of one or more layers of roundish-angular cells, with a few longitudinal filaments in the center, tripartite tetraspores, and external sessile cystocarps.

Lomentariaceae (lō-men-tā'ri-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Payer, 1850), < Lomentaria + -aceae.] The same, or nearly the same, as Lomentarieae.

Lomentarieae (lō-men-tā'ri-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Agardh, 1851), < Lomentaria + -ae.] A tribe of red seaweeds, placed by Farlow in the suborder Rhodymeniceae, and typified by the genus Lomentaria. The boundaries of this tribe, as in nearly all the Rhodymeniceae, are ill-defined, and further study is necessary. The fronds are tubular, and the cystocarps are provided with a basal placenta.

lomentum (lō-men'tum), n.; pl. lomenta (-tā). [NL.; see loment.] Same as loment, 2.

lomeret, v. t. Same as *lumber*¹.

lomi-lomi (lō'mi-lō-mi), n. [Hawaiian lomi-lomi, v., redupl. of lomi, rub with the hand.] The massage or shampooing process of the Sandwich Islanders.

lomonite (lō'mon-it), n. See laumontite.

lomp, n. An obsolete form of *lump*¹.

lumper (lom'pēr), v. t. [Cf. *lump*¹, *lumber*¹.] 1. To idle. [Prov. Eng.]—2. To walk heavily. [Prov. Eng.] Halliwel.

lompish, a. An obsolete form of lumpyish.

Lomvia (lom'vi-ā), n. [NL., also Lomvia, from a Faroese form of *loom*².] 1. A genus of three-toed web-footed swimming and diving birds of the auk family, Alcidae; the murres or foolish guillemots. There are several species; the best-known is L. troile, of which the spectacled guillemot, L. rhodogaster, is a variety. The grey or arctic is a thick-billed guillemot of the North Pacific, L. arctica. The corresponding form of the North Atlantic is Brunnich's guillemot, L. brunneicauda. See Uria.

2. [I. c.] A species of the genus Lomvia; a murre or guillemot.

lon. An abbreviation of longitude.

Lonchaea (long-ké's), n. [NL. (Fallen, 1820), < Gr. λόγχη, a spear-head, spear, lance: see lancoi.] The typical genus of Lonchaeidae. They are small, thick, metallic flies, with a strongly protruding ovipositor in the female. The larvae feed under the bark of the stems and roots of small plants. More than 30 European and 4 North American species are known, L. pottii being one of the latter.

Lonchaeidae (long-ké'i-dé), n. pl. [NL. (Osten-Sacken, 1878), < Lonchaea + -idae.] A family of Diptera, allied to Ortiidae, chiefly characterized by the wing-venation, and containing the genera Lonchaea and Palloptera.

Loncheres (long-ké-réz), n. [NL., < Gr. λόγχη, armed with a spear, < λόγχι, a spear (see lancoi), + ν ἀρ, fit: see arm.] A South American genus of hystricomorphic rodents of the family Octodontidae and subfamily Echomysinae, having the fur usually mixed with flattened spines. The spiny rats, L. orlati and L. picta, are two prettily marked species, the former with a snowy crest and tail-tip.

Lonchitides (long-ki-tid'ē-s), n. pl. [NL., < Lonchitis (Lonchitid.) + -es.] A section of ferns proposed by Presl in 1836, typified by the genus Lonchitis. It is now abandoned, and the genus is placed in the tribe Pteridaceae.

Lonchitis (long-ki'tis), n. [NL., < L. lonchitis, a spear, < Gr. λόγχη, the tongue-shaped or lance-shaped stander-grass, < λόγχι, a spear, lance: see lancoi.] A small genus of polypodiaceous ferns, typifying the section Lonchitides of Presl, and closely allied to the genus Adiantum. The fronds are strong, erect, deltoid, and tripinnatifid, and the sori are marginal and covered by an indurium as in Adiantum.

Lonchocarpus (long-kō-kār'pē-s), n. pl. [NL., < Lonchocarpus + -ae.] A subtribe of leguminous plants, typified by the genus Lonchocarpus, belonging to the tribe Dalbergieae, and distinguished by the generally opposite leaves and the transversely or laterally affixed, not pendulous, seeds. It embraces 9 genera of tropical trees and shrubs.

Lonchocarpus (long-kō-kār'pus), n. [NL. (Humboldt, Bonpland, and Kunth, 1828), < Gr. λόγχη, a spear, lance, + καρπός, fruit.] A genus of leguminous plants of the tribe Dalbergieae, the type of the subtribe Lonchocarpeae. It is distinguished by having the wings adhering to the keel of the flower, and by the flat membranaceous or coriaceous pod with the superior suture transversely nerved but not winged at the back. The species are about 55 in number, including trees and shrubs. Most of them are found in tropical America, a few in tropical Africa, and one in Australia. L. latifolius of the West Indies, etc., is called blackwood. L. Blackii, a tall woody climber of Queensland and New South Wales, is called lanepod. Some species are ornamental.

Lonchoptera (long-kop'tē-rā), n. [NL. (Meigen, 1808), < Gr. λόγχη, a spear, lance, + πτερόν, a wing, = E. feather.] The typical genus of Lonchopteridae. They are small delicate flies of yellow-brown or gray color, characterized by the lanceolation and venation of the wings, abounding on stones along shady watercourses. About 30 European species are known, two of which are also found in North America.

Lonchopteridae (long-kop'tē'i-dé), n. pl. [NL. (Macquart, 1835), < Lonchoptera + -idae.] A family of dipterous insects, typified by the only genus, Lonchoptera, having the wings acutely pointed and without a median cross-vein.

Lonchopteris (long-kop'tē-ris), n. [NL. (Brongniart, 1828), < Gr. λόγχη, a spear, lance, + πτερίς, a fern.] A genus of fossil ferns found in the coal-measures of England and France.

Lonchopteris rugosa.

It is related to Diptyopteris and Allopteris, the pinnules having a very distinct median nerve and a reticulated lateral venation. It embraces about 30 species, found abundantly in the coal-measures of Europe, and occurring in those of Sydney, Cape Breton, and of China, but ranging upward to the Upper Cretaceous, and common in the Wealden of England and Belgium and in the Cretaceous of Westphalia. The older Mesozoic (Rhétic) beds of Virginia and North Carolina also contain it.

lonci, n. A Middle English form of land.

Londoner, n. [ME., < OF. (AF.) Londenois; as London + -er, the form Londonese being also in recent use.] A Londoner; one born in London. Chaucer.

London board. See board.

London clay. A geological formation of importance in southeastern England, and especially at and near London, whence the name. It belongs to the lower division of the Eocene Tertiary, being separated from the Cretaceous by the Woolwich, Reading, and Thanet beds. The London clay has a maximum thickness of about 500 feet, and seems to have been laid down near the mouth of a large estuary of the sea, into which relics of the vegetation and fauna of the adjacent land were swept. The thickness of the clay under the city of London varies with the amount of erosion which has taken place in the scooping out of the valley of the Thames. The full thickness of the formation is preserved under the outcrops of the Bagshot sand which occurs in various places near the city, especially at Hampstead and Highgate.

Londoner (lun'dun-er), n. [ME. Londenore (?), < London, < AS. Lunden, also Lundenburh (burh, > E. borough), Lundenoeaster (easter, > E. ocheater), Lundenwic (wic, > E. wic), < L. Londinium, of Celtic origin.] A native or citizen of London in England.

The King by Proclamation calls the Londoners to Westminster, and there cansteth the Bishops of Worcester and Chichester to declare his intentions.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 82.

Londonese (lun'dun-ēs' or -ēs'), a. and n. [< London + -ese. Cf. Londonois. The AS. form was Lundenisc.] I. a. Pertaining to London in England, or to its peculiarities of speech; cockney.

II. n. English as spoken in London; especially, cockney speech.

Londonism (lun'dun-izm), n. [< London + -ism.] A mode of speaking, acting, or behaving peculiar to London.

Londonise (lun'dun-iz), v.; pret. and pp. Londonized, ppr. Londonizing. [< London + -ize.] I. trans. To invest with some attribute characteristic of London or the people of London.

II. intrans. To adopt or imitate the manners or the fashions of Londoners.

London paste. See paste.

London-pride (lun'dun-prid), n. 1. A British plant, Saxifraga umbrosa, common in cottage-gardens. Also called none-so-pretty and St. Patrick's cabbage.—2. The sweet-william, Dianthus barbatus. Also called London-tuft. [Old or local.]

London purple. See purple.

London-rocket (lun'dun-rok'et), n. A plant, Stachys media, which grows in waste places throughout Europe, and was formerly common in the neighborhood of London, first appearing just after the great fire of 1666.

London smoke, sprat, white, etc. See smoke, etc.

London-tuft (lun'dun-tuft), n. Same as London-pride.

lonel (lōn), a. [By aphesis from alone, as live from alive; lonel and live being used attributively, while the full form, orig. a prep. phr., is used in the predicate.] 1. Being unaccompanied; apart from any other; solitary; lonely; isolated: as, a lonel traveler; a lonel house.

Enid, the pilot star of my lonel life. Tennyson, Geraint.

2. Single in state; living alone; unmated or unmarried.

A hundred mark is a long one for a poor lonel woman to bear. Shak., 2 Hen. IV., II. 1. 25.

3. Lonely; secluded; unfrequented. [Rare or poetical.]

In some lonel isle, or distant Northern land. Pope, E. of the L., IV. 184.

Lonel hand, in the game of euche, one person playing against all the others, or against his opponents without aid from his own side.—Lonel star. See star.

lonel (lōn), n. [< ME. lonel, a var. of lanco: see lanco.] A lane. Also loan. [Prov. Eng.]

lonel, n. A Middle English form of loan.

loneliness (lōn'li-nes), n. 1. The condition of being lonely; solitariness; want of society or human interest: as, the loneliness of a hermit's cave.

There's nothing left to fancy's guess,
You see that all is loneliness. Scott, Marmion, II., Int.

2. The sense of being alone or lonely; dejection from want of companionship or sympathy; forlornness.

Uphold me, Father, in my loneliness. Tennyson, Enoch Arden.

A feeling of oppressive loneliness comes over the spirit as the eye ranges across that voiceless wilderness. O'Donovan, Merv, xx.

3. Love of retirement; preference for solitude.

Now I see
The mystery of your loneliness. Shak., All's Well, I. 2. 177.

—Syn. Lonesomeness, Retirement, etc. See solitude.

lonely (lōn'li), a. [< lonel + -ly; strictly, by aphesis from alonely.] 1. Unfrequented by men; solitary; desolate: as, a lonely situation.

So lonely 'twas, that God himself Scarce seemed there to be. Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, vii.

2. Lacking association or companionship; solitary; standing apart physically or mentally.

Or let my lamp, at midnight hour,
Be seen in some high lonely tower. Milton, Il Penseroso, l. 82.

3. Sad or dejected from want of companionship or sympathy; forsaken; forlorn.

I never saw a more forgettable face—pale, serious, lonely. Dr. J. Brown, Bab and his Friends.

Why should I feel lonely? . . . What sort of space is that which separates a man from his fellows? Thoreau, Walden, p. 144.

Right thro' his manful breast darted the pang
That makes a man, in the sweet face of her Whom he loves most, lonely and miserable. Tennyson, Geraint.

—Syn. 1. Lone, unfrequented, secluded, dreary.—2. Lonesome, companionless.

lonesome (lōn'sum), n. The state of being single or alone; seclusion; solitariness.

Fresh beauty, let me not be thought uncivil, Thus to be partner of your lonesome. Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, I. 2.

lonesome (lōn'sum), a. [< lonel + -some.] 1. Drearly solitary; secluded from society; dejected from want of company.

I have never felt lonesome, or in the least oppressed by a sense of solitude. Thoreau, Walden, p. 143.

2. Expressing loneliness or dejection. [Rare.]

Neither shall we content ourselves in lonesome tunes,
And private soliloquies, to whisper out the divine praises. Barrow, Works, I. viii.

3. Secluded; unfrequented; lonely.

Like one that on a lonesome road
Doth walk in fear and dread. Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, vi.

In November days,
When vapors rolling down the valleys made A lonely scene more lonesome. Wordsworth, Influence of Natural Objects.

lonesomely (lōn'sum-li), adv. In a lonesome manner.

lonesomeness (lōn'sum-nes), n. The state of being lonesome, in any sense of that word.—Syn. Loneliness, Seclusion, etc. See solitude.

long (lōng), a. and n. [Sc. lang; < ME. long, lang, < AS. lang, long = OS. lang, long = OFries. lang, long = MD. lang = MLG. lang, long, lang, MHG. lang, G. lang = Icel. langr = Dan. lang = Sw. lång = Goth. laggs, long, = L. longus (> It. lungo = Pg. longo = Pr. long, long, long = F. long), long; perhaps = OPers. drānga, long, the d being in this case lost, and the r changed to l, in L., etc. The L. word is not the source of the Teut., but merely cognate. From the AS. word are ult. E. long, along, along, belong, ling, linger, length, etc.; from the L. are ult. E. elongate, longitude, longevity, oblong, prolong, eloin, eloin, purlain, lung, etc.] I. a. 1. Having great linear extent; not short; having notable or unusual extent; relatively much extended or drawn out: as, a long distance; long hair; a long arm.

The walks . . . are many, whereof some are a very long, and of a convenient breadth. Coryat, Crudities, I. 87.

His other parts besides Prone on the flood, extended long and large, Lay floating many a rood. Milton, P. L., I. 106.

But she has wrote a long letter,
And sealed it with her hand. Catherine Johnsons (Child's Ballads, IV. 36).

2. Having linear or continuous extent in space; measured from end to end; viewed in the direction of the greatest distance (that is, the distance exceeding that of the width, or a line drawn at right angles to the width).

The measure thereof is longer than the earth, and broader than the sea. Job xl. 9.

The Curcuma (a venomous snake), fifteen spannes long, which lieth on a tree to hunt his prey. Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 262.

3. Tall; as, long Tom Coffin. [Now only colloq. or humorous.]

Off Duke Nestor to dame, doughty in warre,
He was long & large, with limps full grea. Drayton, Destruction of Troy (B. R. T. S.), I. 2005.

4. Having duration or extent in time; lasting in continuance; following a term of measurement or reckoning, or used relatively: as, a discourse an hour long; the longest day of the year.

It cannot be long before we lie down in darkness, and have our light in ashes. Str. T. Brown, Urn-burial, v.

5. Drawn out in duration; having unusual continuance; lasting; prolonged; as time, long.

cession, etc.: as, long hours of labor; long illness; a long line of descendants; a long note.

When they make a long blast with the ram's horn, . . . all the people shall shout. Josh. vi. 8.

My Lord Chancellor Bacon is lately dead of a long languishing weakness. Howell, Letters, i. iv. 8.

Long health, long youth, long pleasure— and a friend. Pope, To Mrs. Martha Blount.

Specifically—(a) In pros., greater in duration (technically called quantity) than the unit of time, or regarded. A long vowel, or sometimes a vowel in a long syllable, is marked as such by a straight line above it, thus, ā. In ancient orthography and prosody a long vowel is regarded as consisting regularly of the sum of two similar short vowels, thus, ā = a + a, and a diphthong is also necessarily long as the sum of two dissimilar short vowels, thus, au = a + u. In either case, if either element is already long, the excess is not counted. See the phrases long by nature and long by position, below, and II. (b) In Eng. orthography, noting one of the two or more principal pronunciations of each of the five true vowels, a, e, i, o, u, exemplified in the words face, mate, able, note, meat, usually marked for pronunciation, as in this work, ā, ē, ī, ō, ū; opposed to the short sounds of the same letters in fat, met, at, not, put, frequently marked as ă, ě, ĩ, ɔ, ʊ, but left unmarked in this work. The two sounds of the same letter now called long and short do not, for the most part, phonetically correspond to each other; but short is used specifically to note the more frequently employed of the shorter sounds of a certain letter, and long, by a similar limitation, for the more usual among the longer sounds of the same letter in our established orthography.

6. Far-reaching; far-seeing: as, a long look ahead.

Thus proving in his bud maturity sage,
And long in Wisdom, er in years of age.
J. Beaumont, Psycho, i. 82.

The perennial existence of bodies corporate and their fortunes are things particularly suited to a man who has long views. Burke.

7. Happening or occurring after a protracted interval; much delayed or postponed.

Death will not be long in coming. Ecclesi. xiv. 12.

He stopped me, as I made for the staircase, to extort a promise that I would not be long; nor was I long: in five minutes I rejoined him. Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xiv.

8. Seeming prolonged; tedious; wearisome: as, long hours of waiting.

The weary night was longer yet
Than was the day, and harder to forget
The thoughts that come therewith.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, III. 151.

A long hit, a long chalk. See the nouns.—A long day, a far-off time; extended postponement; long suspense or reprieve.—A long dozen, one more than a dozen; thirteen. See bakers' dozen, under baker.—A long face, a face wearing an expression of sadness or solemnity; so called from the drawing down of the facial lines.—A long figure, a high price; a large sum. [Colloq. or slang].—A long head, a mind characterized by sagacity, foresight, and shrewdness with caution.—A long row to hoe. See hoe.—A long tongue, a tongue given to tedious or mischievous loquacity.

Get you gone, sirrah;
And what you have seen be secret in; you are paid else;
No more of your long tongue.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, v. 4.

As broad as long. See broad.—At the long last, in the end, however far off; finally.

Human nature, which, at the long last, is always to blame. Lowell, Study Windows, p. 151.

Before long, before a long time has elapsed; shortly; soon: as, I shall see him before long.—Common long meter. See common.—Out and long tall. See cut, p. 4.—Ere long. Same as before long, but commonly used of a shorter interval: as, ere long the storm became furious.—For long, for or during a long time, absolutely or comparatively.

For long ago I have forgot to court;
Besides, the fashion of the time is changed.
Shak., T. G. of V., III. 1. 85.

O love, I have not seen you for so long.
Tennyson, Lover's Tale, iv.

In the long run. See run.—Long appoggiatura. See appoggiatura.—Long bob, a kind of peruke worn about the middle of the eighteenth century.—Long bone, in anat., one of the elongated and cylindrical bones of the limbs, as a humerus or femur. In a former classification bones were distinguished as long, short, flat, and irregular.—Long by nature, in anc. pros., noting a syllable long or prolonged in utterance by virtue of its containing a long vowel, or the equivalent of this in time, a diphthong, whether followed by two or more consonants or not. See nature.—Long by position, in anc. pros., noting a syllable containing a short vowel immediately followed by two or more consonants or by a double consonant. The vowel remains short in pronunciation, but the time of the syllable is prolonged by the delay occasioned by the enunciation of the consonants. See position.—Long chop. See chop, 2.—Long claim. (a) The common claim, Mys armaria, and related species: so called in distinction from round claims, as species of Venus, Macra, etc. (b) The razorshell, Ercella americana.—Long clay, cloth, clothes, division. See the nouns.—Long dress, in female apparel, a skirt descending to the feet: as, a girl not yet in long dress.—Long drum, an old name of the bass drum. See drum.—Long feeder. See feeder.—Long fax. See fax.—Long float. See float, 9.—Long haul, short haul, phrases in railroad use to express the relative length of transportation, in connection with the amount of charges for the respective services. The long- and short-haul clauses of the Interstate Commerce Act of the United States provides that "it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter or being included in the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive a greater compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance." The Interstate Commerce Commission have power to grant relief from this restriction under circumstances which would make it unjust to the carrier.—Long home, hundred, insignia. See the nouns.—Long lay, a small proportion in the profits of a whaling-voyage accruing to certain members of the crew, such as the foremast-hands, etc.: opposed to short lay. See lay, 6.—Long measure, meter, mordent, oddity. See the nouns.—Long of stock or of stocks, well supplied with a stock or stocks, as a broker or stock-speculator; holding a stock, or contracts for the purchase of a stock, for a rise, as a bull in the stock-market.—Long particular meter. See meter.—Long pig, the literal rendering by English sailors of the term applied to a corpse by the Fiji cannibals.

The expression long pig is not a joke, nor a phrase invented by Europeans, but one frequently used by the Fijians, who looked upon a corpse as ordinary butcher meat, and called a human body puka balava, long pig, in contradistinction to puka dina, or real pig.

St. Johnston, Camping among Cannibals.

Long rest. See long-rest.—Long robe, roll, etc. See the nouns.—Long straight, stretched out; at length.

He risit hym up and long straight he hire loids.

Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 1163.

Long tom, vacation, wheel, etc. See the nouns.—Long ton, a ton of 2,240 pounds, reckoned as 20 hundredweight of 112 pounds each.—Long verse, a name sometimes given to the dactylic hexameter.—To draw the long bow. See to draw the longbow, under longbow.—To make a long arm. See make.

II. n. 1. Something that has length; also, the full extent: used in some elliptical expressions, as in English universities for the long vacation, and in the phrase the long and the short of it.

Six weeks were to elapse before the Long commenced.
P. W. Farrer, Julian Home, p. 184.

In the vacations, particularly the Long, there is every facility for reading.

C. A. Bristol, English University, p. 105.

2. In pros., a long time or syllable. In ancient prosody a long is a time greater than a short, or a syllable requiring a perceptibly greater time to pronounce than is required by a short. A short, comparable to an eighth-note in modern music, being assumed as the more or unit of time, the regular or normal long is equivalent to two shorts, and is comparable to a quarter-note in music, consuming twice the time in pronunciation required by the regular or normal short, and resolvable under certain conditions into one long. Thus, an iambus, or short followed by a long, may appear as a tribrach or three shorts; and a dactyl, or long followed by two shorts, is generally interchangeable with a spondee—that is, a long followed by another long. Besides the normal (dichronous or disemio) long, ancient writers also recognize longs equivalent to three, four, and five shorts, called trichronous (trisemio), tetrachronous (tetrasemio), and pentachronous (pentasemio) longs respectively, as well as others, called irrational, which can only be expressed fractionally: for instance, $\frac{1}{4}$ shorts. Such a long (one of 14 more) could be used to represent a short. In ancient pronunciation the syllable accent was a matter more of pitch or tone than of stress, and the metrical accent (ictus or beat) was independent of it, and regularly fell on a syllable long in time. In modern languages a difference between shorts and longs in actual time of utterance exists to a greater or less degree, but is partially or wholly subordinated to syllabic accent, which is principally or altogether a matter of stress. The ictus in modern poetry regularly coincides with this syllabic stress, and in this accordingly a long is a syllable taking the stress, or ictus, without regard to the time occupied, in pronunciation.

"I have seen some longs and shorts [i. e. some verses] of Hittail," said I, "about the Caledonian Boar, which were not bad."
M. Arnold, Friendship's Garland, vi.

The average long would occupy rather less than twice the time of the average short. J. Hadley, Essays, p. 264.

3. In medieval musical notation, a note equivalent in time-value either to three or to two breves, according as the rhythm was "perfect" or "imperfect." Its form was .

—For long, in acc., longer than usual: said generally of a part of a bearing: as, a label with lambeaux per long; a cross fitted per long, in which the sharpened point is prolonged.—The long and the short, or the short and the long, the sum of a matter in a few words; the length and the breadth; the whole: with of.

For I am small,
My wife is tall,
And that's the short and long of it!
Hood, Fairied, not Matched.

*long*1 (lông), adv. [ME. longe, < AS. lange (= G. lang), for a long time, far, < lang, long; see *long*2, a.] 1. To a great extent in space; with much length: as, a line long drawn out.

The pillars' long-extended rows. Prior, Solomon, II. 22.

2†. Far; to or at a distance, or an indicated distance.

He comes to the Castelle, and cam in to the Cave; and wente so longe, til that he lond a Chambre.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 24.

The Saisnes . . . thus distroled the contrey and made soche martire of the mene peple that men myght se the smolder of the fire x myle longe, so trouble ther-of was the aire.
Morte (E. E. T. S.), II. 248.

3. To a great extent in time; for an extended period; with prolonged duration: as, he has been long dead; it happened long ago, long before, or long afterward; a long-continued drought; a long-forgotten matter.

When the trumpet soundeth long, they shall come up to the mount.
Ex. xix. 13.

And now the long protracted wars are o'er.
Addison, tr. of Horace, III. 2.

We have long discovered our errors with regard to you.
Goldsmith, Vicar, xxx.

And the psalms of David, forgotten long,
Took the place of the sinner's song.
Whittier, The Preacher.

4. For a length of time; for the period of: used with terms of limitation: as, how long shall you remain? as long as I can; all day long.

And she gan wepen ever longer the more.
Chaucer, Franklin's Tale, I. 784.

The Emperours hym owne selfe ordant onon, Sorto bilde vp tentes, taret no longer.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 6021.

The woman . . . is bound by the law to her husband so long as he liveth.
Rom. vii. 2.

As Pascal said of his eighteenth letter, I would have made it shorter if I could have kept it longer.

Macaulay, in Trevelyan, I. 235.

Long ago, far away in past time; in the far past.

Yesterday shall seem full long ago,
When with to-morrow's dew the grass is wet.
William Morris, Earthly Paradise, II. 227.

*long*1 (lông), v. [ME. longen, longien, langien, < AS. langian = OS. langon = D. langan = OHG. langan, MHG. langen, in comp. belangen, rarely verlangen, G. only verlangen, long, crave: usually derived from lang, *E. long*1, a., and explained by identifying the verb with AS. langian, become long, as 'to stretch the mind after.' But the verb may be of different origin, perhaps a secondary form connected with OHG. gilingen (pret. giling), MHG. G. gilingen, strive after, attain.] I. intrans. To have a yearning or wistful desire; feel a strong wish or craving; hanker: followed by for or after before the object of desire, or by an infinitive.

I have longed after thy precepts. Ps. cxix. 40.

Come, honest Venator, let us be gone, let us make haste; I long to be doing; no reasonable hedge or ditch shall hold me.
J. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 53.

Oh, when the wine in his glass was red,
He longed for the wayside well instead.
Whittier, Maud Muller.

Their silent pain
Who have long'd deeply once, and long'd in vain.
M. Arnold, A Summer Night.

II.† trans. To long for; desire.

To seen hire suzre that hire longeth soo.
Chaucer, Good Women, I. 2393.

*long*2 (lông), conj. [By spherismis from *along*2.] Same as along: in the phrase long of, sometimes written long of. [Archaic or local.]

Wt. How comes it that Fungoso appeared not with his sister's intelligence to Briak?

Cor. Marry, long of the evil angels that she gave him.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, iv. 4.

Dark Musgrave, it was long of thee.

Scott, L. of L. M., v. 29.

*long*3 (lông), v. t. [ME. longen, langen, equiv. to belongen, belong: see belong.] To belong.

Thow has clenly the cure that to my corune longes,
Of alle my werdes wele, and my weyffe eke.
Morte Arthurs (E. E. T. S.), I. 673.

And that me semes longe not for him to do.
Paston Letters, I. 97.

long. An abbreviation of longitude.

—long. See *long*2.

longan (lông'gan), n. [NL. longanum; < Chin. lung-yen, dragon's-eye.] 1. An evergreen tree, Nephelium longanum, closely related to the lichi, and yielding a similar but smaller and less palatable fruit. It is cultivated in China and the East Indies.—2. The fruit itself, which is exported in a dried state. Also called dragon's-eye.

longanimity (lông-ga-nim'-ti), n. [= F. longanimité = Sp. longanimitud = Pg. longanimitade = It. longanimità, < LL. longanimitas (-tas), forbearance, < longanimitis, forbearing, patient, < L. longus, long, + animus, mind.] Long-suffering; patience; endurance.

Some minds are proportioned to that which may be dispatched at once, or within a short return of time; others to that which begins afar off, and is to be won with length of pursuit, . . . so that there may be fitly said to be a longanimity. Boon, Advancement of Learning, II.

The longanimity and lasting sufferance of God.

Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., I. 2.

If a clergyman, he is expected to ask a blessing, . . . a function which he performs with centenary longanimity, as if he reckoned . . . that a grace must be long to reach so far away as heaven. Lowell, Fireside Travels, p. 63.

longanimous (long-an'i-mus), a. [< LL. longanimus, patient, forbearing, < L. longus, long, + animus, mind: see animus. Cf. magnanimous.] Long-suffering; patient; enduring. [Rare.]
 We have the present Yankee, . . . armed at all points against the old enemy Hunger, longanimous, good at patching.
Lowell, Biglow Papers, 1st ser., Int.

long-arc (lông'ărk), a. In elect., having a long arc: applied to an arc-lamp which burns with the ends of the carbon rods at an abnormally great distance apart.

longbeak (lông'bēk), n. A snipe of the genus Macrorhamphus; a dowitcher: as, the greater longbeak, M. scolopaceus.

longbeard (lông'bērd), n. 1. A man with a long beard.—2. A bellarmine.—3. Same as long-moss.

longbill (lông'bīl), n. A snipe or a woodcock.

long-boat (lông'bōt), n. The largest and strongest boat belonging to a sailing ship. It corresponds to the launch of a modern man-of-war.
 When the Duke of Suffolk was shipped in Suffolk, with intent to have passed over into France, he was met by an English Man of War, taken, and carried to Dover Sands, and there had his head chopped off on the side of the long-boat.
Baker, Chronicles, p. 190.

longbow (lông'bō), n. The name commonly given to the bow drawn by hand and discharging a long feathered arrow, as distinguished from crossbows of all kinds, especially to bows having a length of five feet or over, as the bow of war and of the chase of the middle ages in Europe, those of some savage tribes, those of Japan, etc. The English especially excelled in the use of the longbow, as the principal weapon of the common soldier and of hunters, from the fourteenth century till the introduction of firearms, by which it was only gradually superseded.—To draw or pull the longbow, to exaggerate; tell improbable stories: in allusion to the wonderful stories formerly told of feats with the longbow. [In the phrase, often written a long bow.]
 King of Cyprus . . . was on the point of pulling some dreadful long-bow, and pointing out a half dozen of people in the room as . . . the most celebrated wits of that day.
Thackeray, Newcomes, I.

long-bowling (lông'bōl'ing), n. The game of skittles. Hallwell.

long-breathed (lông'breht), a. Having the power of retaining the breath for a long time; having good breath; long-winded.

long-bullet (lông'būl'ets), n. A game played by casting stones. [North. Eng.]
 When you saw Tady at long-bullet play.
Swift, Dermot and Sheelah.

long-coats (lông'kōts), n. pl. Long clothes: said of an infant's wear. [Eng.]
 Master Thomas Hillings . . . was in his long-coats fearfully passionate, screaming and roaring perpetually.
Thackeray, Catherine, III.

long-descended (lông'dē-sen'ded), a. Able to trace one's descent through a long line of ancestors; of ancient lineage.

long-drawn (lông'drăn), a. Drawn out or continued to great length; protracted; prolonged: as, a long-drawn sigh or groan; a long-drawn narrative.

longe¹, n. and v. An obsolete form of *lunge*¹.

longe² (lông), n. [Also lunge; deriv. uncertain.] The great lake-trout or Mackinaw trout, Cristivomer or Salvelinus namaycush. Also called togus. [Local. U. S.]

long-eared (lông'ērd), a. 1. Having long ears.—2. Having long plumicorns: as, the long-eared owls.—3. Having long opercular flaps: as, the long-eared sunfish, Lepomis auritus or L. megalotis.—Long-eared bat, one of several bats whose ears are notably long or large; especially, Plecotus auritus, a common European species. See Plecotus, Synotis.—Long-eared deer, the mule-deer, Cervicus macrotis.—Long-eared fox, the African Megaleotis islandi, a kind of fennec. See fennec, Megaleotis.—Long-eared hedgehog, Brinaeus auritus of Russia.—Long-eared owl, any member of the genus Asio or Otus, as the European A. otus or the American A. wilsonianus.

long-ears (lông'ēr), n. 1. A humorous name for a donkey.—2. The long-eared owl, Asio otus. [Berkshire, Eng.]

longer¹ (lông'ēr), n. One who longs or desires.

longer² (lông'ēr), n. [Appar. *< long*¹ + -er; or else *< long*², *along*², as being stored along the keelson (f.).] Naut., a water-cask of peculiar shape, formerly used for stowing next to the keelson; also, a row of such casks.

longevial (lông-jē'vīl), a. [< L. longævus, aged (see longævus), + -al.] Long-lived.
 We envy the secular labours of Methuselah, and are thankful that his biography at least (if written in the same longevial proportion) is irreversibly lost to us.
Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 222.

longevity (lông-jēv'j-tī), n. [= F. longévité = Sp. longevidad = Pg. longevidade = It. longevità, <

LL. longævita (t)-e, < L. longævus, aged: see longævus.] 1. Long life; unusually prolonged life or existence.

We shall single out the deer: upon concession a long-lived animal, and in longevity by many conceived to attain unto hundreds.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., III. 2.

Such men . . . predict longevity to Pollok's "Course of Time."
Whipple, Ess. and Rev., I. 20.

2. Length or duration of life; term of existence: as, statistics of longevity; the average longevity of the race.

longevous (lông-jē'vus), a. [= Sp. Pg. It. longevo, < L. longævus, of great age, aged, < L. longus, long, + ævum, age.] Living a long time; of great age. [Obsolete or rare.]
 [Cedar wood] is longevous and an evergreen.
N. Greve, Cosmologia Sacra, IV. 2.

long-exserted (lông'ek-sēr'ted), a. In ornith., projected far beyond some other part: said of a pair of tail-feathers when they protrude far beyond the rest, as the middle pair of a skua-gull or sawbill. Coues, 1872.

long-faced (lông'fāst), a. Having a long face, literally or figuratively; rueful-looking; doleful in appearance; solemn.

long-field (lông'fīld), n. In cricket, a fielder stationed in one of the extreme corners of the bowler's end of the field, distinctively called long-field-off or long-off when on the bowler's right, and long-field-on or long-on when on his left.

long-finned (lông'fīnd), a. Having long fins, as a fish, or flippers, as the finner whale.—Long-finned file-fish. Same as fock-fish, 2.

longful (lông'fūl), a. [*< long*¹ + -ful.] Long; tedious. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]

long-glass (lông'glās), n. Same as ale-yard.

longhand (lông'hānd), n. Writing of the ordinary form, as contradistinguished from short-hand or stenography.

long-headed (lông'hed'ed), a. 1. Having a long head; in ethnol., dolichocephalic.—2. Shrewd; far-seeing; discerning: as, a long-headed man. [Colloq.]

long-headedness (lông'hed'ed-nes), n. The quality of being long-headed; shrewdness; far-sightedness; discernment.

Ulysses was the type of long-headedness.
Lowell, Study Windows, p. 122.

longhorn (lông'hōrn), n. 1. A tineed moth of the family Adelidae, as Adela viridella, having very long antennae.—2. A dipterous insect of the suborder Nemocera, such as tipularians or crane-flies.—3. A beetle of the group Longicornia; a longicorn.

long-horned (lông'hōrnd), a. 1. Having long horns: specifically applied to some breeds of domestic cattle.—2. Having long antennae; longicorn: as, long-horned grasshoppers.

longi, n. Plural of longus.

longicauda (lông-jī-kā'dāt), a. [< L. longus, long, + cauda, tail.] Long-tailed; macrurus.

longicone (lông-jī-kōn), a. [< L. longus, long, + conus, cone: see cone.] Having a long cone, as a cephalopod: as, the longicone straight shells. A. Hyatt.

longicorn (lông-jī-kōrn), a. and n. [< NL. longicornis, long-horned, < L. longus, = E. long, + cornu = E. horn.] 1. a. Having long antennae; specifically, of or pertaining to the Longicornes or Longicornia.

II. n. A longicorn beetle; a member of the Longicornia.

Longicornes (lông-jī-kōr'nēs), n. pl. [NL., pl. of longicornis, long-horned: see longicorn.] In Latreille's system of classification, the fourth family of the Coleoptera tetramera, approximately the same as the modern group Longicornia, and divided primarily into Prionii and Cerambycini. Latreille included Tmesisterni in the latter, and also appended a third tribe, Lamiaria (Lamia, Superda, etc.), and a fourth, Lepidaria (Lepidura, etc.).

Longicornia (lông-jī-kōr'ni-jī), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of longicornis, long-horned: see longicorn.] A group of tetramerous Coleoptera, having long filiform antennae, sometimes several times longer than the body; the longicorns or longicorn beetles. In a few forms the antennae are pectinate, serrate, or flabelliform. More than 8,000 species are described, among them many large and beautiful beetles. They inhabit woods, where the females deposit their eggs beneath the bark of trees by means of a long, tubular, horny ovipositor, with which the abdomen ends. The larvae are very destructive to wood, boring it deeply, and often making their burrows in every direction. Some of them attack the roots of plants. The longicorn beetles are very generally dispersed, but the greatest number of species and the largest forms are found in South America and western Africa. The leading families are the Lamiidae, Cerambycidae, Lepiduridae, and Prionidae.

longie, lungie (lông'jī, lũng'jī), n. [Cf. Lometa, loom, loom.] The common guillemot, Lometa troile. [Shetland Isles.]

longifrons (lông'jī-frons), a. [< NL. longifrons, < L. longus, long, + frons (front), forehead: see front.] In soöl., long-faced.

The black cattle of North Wales apparently belong . . . to the small longifrons type.

Darwin, Var. of Animals and Plants, p. 22.

longilateral (lông-jī-lat'ē-rāl), a. [< L. longus, long, + latus (later-), side: see lateral.] Long-sided; having the form of a long parallelogram. [Rare.]

Nineveh . . . was of a longilateral figure, ninety-five furlongs broad and an hundred and fifty long.
Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus, II.

longilingual (lông-jī-ling'gwāl), a. [< L. longus, long, + lingua, tongue.] In soöl., having a long tongue; vermilingual.

Longilingues (lông-jī-ling'gwēs), n. pl. [NL., < L. longus, long, + lingua, tongue.] In Sundevall's classification of birds, a synonym of Meltingae.

longimanous (lông-jīm'a-nus), a. [< LL. longimanus (tr. Gr. μακροχειρ, as an epithet of Arctaxerxes), long-handed, < L. longus, long, + manus, hand.] In soöl., having long hands; long-handed, as an ape.

longimetric (lông-jī-met'rik), a. [< longimetry + -ic.] Pertaining to measurement along a line.—Longimetric function, the function to which a gonometric function reduces when one of the angles of the triangle becomes zero or 180°.

longimetry (lông-jīm'e-trī), n. [= F. longimétrie = Sp. longimetría = Pg. It. longimetria, < L. longus, long, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] The art or practice of measuring distances or lengths, whether accessible or inaccessible.

longing (lông'ing), n. [Verbal n. of *long*¹, v.] 1. An eager desire; an earnest wish or craving.

Put on my crown; I have Immortal longings in me.
Shak., A. and C., v. 2. 222.

I shall review Sicilia, for whose sight
 I have a woman's longing.
Shak., W. T., IV. 4. 651.

2. Specifically, in pathol., one of the peculiar and often whimsical desires experienced by pregnant women.—Syn. 1. Hankering, yearning, aspiration.

longingly (lông'ing-lī), adv. With eager desire or craving.

longinquity (lông-jīng'kwī-tī), n. [= It. longinquità, < L. longinquitā (t)-s, length, *< longinquus, remote, long, usually distant, < longus, long: see long*¹.] Greatness of distance. [Rare.]

Pope Leo himself saw that longinquity of region doth cause the examination of truth to become over dilatory.
Berrow, The Pope's Supremacy.

Inordinate unvaried length, sheer longinquity, staggers the heart, ages the very heart of us at a view.
G. Meredith, The Egoist, Pref.

longipalp (lông'jī-palp), a. and n. [< NL. longipalpus, < L. longus, long, + NL. palpus, a feeler: see palp.] 1. a. Having long maxillary palps; specifically, of or pertaining to the Longipalpi.

II. n. A member of the Longipalpi, as some of the rove-beetles.

Longipalpi (lông-jī-pāl'pī), n. pl. [NL., pl. of longipalpus: see longipalp.] In Latreille's system of classification, a section of the Linnean genus Staphylinus, having long maxillary palps, as in the genera Paderus, Procterus, Stenus, and others. Also Longipalpi.

Longipennate (lông'jī-pe-nā'tē), n. pl. Same as Longipennes, 1.

longipennate (lông-jī-pen'ēt), a. [< NL. longipennatus, long-winged, < L. longus, long, + pennatus, winged: see pennate.] Long-winged, as a bird; having long pennis, remiges, or flight-feathers.

Longipennes (lông-jī-pen'ēs), n. pl. [NL., < L. longus, long, + pennis, wing.] 1. A major group of birds, the long-winged natatorial birds, such as gulls, terns, and petrels; the Gavia and Tubinares together considered as an order. In Nitzsch's classification (1820) the term was applied only to the former, the Tubinares being separated under the name of Nemata.

2. In Sundevall's system, a synonym of Chelidonomorpha.

longipennine (lông-jī-pen'in), a. [As Longipennes + -ine.] Longipennate; having the wings long enough to reach, when folded, beyond the end of the tail; specifically, of or pertaining to the Longipennes.

longiperoneus (lông-jī-per-ō-nēs), n. [< NL. longiperoneus (l)-]. [NL., < L. longus, long, + NL.

peroneus. The long peroneal or fibular muscle, commonly called peroneus longus. Cowes and Shute, 1887.

longiroster (lon-jí-ro's'tér), n. [< NL. longirostris, long-beaked, < L. longus, long, + rostrum, beak: see rostrum.] One of the Longirostres.

longirostral (lon-jí-ro's'trál), a. [As longiroster + -al.] Having a long bill or beak: specifically applied to the Longirostres.

longirostrate (lon-jí-ro's'trát), a. [As longiroster + -ate.] Same as longirostral.

Longirostres (lon-jí-ro's'trés), n. pl. [NL. pl. of longiroster: see longiroster.] In Ouvier's system of classification, a family of Grallae or wading birds, including the snipes and their allies, together with the ibises, ranged here on account of their superficial resemblance to curlews. With this exception, the group corresponds to the natural division of birds now called the snipe family, Scolopacidae.

longisect (lon'jī-sekt), v. t. [< L. longus, long, + secare, pp. securus, cut: see section.] To bisect lengthwise and horizontally; perform longissection. [Rare.]

longisectio (lon-jí-sek'shōn), n. [< L. longus, long, + sectio (n.), a cutting: see section.] Division of the body in a plane parallel with the axis, and thus longitudinal, but from side to side, and thus at right angles to the meson and to hemisection-planes: correlated with transsection and hemisection. N. Y. Med. Jour., XL, 114.

longissimus (lon-jis'i-mus), n.; pl. longissimi (-mī). [NL. (ec. musculi), superl. of L. longus, long: see long.] A muscle of the back, more fully called longissimus dorsi, notable in man for its great length, forming with the sacrolumbalis the erector spinae, the muscle which assists in keeping the back straight or erect. It occurs under divers modifications in mammals, birds, etc.

longitude (lon'jī-tūd), n. [< F. longitude = Sp. longitud = Pg. longitude = It. longitudine, < L. longitudo (longitudin-), length, < longus, long: see long.] 1. Length; measure along the longest line.

The ancients did determine the longitude of all rooms which were longer than broad by the double of their latitude. Sir H. Wotton, Elem. of Architecture.

2. In geog., the angle at the pole contained between two meridians, one of which, called the first or prime meridian, passes through some conventional point from which the angle is measured. Strictly speaking, the meridian here spoken of is a plane through the plumb-line at the station parallel to the earth's axis, but not necessarily passing through that axis, since it may be that the earth's axis and the plumb-line at the station do not lie in one plane. But this distinction is wholly without importance, except in higher geodesy. The longitude of the conventional point is 0°, and longitudes are reckoned east and west from it to 180° in arc, and to 12 hours in time, 15 degrees being equal to one hour. In Great Britain universally and in the United States generally geographers reckon from the meridian of the transit-circle at the Royal Observatory of Greenwich in England; the meridian of Washington is also used in the United States. Germans reckon generally from Ferro in the Canaries, as the dividing line between the eastern and western hemispheres, though modern German scientists employ the meridian of Greenwich. In other countries geographers often reckon from the meridian of their capital or other point within their limits, as the French from Paris (and formerly from Ferro), and the Russians from the observatory of Pulkova. Mariners generally employ the meridian of Greenwich. There are various ways of finding longitude, the problem being that of comparing the time at the place in question with that of the prime meridian. On shore the most accurate method is to compare the time of the two places by means of the electric telegraph, while at sea, the local time being determined by observation of some celestial object, it is compared with Greenwich time, as shown by a chronometer carefully set and regulated before sailing. Abbreviated lon., long.

The ancients supposed the torrid and the frigid zones to be uninhabitable and even impervious to man; but while the earth, as known to them, was bounded westward by the Atlantic Ocean, it extended indefinitely toward the east. The dimensions of the habitable world, then (and ancient geography embraced only the home of man, oikoumene), were much greater measured from west to east than from south to north. Accordingly, early geographers called the greater dimension, or the east and west line, the length, longitudo, of the earth; the shorter dimension, or the north and south line, they denominated its breadth, latitudo. G. F. Meier, Lect. on Eng. Lang., ix.

3. In astron., the arc of the ecliptic measured eastward from the vernal equinoctial point to the foot of the circle of latitude drawn through the object, as a star or other point on the sphere whose position is in question. See circle of latitudes, under circle.—Celestial longitude. See def. 2.—Geometric, heliocentric, heliographic longitude. See the adjectives.—Libration in longitude. See libration of the moon, under libration.

longitudinal (lon-jī-tū'di-nál), a. [= F. Sp. longitudinal = It. longitudinale, < NL. "longitu- dinalis, < L. longitudo (longitudin-), length, longitude: see longitude.] 1. Of or pertaining to longitude or length; relating to or consisting in length: as, longitudinal distance.—2. In the direction of the length; running lengthwise, as distinguished from transverse or across: as, the longitudinal diameter of a body.—3. In bot., in the direction of growth.—4. In zool., extended in the long axis of the body, as any articulated animal; articulated. [Rare.]

Von Baer . . . adopted Cuvier's divisions, speaking of them as the periphric, the longitudinal, the massive, and the vertebrate types of structure. Enyo. Brit., XXIV, 807.

Longitudinal elasticity, the ratio of stress to strain in the case of linear extension or compression.—Longitudinal strain, in anat. See strain.—Longitudinal strain, in gun., the strain on a small-arm or cannon which tends to rupture it circumferentially.—Longitudinal veins, in entom., veins of an insect's wing running lengthwise to the apical margin: specifically, in the Diptera, applied to several such veins which, counting from the costal or anterior side, are distinguished as first, second, etc., longitudinal.

longitudinally (lon-jī-tū'di-nál-i), adv. In a longitudinal manner; in the direction of length. longitudinated (lon-jī-tū'di-nál-i), a. [< L. longitudo (longitudin-), length, + -atus + -ed.] Extended in length. [Rare.]

long-leg (lóng'leg), n. In cricket, same as leg, 6.

long-legged (lóng'legd or -leg'ed), a. Having long legs or hind limbs.—Long-legged chatterer, Swainson's name of his Leucotrachina. See Leucotrachina.—Long-legged hawk, a hawk of the subfamily Accipitrinae, having the tail proportionally long, as the goshawk, the European sparrow-hawk, or the American sharp-shinned hawk.—Long-legged plover, a still. See Himantopus.—Long-legged thrush, Swainson's name for a bird of his family Crateropodidae. See Crateropodidae, and out under Crateropus.

long-legs (lóng'legz), n. An insect having long legs, such as the Tipula oleracea or common crane-fly and its congeners. See daddy-long-legs.

long-lived (lóng'lívd), a. [< long + life + -ed.] Having a long life or existence; living or lasting long.

A long-lived soap-bubble displays every color which can be produced by polarization. O. N. Rood, Modern Chromatics, p. 60.

longlivedness (lóng'lívd-nes), n. Longevity; unusual length of life. [Rare.]

If then . . . there can be discovered a reciprocating relation between want of gall in animals and longlivedness, . . . we have the basis for an inductive proof. R. Adamson, Encyc. Brit., XIV, 789.

longly (lóng'li), adv. [< ME. "longly, langly", < AS. langlice, for a long time (= Ice. langliga, for a long time past), < lang, long: see long + -ly.] 1. For a long time. [Rare.]

The horse stroked out his neck as he ferre als he myghte, and likked Alexander hand; and he kneld doune on his kneecase, and biheld Alexander in the visage langly. M. S. Lincoln A. i. 17, f. 1. (Halliwell)

[In the following passage from Shakespeare the word is commonly understood to imply also "longingly."]

Master, you look'd so longly on the maid,
Perhaps you mark'd not what's the pith of all.
Shak., T. of the S., I, 1, 170.]

2. Lengthily in space.

Acid clavate, obtuse, longly pedicellate.
M. C. Cooke, Brit. Fungi, p. 761.

long-minded (lóng'mín'ded), a. Patient; longanimous. [Rare.]

[A judge must be] long-minded to endure the rusticity and homeliness of common people in giving evidence, after their plain fashion and faculty. S. Ward, Sermons, p. 120. (Davies.)

long-moss (lóng'mós), n. An epiphytic plant, Tillandsia usneoides, with gray filiform stems and leaves, forming dense pendulous tufts which drape the forests of the southern United States. See Tillandsia. Also called longbeard, and more rarely and less appropriately black-moss, Spanish moss, and barba Hispanica.

Longmynd group. [Named by Sedgwick from the Longmynd Hills in Shropshire.] In geol., an assemblage of strata which form a part of the lowest division of the Silurian series, or the Lower Cambrian of some of the latest authorities. The series is of great thickness as developed in Wales, and contains the usual fossils characteristic of the lowest division of the Lower Silurian of Murchison, Barrande, and Hall. See Sturton.

longneck (lóng'nek), n. The pintail duck, Dafla acuta. G. Trumbull, 1888. See out under Dafla. [New Jersey.]

longness (lóng'nes), n. Length. [Rare.]

longnose (lóng'nóz), n. The garfish: so called from the elongated snout or jaws.

Longobardian (lóng-ô'bár'di-an), a. [< L. Longobardi, Longobardi, a people of northern Germany, subsequently established in northern long-off (lóng'ôf), n. Same as long-field-off. See long-field.

Italy: see Lombard.] Pertaining or relating to the Longobards; Lombard or Lombardian.

long-on (lóng'ôn), n. Same as long-field-on. See long-field.

long-primer (lóng'prim'er), n. A size of type, measuring about ninety lines to the foot, next larger than bourgeois and smaller than small-pica. [Generally written by printers as two words, long primer.]

long-purple (lóng'pér'plá), n. 1. The early orchis, Orchis mascula. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names.

Long purple,
That liberal shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead-men's fingers call them.
Shak., Hamlet, iv. 7, 170.

2. The purple loosestrife, Lythrum Salicaria. Britten and Holland, Eng. Plant Names.

Gay long-purples with its tufty spike:
She'd wade o'er shoes to reach it in the dyke.
Clare, Village Minstrel, ii. 80.

long-range (lóng'ránj), a. Having a long range; capable of hitting at a long distance.

It would not be very difficult or very costly to strengthen Gibraltar by placing modern long-range guns high up on the rock, with mountings which would allow of an all-round fire. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII, 2.

long-rest (lóng'rest), n. In medieval musical notation, a rest or sign for silence equal in time-value to a long. It was either "perfect" (equal to three breves: see a) or "imperfect" (equal to two breves: see b).

long-ruffer (lóng'ruf'er), n. A coarse heckle.

long-run (lóng'run), n. See in the long run, under run.

long-settle (lóng'set'l), n. See settle.

longshanks (lóng'shanks), n. 1. A long-legged person.—2. A bird of the genus Himantopus; a stilt.

long-shawl (lóng'shál), n. A shawl much longer than it is wide, the length being usually about twice the width.

longshore (lóng'shór), a. and n. [By spheroids from alongshore.] I. A. Existing or employed along the shore or coast; as, the longshore fisheries; a longshore boatman.

II. n. A longshoreman.

longshoreman (lóng'shór-man), n.; pl. longshoremen (-men). 1. A workman, as a stevedore or jobber, who is employed in loading and discharging the cargoes of vessels.—2. One who makes a living along shores by fishing for clams, oysters, etc.

Long-short (lóng'shórt), n. A skirt somewhat shorter than a petticoat, worn by women when doing household work. Bartlett. [Local, U. S.]

Her dress was a blue-striped linen short-gown, wrapper, or long-short, a coarse yellow petticoat, and checked apron. S. Judd, Margaret, i. 2.

long-sighted (lóng'sí'ted), a. 1. Able to see objects at a great distance; hence, having foresight; of acute intellect; sagacious; far-seeing.—2. Able to see objects distinctly at a distance, but not close at hand; presbyopic or hypermetropic; far-sighted.

longsightedness (lóng'sí'ted-nes), n. 1. The faculty of seeing objects at a great distance; hence, sagacity as regards the future; far-sighted discernment.—2. In pathol., a defect of sight owing to which objects near at hand are seen indistinctly, while those at remoter distances appear distinctly; hypermetropia or presbyopia.

long-slide (lóng'slíd), n. In steam-engin., a slide-valve of sufficient length to govern the parts of both ends of the cylinder, and having a hollow back which forms an eduction-passage. Valves of this description are used in the Cornish type of engine. E. H. Knight.

long-slip (lóng'slíp), n. In cricket, a fielder whose position is some distance behind and on the right of the batter.

longsome (lóng'sum), a. [< long + -some.] Long and tedious: applied to persons and things. [Now rare.]

A lampo . . . made
With oyle and weecke to last the longsome night.
Gaueyne, Den Bartholomew of Bath.
When chill'd by adverse Snows, and beating Rain,
We tread with weary Steps the longsome Plain.
Prior, Henry and Emma.

longsomeness (lóng'sum-nes), n. The state of being longsome; tediousness. [Rare.]

long-spun (lóng'spun), a. Spun or extended to a great length; long-drawn; tedious.

longspur (lông'spér), n. In ornith., a bird of the genus Centropus (or Colaptes): same as lark-bunting, 1.—Bay-winged longspur. See bay-winged.

long-staple (lông'stáp'l), a. Having a long fiber: a commercial term applied to cotton of a superior grade, also called sea-island cotton. See cotton-plant.

long-stitch (lông'stich), n. Satin-stitch worked plain, without filling or raising.

long-stop (lông'stóp), n. In cricket, a fielder who stands behind the wicket-keeper and stops balls that escape the latter.

longstop (lông'stóp), v. t. & pret. and pp. long-stopped, ppr. longstopping. [< long-stop, n.] To act as long-stop at cricket.

long-sufferance (lông'suf'er-ans), n. Same as long-suffering.

God of his goodness, patience, and long-sufferance, gave them a time to repent.

Lathimer, Sermon bef. Edw. VI., 1550.

long-suffering (lông'suf'er-ing), n. Long endurance of injury or provocation; patience under offense.

Deepest thou the riches of his goodness and forbearance and long-suffering?

Rom. II. 4.

long-suffering (lông'suf'er-ing), a. Bearing injuries or provocation with patience; not easily moved to retaliation.

The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness.

Ex. xxxiv. 6.

long-tail (lông'táil), n. and a. 1. An animal, particularly a dog, having an uncut tail. Formerly, in England, a long-tail was a gentleman's dog, or a dog qualified to hunt, it being required that the tails of other dogs should be cut. Hence the phrase come out and long-tail. See cut, v. t.

2. The long-tailed duck.—3. An old nickname for a native of Kent. Halliwel.

II. a. Having the tail uncut, as a dog.

long-tailed (lông'táid), a. 1. Having a long tail; hence, long-drawn; attenuated.

Monsieur Perrault . . . has endeavored to turn into ridicule several of Homer's Similitudes, which he calls "Comparaisons à longue queue." Long-tailed Comparisons. Addison, Spectator, No. 303.

2. In entom., having a long-exserted ovipositor, as many ichneumons; having a long terebra or borer. Westwood.—Japanese long-tailed fowls. See Japanese.—Long-tailed duck, snob, mouse, pan-golin, tiger-cat, timonose, trogon, etc. See the nouns.

long-take (lông'ták), n. A certain number (182) of herrings. [Yarmouth, Eng.] long-tongue (lông'tung), n. 1. A kind of woodpecker; the wryneck. Also called tongue-bird.—2. A tale-bearer; a gossip. [Prov. Eng.] long-tongued (lông'tungd), a. 1. Having a long or large tongue; macroglossate. See Macroglossa.—2. Prating; babbling; loquacious.

A long-tongued knave, one that uttereth all he knows.

Florida, p. 17. (Halliwel.)

The foul fa' ye . . . for a long-tongued clavering wife! . . . Couldna ye let the leddy alone wi' your whiggery?

Scott, Old Mortality, vii.

longulite (lông'gú-lit), n. [< L. longulus, rather long (dim. of longus, long), + -ite]. In petrolog., a name proposed by Vogelsang for linear groups of the most elementary products of devitrification, called by him globulites. See margarite.

longus (lông'gus), n.; pl. longi (lông'ji). [NL. (ac. masculus), < L. longus, long: see long]. A long, deep-seated muscle of the neck, more fully called longus colli, lying upon the front of several cervical and dorsal vertebrae, and serving to bend the neck forward or downward. It is less developed in man than in some other animals, as birds, particularly those which have a long sigmoid neck and capture their prey with a thrust of the beak.

long-visaged (lông'viz'jid), a. Having a long face; hence, having a sober, sad, or rueful face or visage.

long-waisted (lông'wás'ted), a. 1. Having a long waist, as a person or a ship. See waist.—2. Long from the armpits to the waist or narrowest part, as a dress or coat.

long-wall (lông'wál), a. In coal-mining, an epithet noting a method of working a coal-mine in which the whole seam is worked away except the pillars at the shafts and sometimes the main-road pillars. In this system no attempt is made to support the roof of the working-places by pillars of coal, which is worked in a long face (hence the name long-wall), the roof being allowed to settle down and fill the cavity left by the removal of the coal. Where the roof exhibits a tendency to break off close to the working-face, it is temporarily supported by cribs of timber or chocks, or by a double or triple line of props. Two kinds of long-wall working are in use: long-wall retreating or withdrawing and long-wall advancing. In the latter the roads or gangways are kept open, and the roof is supported by pack-walls built of the gob. In long-wall withdrawing the gangways are in the solid coal and pack-walls are not needed. The long-wall system of working is not applicable to beds of coal having a high dip, nor to very thick seams; and it has not been introduced into the anthracite region of Pennsylvania. Where it can be advantageously used, it is admitted that a considerably larger percentage of the coal can be won by it than by any other system. Also long-work.

longways (lông'wáiz), adv. [< long + -ways for -wise]. Longwise; lengthwise. [Obsolete or prov. Eng.]

A vast mole which lies longways, almost in a parallel line to Naples.

Addison, Travels in Italy.

long-winded (lông'win'ded), a. 1. Long-breathed; using much breath by prolonged speech.

The long-winded old salts who come here to report their woe.

The Century, XXVIII. 580.

2. Tedious from length; of a wearisome or burdensome length: said of speech or writing.

Long-winded exercises, singings, and catechisms.

B. Johnson, Epilogue, II. 1.

And there he told a long long-winded tale.

Tennyson, The Brook.

long-windedness (lông'win'ded-nes), n. The character of being long-winded.

Richardson, the only author who ever made long-windedness seem a benefaction.

Lowell, New Princeton Rev., I. 160.

longwise (lông'wis), adv. [< long + -wise]. In the direction of length; lengthwise. [Rare.] longworm (lông'wérn), n. A marine rhynchocoelous turbellarian or nemertean worm of extreme length for its thickness. See Lineidae, Lineus.

Lonicera (lon-i-sér'rá), n. [NL. (Plumier, 1703), named after Adam Lonicer, a German botanist (died 1586).] A genus of caprifoliaceous plants, the honeysuckles, type of the tribe Lonicereae, characterized by an irregular tubular corolla (sometimes two-lipped), exstipulate leaves, and a two- or three-celled berry, almost always few-seeded. About 100 species are known, natives of the temperate and tropical regions of the northern hemisphere, ornamental shrubs, often climbing, with (often) fragrant, variously colored flowers, growing in cymes, in pedunculate heads, or sometimes in pairs. See honeysuckle.

Lonicereae (lon-i-sér'ré-é), n. pl. [NL. (R. Brown, 1818), < Lonicer + -eae]. A tribe of dicotyledonous gamopetalous plants, based on the genus Lonicera, belonging to the natural order Caprifoliaceae, distinguished by having a tubular or campanulate corolla (often with an irregular limb), an elongated style with usually a capitate stigma, and the cells of the ovary with from one to an indefinite number of ovules. It includes 11 genera, which are almost entirely confined to the northern hemisphere.

lonk¹ (lôngk), n. Same as lanck. Halliwel.

lonk² (lôngk), n. [Origin obscure.] A hollow; a small dinglo. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.] loo¹ (lô), n. A dialectal (Scottish) form of *loo*¹.

loo² (lô), n. [Also lu; abbr. of lanterloo.] 1.

A game of cards. It is played by any number of persons up to seventeen with a full pack, the cards ranking as in whist. Each player deposits a certain number of chips (generally three), called a loo, in the pool, and after looking at his hand of three cards can either withdraw or declare—that is, play the hand through. The players who win the tricks divide the pool according to the number of tricks taken by each; any player declaring and failing to take a trick is loosed, and must deposit three chips in the pool. Often called division loo.

2. The deposit, generally of three chips, which the players make in the pool in the game of loo.

loo³ (lô), v. t. [*Also lu; < loo*², n.] To beat in the game of loo, as a player that has declared.

loo³ (lô), interj. [Cf. halloo.] Same as halloo.

'Leo, Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game.

Shak., T. and C., v. 7. 10.

loobily (lô'bi-li), a. [< looby + -ily]. Looby-like; lubberly; awkward; clumsy.

A loobily country fellow.

Str. R. L'Estrange.

loobily (lô'bi-li), adv. [< loobily, a.] Like a looby; in an awkward, clumsy manner.

loobs (lôbs), n. [Corn. loob, slime, sludge.] In mining, tin-alime or sludge of the after-leavings. Phryce. [Cornwall, Eng.] looby (lô'bi), n. and a. [< ME. loby, lobie; an extension or dim. form of lob: see *lob*¹. Cf. lubber]. 1. n. 1. An awkward, clumsy fellow; a lubber. [Rare or obsolete.]

This lorell that lade this loby away.

Richard the Reddiss, II. 170.

I must leave you—I own I am somewhat flurried—and that confounded looby has perceived it.

Sheridan, The Rivals, II. 1.

2. The ruddy duck, Eristawura rubida. [Local, New Eng.]

II. a. Lubberly; gawky. [Rare.]

This great, big, overgrown metropolis . . . like a looby son who has outgrown his stamens.

Jon Bee, Essay on Samuel Foote.

looch, n. See *look*².

Loochooan (lô-ohô'an), a. and n. [< Loochoo (also written Loo Choo, Loo Chow, Loo Kew, Loo Kiu, Liu Kiu, etc.) (see def.) + -an]. 1. a. Pertaining to Loochoo, formerly a kingdom tributary to China and sometimes partly also to Japan, now a ken or prefecture of the Japanese empire, consisting of the chain of small islands between Japan and Formosa, and named from the largest group, specifically called the Loochoo Islands.

II. n. A native of Loochoo.

looser (lô'er), n. [Also lurs, lewer, appar. a trade abbr. of equiv. velour; < F. velours, velvet: see velour, velours, velvet]. A hatters' brushing-pad.

E. H. Knight.

loof¹ (lôf), n. [Also (dial.) lufe, luf; < ME. lofe, lofe, the palm of the hand (see also *loof*²), *< AS. lof (not certain; supposed to be contained in glof, > E. glove, q. v.) = Ice. lofi, the palm of the hand, = Sw. loffe, the wrist, = Dan. dial. luffe (in luffevante, a woolen glove) = Goth. lifa, the palm of the hand. Hence perhaps ult. *loof*², q. v.] The palm of the hand; also, the hand itself. [North. Eng. and Scotch.]

I may towch with my lufe the ground evyn here.

Towneley Mysteries, p. 22.

Auld baudrons [a cat] by the ingie sita,
An' wi' her loof her face a washin'.

Burns, Willie Wastie.

To green one's loof. See green.

loof² (lôf or luf), n. [Also (in some uses) luff; < ME. lof (> OF. loffe), a contrivance for altering a ship's course (called in ML. dracona), prob. a paddle or an oar to assist the helm (see quot. under def. 1); cf. G. luf, luf, luff = Dan. luf = Sw. luf, the weather-gage, = OF. lof, loef, loof, loo, the weather-gage, the lower corner of a sail next the wind; < D. loef, the weather-gage, loof, luff, OD. loef, appar. a paddle or oar used in steering, also, like loove, loefnagel, a thole; cf. loefhals, loefhout, etc.; cf. also ME. lof, a beam or bar; appar. orig. a particular use of the word which appears in *E. loof*¹, the palm of the hand; cf. OHG. laffa, *MHG. laffe, G. dial. laffen, laff, the blade of an oar, or of a rudder; cf. L. palma, the palm of the hand, also the blade of an oar. Hence aloof, q. v. See *loof*³.] 1. A contrivance (apparently a paddle or an oar) for altering the course of a ship. See etymology.

Hoe ritten heere loove

And up drogen selles,

Lithen ouer meestrem.

Langemom.

2. That part of a ship's bow where the sides begin to curve in toward the stem. See luff.—Ag-loof. See af.

loof³, v. The earlier spelling of *loof*².

loof⁴, n. A Middle English form of *loaf*¹.

loofward (lôf' or luf'wârd), adv. [= D. loef-waarts; as *loof*² + -ward]. Windward.

look¹ (lôk), v. [< ME. loken, lokten, < AS. lōctan = OS. lōkōn = MD. lōken = OHG. luogen, luagen, luaken, MHG. luogen, G. lügen, dial. lügen, look; further connections unknown. The Skt. √ lok, see, cannot be connected.] 1. intrans. 1. To exercise the sense or faculty of vision; to use the eyes in seeing; fix the sight upon some object, or upon some point or portion of space. Used—(a) Absolutely.

And Jacob lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, Esau came.

Gen. xxxiii. 1.

I'll look no more,

Lest my brain turn. Shak., Lear, IV. 6. 22.

(b) Before a word or phrase signifying direction, manner, or purpose: as, look here; look there; he looked back; to look for something lost.

For evere up on the ground I see thee stare;
Approach neer, and looks up murlly.

Chaucer, Prool. to Sir Thopas, l. 2.

And he looked this way and that way.

Th. II. 12.

(c) Before a preposition governing the thing seen or an intervening object or medium: as, to look at a house; to look over a wall or through a window; to look into a mirror or a book; to look upon the wine.

The damsel was very fair to look upon.

Gen. xxiv. 16.

She, looking thro' and thro' me,

. . . never speaks.

Tennyson, Lilian.

He talked about the library with his hands in his pockets, looking at all the books.

Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentlemen, xiv.

2. To afford a view or outlook; have a direction; face or be turned: usually with on, upon, to, or toward: as, the windows look toward the ocean; the house looks upon a narrow street.

The door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north.
Ezek. viii. 3.

They turned to a window looking to the close.
Pier of Fendraght (Child's Ballads, VI. 175).

There is yet another presumption, looking the other way.
E. Twissman, Genera Lichenum, p. 106.

8. To keep watch; be careful; take heed; see to it; as, he looks after my luggage; used intensively in the ejaculatory phrases look out! look sharp!

Look well to thy herds. Prov. xxvii. 23.

Look that you bind them fast. Shak., Tit. And., v. 2. 166.

9. To seem to the view; have the appearance of being; appear: as, he looks like his brother; it looks as if it would rain; the patient looks better.

I meet everywhere in this country with these little brooks; and they look as if they were full of fish.
Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 224.

Narcissus, praised with all a parson's power,
Look'd a white lily sunk beneath a shower.
Pope, Dunciad, iv. 104.

The use with to be is inelegant and chiefly colloquial.

Well, says he, you look to be a man in distress.
Bruce, Source of the Nile, I. 370.]

5. To strive to seem; put on the appearance of being; assume to be.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret.
Shak., T. of the S., iii. 2. 230.

He would always affect to swagger and look big as he passed by me.
Swift, Gulliver's Travels, ii. 3.

3. To exercise mental vision or observation (in a certain way); direct the mind or understanding; take notice: often with at.

He that made us with such large discourse
Looking before and after. Shak., Hamlet, iv. 4. 37.

Look how much we thus expell of sin, so much we expell of vertue.
Milton, Areopagitica, p. 20.

We are not only to look at the bare action, but at the reason of it.
Stillingfleet.

7. To have a prospect or anticipation; direct he mind expectantly; be in expectation of or rith regard to something.

I koldie men schuldte vn-to me lowte,
Where-so that y wente bi the way.
Hymns to Virgins, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 30.

Who would have looked it should have been that rascal my? He had dyed his beard and all.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, iv. 4.

He must look to fight another battle before he could reach Oxford.
Clarendon, Great Rebellion.

The way in which we looked forward for letters from our ride and bridegroom was quite a curiosity.
Thackeray, Adventures of Philip, xxxii.

to look about one, to be on the watch; be vigilant; be in respect or guarded.—To look after. (a) To attend to; take care of; have an eye to or upon: as, to look after one's interests; to look after a friend who is in danger.

My subject does not oblige me to look after the water, r point forth the place wherunto it has now retreated.
Woodward.

Lady T. But, Sir Peter, you know you promised to come Lady Sneerwell's too.

Sir Peter. Well, well, I'll call in just to look after my character.
Sheridan, School for Scandal, ii. 1.

I was told to look after you once, and I mean to do it.
H. Kingsley, Geoffrey Hamlyn, p. 236.

4) To expect; look forward to.

Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after use things which are coming on the earth. Luke xxi. 36.

6) To consider; be concerned about.—To look alive, to be on the alert; bestir one's self. [Colloq.]—To look back.
See back.—To look down on or upon, to regard as beneath one; view with contempt; despise.

Lewis the Fourteenth looked down on his brother King ith an air not unlike that with which the Count in Moire's play regards Monsieur Jourdain, just fresh from the summary of being made a gentleman.

Macaulay, Frederic the Great.

Greek-speaking Roman Emperors looked down on those their subjects and neighbours who kept on the acquired ague of Old Rome, just as they looked down on those of old subjects and neighbours who kept on the primitive seeds of Illyria. E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 432.

to look for. (a) To seek for; search for: as, to look for passage in a book. (b) To expect; count upon: as, to look for good news.

Nevertheless, we . . . look for new heavens and a new earth. 2 Pet. iii. 13.

O, I did look for him
With the sun's rising: marvel he could sleep.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, I. 1.

Look now for no enchanting voice. Milton, S. A., I. 1065.

Our Saviour and his Apostles did not only foresee, but retell and forewarn us to look for schisms.

Milton, Church-Government, I. 6.

to look for a needle in a bottle of hay or in a haystack. See look and August.—To look in, to take a glance into a place; hence, to make a brief visit call (as if merely for observation).

It would be unkind to pass, as it were, the door of his natives without just looking in for a few hours.
Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 20.

To look into, to inspect closely; observe narrowly; examine: as, to look into the conduct of another; to look into one's affairs.

He . . . has thoroughly looked into and examined human nature.
Bacon, Physical Fables, x., Expl.

To look like. See like.—To look on. [On, adv.] To be a mere spectator.

The King now seldom or never Plays, but contents himself sometimes with looking on.

Liter., Journey to Paris, p. 222.

To look on or upon. [On or upon, prep.] (a) To esteem; hold in estimation: formerly used absolutely in a good sense.

That fellow there? will he respect and honour him?
He has been look'd upon [with favor], they say; will he own him?
Fletcher, Pilgrim, v. 6.

Her friends would look on her the worse. Prior, Alma, ii.

(b) To consider; regard; view: with as after the object:
as, to look upon a remark as an affront.

It may rather be looked upon as an Excrescence, than as an essential Part of the Poem. Addison, Spectator, No. 315.

To look out, to be on the watch: with for before an object: as, to look out for squalls or breakers.

The Fish is presently sent to the Market in one of their Boats, the rest looking out again for more.
Dampier, Voyages, II. i. 127.

I had scarcely time to order every man to look out, when the battle-tempest of arrows broke upon us from the woods.
Stanley, Dark Continent, I. 226.

To look over, to examine cursorily: as, to look over a catalogue; to look over accounts.

John looks over the books in the case.
W. M. Baker, New Timothy, p. 139.

To look sharp. (a) To exercise great vigilance; be extremely careful. [Colloq.]

The captain himself, according to a frequent though invidious behaviour of military men, ordered his man to look sharp that none but one of the ladies should have the place he had taken fronting the coach-box.
Steele, Spectator, No. 122.

(b) To be quick; make haste. [Colloq.]

Kit told this gentleman to look sharp, and he not only said he would look sharp, but he actually did, and presently came running back. Dickens, Old Curiosity Shop, xxxix.

To look through. (a) To take a view of the contents of it: as, to look through a book of engravings. (b) To see through; see or understand perfectly. [Archaic.]

He is a great observer, and he looks Quite through the deeds of men.
Shak., J. C., I. 2. 202.

When you have seen him outside, you have looked through him, and need employ your discernment no farther.
Bp. Earle, Micro-cosmographie, A Meere Formall Man.

To look to or unto. (a) To give heed to; take care of.
For ere that unto armes I me betooke,
Unto my fathers sheepe I usde to looke.
Spenser, Mother Hub. Tale, I. 292.

Look to the woman. [Celia swoons.]
B. Jonson, Volpone, iv. 2.

They looked well to their steps, and made a shift to get staggeringly over. Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 240.

(b) To resort to or depend upon for something with confidence or expectation: as, he looks to me for payment.

Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth.
Isa. xlv. 22.

The authors steadfastly looked to the surviving heir for pay or patronage in return for their miserable dole of consolation.
Gifford, Int. to Ford's Plays, p. xvii.

They looked to Caesar and his legions to protect the Empire, and themselves as part of it.
E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p. 120.

To look toward, to drink the health of. [Low.]

The ladies drank to his health, and Mr. Moss, in the most polite manner, looked towards him.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, liii.

—Syn. 4. Appear, etc. See seem.

II. trans. 1. To see to; take care of.

But leeches full lytely lokid his wound;
With oile and with ointment abill therfore,
Bond it full blygly on hor best wise.
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 7525.

2. To look or search for; seek; expect.

But other cures of Cristen thei covenen nought to haue,
But there as wyngynge lyfth he loketh none other.
Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. S.), I. 470.

To look a young man I call brother.
Fletcher, Wit without Money, iv. 5.

3. To search; inspect. [Rare.]

Look all these ladies' eyes,
And see if there he not concealed lies.
B. Jonson, Hue and Cry.

4. To affect in some way by the manner of looking or appearing: as, to look one out of countenance.

A spirit fit to start into an empire,
And look the world to law. Dryden, Cleomenes.

And like a Basilisk almost look'd the Assembly dead.
Cowley, Pindaric Odes, xiv. 2.

Most of them recommended that he should go in such force as to look down opposition, and crush the rebellion in its birth.

5. To express or manifest by looks, or by the general aspect.

Soft eyes looked love to eyes which spake again.
Byron, Child Harold, iii. 21.

Dr. Woods looked his creed more decidedly, perhaps, than any of the Professors.
O. W. Holmes, Old Vol. of Life, p. 250. e

To look a gift-horse in the mouth. See gift-horse.—
To look babies in one's eyes. See baby, 2.—To look daggers. See dagger.—To look in the face, to face or meet with boldness; stand front to front, as for battle.

Then Amaziah sent messengers to Jehoshaphat, the son of Jehoshaphat son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, Come, let us look one another in the face. 2 Ki. xiv. 8.

To look out, to search for and discover; pick out; select:
as, to look out associates of good reputation.

Let me look out my things to make this fly.
Cotton, in Walton's Angler, ii. 240.

To look up. (a) To search for till found: as, I will look up the passage. (b) To pay a visit to; call upon: as, I must look you up some day. [Colloq.]

He used to go back for a week, just to look up his old friends.
Dickens, Pickwick, xlix.

look¹ (lûk), n. [< ME. loken; < look, v.] 1. Visual or facial expression; cast of countenance; personal aspect: often used in the plural with a singular sense: as, a benevolent look; his looks are against him.

A sweet attractive kind of grace,
A full assurance given by looks,
Continuall comfort in a face.
M. Roydon, Astrophel.

How much more elder art thou than thy looks!
Shak., M. of V., iv. 1. 251.

When you come to the eyes, Mr. Carmine, let me know, that I may call up a look.
Poe, Taste, I. 1.

2. Appearance or seeming in general; the quality of anything as judged by the eye or the understanding: as, I do not like the look of the sky;
the look of the thing (an action, a proposition, or the like) is bad. [Chiefly colloq.]

No tears
Dim the sweet look that Nature wears.
Longfellow, Sunrise.

3. The act of looking or seeing; glance: as, loving looks.

A doleful look than looked he
That percyd myn hert bothe blode & bon.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 206.

His was the subtle look and sly,
That, spying all, seems naught to spy.
Scott, Robbery, v. 10.

—Syn. 1. Appearance, complexion, mien, manner, air.—
3. Sight, glance, gaze.

look², v. t. See look².

lookdown (lûk'doun), n. A carangoid fish, the moonfish or horsehead, Selene vomer. See cut under horsehead.

looker¹ (lûk'ér), n. 1. One who looks or watches; one who seeks or explores.—2. Specifically—(a) A shepherd or herdsman. (b) An inspector. [Prov. Eng.]

There is no election [in Morpeth] of fish and flesh lookers.
Municip. Corp. Report, 1890.

looker² (lûk'ér), n. See looker.

looker-on (lûk'ér-on'), n. One who looks on; a spectator.

Lookers-on many times see more than gamblers.
Bacon, Followers and Friends (ed. 1887).

My business in this state
Made me a looker on here in Vienna.
Shak., M. for M., v. 1. 519.

I speake not this as my owne sense, but what was the discourse and thoughts of others who were lookers on.
Shelton, Diary, March 12, 1672.

looking (lûk'ing), n. [< ME. looking; verbal n.
of look, v.] 1. Appearance; aspect; countenance.

And with his chere and lookynge al to-tern,
For sorwe of this, and with his armes falden,
He stod this woful Troilus before.
Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 558.

2. Glance of the eye; regard.

Swich subtil looking and dissemblinges
For drede of jalouse mennes spyngynges.
Chaucer, Squire's Tale, I. 277.

3. Search or searching: as, a careful looking for names and dates.

looking-for (lûk'ing-fôr), n. Expectation; anticipation; foreboding.

A certain fearful looking for of judgment. Heb. x. 27.

looking-glass (lûk'ing-glâs), n. A plate of glass silvered (coated with quicksilver) on the back, so as to show images by reflection; a plane mirror of glass. The metallic coating is generally an amalgam of tin. A sheet of tin-foil is laid first upon a table and the mercury poured upon it; the glass is then applied horizontally upon the amalgam, to which it readily adheres.

All this is very excellently contrived in a faire looking glass that hangeth at the side of his bedde.
Coryset, Crudities, I. 127.

There is none so homely but loves a looking-glass.
South, Sermons.

Looking-glass plant or tree, an evergreen tree of the genus Boissiera.

lookout (lŭk'out), n. 1. A watching for the appearance or occurrence of anything, especially from without; vigilant observation or scrutiny; watch; as, to keep a good lookout at sea; to be on the lookout for an opportunity.

I think, if anything was to be foreseen, I have as sharp a look-out as another. Goldsmith, Good-natured Man, II.

2. A place where a watch is kept; a post of external observation: as, the lookout on a ship's mast.—3. A person or party engaged in keeping watch, especially for things outside.

Even the lookouts were unaware of the proximity of the iceberg until it was actually upon them. Science, V. 480.

4. The subject of observation or vigilance; something to be watched for or guarded against: as, every man's interest is his own lookout.—5. A prospect or view; an outlook. [Rare.]

On this magnificent quay, with its glorious lookout over the lagoons. Houelle, Venetian Life, xvii.

loom (lŭm), n. [ME. lome, < AS. gelōma, also and-gelōma, andlōma, tool, instrument, implement; perhaps lit. 'a thing of frequent use': cf. gelōme, frequently, gelōmiko, frequent.] 1. A utensil; a tool; a weapon; an article in general: now used only in composition, as in hairloom, workloom, etc. See hairloom.

He lytles lytly his lome, & let hit down layre, With the barbe of the bitte bi the bare nek. Str Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. T. S.), I. 2309.

The lomes that leh labourre with and lyfode deserue Ya pater-nostre and my prymer.

Piers Plowman (C), vi. 45.

2. A machine for weaving any fabric from yarn or thread. The essential parts of a loom are: the frame, which supports the working parts; the yarn-beam, at the back part of the frame, upon which the warp-threads are wound; the cloth-beam, at the front part of the frame, upon which the cloth is wound as the weaving proceeds; the heddles and their mounting; the reed; and the batten (otherwise called lay and lathe), which carries the reed. The warp-threads extend in parallel relation from the yarn-beam to the cloth-beam, being also passed serially through the loops or eyes of the heddles, or harness, and through the interspaces of the reed. The operations of winding the warp-threads upon the yarn-beam, and passing them in due order through the loops or eyes of the heddles, and the interspaces of the reed, are collectively called 'setting up the piece.' The function of the heddles is to form the shed for the passage of the shuttle. The warp-threads are separated systematically by the heddles into two or more series, each controlled and alternately drawn upward and downward by the vertical motion of the heddles, thus leaving an opening or shed between the ranks of warp-threads, through which the shuttle is thrown or shot by the hand, or by pickers operated by the hand of the weaver in the hand-loom, or by picker-staff mechanism in the power-loom. (See heddle and picker.) The reed is carried by the batten, which swings radially on its bearings through an arc small in proportion to the radius. The reed is composed of a series of thin slats or wires arranged in parallel relation between two parallel bars placed at such distance asunder that the threads of the warp passing through the interspaces between the slats or wires may be serially opened or separated by the heddles, in forming the shed, without impinging upon these bars. The function of the reed is to force the thread of warp, wool, or flax, as passed between the warp-threads by the shuttle, as near as desirable to that part of the warp-threads which has just previously been embraced by the warp-threads. For this purpose the batten is swung so that the slats or wires of the reed drive the warp-threads against the previously woven part of the texture with a sharp blow. (See reed and batten.) The warp-threads are wound upon a bobbin or quill which turns upon a wire in the shuttle, and permits the thread to unwind when the shuttle passes to and fro through the sheds as the latter are successively formed by the action of the heddles. The shuttle is made of a piece of hard wood pointed at each end, and having a recess in the body for the reception of the bobbin or quill. Frequently the pointed ends are finished with metal. (See shuttle.) Narrow-fabric looms generally use a thread-carrier or eye-pointed needle as a substitute for the shuttle. (See positive-motion loom, below.) The Jacquard attachment is a device for forming sheds or openings for the passage of the shuttle between the warp-threads, invented by Joseph Marie Jacquard of Lyons, used as a substitute for the heddle or haskell mechanism previously employed in the loom, and, by its introduction, marking an epoch in the manufacture of figured woven fabrics. It consists essentially of a series of perforated paper or metal cards which, one after another, are laid flat upon the faces of an intermittently revolving and perforated prism, in such manner that the perforations in the cards successively and exactly superimpose corresponding perforations in the prism. Wires, each separately controlling the engagement with a lifting-bar or griffe of a hooked wire connected with an individual warp-thread or set of warp-threads, are made by suitable mechanism to enter the holes of the cards when by the rotation of the prism each is successively brought to a special position, the wires so entering causing all the individual threads with which they are connected to be lifted above the common level of the warp-threads, thus forming a shed for the passage of the shuttle. Each card thus represents a different shed, and as there may be an indefinite number of cards joined together by flexible connections, which, like an endless chain, are carried upon the perforated revolving prism, and as there may be also a number of shuttles carrying warp-threads of different tints, there is no limit to variety of form and color in the figures that may be woven. The prism carrying the system of cards moves at each partial rotation through an arc the chord of which is equal to the width of one of the faces. The introduction of this method of weaving at once advanced the art of figure-weaving beyond the limit of mere geometrical patterns into the realm of fine-art industry, as even the finest tapestries may be successfully imitated by it. Looms are for the most part distinguished by the names of the material they weave, as ribbon-loom, figure-loom (figured-fabric loom), carpet-loom, etc., and also by the names of the inventors, as the Jacquard loom. They differ chiefly in the harness-system, or the manner in which the warp-threads are raised to form the shed and thus produce the figures in the finished fabric, and in the method of impelling the shuttle. There may be several shuttles in a loom, in order to introduce a variety of warp-threads, and thus produce more complicated patterns than can be formed by a single warp. Hand-loom is now almost wholly devoted to fine silks and carpets, nearly all other fabrics being woven on power-loom, either with or without the Jacquard attachment.

Unbred to spinning, in the loom unskill'd,
She chose the nobler Pallas of the field.
Dryden, Æneid, vii.

3. The part of an oar between the blade and the handle; the shaft.—4. A chimney. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]—Chain-tappet loom, a loom for fancy weaving, in which the harnesses are operated by tappets upon a pattern-chain. E. H. Knight.—Circular loom. See circular.—Double-cloth loom, a loom in which two sets of webs are woven simultaneously, or in which two webs are knitted with their edges joined in such a way as to form a tube. E. H. Knight.—Double-piled-fabric loom, a loom which forms a pile on both sides of the foundation. The pile may be produced from either the warp or the weft. E. H. Knight.—Electric loom, a Jacquard loom in which the perforated cards were replaced by a band on which the pattern was marked in some insulating paint. Small electromagnets were arranged in such a way that, on the movement of the band under them, they were brought into action on passing the uninsulated parts and left at rest on the insulated parts, and they thus, by means of suitable mechanism, controlled the usual apparatus by which the warp-threads are controlled. It does not appear to have been a commercial success.—High-warp loom, in tapestry-weaving, a loom in which the warp is carried vertically, in distinction from a low-warp loom, in which the warp is carried horizontally.—Jacquard loom, a loom in which is comprised the Jacquard attachment for weaving figured fabrics. See above, 2.—Metallic-tissue loom, a loom for weaving with metallic threads alone, as in making gold and silver tissues such as lace or braid, or for weaving fabrics with a silk or thread warp and a weft of wire, or of silk thread covered with a flattened wire of silver-gilt.—Narrow-fabric loom, a loom designed especially for weaving tapes, ribbons, bindings, etc. It may be a shuttle-loom, but has generally an eye-pointed needle or thread-carrier which traverses the shed forward and back after each movement of the harness. Also called narrow-ware loom and needle-loom.—Positive-motion loom, a loom, invented by Lyle of New York, for weaving wide fabrics. It has a track or raceway on which the shuttle is drawn through the shed at a uniform velocity by a kind of roller-carriage, instead of being thrown through by the picker-staff mechanism or by hand.—Power-loom, a loom in which all the motions of the parts are accomplished by other power than the muscular power of the operator, as steam- or water-power.

loom¹ (lŭm), v. t. [*< loom*¹, n.] To weave. [Rare.]

Or with loomed wool the native robe supplies. Savage, The Wanderer, I.

loom² (lŭm), v. t. [Early mod. E. lomo; < ME. lumen, shine, prob. < OF. lumer, shine, < L. luminare, shine; see lumine, etc. Less prob. < Isel. ljōma, shine, gleam, dawn, = AS. lōmian, ljōman, shine; see *loom*¹, v.] 1. To shine. Specifically—2. To appear indistinctly; come dimly into view, as from below the horizon or through a mist; rise up before the vision so as to give the impression of indistinct bulk or largeness; stand out prominently in the prospect: often used figuratively.

They stand far off in time; through perspective
Of clear wits yet they loom both great and near.

Fanshawe, tr. of Camoens's Lusiad, viii. 2.

Heer smokes a Castle, there a Cille tunes,
And heer a Ship vpon th' Ocean looms.

Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, I. 7.

The facts which loomed so large in the fogs of yesterday
... have strangely changed their proportions.

Emerson, Essays, 1st ser., p. 282.

loom² (lŭm), v. [*< loom*², v.] 1. A coming indistinctly or vaguely into view; also, the indistinct or unnaturally enlarged appearance of anything, as land, seen at a distance or through a fog. See looming.

Our situation now became a very critical one, with the loom of a third berg on the other side of us.

R. M' Cormick, Arc. and Antar. Voyages, I. 277.

2. The track of a fish. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.] loom³ (lŭm), n. [Also dial. lom, lomm, lomme, lome, lumme, etc. (NL. Lomvia, q. v.); = G. lohme, lomme; < Isel. lōmr = Dan. Sw. lom, a loom (a bird so called); perhaps ult. connected with *loom*¹. The word in E. is now corrupted to loon: see *loon*².] 1. A loon. See *loon*².

A loom is as big as a goose. N. Grew, Museum.

2. A guillemot.
On the face of these sea-ledges of Arveprins Island
Brunnich's guillemots, or looms, gather in the breeding season.

A. W. Greely, Arctic Service, p. 49.

The multitude of looms frequenting it (Nova Zembla), a bird to which they gave the whimsical name of Arctic parrots. Atley, United Netherlands, III. 328.

loom-mask (lŭm'mask), n. [*< loo, a corruption of loop, + mask.] A mask used to conceal the face or part of it.

loom-card (lŭm'kard), n. A pierced pattern-card used in the Jacquard loom. E. H. Knight.

loom-comb (lŭm'kŏm), n. The reed of a loom.

loomery (lŭm'ērī), n.; pl. loomeries (-iz). [*< loom*² + -ery.] A breeding-place of looms or guillemots. [Rare.]

I sent Lieutenant Lockwood with a boat's crew to the loomery on Arveprins Island for birds. They ... brought back but sixty-five Brunnich's guillemots.

A. W. Greely, Arctic Service, p. 49.

loom-figured (lŭm'fig'urd), n. Having a pattern woven in: said of a textile material.

loom-gale (lŭm'gāl), n. A gentle gale of wind.

loom-harness (lŭm'här'nes), n. That part of a loom which moves the warp-threads to make the crossing or decussation forming the shed in which the shuttle travels and leaves the weft-thread. The harness has heddles with loops for the warps, some of which are continually raised above the others and then depressed, either in regular alternation (for plain weaving) or in a different order, as the pattern requires.

looming (lŭ'ming), v. [Verbal n. of *loom*², v.]

1. A coming vaguely into view.—2. A form of mirage in which distant objects, usually across water, appear abnormally elevated above their true positions, this displacement being accompanied in many cases by a vertical magnification.

Its (Monticello's) elevation affords an opportunity of seeing a phenomenon which is rare at land though frequent at sea. The seamen call it looming. Philosophy is as yet in the rear of the seaman, for, so far from having accounted for it, she has not given it a name.

Jefferson, Notes on Virginia (1787), p. 126.

The inverted images which are often presented in looming are not beneath the object, as in the case of mirage on dry land, but above it, as if formed by reflection in the sky. Nature, XI. 49.

loom-picture (lŭm'pik'tŭr), n. A piece of textile fabric so woven as to constitute a picture. The name has been given especially to monochromatic designs produced in silk, such as copies of engraved portraits.

loom-sheeting (lŭm'shē'ting), n. A variety of linen sheeting of good quality.

loon¹ (lŭn), n. [Also loun, lovn, lovn; < ME. lowne (also in adj. lownische: see loomish, lowmish), appar. < OD. loen, a stupid fellow, possibly a var. or corruption of loem* (cf. ME. lowmyse, for lowmyse), connected with lome, dull, slow, = OHG. luomi, luami, lōmi, MHG. lūeme, faint, weary, drooping, mild (MHG. luomen, lomen, droop), G. lumen, loose, lax, > D. lummel = G. lummel = Dan. lommel = Sw. lymmel, a loon, lubber (cf. E. lummar). These words are prob. from the same ult. source as lame.] A stupid fellow; a clown: with various shades of intensity as an opprobrious epithet, like fool, dolt, etc.

And take it backe with manlike cheere, not like a rustlike Loone.

Babees Book (E. T. S.), p. 291.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-faced loon!
Where got'st thou that goose look?

Shak. Macbeth, v. 2. 11.

Hold off; unhand me, gray-haired loon!
Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, I.

loons (lŭn), n. [A corruption of *loom*².] A four-toed diving bird of the genus Colymbus or Trinator. See Colymbidae. There are several species, all inhabiting the northern hemisphere. The great northern diver, ring-necked loon, or ember-goose, C. torquatus or C. glacialis or Trinator imber, is from 30 to 35 inches long, and 4½ feet in stretch of wings; when adult Great Northern Diver (Colymbus torquatus or Trinator imber).

it is glossy-black with greenish and purplish metallic reflections on the head and neck, which, with the back, are marked regularly with white spots. The under parts are white, and the bill is black. C. adamsi, the yellow-billed loon, is somewhat larger. The black-throated loon or diver, C. erythrorhynchos, resembles the foregoing, but is smaller, with much of the head clear bluish-gray. The red-throated loon, C. septentrionalis, is much like C. erythrorhynchos, but is smaller still, and has a chestnut patch on the throat. Both the two smaller loons, the red- and the black-throated, are also called spotted loons, and a variety of the former, from the western coast of North America, is recognized as C. pacificus. (See diver, 1 (b).) The wild antics of the loon in escaping danger and its dismal cry (see looming) suggest the idea of insanity; whence the common (American) simile "as crazy as a loon."

loonghee, loonghie (lōng'gē), n. [E. Ind. lōngi.] A long scarf of silk or cotton stuff, usually of rich colors, used in the East Indies to wrap round the body as a waist- or loin-cloth. It is about 4 yards long and 2 feet wide.

looming (lō'ning), n. [< loon² + -ing¹.] The cry of a loon. It is a sort of wild moan somewhat resembling the howl of a wolf.

This was his [a loon's] looming—perhaps the wildest sound that is ever heard here. Thoreau, Walden, p. 254.

loony (lō'ni), a. and n. See lunny.

loop¹ (lōp), n. [< ME. lōpe, lōupe, lōupe; prob. < Ir. Gael. lūb, bend.] 1. A folding or doubling of a string, lace, cord, chain, etc., or a short piece doubled and secured to something at each end. By a loop is most commonly understood a part or piece of some material bent and secured in such a way as to form an eye or opening through which something can be passed; but it may be merely an unfastened returning curve in the material, the shape giving the name.

Buttons of orient pearls,
Which loopes of saur'd silk did circulate.

David, An Extasie.

I sold my sheep, and lambskins too,
For silver loops and garment blue.

Gay, Shepherd's Week, Frol.

The female figure reclining on the lid (of a sarcophagus) wears a Greek chiton of a thin white material, with short sleeves fastened on the outside of the arm by means of buttons and loops.

Brugs, Brk., VI. 485.

2. Something resembling a loop, as the bend of a river; a link; a crook.

At another lope of the wall, on a ladder, there was the lord of Berseil, and fought hands to hands with his enemies.

Berners, tr. of Froissart's Chron., I. cccxi.

Specifically—(a) In crochet, knitting, and similar kinds of fancy work, same as stitch. (b) A hinge of a door. (Prov. Eng.) (c) In railroad and telegraph systems, a branch line leaving the main line at any point and joining it again at some other point; a looping line, as a branch wire carried over to a side station and back. (d) In the theory of Riemann's surfaces, a line running from any point to a branch-point, then around that branch-point in an infinitesimal circle, and back to the original point by the same path. (e) A part of a curve limited by a cusp. (f) The ear of a vessel, as a stoneware jar, when approximately of the form of a half-ring projecting from the side or lip.

It has on its central band four projecting handles or loops.

Jewell, Ceramic Art (1878), I. 15.

(g) In gun, a small iron ring in the barrel of a gun. (h) The small ring at the tip of a fishing-rod through which the line passes. (i) In anal., a looped vessel or fiber; especially, a nerve-loop. (j) In brachiopoda, the folding of the brachial appendages.

3. In acoustics, the part of a vibrating musical string (see sonometer), or, as in an organ-pipe, of a column of air, where the amplitude of vibration is at its maximum. See node.—4. In mech., a slotted bar or ring at the side of any piece of machinery, designed to limit or control the movement of another part.—5. A knot or bur, often of great size, occurring on walnut, maple, oak, and some other trees. The wood of these knots is curled and waved in grain, and is used to make veneers for ornamental furniture.

6. A small magnifying-glass.—Crochet and loop, an old term for hook and eye. See hook.

[Bede] that henget shall be with hole sylour,
With crochet and loopy sett on lyour.

Babes Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 313.

Pressed loop, in harness, a leather strap or piece of which the outer surface is ornamented by impression with a stamp.—Frick at the loop. Same as fast and loose (a). See *fast*¹.

loop¹ (lōp), v. [< loop¹, n.] I. trans. 1. To form into a loop or loops: as, to loop a cord.—2. To fasten or secure with a loop or loops: as, to loop up a curtain.—3. To furnish with a loop or loops: as, to loop a cloak.

II. intrans. 1. To form a loop.

The pathways wind and loop here and there among the ravines and around the mountain shoulders.

The Century, XXXVII. 422.

2. To move, as the larvae of certain moths, by forming loops.

They [leeches] move partly by looping with the help of their suckers, and partly by swimming.

O. Claus, Zoology (trans.), p. 300.

loop² (lōp), n. [Early mod. E. also lōpe; < ME. lōpe, < OF. lōup (dialect), a narrow window; appar. < D. lōp, a peeping-place, ambush, < luipen, peep, lurk. Hence loophole.] 1. A narrow window; any small, narrow aperture; specifically, in medieval fort., a small aperture for observing the enemy, for the discharge of arrows or ordnance, or to admit light; a loophole.

That no light loope yu at loner ne at loope.

Piers Plowman (C), xli. 262.

They found the gates fast barred long ere night,
And every loup fast lockt, as fearing loos despatch.

Spenser, F. Q., II. ix. 10.

Some at the loope durst scarce outpeep.

Fairfax, tr. of Tasso.

The same [wall] was very narrow in the top, not divided with lopes, . . . but inclosed with one whole and continual battlement round about.

J. Brende, tr. of Quintus Curtius, ix.

2. A gap in the paling of a park, made for the convenience of the deer. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]—3. A removable fence-panel made of parallel wooden bars, generally united by transverse braces or crosspieces, used as a substitute for an ordinary fence-gate. Instead of being hinged, it is generally supported by notched brackets, or other supports adapted to receive the ends of the bars.

loop³, n. See loupe.

loop-bolt (lōp'bōlt), n. In a vehicle, a bolt with an ornamental head used to fasten the body-loop to the running-gear.

looper (lō'pēr), n. [< loop¹ + -er¹.] 1. In entom., a measuring-worm; a geometrid larva: same as geometer, 3. Hence—2, pl. The adult geometrid moths, Geometridæ or Geometrina. Also called measured-moths and land-measurers.—3. An implement used in uniting the ends of strips cut from rags for the wool or filling of rag carpets. It is a blade with a point and an eye, through which the end of a strip is passed. With the point of the blade the end of another strip is perforated; the end of the first strip, held by the eye, is then put through the perforation in the second, and the strips are looped together.

loop-head (lōp'hēd), n. In a vehicle, the swell and eye on the end of a body-loop. E. H. Knight.

loop-holder (lōp'hōl'dēr), n. A carriage-iron by which the loop of a strap is attached to the running-gear or the bed. E. H. Knight.

loophole (lōp'hōl), n. [< loop² + hole¹.] 1. A small aperture, narrow toward the outside and splayed within, in the walls of a fortification or of any similar structure, through which small-arms may be fired at an enemy, or observations may be taken.

No stirring out, no peeping through a loop-hole,
But straight saluted with an armed dart.

Fletcher (and another), False One, iv. 2.

2. An opening into or out of anything; a hole or aperture that gives a passage or the means of escape: often used figuratively, and especially of an underhand or unfair method of escape or evasion.

Tends his pasturing herds
At loopholes cut through thicket shade.

Milton, P. L., ix. 1110.

He was only indignant that a few narrow and almost impossible loop-holes had been left, through which those who had offended might effect their escape.

Moley, Dutch Republic, II. 97.

loopholed (lōp'hōld), a. Furnished with loopholes; having holes or openings for outlook, discharge of firearms, escape, etc.

But if those fall,

Yet this uneasy loop-holed gael,
In which ye're hampered by the fetlock,
Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock.

S. Butler, Hudibras, II. 1. 608.

loople, a. See loopy.

looping-snail (lō'ping-snaɪ), n. A snail of the genus Truncatella which walks by contracting and expanding the space between the lips and the foot, like a looping caterpillar.

looping-worm (lō'ping-wērm), n. Same as loop-worm.

looplight (lōp'līt), n. A small, narrow window in a wall, turret, or the like; a loophole, especially for the admission of light.

loop-shell guard (lōp'shel gārd). A sword-guard of such form that a loop or ring attached to the cross-guard, through which the finger may be passed, is protected in its turn by a shell forming an additional or outer guard. Compare cup-guard.

loop-test (lōp'test), n. A method of testing for the position of a fault or defect in the insulation of a telegraph-line or -cable. It consists in making the two parts of the faulty line two sides of the Wheatstone's bridge (see resistance), the fault, through the earth, being made one of the junctions of the bridge.

loopwork (lōp'wērk), n. Work consisting of loops or looped stitches.

By leaving portions of the silk loopwork uncut a less raised pile is produced.

Art Journal, XLVIII. 379.

loopworm (lōp'wērm), n. A looper: same as geometer, 3. Also looping-worm.

loopy (lō'pi), a. [Also loope; origin uncertain: cf. loop².] Decisive; crafty.

loop-yoke (lōp'yōk), n. In a vehicle, the loop for the strap by which the swaying of the body is limited. E. H. Knight.

loord¹, n. See loord².

loost¹, n. See loos².

loose (lōs), a. and n. [< ME. loos, los, louse, louse, lause, a var. (due to the verb, or to the influence of D. loos, etc.) of lees, les, < AS. leda, loose, false, = OS. lōs = OFries. las = MD. loos, loose, false, D. los, loose, loos, false, = MLG. lōs, los = OHG. MHG. lōs, loose, false, G. los, loose, = Icel. laus = Dan. Sw. lōs, loose, = Goth. laus, empty, vain; from the root lus* of AS. leodan, loose: see loane, v., leese¹, loes¹, and leane³. The AS. adj. leda is also the source of the E. suffix -less, q. v.] I. a. 1. Not fast or confined; not fastened; unattached; free from restraint or obligation; not bound to another or together; without bonds, ties, or attachments; at liberty: as, loose sheets of a book; loose tresses of hair; loose change in one's pocket; to break loose; to be set loose; to cut loose from bad habits.

When I had al this folke beholde
And founde me loos and noght yholde.

Chaucer, House of Fame, I. 1396.

Than pitie of my person pricked his hert,
He delivert me loose, & my life felow.

Alphonsus the freike.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 13190.

Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fre.

Dan. ill. 25.

Pretending Religion and the Law of God is to set all things loose.

Selden, Table-Talk, p. 104.

War wearied bath perform'd what war can do,
And to disorder'd rage let loose the reins.

Milton, P. L., vi. 606.

Rills that . . . chiming as they fall
Upon loose pebbles, lose themselves at length.

Cowper, Task, I. 194.

Horses breaking loose in the compound outside.

W. H. Russell, Mary in India, II. 72.

2. Not tight or close; without close union or adjustment; slightly or slackly joined: as, a loose knot; loose garments; a loose league or confederation.

Now does he feel his title

Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe

Upon a dwarfish thief. Shak., Macbeth, v. 2. 21.

The light and lustrous curls . . . were parol'd with dust,
Or clotted into points and hanging loose.

Tennyson, Passing of Arthur.

3. Not dense or compact; having interstices or intervals; open or expanded: as, cloth of loose texture; a loose order of battle.

With horse and chariots rank'd in loose array.

Milton, P. L., ii. 887.

4. Not concise or condensed; wanting precision or connection of parts; diffuse; rambling: as, a loose style of writing; loose reasoning; a loose array of facts.

Both, hote, lustie, and plaine speakers, but colde, loose, and rough writers. Ascham, The Scholemaster, p. 116.

He dodged me with a long and loose account.

Tennyson, Sea Dreams.

5. Not exact in meaning; indefinite; vague; uncertain.

It is scarcely possible that language so loose, in a matter requiring mathematical precision, should have been unintentional.

Prescott, Ferd. and Isa., ii. 11.

The words in which the jurisdiction of these officers was described were loose, and might be stretched to almost any extent.

Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

6. Lax; relaxed; slack; wanting retentiveness or power of restraint: as, loose bowels; loose ties; a loose bond of union.

There are a kind of men so loose of soul

That in their sleeps will mutter their affairs.

Shak., Othello, iii. 2. 41a.

7. Lax in character or quality; not strict or exact; careless; slovenly: as, a loose construction of the constitution; a loose mode of conducting business; loose morality.

It is an argument of a loose and ungoverned mind to be affected with the promiscuous approbation of the generality of mankind.

Steele, Spectator, No. 128.

So loose was the practice in assessment for these taxes that a perusal of the various writs for the assessment and collection is like reading the programme for the course of a procession that went another way.

S. Dowell, Taxes in England, III. 76.

8. Lax in principle or conduct; free from moral restraint; wanton; dissolute; unchaste: as, a loose woman; loose behavior.

I would prevent

The loose encounters of lascivious men.

Shak., T. G. of V., ii. 7. 41.

lop or loose edges of') of *lop*¹, var. of *lop*². Cf. F. lopin, a fragment, morsel, from the same ult. source, namely AS. leppa, etc., edge, margin, etc. In this view, the word is not related to MD. leppen, D. lubben, maim, castrate: see *lob*¹.] 1. To cut off, as the top or extreme part of anything; shorten or reduce by cutting off the extremities; cut off, as superfluous parts; trim by cutting: as, to lop a tree or its branches.

Have I with this one rapier
Pass'd through a field of pikes, whose heads I lop
As easily as the bloody-minded youth
Lop-off the poppy-heads? Ford, Lady's Trial, iv. 2.
Expunge the whole, or lop the excrescent parts.
Pope, Essay on Man, ii. 49.

There is another power, long used, but now lopped off.
D. Webster, Speech, Oct. 12, 1852.

2. To cut partly off and bend down: as, to lop the saplings of a hedge. — Syn. 1. To dock, crop, prune. *lop*² (lop), n. [*lop*², v.] That which is cut from trees; fagot-wood.

We take
From every tree lop, bark, and part of the timber.
Shak., Hen, VIII., l. 2. 96.

It is usual to take the lop, or smaller branches (for distillation).
Spenser, Envy, Manu, l. 8.

Lop and top. (a) The smaller branches and the tops of trees that are lopped off; fagot-wood.

A very large fall of timber, . . . one fifth of which . . . belongs to the grantees, Lord Stawell. He lays claim also to the lop and top: but the poor . . . have taken it all away.
Gilbert White, Nat. Hist. of Selborne, ix.

(b) Every part; the whole.
Now thyself hast lost both lopp and topp.
Spenser, Shep. Cal., February.

lop³ (lop), n. [ME. loppe = Sw. loppa = Dan. loppe], a flea; prob. < AS. hleddan, leap: see *leap*¹, and cf. *lope*¹. The AS. loppe, a spider, is by some taken to mean 'a flea'; but its other sense, 'a silkworm,' and its appar. var. lobbe, a spider (see *lob*¹), exclude this interpretation.] 1. A flea.

After this bore shal come a lambe that shal haue feet of lede, and hede of braas, an hert of a loppe, a swynes skyn, and an harde.
Caston, Chron. of Eng., p. 60.

Grete loppis cure all this lande the flye,
That with bytyng makis mekill blure.
York Plays, p. 85.

2. A spider.
Thi riet shapen in manere of a net or of a webbe of a loppe.
Chaucer, Astrolobe, l. 2.

lop⁴. An obsolete preterit of *leap*¹.
Loparia (lop-pá-ri-á), n. pl. [NL.] A division of heteropterous bugs of the family Phytocoridae, comprising the largest and most superbly colored members of the family.

lope¹ (lop), v.; pret. and pp. loped, ppr. loping. [ME. lopen, a var. of lepen (AS. hleddan), perhaps due in part to LG. loppen, D. loopen, leap: see *leap*¹.] 1. Intrans. 1. To leap.

This whinyard has gard many better men to lope than thou.
Greene, James IV., ind.

2. To move or run with a long step, as a dog; canter leisurely with a rather long, easy stride, as a horse.

The most confirmed gait he could establish was a Canterbury gallop with the hind legs, which those more forward assisted for doubtful moments, though generally content with a loping trot.
J. F. Cooper, Last of the Mohicans, ii.

II. trans. To cause to lope in going or running. [Rare.]

For seven or eight miles we loped our jaded horses along at a brisk pace.
T. Roosevelt, Hunting Trips, p. 231.

lope² (lop), n. [ME. lope; < *lope*¹, v. Cf. *leap*¹, n.] 1. A leap.

I cannot do the author justice . . . without taking a large lope over the next reign.
Roger North, Examen, p. 618.

2. A striding movement; a run made with long steps; especially, a leisurely canter with a rather long, easy stride, as of a horse.

The guards set Ashby through the hedge, and in a lope he turned up the tow-path.
The Century, XXX. 286.

lope³. A Middle English preterit and past participle of *leap*¹.

lop-eared (lop'érd), a. [*lop*¹ + eared.] Having ears which lop or hang downward; having pendulous ears. Also lop-eared.

loper (lop'mgn), n. A leaping man.

The high and mighty! God, what a style is this!
Methinks it goes like a Dutchy lope-man;
A ladder of a hundred rounds will fall
To reach the top on't.
Fletcher (and another), Noble Gentleman, iii. 4.

loper (lop'pér), n. 1. One who or that which lopes. — 2. In rope-making (in the now nearly obsolete process of laying up strands in a rope-walk by the use of a whirl), a swivel placed at one end of the rope-walk, the whirl being at the other end. The yarns are attached to the loper, and the twisting proceeds from it toward the whirl, the untwisted parts of the yarns being kept separate by the top, which, as the twisting progresses, is forced along toward the whirl.

lope-staff (lop'stáf), n. A leaping-pole.

A lope-staff wherewith men leape ditches. Cotgrave.
The doubtful fords and passages to try,
With stilts and lope-staves that do aptliest wade.
Dryden, Barons' Wars, l.

Lopez gambit. See gambit.

Lopezia (lop-pé-'zi-á), n. [NL. (Cavanilles, 1791), named after J. Lopez, a Spanish botanist.] A genus of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants, of the natural order Onagraceae, the evening-primrose family. It is characterized by irregular flowers, with four petals (each furnished with a claw), one stamen which is anther-bearing and one which is petaloid, and an indefinite number of ovules. They are erect branching herbs with small red or purple flowers on slender pedicels in racemes or subcorymbs at the ends of the branches. Fifteen species have been described, all from Mexico and Guatemala. Spach, Endlicher, and other authors make this genus the type of a tribe Lopezieae.

Lopezia (lop-pé-'zi-á), n. pl. [NL. (Spach), < Lopezia + -ae.] A tribe of plants of the order Onagraceae, typified by the genus Lopezia, and characterized by irregular flowers with one or two stamens and a loculicidal capsule. It embraces 4 genera of Mexican shrubs or herbs.

lopes-root (lop'pez-rót), n. The yellowish woody root of a prickly climber, Toddalia aculeata, native in the East Indies. It was formerly a noted remedy for diarrhoea, but is now disused except in India, where it is valued as a stimulating tonic.

Lophiids (lop'fi-'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophius + -idae.] A family of pediculate fishes, typified by the genus Lophius. (a) In old systems, a family of alleged acanthopterygians, including all the Pediculati together with the Batrachida. (b) In more recent systems, a family conterminous with the order Pediculati, and embracing the Lophiidae proper, Antennariidae, Ceratidae, and Malioidae. (c) In Gill's ichthyological system, a family of pediculate fishes with brachial apertures in or behind the inferior axillae of the pectoral fins, anterior dorsal ray superior, mouth opening more or less upward, lower jaw generally projecting beyond or closing in front of the upper, pseudobranchia with two actinosts, pectoral members little genuiculated, and ventral fins separated by a wide interval. In this restricted sense the family includes only the fishes known as anglers or fishng-frogs. Also Lophiidae, Lophida.

Lophiodon (lop'fi-'ō-don), n. [NL. (Cuvier, 1822), < Gr. lóphos or lóphion, dim. of lóphos, a crest, + doon (doon-) = E. tooth.] 1. A typical genus of the family Lophiodontidae, from the Middle or Upper Eocene, differing from most of the family in having only 40 teeth. The dental formula is: 3 incisors, 1 canine, 3 premolars, and 3 molars in each upper and lower half-jaw. The animal was a tapirid. See Lophiodontidae.

2. [I. c.] A member of this genus.
lophiodont (lop'fi-'ō-dont), a. and n. [Lophiodont (-).] 1. a. Pertaining to the Lophiodontidae, or having their characters.

II. n. A tapirid of the family Lophiodontidae.
Lophiodontidae (lop'fi-'ō-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophiodont (-) + -idae.] A family of extinct perissodactyl ungulate quadrupeds of the tapirid series, having both the upper and the lower molars bilophodont, four toes on the fore feet, and three on the hind feet. It includes a number of Eocene genera representing the earliest and most generalized types of Perissodactyla, and ranging in size from that of a hare to that of an ox. The more primitive forms had 44 teeth, others 40. Coryphodontidae is a synonym.

lophiodontine (lop'fi-'ō-don'tin), a. [Lophiodont + -ine.] Same as lophiodont. E. D. Cope, Amer. Nat., XXI. 994.

lophiodontoid (lop'fi-'ō-don'toid), a. Resembling a lophiodont; having the characters of the Lophiodontidae.

Lophiodontoides (lop'fi-'ō-don-toi'dē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophiodont (-) + -oides.] A superfamily of tapirid mammals, having the upper as well as the lower true molars without a continuous outer wall, but some or all of these teeth with two complete transverse crests. The group comprises the living Tapiridae and the extinct Lophiodontidae.

lophioid (lop'fi-'oid), a. and n. [NL. Lophius + Gr. eidōs, form.] 1. a. Pertaining to the Lophiidae, or having their characters.

II. n. One of the Lophiidae, as an angler. Agassiz; J. Richardson.

Lophiomys (lop'fi-'ō-mi-'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophiomyia + -idae.] A family of simulioid myomorphous rodents, constituted by the genus Lophiomyia. The skull is unique in some respects, the temporal fossae being roofed over by bony plates proceeding from the temporal ridge and malar bone; the molars are rooted and tuberculate; there are no premolars; the clavicles are imperfect; the osseous is small; and the thumb is opposable.

Lophiomys (lop'fi-'ō-mis), n. [NL., < Gr. lóphos or lóphion, dim. of lóphos, a crest, + mys = E. mouse.] The typical and only genus of the family Lophiomysidae. L. imhausi of Africa is the only species. A. Milne-Edwards, 1867.

Lophiostoma (lop'fi-'os-tō-mā), n. [NL., < Gr. lóphos or lóphion, dim. of lóphos, a crest, + stoma, mouth.] A genus of aspherieaceous fungi, typical of the family Lophiostomaceae, having the perithecia carbonaceous, and the ostecium large and compressed. The spores, which are oblong or fusiform, are plurilocular, brown or olivaceous, and frequently appendiculate. The species grow mostly on dead wood, decorticated twigs, etc.

Lophiostomaceae (lop'fi-'os-tō-mā-'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophiostoma + -aceae.] A family of aspherieaceous fungi proposed by Saccardo, typified by the genus Lophiostoma.

lophiostomate (lop'fi-'os-tō-māt), a. [Gr. lóphos or lóphion, dim. of lóphos, a crest, + stoma, mouth.] In bot., having the apertures or openings crested. Cooke's Manual. [Rare.]

lophiostomous (lop'fi-'os-tō-mus), a. Same as lophiostomate.

Lophius (lop'fi-'us), n. [NL., < Gr. lóphos, a crest.] The typical genus of Lophiidae, originally including all the pediculate fishes, now restricted to the angler, L. piscatorius, and closely related species. See cut under angler.

lophobranch (lop'fō-brangk), a. and n. [Gr. lóphos, a crest, + brachia, gills.] 1. a. Having tufted gills; specifically, pertaining to the Lophobranchii, or having their characters.

II. n. A fish of the order Lophobranchii.
lophobranchiate (lop'fō-brang'ki-ēt), a. and n. [Gr. lóphos, a crest, + brachia, gills, + -ate.] Same as lophobranch.

Lophobranchii (lop'fō-brang'ki-i), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. lóphos, a crest, + brachia, gills.] An order of teleost fishes having the branchial skeleton imperfect, the superior and basal branchiostyles and pharyngeals wanting, and the gills not tuft-like lobes, whence the name. In Cuvier's system it was the fifth order of fishes, defined as having the jaws free and complete, and the gills divided into small round tufts disposed in pairs along the branchial arches. The genus Pogonius, as well as the typical lophobranchia, was referred to this order by Cuvier. Pogonius, having normal lamelliform gills and being the type of a distinct family Pogonidae, has been removed from the Lophobranchii and referred to the Acanthopterygii, or to a special suborder Hypostomoides of Teleostei. The order consequently now includes only the families Syngnathidae and Hippocampidae, or pipe-fishes and sea-horses, constituting the suborder Syngnathi, and the Solenostomidae, alone representing the Solenostomi. (See cut at Hippocampidae.) All the Lophobranchii have a dermal skeleton composed of angular plates having a radiate or stellate ossification. Most of the species are marine. Also Lophobranchia, Lophobranchii.

lophodont (lop'fō-dont), a. [Gr. lóphos, a crest, + doon (doon-) = E. tooth.] In odontolog., having the crowns of the molar teeth thrown into ridges or crests, longitudinal or transverse: opposed to bunodont.

Lophodytes (lop'fō-di-'tēs), n. [NL., < Gr. lóphos, a crest, + dytes, a diver.] A genus of Anatidae, of the subfamily Merginae, having an erect semi-circular compressed crest; the hooded mergansers. L. cucullatus is a common bird of the northern hemisphere.

Lopholatilus (lop'fō-lat'i-lus), n. [NL., < Gr. lóphos, a crest, + NL. latilus, q. v.] A genus of tilefishes of the family Latilidae, having a large nuchal adipose appendage, whence the name. See tilefish.

Lophomonadidae (lop'fō-mō-nad'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophomonas (-ad) + -idae.] A family of flagellate infusorians. These animalcules are naked, solitary, and free-swimming, bearing a tuft of flagella at the anterior extremity, and having no distinct oral aperture.

Lophomonas (lop'fō-mō-'nas), n. [NL., < Gr. lóphos, a crest, + monas, a unit: see monad.] The typical genus of Lophomonadidae, founded by Stein in 1860. L. blastarum inhabits the intestine of the cockroach.

lophophoral (lop'fō-fō-rál), a. [Gr. lóphos, a crest, + phor, bearing, < phéren = E. bear.] In Polysora, the oral disk at the free end of the polypide, on which is situated the mouth: so called from the circle of ciliated tentacles which it bears. See Plumatella. This organ is circular in most polyzans, as the cyclostomous, chloetomous, and stenostomous forms, or the Gymnolamna, but hippocrepiform in the Phylactolamna or Lophogoda.

lophophore (lop'fō-fōr), n. [Gr. lóphos, a crest, + phor, bearing, < phéren = E. bear.] In Polysora, the oral disk at the free end of the polypide, on which is situated the mouth: so called from the circle of ciliated tentacles which it bears. See Plumatella. This organ is circular in most polyzans, as the cyclostomous, chloetomous, and stenostomous forms, or the Gymnolamna, but hippocrepiform in the Phylactolamna or Lophogoda.

Lower Jaw-bone of Lophiodon.

The horn-shaped lophophore, such as we see it in Phoronis and in Lophopus, is probably the ancestral form, and has given rise to the two other extreme forms of lophophore—namely, the "probranchiate," associated with a great development of the epistome, and the "circular," associated with a complete suppression of the epistome. Encyc. Brit., XII, 483.

Lophophorinae (lō-fō-fō-rī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lophophorus + -inae.] A subfamily of Phasianidae, named from the genus Lophophorus, and containing also Cerionis and Pucrasia. These magnificent birds are known as impeyans, monauls, tragopans, pucras, etc.

Lophophorus (lō-fō-fō-rus), n. [NL., < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + φορος, bearing, < φέρω = E. bear.] 1. A magnificent genus of Phasianidae, type of the subfamily Lophophorinae; the impeyans. See Impeyan pheasant, and monaul. C. J. Temminck, 1815.—2. A genus of copepods. Brady, 1878.

Lophophytes (lō-fō-fī-tē-s), n. pl. [NL. (Schott, 1832), < Lophophytum + -es.] A tribe of fleshy herbs of the natural order Balanophoraceae, based on the genus Lophophytum. It is distinguished from the other tribes of the order by the absence of a perianth in the staminate flowers, the two stamens with two-celled anthers, and the pistillate flowers with an adherent ovary. The tribe includes 8 genera and 7 species, all South American.

Lophophytum (lō-fō-fī-tum), n. [NL. (Schott and Endlicher, 1832), < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + φυτόν, a plant.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, of the natural order Balanophoraceae and type of the tribe Lophophyteae. It is characterized by having no sheath at the base of the peduncle, and by its monoclous flowers, both staminate and pistillate being inserted on a mammillated spadix provided with scales. They are smooth fleshy herbs, rising from a thick rootstock. There are 4 species, confined to the southern part of tropical America.

Lophopoda (lō-fō-fō-dā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + ποὺς (pod-) = E. foot.] A name of the typical Bryozoa, or fresh-water polyzoans, as opposed to the Stomatopoda or Infundibulata, or sea-mats. These moss-animals have the lophophore horseshoe-shaped or lip-shaped, whence they are also termed Hippocrepia, or, more frequently, now, Physicula. The name is derived from one of the genera, Lophopus, of the family Physiculidae, which, with the Cristatellidae, are included in the group. Also incorrectly written Lophopoda, Lophopoda.

Lophopittacus (lō-fō-pī-tā-s), n. [NL. (A. Newton, 1875), < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + πῖττακος, a parrot.] A genus of pittacine birds, represented by the extinct crested parrot of Mauritius, L. mauritanus.

Lophornis (lō-fō-rnis), n. [NL. (Lesson, 1829), < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + ορνίς, a bird.] A genus of crested humming-birds, such as L. ornatus. They are known as coquettes. Also called Belatrix.

Lophortyx (lō-fō-rtik-s), n. [NL., < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + ορνίς, the quail.] A genus of American partridges having an elegant plume of recurved feathers on the crown; the helmet-quails. There are two distinct species in the United States, the valley-quail of California, L. californicus, and the Arizona quail, L. gambeli. Both are fine game-birds, much esteemed for their flesh. See cut under helmet-quail.

Lophosteon (lō-fō-stē-on), n. pl. lophosteae (-ē). [< Gr. λόφος, a crest, + ὀστέον, bone.] The median and single one of the five separate bones or ossile elements of which the sternum of a carinate bird usually consists; the piece or part of the breast-bone which includes the crest or keel: correlated with coracosteon, pleurosteon, and metosteon. W. K. Parker.

The extent of ossification of the lophosteon and metosteon, and the mode of their ossification.

Cross, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 143.

Lophotes (lō-fō-tēs), n. [NL., < Gr. as if λοφότης, cf. λοφός, crested, < λόφος, a crest.] 1. The typical genus of the family Lophotidae, remarkable for the prominence of the forehead bone-shaped, with the vent near the end of it, a short anal fin behind the vent, and the dorsal fin as long as the body.

Lophotragus (lō-fō-tā-gus), n. [NL., < Gr. λόφος, a crest, + τράγος, a goat.] Same as Elaphodus.

Lophyropoda (lō-fī-rop-fō-dā), n. pl. [NL., orig. Lophyropa, prop. Lophyropus*, < Gr. λόφος, a crest, with a bushy tail (see Lophyrus), + ποὺς (pod-) = E. foot.] In Latreille's system, the first section of his Branchiopoda; an indefinable group, containing certain larval forms (zoëae), the genera Nebalia and Cuma, and sundry copepod, ostracode, and eladocerous crustaceans. As subsequently modified, it became a more homogeneous group of entomostracous crustaceans, composed of the orders Copepoda and Ostracoda, which have leaf-like branchia attached to the feet, as implied in the name.

Lophyrus (lō-fī-rus), n. [NL., prop. Lophyrus*, < Gr. λόφος, a crest, with a tufted tail, < λόφος, a crest, tuft, + οὐρά, tail.] 1. A genus of mollusks of the family Chitonidae, or chitons. Poll, 1791.—2. A genus of saw-flies of the hymenopterous family Tenthredinidae and subfamily Lydinae, having one marginal cell on the fore wings, the male antennae pectinate, the female serrate, and the lanceolate cell with a cross-vein. It is a large and wide-spread group, of economic interest. L. pinus injures conifers in Europe, and L. abditus does similar damage in the United States. Fifteen European and about as many North American forms are described. Ichneumon-flies of the genera Tryphon, Pentaneus, and Campoplex are parasites of the larva. Laboulbène, 1802.

3. A genus of plant-bugs of the heteropterous family Capsidae. Kolenati, 1845.—4. A genus of iguanoid lizards. Oppel, 1811.—5. A genus of terrestrial columbine birds of the subfamily Gourinae: a synonym of Goura. E. P. Vieillot, 1816.

Lopidae (lop-i-dā), n. pl. [NL. (Douglas and Scott, 1865), < Lopus + -idae.] A family of plant-bugs formerly referred to the Capsidae, represented by the genus Lopus. In these bugs the body is elongate, its sides being almost parallel; the antennae are as long as the body, with the second joint twice as long as the first, and the third and fourth joints filiform; the rostrum reaches to the end of the metasternum; the scutellum is triangular and ocellular; and the elytra are longer than the abdomen.

loplolly, n. See loblolly.

loppard (lop'ard), n. [lop + -ard. Cf. pollard.] A tree with the top lopped or cut off; a pollard.

loppe, v. Obsolete form of lope.

loppe, v. t. Obsolete form of lope.

loppe, v. t. [A simple form, from the earlier freq. loppe, q. v.] To curdle or coagulate. Levin, Manip. Vocab., 169, 16.

lopper (lop'er), n. [lop + -er.] One who lops.

lopper (lop'er), n. [ME. loper, curdled, coagulated; cf. D. lopperig, gelatinous, Dan. dial. lubber, anything coagulated; prob. ult. < AS. hlæpan, leap, run, etc., = Icel. hlappa, run, curdle: see leap and lopper, v., and cf. lop, lope, loope, loupe, from the same ult. source; cf. also runnet, rennet, < run, curdle: see run, etc.] Curdled; clotted; coagulated: as, lopper milk.

Dwelled in a dark dungeon,
And in a foul slede of corruption,
When he had no other fode
But wistom glet and loper (var. lopyrde) blode.
Hampole, Trick of Conscience, l. 458.

lopper (lop'er), v. t. and i. [In another form lobber; Sc. also lapper; < ME. loperen (in verbal n. lopering and p. a. loppered, etc.); cf. G. dial. lübbern, G. liefern, geliefern, curdle; a freq. form (whence the later simple form loppe) connected with lopper, a., and ult. with leap, run: see lopper, a.] To curdle or coagulate, as milk which has become sour; clot. [Prov. Eng. and U. S., where sometimes lobber.]

Of his mouth a patus thing to se
The lopper blode in ded thraw voydis be.
Gavin Douglas, Enaid, x. 523.

lopping (lop'ing), n. [Verbal n. of lop, v.] 1. The cutting off of all the branches of a tree, except the crop or leading shoot, for the sake of the profit to be derived from them, as contrasted with pruning, by which some of the branches are cut off for the sake of the tree.—2. That which is cut off; severed branches: commonly in the plural.

lopping-ax (lop'ing-aks), n. A small, light ax used for trimming trees.

lopping-shears (lop'ing-shērs), n. pl. Heavy shears used for trimming shrubs, hedges, etc.

loppy (lop'i), a. [lop + -y.] Hanging down: limp and pendulous. [Rare.]

A smeared and lippy shirt-collar.

Shirley Brooks, Aspen Court, xxvii.

loppy (lop'i), a. [ME. lippy; < lop + -y.] Full of fleas.

lopped (lop'ed), n. A North American herb, Phryma leptostachya, with spikes of small purple flowers, which in fruit are bent back close against the axis, whence the name.

lopped (lop'ed), a. [Also lopsided, lob-sided; < lop + side + -ed.] Inclining to one side; heavier or more developed on one side than on the other, physically or mentally.

I had rather the college should turn out one of Aristotle's four-square men, capable of holding his own in whatever field he may be cast, than a score of lopped ones developed abnormally in one direction.

Lowell, Orations at Harvard Univ., Nov. 8, 1883.

lopstert, n. An obsolete form of lobster.

loptail (lop'tail), v. t. Same as lobtail.

Lopus (lō'pus), n. [NL. (Hahn, 1831), < Gr. λόπος, or λόπος, peel, shell, husk, bark, < λένω, peel, bark.] The typical genus of Lopidae, having the sides of the prothorax foliaceous in front. They are mostly small bugs of variegated colors, found on the foliage of trees and shrubs. The 30 species are mainly European, but some are South American and others Australian.

lop-web (lop'web), n. [ME., < lop, lob, a spider, + web.] A spider's web.

In manner of a net or of a lop-web.

Chaucer, Astrolabe, l. 21.

As a loppable cloth from and gnattia,
Taken and suffer gret filis go.
Odoles, MS. Soc. Antiq., 134, l. 267. (Halstead.)

lop-wood (lop'wud), n. See the quotation. [Eng.]

The curious customs of lop-wood or privileges of cutting fuel from pollards at certain seasons of the year.

The Academy, Feb. 4, 1883, p. 71.

loquacious (lō-kwā'shus), a. [= F. loquace = Sp. locuas = Pg. loquas = It. loquace, < L. loquax (loquao-), talkative, < L. loqui, speak, = Skt. √ lap, speak. From L. loqui come also ult. E. eloquent, grandiloquent, magniloquent, etc., colloquy, obloquy, solloquy, etc., locution, allo-cution, elocution, circumlocution, etc.] Talkative; given to continual talking; chattering.

The swallow skims the river's watery face,
The frogs renew the croaks of their loquacious race.

Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, l.

Blind British bard, with violent touch, Traverse loquacious strings. J. Phillips, Cider, ll.

= Syn. Garrulous, etc. See talkative.

loquaciously (lō-kwā'shus-li), adv. In a loquacious or talkative manner.

loquaciousness (lō-kwā'shus-nes), n. The quality of being loquacious; loquacity.

loquacity (lō-kwā's-ti), n. [F. loquacité = Sp. locuacidad = Pg. loquacidade = It. loquacità, < L. loquacitas (-s), talkativeness, < loquax (loquao-), talkative: see loquacious.] Talkativeness; the habit or practice of talking continually or excessively.

Too great loquacity and too great taciturnity by fits.

Arbuthnot.

= Syn. Loquaciousness, garrulity, volubility, chatter.

loquat (lō'kwat), n. [Chin. (Cantonese dial.) lukwat, < kuk, a rush, + k'uk, an orange.] 1. An evergreen shrub or tree, Photinia (Erythrina) japonica, native in China and Japan, and commonly introduced in warm temperate climates. It is an ornamental plant, with leaves nearly a foot long, and yields a fruit of a yellow color, resembling a small apple.

2. The fruit of this tree. Also called biwa, luk-wat, pipa, and Japanese medlar.

loquela (lō-kwē'lā), n. [L. loquela, speech, < loqui, speak: see loquacious.] In law, an im-parlance; a declaration.

loquens (lō'kwens), n. [L. loquens, a talking, discourse, < loqui, speak: see loquacious.] The act of speaking; speech.

Thy tongue is loose, thy body close; both ill;
With silence this, with loquens that doth kill.
Owen, Epigrams (1677). (Nares.)

lora, n. Plural of lorum.

lora (lō'rā), n.; pl. lora (-rā). [NL., a false form of L. lorum, q. v.] In entom., same as loré, 4. Kirby.

loral (lō'ral), a. and n. [loré + -al.] I. a. In soli, or of pertaining to the lore: as, the loral space; a loral stripe.

II. n. In herpet., a loral plate. Also loreal. loranth (lō'ranth), n. [NL. Loranthus.] A plant of the order Loranthaceae. Lindley. Loranthaceae (lō-ran-thā-sē-s), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1835), < Loranthus + -aceae.] An order of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, the mistletoe family, of which the greater number are shrubs, or undershrubs, parasitic on trees.

Lophotes cepedianus.

and the procurrence of the dorsal fin, which forms a kind of frontal crest, whence the name. The only known species is L. cepedianus, a rarely found deep-sea fish of wide distribution, attaining a length of 5 feet.

2. A genus of raptorial birds of the family Falconidae. Also called Basa. E. P. Lesson, 1831.

Lophotidae (lō-fō-tī-dā), n. pl. [NL., < Lophotes + -idae.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes represented by the genus Lophotes, of the group of Acanthopterygii, having the body rib-

They have an inferior ovary, and an ovule which becomes erect after the flower opens. The order comprises 12 genera and about 500 species, which are found throughout all warm and tropical regions.

loranthaceous (lō-ran-thā'hius), a. [NL. Loranthaceae + -ous.] Belonging to the Loranthaceae, or having their characters.

Loranthus (lō-ran'thus), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), < LG. λῶρος, λῶρος, a thong (< L. lorum, thong), + Gr. άνθος, flower.] A genus of dicotyledonous apetalous plants, the type of the natural order Loranthaceae and tribe Euloranthae. It is distinguished from the only other genus of the tribe by having a fruit which is not winged and is usually a berry or a drupe. There are about 300 species, growing in all warm regions, with the exception of North America. The great majority are parasitic shrubs, generally with perfect flowers, which are small and beautifully colored, usually red or yellow. (See mistletoe.) Nine small species have been described, occurring in the Tertiary deposits of Europe, and also of Australia, New Zealand, and Borneo.

lorate (lō'rāt), a. [L. loratus, bound with thongs, < lorum, a thong, whip, lash, strap; see ligate.] In bot., shaped like a thong or strap; ligulate; linear; much elongated.

lorcha (lōr'chā), n. [Said to be of Pg. origin; if so, perhaps a corruption of Pg. lanchara, a pin-nace, or of lanchara, a small coasting-vessel used in the Malay archipelago. See lanchara.]

Lorcha.

A light Chinese sailing vessel, built somewhat after a European model, but rigged like a junk.

lord (lōrd), n. [= Sc. laird; < ME. lord, lovord, loword, lavedr, laferd, < AS. hlāford, the master of a household, lord; prob. a contraction of hlāfweard*, lit. 'loaf-ward', i. e. 'keeper (and dispenser) of bread', < hlāf, bread, loaf, + weard, a keeper; see loaf and ward, n. For the contraction of -weard to -ord, cf. -ald, -old, as in the name Harold and its G. cognate herold (see herald), contracted from -wald, -weald (-waldā, -wealdā). The name hlāford is peculiar to AS. (the ICel. hlāvarðr being borrowed). This fact and the fanciful nature of its literal meaning indicate that it was prob. orig. a poetical designation, which, like lithama, body (see litam), and other orig. poetical words, came to be adopted in prose, with consequent contraction and loss of meaning. Hence prob. lady, q. v.]

1. A master or ruler; a man possessing supreme authority or power of control; a monarch, governor, chief, proprietor, or paramount disposer.

They spoke all Greke, excepte the Venetians, that be lordes and gouernours there.

Sir R. Guyfords, Pylgrimage, p. 14. Our Saviour, who had all gifts in him, was Lord to express his indomitable power in what sort him best seem'd.

Milton, Apology for Smectymnua. Who hath not learned, in hours of faith, The truth to flesh and sense unknown, That life is ever lord of Death?

Whittier, Snow-Bound.

2. [cap.] In Scip., and in general Christian use, the Supreme Being; Jehovah: with the definite article except in address; also applied to Christ, who is called the Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord, or our Lord. The word Lord also appears to be used of the Holy Ghost in 2 Cor. iii. 17 (referring to Rx. xxiv.). In the English version of the Old Testament, Rx., when so printed, is a translation of, or rather substitute for, the Hebrew יהוה, or Jehovah. In the English version of the New Testament it is a translation of the Greek κύριος (Latin Dominus), variously translated God, Lord, Master, Owner, Sir.

He saide, "Ye knowe well that now cometh the feste that our lord was Inne I-bore, and he is lord of alle lordes."

The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. Ps. cx. 1. Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. 2 Cor. iii. 17.

3. A title of respect formerly given to persons of superior rank or consideration, especially in the phrase of address 'my lord,' as to kings and princes, monks or other ecclesiastics, a husband, etc.: still used humorously of a husband with reference to his wife.

"My lord the monk," quod he, "be myrie of chere." Chaucer, Prolog to Monk's Tale, l. 38.

Art thou that my lord Ellijah? 1 Ki. xviii. 7.

I oft in bitterness of soul deplored My absent daughter, and my dearer lord. Penton, in Pope's Odyssey, iv. 302.

4. The proprietor of a manor; the grantor under whom feudal tenants held, for whom he was to some extent responsible, and over whom he had authority. The word, with its meaning modified, is retained in the modern term landlord.—5. A nobleman; a title of honor in Great Britain given to those who are noble by birth or creation: applied to peers of the realm, of Scotland, and of Ireland, including dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons. Archbishops and bishops also are addressed by this title. A nobleman is customarily addressed as My lord, and the holder of a noble title, whether by right or by courtesy, is frequently (a baron ordinarily) designated Lord: thus, the Marquis of Salisbury is spoken of as Lord Salisbury, his eldest son Viscount Cranborne (courtesy title) as Lord Cranborne, etc. The younger sons of dukes and marquises have the courtesy title Lord prefixed to their Christian names: as, Lord Randolph Churchill (son of the seventh Duke of Marlborough).

All marquises eldest sons are named no Earles, but lord of a place or barony, without any Addition of his Christen name; and all his other brethren Lords, with the Addition of there Christened name.

Books of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), i. 27.

The title of lord belongs to all bishops in all churches, and not merely to those who possess a seat in the English house of lords, nor has it anything to do with a royal prerogative of conferring titles, not being a recognised grade of peerage.

Stubbs, Const. Hist., § 423, note.

6. An honorary title bestowed in Great Britain on certain official personages, generally as part of a designation. The mayors of London, York, and Dublin, and the provosts of Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Perth, and Dundee have this title; also, all judges while presiding in court, and the members of the College of Justice in Scotland.

7. One who goes foremost through the harvest with the scythe or the sickle. [Prov. Eng. (Suffolk).]

My Lord begg'd round, and held his hat. Says Farmer Gruff, says he, There's many a lord, Sam, I know that, Has begg'd as well as these.

Bloomfield, The Horkey.

House of Lords, the upper of the two branches of Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, consisting at present (1899) of 6 peers of the blood royal, 2 archbishops, 22 dukes, 22 marquises, 123 earls, 29 viscounts, 24 bishops, 319 barons, 16 Scotch representative peers, and 25 Irish representative peers: total 551. Fourteen of the foregoing are minors, and two are reckoned both as peers of the United Kingdom and Irish representative peers. Hasell's Annual, 1899. Abbreviated H. L.—House of the Lord. See house of God, under house.—Lay lord. See lay.—Lodge lord. See lodge.—Lord advocate. See advocate.—Lord almoner. See almoner.—Lord and vassal, grantor and grantee in the feudal system.—Lord chamberlain, lord great chamberlain. See chamberlain, 1 (b).—Lord Chief Justice. See justice.—Lord high admiral. See admiral.—Lord high chancellor. See chancellor, 2.—Lord high commissioner. See commissioner.—Lord High Constable. See constable, 1.—Lord in gross, a lord irrespective of a manor, as the king in respect of his crown.—Lord Justice Clerk, Lord Justice General, lords justices. See justice.—Lord Keeper. See keeper of the Great Seal, under keeper.—Lord Lieutenant. (a) The title of the vicerey or royal governor of Ireland. (b) He is a member of the British ministry, and retires from office with the cabinet to which he owes his appointment. (c) In Great Britain and Ireland, the principal official of a county, who has under him deputy lieutenants, and controls the appointment of justices of the peace and the issue of commissions in the local military organizations. The office was originally created for the defense of the counties in times of disturbance.—Lord of a manor, one who possesses a manor having copyhold tenants.—Lord of appeal in ordinary, one of those members of the British House of Lords appointed specially, with exceptionally limited privileges and powers, to form with other peers an ultimate court of appeal. See the quotation.

The judicial functions of the House of Lords have been virtually transferred to an appeal committee, consisting of the Lord Chancellor and other peers who have held high judicial office, and certain lords of appeal in ordinary created by the Act. . . . The lords of appeal in ordinary are an entirely new creation. They hold office on the same conditions as other judges; they take rank as barons for life: but they are entitled to a writ of summons to attend and vote in the House only so long as they hold office, and their dignity does not descend to their heirs.

Encyc. Brit., XIII. 765.

Lord of hosts. See host.—Lord of lords, in Scip., a title of Christ.

The Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings. Rev. xiv. 14.

Lord of misrule, a person formerly chosen to direct the Christmas sports and revels. His rule began on All-hallow eve and continued till Candlemas day. Also called king of misrule.—Lord of the ascendant. See ascendant, 1.—Lord of the May. See the quotation.

It was customary to personify this famous outlaw (Robin Hood), with several of his most noted associates, and add them to the pageantry of the May-games. He presided as Lord of the May; and a female, or rather, perhaps, a man habited like a female, called the Maid Marian, his faithful mistress, was the Lady of the May. His companions were distinguished by the title of "Robin Hood's Men," and were also equipped in appropriate dresses; their coats, hoods, and hose were generally green.

Street, Sports and Pastimes, p. 486.

Lord paramount. See paramount.—Lord President, the title of the presiding judge of the first division of the inner house of the Scottish Court of Session; the Lord Justice General. See president.—Lord Privy Seal. See keeper of the Privy Seal, under keeper.—Lords Commissioners of the Treasury. See treasurer.—Lord's Day, the first day of the week; Sunday.—Lord's domain, that part of a manor occupied by the lord, or held by tenants which can be shown to have been servile in their origin.—Lord's forehead. See forehead.—Lords marchers. See marcher.—Lords of Council and Session. See council.—Lords of justiciary, the judges of the Court of Justiciary or supreme criminal court of Scotland. See justiciary.—Lords of regality. See regality.—Lords of Session, the judges of the Scottish Court of Session.—Lords of the Articles, a committee of the Scottish Parliament, by whom the measures to be proposed in Parliament were prepared.—Lords of the bedchamber. See bedchamber.—Lords of the congregation. See congregation.—Lords ordinary, the five judges who form the outer house of the Scottish Court of Session.—Lord's Prayer, a prayer or model of prayer given by Jesus to his disciples. It exists in the New Testament in two forms (Mat. vi. 9-13; Luke xi. 2-4), and it appears in the Book of Common Prayer in a translation of the first of these slightly different from that in the King James Bible. It is used in some part of almost all liturgical services. In ancient eucharistic offices it regularly follows at the end of the canon; in the Anglican communion office, however, after the communion of the people. In liturgical use it is said sometimes with and sometimes without the final doxology of Mat. vi. 13 (omitted in the revised version), "For thine is the kingdom," etc.—Lords spiritual, the archbishops and bishops who have seats in the House of Lords.—Lord's Supper. (a) A sacrament or an ordinance instituted by Christ for observance by his followers, and consisting in the blessing or consecration of bread and wine with the words of institution (see institution) and the subsequent eating and drinking of the consecrated elements. See communion and eucharist. (b) The love-feast or agape, especially in the primitive church, whether accompanying the sacrament or apart from it.—Lord's table. See table.—Lords temporal, those lay peers who have seats in the House of Lords.—Meeze lord, one who, being himself a tenant, is lord of other tenants.—The Lords, the House of Lords, the upper house of the British Parliament.—The Lords' Act. See act.—The Lord's anointed. See anointed.—To be good lord, to receive into favor; take under protection.

And after this she may hym ones preye To ben good lord in short, and take hire leve. Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1558.

To be good lord and good devil, to be equally civil or complimentary to all, whether good or bad.

lord (lōrd), v. [< lōrd, n.] I. trans. 1. To raise to the rank of a lord; hence, to treat, address, or acknowledge as lord or master.

He being thus lorded, Not only with what my revenue yielded, But what my power might else exact. Shak., Tempest, i. 2. 97.

Not tho' all the gold That veins the world were pack'd to make your crown, And every spoken tongue should lord you. Tennyson, Princess, iv.

2. To rule or preside over as lord.

All the revels he had lorded there. Keats. II. intrins. To play the lord; domineer; rule with arbitrary or despotic sway: sometimes followed by over, and sometimes by the indefinite it, with or without over.

They preached and lorded not; and now they lord and preach not. Lutimer, Sermon of the Plough.

How dull and how luscious a beast Is man, who yet would lord & o'er the rest! Dryden, Essay on Satire, l. 2.

lorddom (lōrd'dum), n. [< ME. lorddōm, la-vorddōm, laferddōm*, < AS. hlāforddōm, < hlāford, lord, + dōm, jurisdiction; see lord and -dom.] The rule or dominion of a lord. Imp. Dict.

lordesyn, a. A variant of lurdan.

lording (lōr'ding), n. [< ME. lōrding, loverding, lāverding; < lōrd + -ing. In the orig. use (def. 1) not dim., but complimentary.] 1. A lord; master; in address, in the plural, sirs; masters; gentlemen.

"Lordings," quod he, "in chirehes than I preche, I peyne me to have an herten speche." Chaucer, Prolog to Pardoner's Tale, l. 43.

Listen, lordings, if ye list. Spenser, F. Q., III. ix. 3.

2. A young or little lord; a lordling; also, a little lord in a derogatory sense.

I'll question you Of my lord's tricks and yours when you were boys: You were pretty lordlings then. Shak., W. T., i. 2. 62.

lordkin (lōrd'kin), n. [< lōrd + -kin.] A little or young lord; a lordling.

Princekin or lordkin from his earliest days has nurses, dependants, governesses, little friends, schoolfellows, . . . flattering him and doing him honour.

Thackeray, Newcomes, III.

lordless (lōrd'les), a. [< ME. lordles, loverdles*, < AS. hlāfordlede, having no lord, < hlāford, lord, + -less, E. -less.] Without a lord or feudal protector; not dependent upon a lord or superior.

The lordless man was liable to be slain as an outlaw by any one who met him.

Sw. E. Crony, Eng. Constitution, p. 48.

lord-lieutenancy (lórd-lí-ten'án-sí), n. The office of lord lieutenant. See lord.

Carteret, turned out of the lord-lieutenancy about the same time, was now in open opposition.

S. Dowell, Taxes in England, II. 108.

lordlike (lórd'lík), a. [< lord + like², a. < lordly.] 1. Befitting or like a lord; lordly.—2. Haughty; proud; insolent.

lordliness (lórd'lí-nes), n. 1. The state of lordly dignity; high station.—2. Lordly pride; haughtiness.

lordling (lórd'líng), n. [*< ME. lordling, lord-ling; < lord + -ling.] A little or diminutive lord; used commonly in a derogatory or contemptuous sense.

lordly (lórd'lí), a. [< ME. lordlich, loerdlich; < lord + -ly¹.] 1. Of the character or quality of a lord; having high or noble rank; noble; aristocratic.

In sight of England and her lordly peers.

Shak., 2 Hen. VI., I. 1. 11.

2. Pertaining to or befitting a lord; characteristic of lordship; large or grand in scale, size, or extent.

She brought forth butter in a lordly dish. Judges v. 25.

Lordly sins require lordly estates to support them.

South, Sermons.

3. Proud; haughty; imperious; insolent.

Lords are lordliest in their wine. Milton, S. A., I. 1418.

—Syn. 2. Domineering, overbearing, lofty.

lordly (lórd'lí), adv. [< lord + -ly².] In the manner of a lord; hence, proudly; imperiously; despotically.

A famished lion, issuing from the wood, Roars lordly furze. Dryden.

lordolatry (lórd-dol'á-trí), n. [< lord + Gr. λατρεία, worship; after idolatry, etc.] Lord-worship; excessive respect for the nobility. [Humorous.]

But how should it be otherwise in a country where Lordolatry is part of our creed, and where our children are brought up to respect the Peerage as the Englishman's second Bible? Theobald, Book of Snobs, III.

lordosis (lórd-dó'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. λόδος, a bending (back in the manner described), < λοδω, bend back, < λοδός, bent back so as to advance the lower part of the body.] In pathol.: (a) Abnormal curvature of the spinal column, with the convexity toward the front, in distinction from kyphosis, in which the convexity is toward the back, and from scoliois, or lateral curvature. (b) Any abnormal curvature of the bones.

lords-and-ladies (lórdz-and-lá'dis), n. 1. The plant cuckoo-pint or wake-robin, Arum maculatum: in allusion to its light- and dark-colored spadices, which suggest the two sexes. See Arum, Araceae, and bulls-and-ovens.—2. The harlequin duck, Histrionicus minutus, on some parts of the North Atlantic coast of North America. See cut under harlequin, a.

lordship (lórd'shíp), n. [*< ME. lordschipe, loverschipe, laverschape, < AS. hlafordscipe, lordship, dominion, < hlaford, lord, + -scipe, E. -ship; see lord and -ship.] 1. The authority or power of a lord or ruler; dominion; sovereignty.

They which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exercise lordship over them. Mark x. 42.

2. The territory over which a lord holds jurisdiction; a seignior, domain, or manor.

And the King of Hungary is a great Lord and a myghty, and holdeth grete lordshippes and meche Lord in his Hand. Mandeville, Travels, p. 6.

What lands and lordships for their own know
My quondam barber. Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, x. 358.

3. The state or dignity of a lord or nobleman: chiefly [cap.], with his or your, as a title used in addressing or mentioning a nobleman, except a duke or an archbishop, who has the title of Grace (his or your).—4. In commerce, a royalty.

The plan proposed of a fixed lordship or percentage on sales seems the only proposal which meets all the difficulties of the case. Nineteenth Century, XXII. 612.

lordship, v. t. [ME. lordschipen; < lordship, n.] To exercise domination over.

lord's-room (lórdz'róm), n. The stage-box in a theater.

He pours them out as familiarly as if he had . . . ta'en tobacco with them out of the stage in the lord's room. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, II. 1.

lordswike, n. [ME., earlier loerdswike, lavedswike, < AS. hlafordswica, a betrayer of his lord, a traitor, < hlaford, lord, + swica, betrayer, < swican, betray.] One who is disloyal; a traitor.

For that he was lordswik, first he was to draw.

Excursion of Sir Simon Fraser (Child's Ballads, VI. 280).

lordwood (lórd'wúd), n. [Trans. of Cypriote name, Xylon Effendi, Gr. ἐύων, wood; Turk. effendi: see effendi.] The tree Liquidambar orientalis, of Asia Minor. It yields the liquid storax.

lore (lór), n. [Also dial. or var. lear, lair (see lear, n.); *< ME. lore, lare, < AS. lār (= OS. lara = OFries. lare, NFries. leere = D. leer = MLG. lere, lare = OHG. lara, MHG. lere, G. lehre; Sw. lara = Dan. lare, after G.), teaching, doctrine, learning; connected with the factitive verb lāran, teach, from the verb seen in Goth. lēisan, pret. pres. lais, find out; whence also ult. E. learn: see lear, v., and learn.] 1. That which is taught; instruction; counsel; admonition; teaching; lesson.*

Thy wille vn-to them taughte hane I,
That wolde vn-to my lore enclyne.

York Plays, p. 457.

Let this proverb a lore unto you be.

Chaucer, Troilus, II. 307.

But these conditions doe to him propound:

That, if I vanquish him, he shall obey

My law, and ever to my lore be bound.

Spenser, F. Q., V. iv. 49.

2. That which is learned; any store of knowledge; learning; erudition.

Lo! Rome herself, proud mistress now no more Of arts, but thund'ring against heathen lore.

Pope, Dunciad, III. 102.

The gentle dainties

Showed me the lore of colors and of sounds.

Emerson, Masketaguid.

—Syn. 2. Learning, Erudition, etc. (see literature), attainments, acquirements.

lore, n. [Preterit and past participle of loose.]

lore, n. [ME., usually lure, lyre, < AS. lyre, loss, < lōsan, pp. loren, lose: see loose, lose.]

Loss.

Of loos, of lore, and of wynnynge.

Chaucer, House of Fame, I. 1068.

lore (lór), n. [< F. lore, < L. lorum, a thong, lash, whip, strap: see lorate.] 1. Anything suggesting a thong.

About the which two Serpents weren wound, Entrayled mutually in lovely lore,
And by the talles together firmly bound.

Spenser, F. Q., IV. III. 42.

2. In ornith., the side of the head between the eye and the base of the upper mandible. This space is definitely marked in some birds, as herons and grebes, by being naked; and in others by some special kind of feathering, as the bristly plumes of a hawk.

3. In herpet., a region on the side of the head between the eye and the nostril, where certain plates called lorals may be present.—4. In entom., a corneous angular process in the mouth of some insects, by means of which the trophi are put forth or retracted. Also lora. Kirby.

loreal (lór-é-al), n. Same as lora.

The small shield on the side of the snout, the so-called loreal.

Günther, Encoy. Brit., XXII. 196.

lore-father, n. [ME. lorefader, larfader; < lore + father.] A teacher. Hallwell.

lorel (lor'el), n. [Also lorrel; < ME. lorel, also losel, an abandoned fellow: see losel.] Same as lorel.

loremet, n. See lorimer.

lorent, a. An obsolete variant of lorn.

lorey, n. See lauyer.

loresman (lór'mán), n. [ME.; < lore's, poss. of lorel, + man.] An instructor.

As his lores-man leres hym blisheit and troweth.

Piers Plowman (B), xii. 123.

lorette (lór-ret'), n. [F. (see def.): said to be so called from their living at one time chiefly in the neighborhood of the church of Notre Dame de Lorette, 'Our Lady of Loreto,' in Paris. The church was so called as being dedicated to the Virgin Mary, who has this title from the site of a building at Loreto in Italy, called the Santa Casa ('holy house'), and alleged to be the Virgin's dwelling at Nazareth miraculously transported to Italy.] In French usage, a member of the demi-monde. A lorette differs from a griette only in living in a more showy style, and doing no work, being entirely supported by her admirers.

Loretine (lór-re-tén'), n. [< Loreto in Italy, with ref. to the Virgin Mary and her sanctuary at that place.] One of an order of nuns founded in Kentucky in 1812. They are occupied with the education and care of destitute orphans. They labor chiefly in the Western States. Also called Sisters of Loreto, and Friends of Mary at the Foot of the Cross.

lorgnette (lór-nyet'), n. [F.; lorgner, spy, peep, perhaps < G. dial. loren, look at.] 1. An opera-glass.—2. A lorgnon.

lorgnon (lór'nyon; F. pron. lór-nyón'), n. [F.; < lorgner, spy: see lorgnette.] An eye-glass, or a pair of eye-glasses, shutting into a frame which when in use serves as a handle, intended for examining objects at a little distance: also sometimes used as synonymous with opera-glass or lorgnette.

She raises to her eyes of blue

Her lorgnon, as she looks at you.

The Atlantic, LXIII. 618.

lori (lór'i), n. Same as loris, 1.

loria, n. Plural of lorion.

loric (lor'ík), n. [< L. lorica, a corselet: see lorica.] Same as lorica, 1. [Rare.]

Loric and low-browed Gargon on the breast.

Browning, Protus.

lorica (lór-í-ká), n.; pl. loricæ (-æ). [L., a corselet (orig. of leather thongs), cuirass, any defense, fence, hedge, plaster, etc., < lorum, a thong, strap: see lore.] 1. In Rom. antiq., a cuirass or corselet.—2. In the middle ages, a military garment consisting of a loose jacket of leather upon which rings or small plates of iron were sewed; also, a coat of fence of any kind.—3. In soot., a case or covering likened to a coat of mail. (a) The carapace of a crustacean. (b) The organically distinct protective sheath or domicile excreted and inhabited by many infusorians, such as Valoniola, Tintinnus, and Salpingoeca, and also by some rotifers.

Loricaria (lor-í-ká-rí-á), n. [NL., fem. of L. loriciarius, of or pertaining to a corselet, < lorica, a corselet: see lorica.] The typical genus of Loricaria uracantha.

Loricariidae, loricated with plate-like scales, whence the name.

loricarian (lor-í-ká-rí-an), a. and n. [< Loricaria + -an.] Same as loricarioid.

Loricariidae (lor-í-ká-rí-í-dé), n. pl. [NL., < Loricaria + -idae.] A family of loricated nematognathous fishes, of which the type is the genus Loricaria. They have an elongate body covered with angular plates, a depressed head mailed above, an inferior mouth with reverted lower lip, the dorsal fin in relation with the abdominal region, and the ventral fins advanced to near the pectorals. The scapular arch is widened and flattened below, and the pectorals and ventrals expand horizontally. Nearly 150 species live in the fresh waters of tropical America. Gonodonius, Gonodonoides, and Hypostomus are synonyms.

loricarioid (lor-í-ká-rí-oid), a. and n. I. a. Pertaining to the Loricariidae, or having their characters.

II. n. A fish of the family Loricariidae; a loricated South American catfish.

Also loricarian.

Loricata (lor-í-ká-tá), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of L. loriciatus, pp. of loricare, clothe in mail, < lorica, a corselet, coat of mail: see lorica.] In soot., a name having various applications. (a) In mammal., the armadillos; the American mailed or loricate edentates, as one of five suborders of Bruta or Edentata. They fall into three families, Tatusiidae, Dasypodidae, and Chlamyphoridae. (See these words.) Originally named by Vieq.-d'Azur (1798), in the form Loricati. (b) In Morrem's system of classification, an order of reptiles, the loricated saurians, containing the crocodiles, alligators, and gavials, and corresponding to the modern order Crocodylia. (c) An order of eboanoflagellate infusorians, containing those which are loricate. E. B. Lankester. (d) In icht.: (1) A suborder of ganoid fishes. See Chondrostei. (2) The Ottolidae; gurnards or mail-cheeked acanthopterygian fishes. Also Loricati. Jenyns. (e) In conch., the coat-of-mail shells; the polyplacophorous mollusks or chitons: so named from the overlapping plates of the shell, which resemble a corselet. (f) In crustac., a division of macrurous decapod crustaceans, composed of the families Scyllaridae and Palaemonidae, having some of the feet not ending in pincers and no scale at the base of the antennae, and passing through a peculiar larval stage in which they are known as plum-crabs. See Phyllosoma. (g) Those animalcules which are provided with a lorica, as sundry infusorians and rotifers.

loricate (lor'í-kát), v. t.; pret. and pp. loricated, ppr. loricating. [< L. loriciatus, pp. of loricare, clothe in mail, < lorica, a corselet, coat of mail: see lorica.] To cover with any material that serves as a protection or defense. See lorica.

Therefore hath Nature loricated or plated over the Sides of the forementioned Hole [the inner ear] with Ear-wax, to stop and entangle any Insects that should attempt to creep in.

Ray, Works of Creation, II. 264.

In the Mammalia the development of a dermal corselet is exceptional, and occurs only in the loricated Edentata.

Huxley, Ann. Vert., p. 42.

loricate (lor'í-kát), a. and n. [< L. loriciatus, pp.: see the verb.] I. a. 1. Covered with defensive armor or with any defensive covering.—2. Consisting of overlapping plates; having a pattern as of overlapping plates; imbricated.

an epithet arising from the mistaken idea that the lorica was essentially an imbricated coat.—3. Having a lorica; loricated; inclosed in a shell, case, or some hard covering resembling a corselet or coat of mail.—Loricata femora, in entom., femora so sculptured exteriorly that they appear to be covered with a double series of oblique scales, as the posterior femora of a grasshopper.

II. n. A loricated animal; a member of the Loricata in any sense.

lorication (lor-i-kā'shon), n. [L. lorication (n.), a clothing in mail, < loricare, pp. loricatus, clothe in mail: see loricate, v.] 1. The act of loricate, or the state of being loricated.—2. A loricate covering.

These cones [of the cedar] have . . . the entire lorication smoother couched than those of the Fir kind.

Boyle, Sylvia, II, 1.

loricoid (lor-i-koid), a. [L. lorica, a corselet (see lorica), + Gr. eidos, form.] Resembling a lorica; also, loricate: sometimes applied to fossil footprints left by supposed shielded animals.

Loriculus (lō-rik'ū-lus), n. [NL., dim. of Lorius, a lory: see Lorius.] A genus of small lorics of the subfamily Lorinae (or Trichoglossinae); the hanging parakeets, or bat-parrots. They are notable for their habit of hanging by the feet head downward when asleep, and sometimes while feeding, and also for lack of the brushy tongue which the lorikeets possess.

lories, n. Plural of lory.

Lorinae (lō-ri-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lorius + -inae.] A subfamily of Psittacidae, including the genera Lorius and its subdivisions (as Eos, Loriculus, and Coriphilus); the lorics. The definition of the group is not fixed; it is often merged in Trichoglossinae. The birds usually placed in it are for the most part of small size and very beautiful colors, chiefly inhabiting the Eastern Archipelago and Oceania. Also written Loriana, Lorina.

lorikeet (lor-i-kēt'), n. [Lory + (parra)keet.] A small parrot of the genus Trichoglossus, or, in a broader use, of the subfamily Trichoglossinae; a kind of lory. Most of them have a brushy or pencilled tongue, by means of which they feed upon the sweets of flowers and on soft fruits. See Trichoglossus.

lorimer, lorinert (lor-i-mēr, -nēr), n. [Also lorimer; < OF. lorimier, lorimer, a saddler, < lora, lorin, a bridle, < L. lorum, a thong: see loric. For the term -im-er instead of -in-er, cf. latimer for latinor.] A maker of bits, spurs, and metal mountings for bridles and saddles; hence, a saddler.

Brummenag is a town maintained chiefly by smiths, nailers, cutlers, edge-tool forgers, lorimers or bit-makers. Holmshead, Descrip. of Britaine, xxv.

Lorinae (lō-ri-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lorius + -inae.] Same as Lorinae. G. R. Gray, 1840.

loring (lō-ri'ng), n. [Verbal n. of loric, v., = learl.] Instructive discourse; instruction. [Rare.]

Her wisdoms did admire, and hearkened to her loring. Spenser, F. Q., V. vii. 42.

lorion (lō-ri-on), n.; pl. loria (-i). [< MGr. lupion, dim. of Lgr. λῆπον, λῆπος, < L. lorum, thong, strap: see loric.] One of the stripes or bands on the stochiarion or alb of a bishop of the Greek Church.

Bishops . . . put on the stochiarion, which . . . differs from that of a Priest by being waved in white and red bands, called loria. These signify rivers of grace, and set forth the doctrine which should flow from a Pontiff. J. M. Neale, Eastern Church, i. 310.

loriot (lor-i-et), n. [< F. loriot (OF. also lorton), i. e. Poriot, < le, the, + OF. oriot, var. of oriole, a witwall, an oriole: see oriole.] The golden oriole of Europe, Oriolus galbula.

The swallow and the loriot
Are not so swift of wing.
R. H. Stoddard, Chinese Songs.

loris (lō-ri), n. [NL. loris (F. loris, sing. and pl.); commonly said to be a native (E. Ind.) name, but according to Baird < D. loeris, a clown, booby, formerly adj., loerisch, loersch, clownish, < loer, loerd, a clown, fool, < OF. lourd, a stupid fellow: see lourd.] 1. The slender lemur of Ceylon, Archomobius or Loris gracilis, a primate mammal of the family Lemuridae and subfamily Nycticebinae; more fully called slender loris. Also lori; pl. loris.—2. [cap.] The typical genus of Lorinae, based by Geoffroy on the slender lori or loris of Ceylon, and the same as Archomobius of Lesson; extended to include the slow lemur, which is more frequently referred to a genus Nycticebus, Stenops, or Brady-lemur. The species are arboreal and nocturnal inhabitants of the East Indies. L. gracilis is remarkable for its slender form, disproportionately long limbs, the absence of a tail, short muzzle, and large eyes.

Slender Loris (Loris gracilis).

Lorinae (lor-i-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Loris + -inae.] A subfamily of Lemuridae, named from the genus Loris, in a restricted sense including only this genus and Nycticebus, in a wider sense including these genera with Arctocebus and Perodicticus: in the latter use it is the same as Nycticebinae. The animals referred to this group are the slender loris, Loris gracilis; the slow lemur, Nycticebus tardigradus; the potto, Perodicticus potto; and the angwantibo, Arctocebus calabarensis. Also Loridina.

Lorius (lō-ri-us), n. [NL., < E. lory, q. v.] A large genus of small trichoglossine parrots, type of the subfamily Lorinae; the lorics. The term has been used with much latitude, but is now restricted to the broad-tailed lorics, of which more than 30 species are known, all of the Australasian region, as L. domicella of the Moluccas. The characteristic coloration is red varied with blue; but some species are green, others brown or black. Several subdivisions of Lorius are recognised, especially Eos. The name Domicella is now much used instead of Lorius. See out under Domicella.

loric (lō-ri), a. [< ME. lorn, loren, lora, < AS. loren, pp. of leosan, lose: see leasel, lose.] 1. Lost; undone.

Wit-outin loue thou art loric.
Woe (whoso) hat nout loue were better on-born.
Political Poems, etc. (ed. Furnivall), p. 235.
If thou readest, thou art loric!
Better hadst thou ne'er been born.
Scott, L. of L. M., i. 23.

2. Forlorn; bereft; lonely; as, a lorn widow.

But, as tenderly before him the lorn Ximena knelt.
Whittier, The Angels of Buena Vista.
"Yes, yes, . . ." cried Mrs. Gummidge, . . . "I know that I'm a lone lorn creature."
Dickens, David Copperfield, III.

Lorrainer (lō-rā-nēr), n. [< Lorraine (see def.) + -er.] A native or an inhabitant of Lorraine.

Lorraine (lō-rā-nēr or -nēr), a. [< Lorraine + -ee.] Pertaining to the ancient duchy or to the later province of Lorraine, or to the inhabitants of Lorraine. Since 1871 it has been divided between France and Germany.

Lorraine shales. See shale.

lorrel, n. Same as lorel.

lorry (lō-ri), n.; pl. lorries (-iz). [Also lorrie, lurry; cf. E. dial. lurry, pull or drag.] 1. In mining, a running bridge over a sinking-pit top, upon which the bowk is placed after it is brought up for emptying. Gresley, [Yorkshire].—2. A long wagon, consisting of a nearly flat platform (with a very low rim) set on four wheels, which are either entirely under the platform or do not rise above it. [Great Britain].

lorum (lō-rum), n.; pl. lora (-rā). [NL., < L. lorum: see loric.] In zool., the lore, as of a bird or reptile.

lory (lō-ri), n.; pl. lories (-riz). [Also lury, luri; < Malay luri, also nuri, a lory.] One of a large number of parrots constituting the subfamily Lorinae, or forming a separate family Trichoglossidae; any brush-tongued parakeet, or lorikeet. They are mostly of small size and brilliant coloration, inhabiting parts of Asia, the Malay Archipelago, and Oceania. Lorius domicella is a characteristic example. All the lorics properly so called are trichoglossine or brush-tongued, excepting those of the genus Loriculus (or Coriphilus); but the name extends to some similar parakeets of a different group, as those of the genus Electus. See Lorius, Loriculus, Lorinae, and Trichoglossinae. See also out under Domicella.

Gentle lorics, more beautiful in color than any, who sat on the Banksias like a crop of orrisman and purple flowers. H. Kingsley, Hilliers and Burton.

lost, n. See lose.

loseable (lō-zā-bl), a. [Also loseable; < lose + -able.] Capable of being lost; liable to be lost.

I heard him make enquiry whether the frigoric faculty of these corpuses be loseable or not.

Boyle, Works, III. 763.

Pencils and rubbers are about equally loseable.

The Nation, III. 133.

loange, n. An obsolete form of loange.

loard, n. [A var. of loel, with substituted suffix -ard.] A coward.

lose (lōs), v.; pret. and pp. lost, ppr. losing. [Formerly also loose (more or less confused with loose, untie, relax); partly < ME. losien, < AS. losian, become loose, escape, also lose, < los, a loss (see lose); but chiefly a var. of lessen (> E. leese) (pret. les, pl. lore, pp. loren, lorn), lose: see leasel, < AS. leosan (pret. leds, pl. luron, pp. loren), in comp. forledean. For the change of AS. eo to E. o (oo), pronounced o, cf. choose, < AS. cōosan.] I. trans. 1. To miss from present possession or knowledge; part with or be parted from by misadventure; fail to keep, as something that one owns, or is in charge of or concerned for, or would keep.

Rejoice with me; for I have found the piece which I had lost.
Luke xv. 9.

Thus they spent the next after-noon, and half the night, when the Spaniards either lost them or left them.
Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 63.

But, said Christian, are there no turnings nor windings, by which a stranger may lose his way?
Bunyan, Pilgrim's Progress, p. 101.

2. To be dispossessed, deprived, or bereaved of; be prevented or debarred from keeping, holding, or retaining; be parted from without wish or consent; as, to lose money by speculation; to lose blood by a wound; to lose one's hair by sickness; to lose a friend by death.

Hus bones for hus synnes sorwe they hadden;
And alle lewede that layde hond thereon loren lyt after.
Piers Plowman (C), xv. 63.

Even as by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud, Losing his verdure even in the prime.
Shak., T. G. of V., i. 1. 42.

Her [the Roman Catholic Church's] acquisitions in the New World have more than compensated for what she has lost in the Old.
Macaulay, Von Ranke's Hist. Popea.

3. To cease to have; part with through change of condition or relations; be rid of or disengaged from.

The offence is holy that she hath committed,
And this deceit loses the name of craft.
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5. 230.

Nor is it a thing extraordinary for rivers to lose their channels, either choked by themselves, or by the adverse Sea.
Sandys, Travels, p. 73.

The mountains, lessening as they rise,
Lose the low vales, and steal into the skies.
Pope, Autumn, l. 60.

4. To fail to preserve or maintain; as, to lose one's reputation or reason; to lose credit.

Chusey boggled over his plate so long that Mr. Jonas, losing patience, took it from him.
Dickens, Martin Chuzzlewit, xi.

I lose my colour, I lose my breath,
I drink the cup of a costly death.
Tennyson, Elaine.

5. To fail to gain or win; fail to grasp or secure; miss; let slip; as, to lose an opportunity; to lose a prize, a game, or a battle.

He shall in no wise lose his reward.
Mat. x. 42.

What have you lost by losing of this day?
Shak., K. John, III. 4. 116.

Such delay might have lost the opportunity of relieving him.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, II. 126.

The motion that the sum to be granted should not exceed four hundred thousand pounds was lost by twelve votes.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

See if you can't find out if the villain means to break jail. I would not lose having him hung for a thousand pounds.
S. Judd, Margaret, II. 3.

6. To let slip or escape from observation, perception, etc.; as, I lost what he was saying, from inattention; we lost the ship in the fog.

7. To fail to profit by; miss the use, advantage, or enjoyment of; waste.

I am of the Opinion, That if any of our Nations would seek a Trade with them, they would not lose their labour.
Dampier, Voyages, I. 303.

He has merit, good nature, and integrity, that are too often lost upon great men.
Pope, Letters.

All these signs, however, were lost upon him.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

8. To cause to miss or be deprived of; subject to the loss of; as, his slowness lost him the chance.

I pray that this action lose not Philaster the hearts of the people.
Beau. and Fl., Philaster, IV. 4.

Sir, if that to serve you Could lose me any thing, as indeed it cannot,
I still would follow you.
Fletcher, Spanish Curate, IV. 4.

9. To displace, dislodge, or expel. [Rare.]

A still soliciting eye, and such a tongue
As I am glad I have not, though not to have it Hath lost me in your liking.
Shak., Learn, i. 1. 204.

Medi, pl. lotus, pp. lotus = OS. lotan = OHG. lutan, MHG. lutan = Icel. lótta = Goth. lotan (not recorded), obtain by lot. Hence, through F., lottery and allot.] 1. A means of determining something by chance; anything (as dice, pieces of paper of different lengths or differently marked, so placed that these differences cannot be perceived) used to decide a choice, advantage, dispute, etc. See to cast lots, to draw lots, below.

Each mark his lot, and cast it in to Agamemnon's cauld. Chapman, Iliad, vii.

2. That which is determined or assigned by lot; that which one gets by the drawing or casting of lots, or by some other fortuitous method; a chance allotment, share, or portion, as of land, money, service, etc.

And all that fell in Robyn's lot

He smote them wonder rare.

Lyell, Geats of Robyn Hode (Child's Ballads, V. 114).

Judah said unto Simeon his brother, Come up with me into my lot; . . . and I likewise will go up with thee into thy lot.

Judges 1. 2.

His lot was to burn incense when he went into the temple of the Lord.

Luke 1. 9.

3. Share or portion in life allotted in any casual way; station or condition determined by the chances of life; fortune; destiny: as, the lot of the poor.

Such is the lot of all that deal in public affairs, whether of church or commonwealth. Hooker, Eccles. Polity, iv. 14.

The lots of glorious men are wrapt in mysteries,

And so delivered.

Fletcher (and another), Prophets, l. 3.

4. Any distinct part or parcel; a portion or part separated from others of the same kind: as, a lot of goods; a lot of furniture. Specifically—

5. A portion or parcel of land; any piece of land divided off or set apart for a particular use or purpose: as, a building-lot; a pasture-lot; all that lot, piece, or parcel of ground (a formula in legal instruments). In the phrase "lot, piece, or parcel of land," lot implies nothing as to the size of the tract, but when used alone it commonly denotes a small tract, such as a building-lot. But it may include any legal subdivision of land. Thus a quarter-quarter-section (40 acres) being a legal subdivision and as such marked as a lot of ground, is held a "lot" within the meaning of a homestead exemption law exempting "the lot of ground and the buildings thereon, occupied as a residence and owned by the debtor."

This report . . . assigns a lot for the maintenance of public schools in every township; another lot for the purposes of religion. Bancroft, Hist. Const., II. 111.

6. (a) Proportion or share of taxes. (b) Tribute; toll.

In England he arered a lot

Of the house that comes smoke.

MS. Cantab. B. v. 48, l. 90. (Hallivell).

(c) In mining, dues to the lord of the manor for ingress and egress. [Prov. Eng.]—7. A large or considerable number or amount; a great deal: as, a lot of people: often used in the plural (and the plural even as an adverb, meaning 'a great deal'): as, he has lots of money. [Colloq.]

A great lot of evil spirits.

C. Mather, Mag. Chris. (Barlett).

That's a big lot of money. Tennyson, Queen Mary, II. 2.

8. pl. A game formerly played with roundels on which short verses were written: used as a singular.—9. The shoot of a tree. [Prov. Eng.]

—Across lots, cross lots. See across, cross, prep.—City lot, in the United States, a rectangular plot of ground 25 feet wide and 100 feet long, these being the most common dimensions of the separate parcels of ground in American cities. It is commonly taken in such towns as a unit of land-measure.—Job lot. See job (b).—Lot of ground. See def. 4.—Lot system, in the law of registration of land-titles, the system which records all known lots within the district, and registers or indexes each conveyance or encumbrance in connection with every lot it affects, so that an inspection of the record shows each lot separately, together with all instruments affecting it: distinguished from the block system, or the record together of all instruments affecting any of the lots in a block—that is, any area, exclusive of highway, which is bounded by highways, leaving the searcher to form his own opinion as to whether a particular lot is affected or not.—Scot and lot. See scot.—To cast in one's lot with or among, to share the fortunes of (another or others).

Cast in thy lot among us; let us all have one purse.

Prov. I. 14.

To cast lots, to throw some object, as a die, for the purpose of determining by the manner of its fall some choice, a question in dispute, etc.

Lotus did thei last, for whom thei had that wo.

Rob. of Brunne, p. 124.

And they crucified him, and parted his garments, casting lots.

Mat. xxvii. 35.

To draw lots, to draw or take from an urn or some other place of concealment pieces of paper, or straw, etc., variously marked or of different lengths, for the purpose of determining, by the accident of drawing, some choice or question.

Let's draw lots who shall begin.

Shak., A. and C., II. 6. 68.

Vacant lot, a plot of ground on which there is no building; particularly, a small unoccupied lot among others that are built upon, in a town or city.—Syn. 2. Hay, destiny, fate, doom, allotment.

lot (lot), v. t.; pret. and pp. lotted, ppr. lotting. [lot, n. Cf. allot.] I. trans. To allot; assign; distribute; award.

Your brother Lorel's prize I for so my largess

Hath lotted her to be.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd, II. 1.

II. intrans. To cast lots.

A cowe [was given] to 6 persons or share, & 2 goats to 7 same, which were first equalised for age & goodness, and then lotted for.

Bradford, Plymouth Plantation, p. 216.

To lot upon, to count upon; look forward to with pleasure: as, I lotted upon going to town. [New Eng.]

Lot¹ (lō't), n. [NL., < OF. lote, a pout; see lot².] A genus of gadoid fishes of an elongate shape with villiform teeth on the jaws and vomer, typical of the subfamily Lotninae. The burbot, L. maculosa, is an example. See cut under burbot.

lot², lotah (lō'tā), n. [Also loto; E. Ind.] A globular or melon-shaped pot, usually of polished brass, used in the East Indies for drawing water, drinking, and ablutions.

The dismayed sirdar found the head of a fourth [kiltion] jammed in the neck of his sacred lotah, wherewith he performs his pious ablutions every morning at the ghaut.

J. W. Palmer, The New and the Old, p. 311.

lot³ (lō't), v. t. [ME. loten, lotien, < AS. lutan, lark (= OHG. lūzen, MHG. lūzen, lie hidden, lurk; < lūtan, stoop, lout; see lout¹.] To lurk; lie hidden.

He fond this holy olde Urban anon

Among the seintes burles lotings.

Chaucer, Second Nun's Tale, l. 186.

For outlaws in the wode and vnder banke lotings.

Piers Plowman (B), xvii. 102.

lot² (lō't), n. [F. lote = Sp. lote, < L. lotus, < Gr. lōtōs, lotus; see lotus.] Lotus.

As regards personal considerations, we were to abstain from . . . washing the head with mallow or lote leaves.

R. F. Burton, El-Medinal, p. 337.

lot³ (lō't), n. [OF. lote, F. lotto = Sp. lota (ML. lōta), a pout.] A gadoid fish, the burbot. See lot¹.

Lot⁴ (lō't⁴), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1825), < Lotus + -ea.] A tribe of leguminous plants, typified by the genus Lotus, distinguished by their pinnate five- to many-foliate leaves with entire leaflets, and capitate, umbellate, or rarely solitary flowers. The tribe embraces 8 genera of herbs or suffrutescent plants.

lot⁵-bush (lō't⁵), n. The small tree Zizyphus Lotus. Same as lotus-tree, 1. Also lot⁵-tree.

lot⁶by, n. [Also lutby, lutby; < ME. lotby (pl. lotbyes); < lot¹ + by¹.] A concubine.

And with me folowth my lotby

To done me solas and company.

Rom. of the Rose, l. 6392.

lot⁷-fruit (lō't⁷), n. Lotus-fruit; especially, the product of Zizyphus Lotus. See lotus-tree, 1.

lot⁸-tree (lō't⁸), n. [lot², n., + tree.] Same as lotus-tree, 1.

Oh! what are the brightest (flowers) that e'er have blown To the lot⁸-tree, springing by Alla's throne,

Whose flowers have a soul in every leaf?

Moore, Lalla Rookh, Paradise and the Peri.

loth¹, a. and n. See loth.

loth² (lō't), n. [G., lead, a weight, = E. lead².] A German unit of weight, varying in different localities from 225 to 270 grains Troy.

Lotharingian (lō-thā-rin'ji-an), a. and n. [Lotharingia (G. Lothringen, F. Lorraine) + -an.]

I. a. Of or pertaining to Lotharingia or Lorraine, an ancient duchy and later a province of France. It is now divided between France and Germany.

II. n. A native of Lotharingia or Lorraine. See Lorrainer.

Lothario (lō-thā-riō), n. [In allusion to Lothario (called in one place "the gay Lothario"), a character in Rowe's play, "The Fair Penitent." The name Lothario is an Italianized form of OHG. Hlōthari, Ludheri, G. Luther (> OF. Luthers, AS. Hlōthhere.] A jaunty libertine; a gay deceiver; a rake.

loth³, v. An obsolete form of loathe.

lothful, lothliness, etc. Obsolete forms of loathful, etc.

Lot⁴ (lō't⁴), n. pl. [NL., < Lot¹ + -inae.] A subfamily of gadoid fishes, typified by the genus Lot⁴, with two dorsal fins (a short anterior and a long posterior one), a single long anal fin, and perfect ventral fins. It contains the burbot and ling.

lot⁵ (lō't⁵), a. and n. [Lot¹ + -ine¹.] I. a. Having the characters of a burbot or ling; of or pertaining to the Lot⁵.

II. n. A fish of the subfamily Lot⁵.

lot⁶ (lō't⁶), n. [= F. lotion = Sp. lotion = Pg. loção = It. lotione, < L. lotio (n-), also lavatio (n-), a washing; < lavare, lavatus, lavus, lotus, wash; see lave², v.] 1. A washing; particularly, a washing of the skin.—2. A fluid preparation, wash, or cosmetic applied to the skin, especially the skin of the face, for the purpose of rendering it smooth, soft, or fair.

—3. In phar., a liquid holding in solution various medicinal substances, applied externally to stimulate action, to relieve pain, etc.

lot⁷, n. See lotto.

lot⁸ (lō't⁸), n. Another form of lot².

Lotophagi (lō-tof'ā-jī), n. pl. [L., < Gr. lōtophagōs, lotus-eater, < lōtōs, lotus, + phagōs, eat.]

The lotus-eaters; in Gr. legend, especially as given in the Odysses, the name of a people who ate the fruit of a plant called the lotus, conjecturally identified with various plants which have borne that name. Those of the followers of Odysseus or Ulysses who ate of it are described as being rendered forgetful of their friends and unwilling to return to their own land. In historical times a people known under the name of Lotophagi lived on the northern coast of Africa in Tripoli, and on the island of Meninx (Lotophagi, modern Jerba) in Tunisia. See lotus, 1, and lotus-eater.

lot⁹ (lō't⁹), n. [NL., < L. lavare, pp. lotus, wash; see lave², lot⁶.] The washer: a designation, both specific and generic, of the American racoon, Procyon lotor, from its habit of dipping its food in water before eating it.

lot¹⁰ (lō't¹⁰), n. Same as lotus.

lotted (lō't^{ed}), p. a. Having a (specified) lot or fortune. [Rare.]

Some sense, and more estate, kind heaven

To this well lotted peer has given.

Prior, The Ladie, Moral.

lot-teller (lō'tel'er), n. A witch; a fortune-teller.

Witches, in foretimes named lot-tellers, now commonly called soothsayers.

A. Maunsell, Catalogue of English Printed Books (1566).

(Encyc. Diet.)

lottery (lō't^{er}-i), n.; pl. lotteries (-riz). [= D. lottery = G. lotterie = Dan. Sw. lotteri = Sp. lot¹ = Pg. loteria, < F. loterie, lottery, a lottery, < lot, lot, share; see lot, n.] 1. Distribution of anything by lot; allotment; also, the drawing of lots; determination by chance or fate; random choice; matter of chance: as, the lottery of life.

Ajax. Who shall answer him?

Achilles. I know not: it is put to lottery.

Shak., T. and C., II. 1. 140.

Knowledge and improvements are to be got by sailing and porting for that purpose; but whether useful knowledge and real improvements, is all a lottery.

Stearns, Sentimental Journey, p. 14.

2. A scheme for raising money by selling chances to share in a distribution of prizes; more specifically, a scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance among persons purchasing tickets, the correspondingly numbered slips, or lots, representing prizes or blanks, being drawn from a wheel on a day previously announced in connection with the scheme of intended prizes. In law the term lottery embraces all schemes for the distribution of prizes by chance, such as policy-playing, gift-exhibitions, prize-concerts, raffles at fairs, etc., and includes various forms of gambling. Most of the governments of the continent of Europe have at different periods raised money for public purposes by means of lotteries; and a small sum was raised in America during the Revolution by a lottery authorized by the Continental Congress. Both state and private lotteries have been forbidden by law in Great Britain and in nearly all of the United States, Louisiana and Kentucky being the two notable exceptions.

He (man) comes not into the world, nor he comes not to the Sacrament, as to a lottery, where perchance he may draw salvation.

Donne, Sermon, IV.

Lotteries, at this period common in all New England, had become a favorite resort for raising money to support government, carry on war, build churches, construct roads, or endow colleges.

S. Judd, Margaret, l. 6.

3. The lot or portion falling to one's share; a chance allotment or prize.

Octavia is

A blessed lottery to him.

Shak., A. and C., II. 2. 248.

4. A children's picture or print. [Prov. Eng.] lotto, lot¹ (lō't¹), n. [It. lotto, lot, lottery; see lot, n.] 1. A game played with disks and cards. Each disk has one number on it, and each card several numbers in lines. The disks are drawn from a bag, the number on each is called, and the corresponding number on one of the cards covered. That player who first covers all the numbers of one line wins the game.

2. Same as lono.

lot-tree (lō'trē), n. A European tree, Pyrus (Sorbus) Aria. Also called white beam-tree.

lotus (lō'tus), n. [L. lotus, lotos, < Gr. λωτός, the name of several plants (see def.). Cf. lotē.]

1. One of a number of different plants famous in mythology and tradition, or in modern times associated with traditions. Aside from the Homeric lotus (see Lotophagi and lotus-tree), the name was also given to several species of water-lily, as the blue water-lily, Nymphaea lotus (Nymphaea caerulea), the Egyptian water-lily, N. peltata (Nymphaea peltata), and the nainumbo (Nymphaea speciosa), the Pythagorean or sacred bean, which grow in stagnant or slowly running waters. Castalia mystica and C. myrica are often found figured on Egyptian buildings, columns, etc., and the nainumbo, or Hindu and Chinese lotus, bears a prominent part in mythology. In the decorative art of India the lotus-flower is used especially as a support to the figure of a divinity or of a sage or deified personage. It is so represented both in relief or solid, as in bronze, and in paintings. Similar representations in Chinese and Japanese art seem to be derived directly from India.

2. [cap.] [NL. (Tournesfort, 1700).] A genus of leguminous plants, type of the tribe Loteae, distinguished by a two-valved pod and the pointed keel of the corolla. About 100 species have been described, which may be reduced to 50. They are found in the temperate and mountainous regions of Europe and Asia, also in Africa, America, and Australia. The plants are shrubby herbs, with peculiar quadri- to quinquelobate leaves, of which three leaflets are near the apex of the leaf and the other two are near the base, so as to have the appearance of stipules. The flowers are red, pink, or white, and disposed in axillary umbels. The pod is oblong or often linear, and straight or curved. Many of the species are cultivated. A general name for plants of the genus is bird's-foot. L. corniculatus is the common bird's-foot trefoil or clover of Great Britain, etc., also called east-flower, finger-and-toe, and by other fanciful names. Its herbage is highly nutritious, and it is a valuable pasture-meadow-plant, with taller fodder-plants, or in inferior soils. Some other species are also valuable. L. Jacobina is sometimes called St. James's flower, or Jacob's.

3. In arch., an ornament in the form of the Egyptian water-lily, Castalia mystica, frequently figured in the art of ancient nations, notably on certain types of the capitals of Egyptian columns.—Blue lotus of the Nile, Castalia nymphaea.—East Indian lotus, Castalia nymphaea (Nymphaea pubescens).—Egyptian lotus, Castalia mystica. See def. 1.—European lotus, a European water-lily, Castalia (Nymphaea) thermala. See water-lily.

lotus-berry (lō'tus-ber'ī), n. A small West Indian tree, Byrsonima coriacea of the Malpighiaceae, bearing edible yellow drupes.

lotus-eater (lō'tus-ē'tēr), n. One of the Lotophagi; hence, one who finds pleasure in a listless, dreamy life; a devotee of indolent pleasures; a languid voluptuary.

And round about the keel with faces pale,
 Dark faces pale against that rosy flame,
 The mild-eyed melancholy Lotus-eaters came.
 Tennyson, Lotus-Eaters.

lotus-tree (lō'tus-trē), n. 1. A prickly shrub, Zeyheria lotus, native in northern Africa and southern Europe, yielding one of the jujube-fruits, a sweet and pleasant-flavored drupe of the size of an olive. The fruit is not equal to that of the common jujube, Z. zizyphus, but is much used for food where it is native, and furnishes a kind of wine. It is held by many to have been the food of the classical Lotophagi, as it agrees with the locality and description given by Polybius. See Lotophagi.

2. The nettle-tree, Celtis australis, bearing a small sweet berry, which has sometimes been identified with the ancient lotus-food. Also called tree-lotus. See Celtis and nettle-tree.—3. The date-plum, Diospyros lotos, an Asiatic tree, cultivated in southern Europe. Its sweet, barely edible fruit can hardly be the classical lotus. (Among trees that have been supposed to be the classical lotus may be mentioned also Rhamnus lotus, a North African shrub with a pleasant fruit, and Neraria tridentata, a thorny, desert-loving shrub, whose succulent fruit has a stimulating quality.)

loud (loud), a. [ME. loud, lud, < AS. hlūd = OS. OFries. hlūd = D. luid = MLG. lūde, LG. lud = OHG. hlūt, MHG. lūt, G. laut (not in Seand. or Goth., the Dan. adv. lydt, loudly, being prob. of LG. origin), loud, = L. "clutus in inclutus, renowned, famous, = Gr. κλυτός, renowned, = Skt. grīta, heard, = Ir. clūth, noble, brave; orig. pp. with suffix -ā, as also in cold, old, dead, etc. (see -ā, -ed), of the verb represented by L. cluere = Gr. κλινω, hear, which also appears in AS. hlutan, E. hlūt, hluten, etc., also in Gr. κλέος, renown, glory, L. gloria, glory, laus (laud-), praise, W. olad, praise, fame; see list, listen, client, glory, laud, loud, etc.] 1. Strong or powerful in sound; high-sounding; noisy; as, a loud cry; loud thunder.

Curses not loud, but deep. Shak., Macbeth, v. 3. 27.

The mill-bell . . . clanged out presently with irregular but loud and alarming din. Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, II.

2. Uttering or emitting a great noise; giving out a strong sound; as, loud instruments.

Praise him upon the loud cymbals. Pa. cl. 5.

3. Speaking with energy or enthusiasm; vehement; clamorous; noisy.

No blood so loud as that of Civil War.

Cowley, His Majesty's Return out of Scotland, st. 6.

Hast. To me she appears sensible and silent.

Tong. Ay, before company. But when she's with her playmate, she's as loud as a hog in a gate.

Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, II.

4. High; boisterous; stormy; turbulent.

For if the French be lords of this loud day.

Shak., K. John, v. 4. 14.

5. Urgent or pressing; crying; as, a loud call for reform.

For, I do know, the state . . . for he's embark'd Cannot with safety cast him, for the Cyprus war.

Shak., Othello, I. 1. 151.

6. Ostentatious; pompous; pretentious; boastful.

Many men . . . labour only for a pompous epitaph, and a loud title upon their marble.

Jer. Taylor.

7. Flashy; showy; overloaded with ornament or colors, as a garment or a work of art; conspicuous in manner or appearance; vulgar; overdone. [Colloq.]

This Edward had picked up . . . a much more loquacious, ostentatious, much louder style (of character) than is freely patronised on this side of the Channel.

Carlyle, Sterling, I. 2. (Davies).

Stained glass, indeed! loud, garish, thin, painty.

The Century, XXVII. 106.

8. Strong in smell; of evil odor. [Colloq.]

The natives keep their seal meat almost any length of time, in winter, for use; and, like our old duck and bird hunters, they say they prefer to have the meat tainted rather than fresh, declaring that it is most tender and toothsome when decidedly loud.

Fisheries of U. S., V. II. 473.

Loud pedal. Same as damp-pedal. = Syn. 1 and 2. Resounding, vociferous.

loud (loud), adv. [ME. lūde = OS. hlūd = D. luid = OHG. hlūt, MHG. lūt, G. laut = Dan. lydt (prob. < LG.); < loud, a.] Loudly; noisily.

And suppe not louds of thy Potlage, no type in all thy lyte.

Babes Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 76.

Who knocks so loud at doer?

Shak., 2 Hen. IV., II. 4. 381.

Loud and (or) still, under all circumstances; at all times.

Karl! ne loto, lotoe ne stille,

Bacite no mau, blood ne bocu.

Hymns to Virgins, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 109.

loude, n. [ME., also lūde, < AS. hlūd (= MHG. lūt, G. laut), sound, < hlūd, loud; see loud, a.] Sound. Layamon, I. 259.

loudful (loud'ful), a. [< loud + -ful.] Loud. The cornets and organs playing loudful music.

Marton, Sophonisba, I. 2.

loud-lunged (loud'lungd), a. Vociferous; bel-lowing. [Rare.]

Our Boanerges with his threats of doom,

And loud-lung'd Antichristianisms, . . .

Went both to make your dream.

Tennyson, Sea Dreams.

loudly (loud'li), adv. 1. With great sound or noise; noisily; clamorously; with vehemence or importunity; as, he loudly complained of intolerance.—2. Ostentatiously; conspicuously; showily; glaringly; as, he was very loudly dressed. [Colloq.]

loud-mouthed (loud'moutht), a. Having or talking with a loud voice; talking vociferously or clamorously.

As loud-mouthed and repulsive a set of political vagabonds as ever cavorted about principles or hungered after leaves and fishes.

N. A. Rev., CXXIII. 492.

loudness (loud'nes), n. 1. The state or quality of being loud; great sound or noise; clamor; uproar; as, the loudness of a voice or an instrument.—2. Conspicuousness; flashiness; showiness; as, loudness of dress. [Colloq.]

lough (lōch), n. [< Ir. loch, a lake, lough, arm of the sea (cf. log, a pit, dike, small lough), = Gael. loch = W. lloch, a lake; see lake.] 1. A lake: same as loch, especially with reference to lakes in Ireland.

He [the piper] began to play on his Pipes, and all the Rats and the Mice followed him to a great Loud hard by, where they all perished.

Housell, Letters, I. vi. 46.

2. A cavity in a rock. [Prov. Eng.]

lough, n. An obsolete preterit of laugh.

louis (lō'ī), n. [F., a coin, so named from Louis XIII.] A gold coin of France.—Louis d'or (lō'is d'ōr), a gold coin of France, first struck in 1640, in the reign of Louis XIII., and coined continuously thereafter until 1793. It ranged in value from about $4 to $4.60, having, at the time of the Revolution, the intrinsic value of 22.60 francs. Under the Restoration the republican and imperial 20-franc piece was styled louis, and is still sometimes so styled (instead of napoleon: see napoleon) by persons of legitimist principles.

louisette (lō'ī-zet'), n. [F.: so called from a Dr. Louis: see guillotine.] A former name (in French) of the guillotine.

Louisianian (lō'ī-si-an'ī-an), a. and n. [< Louisiana (see def.) + -ian.] 1. a. Pertaining to Louisiana, one of the southern United States.

Is not this the very poetry of landscape, of Louisiana landscape?

Gayarré, Hist. Louisiana, I. 12.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of Louisiana.

louisine (lō'ī-zēn'), n. [< Louis or Louise, a person's name, + -ine.] A thin and soft silk material used for summer wear.

Louis-Quatorze (lō'ī-ka-tōr-zē'), a. [F.] An epithet designating a style of architecture and decoration prevalent in France in the reign of Louis XIV. (1643-1715), and copied in other countries. It is especially characteristic of palaces and large mansions of that period. Externally the forms are in a freely treated classical style, and rustication is much employed; the windows are larger and the rooms more lofty and spacious than in buildings of the time immediately preceding, and there is a constant effort to attain majesty and sumptuousness. The palace of Versailles and the eastern colonnade of the Louvre are prominent examples of Louis-Quatorze. The style is characteristically illustrated in internal decoration, the favorite medium of which was gilt stucco-work combined in figures uniting lavishness with studied symmetry and balance of parts. The scroll and shell appear as familiar details, and panels—either rectangular or nearly rectangular in form, sometimes severely plain, sometimes ornamented—are commonly present as a main feature of the design. The classical ornaments and all the elements of the earlier Renaissance styles are admitted, but are treated with the modifications imposed by the spirit of the age. In decorative art the Louis-Quatorze style embraces several new methods of decoration, such as incrustated work and the free use of veneers of precious woods, as well as the mounting and ornamentation of furniture in elaborate designs of gilded bronze, applied as look-plates, hinges, handles, etc. The forms of panels, of pieces of furniture, and the like become more varied than in the earlier Renaissance, and the ornamentation has but little reference to natural forms. The richly inlaid furniture of Louis (see bed) surpassed all previous work of this kind.

Louis-Quinze (lō'ī-kan-zē'), a. [F.] An epithet designating the style of French architecture and decoration which succeeded the Louis-Quatorze style, and characterized the reign of Louis XV. (1715-74). In it the peculiarities of the preceding style are carried to extremes; the severe sense of proportion and measure which always characterized the magnificence of the seventeenth century is replaced by a complete disregard of symmetry and of the interdependence of masses, by an elongated treatment of the foliations of the scroll, and by a profusion of shell-work of cramped and fantastic but meaningless conventionality. In its most debased and tawdry form, ornament of this style is termed rococo.

Louis-Seize (lō'ī-sē-zē'), a. [F.] An epithet designating the style of architecture and ornamental design which prevailed in France in the reign of Louis XVI. (1774-92), distinguished by a return to greater simplicity than under Louis XV., and not seldom by the aim to reproduce classical architectural forms, as in parts of furniture, etc. The members of tables, chairs, etc., are very commonly slender, the moldings delicate and refined, the general forms right-angled and severe; but the surface decoration is very richly diversified. The arts of engraving, porcelain-decoration, tapestry, etc., were very prosperous and characteristic during the prevalence of this style.

Louis-Traize (lō'ī-trā-zē'), a. [F.] An epithet designating the styles of French architecture and decoration characteristic of the reign of Louis XIII. (1610-43), or in general of the first half of the seventeenth century. The architecture of this time is less light and elegant than that of the earlier Renaissance; it makes extensive use of orders based on the classical, and seeks to make them massive and big, carrying the columns from the base of the edifice to the cornice. High-pitched roofs continue in favor, as well as polychrome effects from the combination of stone and brick; and rustic work or boiserie is accentuated. In cabinet-work and decoration kindred elements of design obtain: pseudo-classical columns and engaged columns, often bossed, are usual, and are combined with entablatures, etc., following more or less closely the Vitruvian dicta. Carving in relief is abundant, and often good, but in general less delicate than that of the earlier Renaissance.

look, v. A dialectal variant of look.

The clear water in the spoon.
Row. of the Race, 1. 1864.

The fife route
That to this lady gunne louts
And down on knees soon to fall.

Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 1704.

As oft as they named the Redeemer,
Lowly louted the boys, and lowly the maidens all courted.

Longfellow, tr. of Tegner's Children of the Lord's Supper.
The noble lords and ladies . . . throw largesse to the knaves, who lout humbly.

J. E. Cooke, Virginia Comedians, II. xxxiii.

24. To lie quiet; lurk. See *lote*¹.

Conquiesco, Anglice, to loutyn.

M.S. B.M. Reg. 12. B. 1, f. 88. (Halliwell.)

3. To loiter, tarry, or stay. Hearne. (Halliwell.)

II. trans. To bow down; abase.

For few there were that were so much redoubted,
Whom double fortune lifted up and louted.

M.S. for Mags., p. 303.

*lout*² (lout), n. [Not found in ME.; prob. < Icel. lútr, stooping, bent, < lútr, stoop, lout; see *lout*².] An awkward, ungainly fellow; a clown.

And that his [Adam's] Son, and his Son's Son,
Were all but Ploughmen, Clowns, and Louts.

Prior, The Old Gentry.

A stupid lout, seemingly a farmer's boy, in a grey jerkin with his head bare.

Scott, Kenilworth, xxiv.

*lout*² (lout), v. t. [< *lout*², n.] To treat as a lout; flout.

Louted and forsaken of them by whom in tyme he myght have bene ayded and relieved.

Hall, Henry IV., f. 6. (Halliwell.)

Louted and laughed to scorn.

Udall, Rolister Doister, III. 3.

I am louted by a traitor villain.

Shak., 1 Hen. VI., IV. 2. 13.

*lout*³ (lout), v. t. [Of *lout*¹.] To low or bellow. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

*lout*⁴ (lout), v. t. [Origin obscure.] To milk, as a cow. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

louter, v. t. [Early mod. E. louter; freq. of *lout*²;
cf. loiter, another form of the same word.] To loiter or lounge about.

Loutryng and wandryng.

Eys Way to the Spytell Houe, p. 11. (Halliwell.)

louteringly, adv. In a loitering or idle manner.

Whoever wandreth about idely and louteringly is a rogue or vagabond, although he beggeth not.

M. Dalton, County Justice (1630). (Nares.)

loutish (loutish), a. [< *lout*² + -ish.] Clown-ish; awkward; boorish.

Loutish, but not ill-looking. The Century, XXVII. 183.

-Syn. Churlish, Clownish, etc. See boorish.

loutishly (loutish-ly), adv. In a loutish or awkward manner.

loutishness (loutish-ness), n. The state or quality of being loutish or awkward; clownishness.

loutre (loutre), n. [F., an otter, < L. lutra, an otter.] In her, the otter, used as a bearing.

loutrin (loutrin), n. [< loutre + -in.] An otter;
any animal of the subfamily Lutrinae.

louver (louver), n. [Also louvre, and formerly louver, lover, prop. only lover; < ME. lover, lovir, < OF. lover, luwer, lover, a louver, orig. appar.
an upper gallery, < ML. as if lobiarium*, < lobia, also lobia and lodium (used to gloss OF. lover), a gallery, lobby; see lobby. The explanation suggested by Minshew and adopted by Skeat, that the E. word is derived < OF. louver, for Fouvert, the open (space), opening (see le and ouvert), ignores the real OF. form lover, lovier, and is quite untenable.] 1. A form of lantern or turret rising from the roof of a hall or other apartment in medieval domestic edifices, at first open at the sides. Its original function was to supply an outlet for smoke from fires. After this use was superseded by the introduction of chimneys, the lou-ver was inclosed with glass.

It hath two rows of Pillars each over other, those upper ones supporting the hemisphere, louver, or steeples, which is wrought all with Musike works.

Purkas, Pilgrimage, p. 288.

A louver, or turrell in the roofe or top of a great hall to avoid smoke.

Barré, Alvearis, 1580. (Halliwell.)

For all the issue, both of vent and light,
Came from a louver at the tower's toppe.

Death of R. E. of Hunt, sig. L. 8. (Nares.)

2. A chimney-fine. [Obsolete or Prov. Eng.]

There is a steeple deevily way looks downe,
Which to the infernall kingdome Orpheus guides,
Whose louver vapors breathe.

Haywood, Troia Britannica (1609). (Nares.)

Don't stop cowerin' in the' inn'. . . . Some day we'll and as theod's got drawn up the' louver w' the draught.

Jeannie Fethergill, From Moor Iles, l.

3. In arch., a long window-like opening closed with broad slats sloping downward and outward. See abat-vent.

No lightness was with window, nor with louver,
But with continuall candle-light.

Spenser, F. Q., VI. 2. 42.

Coolers should always be placed so that the air has free access, and to this end it is usual to make the walls of the rooms containing them of louveres, which can be opened as may be required.

Spenser's Works, Mam., l. 400.

4. The aperture in a dove-cote at which the bird enters; also, the dove-cote itself.

Like to a Cast of Falcons that pursue
A flight of Pigeons through the welkin blew, Swooping at this and that, that to their Louwer
(To muse their Hues) they hardly can recover.

Sylvestre, tr. of Du Barres's Weeks, II, The Vocation.

louver-board (l'v'er-bôrd), n. See louver, 3, and louver-window.

louvered (l'v'erd), a. Furnished with a louver; constructed in the form of a louver: as, a louvered window. Also louvered.

If "Miner" will cut louvered openings . . . in the sides of the tapering neck that connect his 10 square feet fan mouth with the 20 square feet tube. Engineer, LXVI. 217.

Louvered battens. See battens.

louver-hole (l'v'er-bôl), n. The hole or vent at the top of a chimney by which the smoke escapes.

Provide new locks and keys, and bars and bolts,
And cap the chimney, lest my lady fly
Out of the louver-hole.

Shirley, Honoria and Mammon (1659). (Nares.)

louver-window (l'v'er-win'dô), n. A long opening in a bellry-tower, partially closed by outward-sloping slats or boards called louver-boards (corrupted into luffer- or lever-boards), which are so placed to exclude rain, while allowing the sound of the bell to pass through.
See abat-vent.

*louvre*¹, n. See louver.

*louvre*² (l'v'er), n. [F. Louvre, the name (of unknown origin) of a building in Paris, anciently a royal castle or palace, now a national museum.] A fashionable dance derived from a favorite song of Louis XIV.

As soon as the minnet was closed, the princess said sotto to Harry in French, "The Louvre, sir, if you please."
This was a dance of the newest fashion.

Brooke, Fool of Quality, II. 99. (Davies.)

She proposed herself for a Louvre; all the men vowed they had never heard of such a dance.

Walpole, Letters, II. 194.

lovability (luv-a-bil'-i-ti), n. [< lovable: see -bility.] Capability of being loved; possession of qualities fitted to inspire love; amiability.
Also lovability. Carlyle.

*lovable*¹ (luv'a-bl), a. [ME. lovable, lufabyl; < lovel + -able.] Worthy of love; inviting love; winning; amiable. Also loveable.

And which ben hool and sooth and ohest and rightwys, and lovable to yhe. Wyckl, Laodiansia, p. 100.

"There is something so soothing, so gentle, so indulgent about Mrs. Percy, so lovable." "She is . . . very lovable— that is the exact word." "I fear it is not English," said Miss Hanton. "Il mérite bien l'étre," said Godfrey.

Miss Edgeworth, Patronage, v. (Davies.)

Elaine the fair, Elaine the lovable,
Elaine, the lily maid of Astolat.

Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.

*lovable*², a. [ME. lovabil; < *love*² + -able.] Praiseworthy. Halliwell.

lovableness (luv'a-bl-ness), n. The quality of attracting affection; lovable character. Also loveableness.

Man for man, he [Wordsworth] was infinitely inferior to Coleridge for personal charm and to Southey for general lovableness. Fortnightly Rev., N. S., XLIII. 523.

lovage (luv'aj), n. [Also (dial.) loveage, love-ache (simulating love), formerly lovish; < ME.
loveache (= D. lavas), < OF. luvesche, lovesche, F. lovache = Sp. ligustico = Pg. ligustico = It. levistico, libistico (ML. lubesticum, libisticum, le-visticum (> AS. lyfestic, appar. simulating lyf, love) = MLG. lubbstock = OHG. lubesteco, lubistechal, MHG. lubbstock, lubistocke, lubestech (simulating OHG. lypp, MHG. lyppe = AS. lybb, poison), libetstockel, G. libetstockel (simulating liebe, love) = Pol. lubasoyk, luboyk, lubistok =
Bohem. lubecek, lubecek = Russ. lubistok =
Lith. lypshtukas, lybstos = Lett. lypstaga = Hung. lestvan, levistikom] (= Turk. logostekon, < Gr. lygostikon), < L. ligusticum, lovage, prop.
neut. of ligustus, belonging to Liguria, < Liguria, Liguria: see ligusticum, Ligurian.] 1.

The umbelliferous plant Levisticum officinale, a native of the mountains of central Europe, cultivated in old gardens. It is sometimes distinguished as Italian or garden lovage.—2. Another plant of the same family, Ligusticum Scoticum, often called Scotch lovage. The name extends also to other species of the genus.

*love*¹ (luv), v.; pret. and pp. loved, ppr. loving.
[Also dial. (Sc.) love, loo; < ME. loven, luven, loven, luven, < AS. lyfan, lofan (with short vowel, depending on the noun lyft, love), orig.

lofan* = OFries. lovian, luvia, lovian = D. loven = MLG. loven, LG. loven = OHG. lubbun, lubbun, MHG. G. luben, love; akin to AS. loef = Goth.
lubs, etc., dear, lief, < Teut. lub*, be pleasing, = L. libet, libet, it pleases, = OSlav. lubiti, love (lubi, dear), = Bohem. lubiti, lubiti = Russ.
lubiti, love, = Lith. lybu, long, = Skt. lubh*, desire: see *love*¹, n., *love*², lyf, believe, leave, liberal, liberty, etc.] 1. trans. 1. To regard with a strong feeling of affection; hold dear; have a strong regard for.

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. Mat. xxi. 37.
Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Mat. xxiii. 39.

A maid whom there were none to praise,
And very few to love. Wordsworth, Lucy.

2. Specifically, to regard (one of the opposite sex) with the admiration and devotion characteristic of the sexual relation; be in love with.

The lady made gracie love of the kyng, for she wende verily it hadde ben the Duke hir lord, that she loved moche with a trewe herte. Morin (E. E. T. S.), l. 77.

To see her is to love her.

An love but her for ever. Burns, Bonnie Lesley.

3. To have a strong liking, craving, or appetite for; like; take pleasure in; delight in: followed by a noun or an infinitive.

Lord! if ye go your Antate and honour Lovers, flumyth this vicious error!

Books of Precedence (E. E. T. S., extra ser.), l. 107.

I love a fat goose as I love allegiance.

Fletcher, Beggars' Bush, IV. 5.

What a man actually loves, this he proposes to himself, and strives to attain.

Swedenborg, Christian Psychol. (tr. by Gorman), p. 98.

There is no place in the town which I so much love to frequent as the Royal Exchange.

Addison, The Royal Exchange.

4. To caress; show affection by caresses: a childish use of the word.

He climbed often into her lap, and, putting his arms round her neck, loved her with his cheek against her, and with all his little heart. Harper's Mag., LXXXIX. 371.

To love one's love with an A, B, etc., a formula used in redeeming forfeits.

For these you play at purposes,
And love your loves with A and B;

For these, at Beast and Ombré woo,
And play for love and money too.

S. Butler, Hudibras, III. l. 1007.

I'll give you a clue to my trade, in a game of forfeits. I love my love with A because she's Beautiful; I hate my love with B because she's Brassy; I took her to the sign of the Hine Boar, and I treated her with Bonnets; her name's Bouncer, and she lives in Bedlam.

Dickens, Our Mutual Friend, II. l.

II. intrans. To have strong affection; especially, to be passionately attached to one of the opposite sex.

But since thou lovest, love still and thrive therein,

Even as I would when I love begin.

Shak., T. G. of V., I. l. 9.

'Tis better to have loved and lost
Than never to have loved at all.

Tennyson, In Memoriam, xxvii.

*love*¹ (luv), n. [Also dial. (Sc.) love; < ME. love, love, < AS. lyfu, lyfe (= MLG. love = OHG. lubi, lyft, lypa, MHG. G. lube; cf. OFries. lyfte, NFr. lyfte = D. lyfte), love, < lyfan, love: see *love*¹, v.] 1. The principle of sympathetic or pleasurable attraction in sentient and thinking beings; that feeling of predilection or solicitude for, or delight in, certain individuals or classes, principles, qualities, or things, which excites a strong desire or craving for the welfare, companionship, possession, enjoyment, or promotion of its object or objects; the yearning desire (whether right or perverted) for what is thought to be best in any relation or from any point of view. In its purest and most universal form, love is regarded in the highest conception of God as the essence of divinity.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own concerns.

Hobbes, Eccles. Polity, Pref., II.

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. John xv. 13.

The love of money is the root of all evil. 1 Tim. vi. 10.

We render you our loves, sir,

The best wealth we bring home.

Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, I. 2.

Any one reflecting upon the thought he has of the delight which any present or absent thing is apt to produce in him has the idea we call love. For when a man declares in autumn, when he is eating them, or in spring, when there are none, that he loves grapes, it is no more but that the taste of grapes delights him; let an attention of health or constitution destroy the delight of their taste, and he can then be said to love grapes no longer.

Locke, Human Understanding, II. xx. 4.

3. Intimate personal affection between individuals of opposite sex capable of intimariage; the emotional incentive to and normal basis of conjugal union: as, to be in love; to marry for love.

And Jacob served seven years for Rachel; and they seemed unto him but a few days, for the love he had to her. Gen. xxix. 20.

But had I wist, before I kiss'd,

That love had been as ill to win,

I'd look'd my heart in a case of gold,

And pin'd it with a silver pin.

Waly, Waly, but Love be Bonny (Child's Ballads, IV. 184).

It's good to be off with the old love,

Before you are on with the new.

Old song.

Hail, wedded love, mysterious law, true source

Of human offspring, sole propriety

In Paradise of all things common else!

Milton, P. L., l. 750.

Fond love, the gentle vow, the gay desire,

The kind deceit, the still-reviving fire,

Persuasive speech, and more persuasive sighs,

Silence that spoke, and eloquence of eyes.

Pope, Iliad, xiv. 249.

8. A beloved person; an object of affectionate interest, as a sweetheart or a husband or wife: often also used in address as a term of endearment.

She hears no tidings of her love.

Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 867.

They [the Virginia Indians] would have beards, but that they pluck away the hairs; they have one wife, many loves.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 708.

What they could my words expressed,

O my love, my all, my one!

Singing helped the verses best.

Browning, Serenade at the Villa.

4. [cap.] A personification of the passion of love; sexual attraction imagined as an independent power external to its subject: applied especially to Cupid (more properly Amor or Eros, the classical god of love, and more rarely to Venus or Aphrodite, the goddess of love).

Love made those hollows, if himself were slain,

He might be buried in a tomb so simple.

Shak., Venus and Adonis, l. 243.

All thoughts, all passions, all delights,

Whatever stirs this mortal frame,

All are but ministers of Love,

And feed his sacred flame.

Coleridge, Love.

5. An embodiment or a representation of Cupid; one of a class of beings poetically imagined as devoted to the interests of lovers, and depicted as winged boys.

I note perceive how, in her glaucous sight,

Legions of loves with little wings did fly.

Spenser, Sonnets, xvi.

6. Gratification of a sexual passion or desire, as in an illicit relation.

Come, let us take our fill of love, until the morning.

Prov. vii. 18.

7. A kindness; something done in token of love.

What good love may I perform for you?

Shak., K. John, iv. 1. 49.

8. A thin silk stuff. One variety, soft and translucent, was used for veils. See love-ribbon.—9. In some games, nothing: a term indicating that no points have been scored: as, the game was two, love (that is, two points on one side and nothing on the other); love all (all the players have failed to score).—10. An old game in which one holds up one or more fingers, and another, without looking, guesses at the number. Davies.

The countrymen's play of holding up our fingers (diminutione digitorum, i. e. the play of love).

N. Bailey, tr. of Colloquia of Erasmus, p. 160.

11. The plant Clematis Vitalba, the virgin's-bower or traveler's-joy.—Cupboard love. See cupboard.—Family of Love. See Familia.—For all loves, or of all loves is universalized form of "for the love of God," "of heaven," etc., by all means.

Alack, where are you? speak, an if you hear;

Speak, of all loves! I swoon almost with fear.

Shak., M. N. D., ii. 2. 168.

And said, Sir, for all loves,

Let me thy prisoner be seen.

Sir Feremundus. (Halliwell, under all-loves.)

For love, out of affectionate consideration; hence, for nothing; without compensation or payment.—For love or money, by any means; in any way.—Free love. See free.—In love, imbued with affection, especially sexual affection; enamored.

If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs: a' brushes his hat o' mornings.

Shak., Much Ado, iii. 2. 40.

Labor of love, any work done or task performed with eager willingness, either from fondness for the work itself or from regard entertained toward the person for whom it is done.—Love of benevolence or friendship. See benevolence.—Love of complacency. See love of benevolence.—Natural love, a natural appetite or inclination which is common to animals and plants.—Sensitive love, a love common to man and the lower animals.—There's no love lost between them, they have no liking for each other.

There was not a great deal of love lost between Will and his half-sister.

Thackeray, Virginiana, xvii.

To love one's love with an A, B, etc. See love's, v. 1.—To make love to, to profess affection for (one of the opposite sex); strive to win the affection of.—To play for love, to play a game, as at cards, without stakes.—Byn. 1 and 2. Love, Liking, Predilection, Attachment, Affection, Fondness, Devotion; friendship, kindness, tenderness, delight, partiality, charity (theological). As between persons, love is the most general of these words, covering much the widest range, both in degree and in kind. Liking is the weakest. Predilection goes a little further, but is only a preparatory liking or readiness to love. Attachment has much of the notion implied in its derivation; it is a love that binds one to another, an unwillingness to be separated. Affection is generally a regulated and conscious love or attachment; it goes deeper than attachment. Attachment and especially affection are often the refined and mellowed fruit of the passion of love. Fondness, originally a foolish tenderness, is not yet altogether redeemed from that idea; it may be an unreasonable and dotting attachment, and is never very high in quality. Devotion is a sort of consecration or dedication to the object of one's feeling, an intense loyalty, as to a superior—a constant service. See ecceum.

love², v. t. [ME. loven, lovien, < AS. lofan, praise, value, appraise (= OS. lobhōn = OHG. lobhōn, lobhōn, MHG. G. lobben = Icel. lofa = Sw. lofa = Dan. love, prajse; cf. lof, n., praise; akin to lafran, love, leaf, dear, etc., < Teut. lub, be pleasing: see love, leaf, leave, furrough.] 1. To praise; commend.

Al loved that god, with loyal mode,

And saynt clyn scho bare the rode.

Holy Rood (E. E. T. S.), p. 96.

2. To praise as of value; prize; set a price on.

The sullere [seller] loveth his thing dere.

Old Eng. Homilies (ed. Morris), ii. 818.

I love, as a chapman loveth his ware that he wyll sell, Je fais. Come, of hewe moche loves you it at: sus comblen le taistes vous? I love you it nat so dere as it coste me; I woude be gladd to bye some ware of you, but you love all thynges to dere.

Palagrus.

loveability, loveable, etc. See lovability, etc. love-affair (luv'ə-fair'), n. A special experience of love; the sum of the incidents having to do with being in love with any person.

Confer at large

Of all that may concern thy love-affair.

Shak., T. G. of V., iii. 1. 254.

love-apple (luv'ap'l), n. An old name of the common tomato, Lycopersicon esculentum.

love-bag, n. A charm to procure love. Nares.

Another ask't me, who was somewhat bolder,

Whether I wore a love-bagge on my shoulder?

Munarium Deliciae (1656).

love-bird (luv'berd), n. A little parrot or parakeet, remarkable for the affection it shows for its mate. Many species of different genera have this trait. They are all of diminutive size. The American love-birds belong to the genus Pittacula, and some of them have also been called Agapornis. They are such as P. passerina, with several related species or varieties, and P. purpurata. The true love-birds belong to the restricted genus Agapornis, all of which are African. They are such as A. cana, A. pullaria, and A. nivalis. (See under Agapornis.) The most familiar of these is A. pullaria, scarcely 7 inches long, bright-green with a rose-red face and throat, coralline bill, gray feet, and short rounded tail, which when spread shows a red field bordered with a subterminal bar of black. It thrives on canary-seed, and makes a charming pet. Another group of love-birds inhabits the East Indian archipelago, New Guinea, and Australia, and represents divisions of the genus Pittacula (in a large sense) called Oxyptila and Ptilinopus. Such are C. diophaedra of the Ari Islands, P. malaccensis, etc. The most diminutive of parrots, Nasua pygmaea, belongs to the same group as the last. Also love-parakeet, love-parrot.

love-broker (luv'brō'kēr), n. One who acts as agent between lovers. Shak., T. N., iii. 2. 39.

love-causer (luv'kâz), n. A love-affair. Shak., As you Like it, iv. 1. 97.

love-charm (luv'chärm), n. A charm by which love was supposed to be excited; a philter.

love-child (luv'chıld), n. A child of illicit love; a bastard. [Prov. Eng.]

love-dart (luv'därt), n. An organ of many pulmonate or terrestrial gastropods, as snails; technically called spiculum amoris. See the quotation.

A curious organ is a pyriform muscular sac, containing one or two slender conical styles, which can be thrust out through the aperture of the sac; they are found in certain snails, and with them they pierce each other's skin. They are known as love-darts. Pascoe, Zool. Class., p. 166.

love-day (luv'dä), n. [ME. love day; < love + day.] A day appointed for the amicable adjustment of disputes between neighbors by arbitration; a day for reconciliation.

Mo love-dayes and acordes

Then on instrumentes ben cordes.

Chaucer, House of Fame, l. 636.

This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.

Shak., Tit. And., l. 1. 491.

love-drink (luv'dringk), n. A drink to excite love; a philter or love-potion.

love-favor (luv'fä'vör), n. Something given to be worn in token of love.

Deck'd with love-favors.

By. Hall, Satire, l. 2.

love-feast (luv'fäst), n. 1. Among the primitive Christians, a meal eaten in token of brotherly love and charity, originally in connection with the holy communion, and having in common with it the name of the Lord's Supper. See agape, 1.—2. An analogous service held at intervals by some religious denominations, as the Moravians, the Methodists, and some German Baptists. The provision is usually very simple, consisting of bread and water, sometimes with tea and coffee. Singing and the interchange of religious experience accompany the repast.

love-feast (luv'fäst), n. A deed or act of love; a wooing.

Every one his love-feast will advance

Unto his several mistress.

Shak., L. L. L., v. 2. 123.

love-flower (luv'flou'ér), n. A plant of the genus Agapanthus. Also called African lily.

love-grass (luv'gräs), n. A grass of the genus Eragrostis.

love-in-a-mist (luv'in-a-mist'), n. The fennel-flower, Nigella damascena. Also called devil-in-a-bush.—West Indian love-in-a-mist, one of the passion-flowers, Passiflora foetida.

love-in-a-puzzle (luv'in-a-puz'l), n. Same as love-in-a-mist.

love-in-idleness (luv'in-'id'-ness), n. The plant Viola tricolor, the heart's-ease.

Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell;

It fell upon a little western flower,

Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound,

And maidens call it love-in-idleness.

Shak., M. N. D., ii. 1. 168.

love-juice (luv'jüs), n. In the quotation, the juice of the flower love-in-idleness, the application of which to sleeping eyes was supposed to cause love for the first living object seen after awaking.

But hast thou yet latch'd the Athenian's eyes

With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do?

Shak., M. N. D., iii. 2. 27.

love-knot (luv'not), n. [ME. loveknotte; < love + knot.] 1. A knot tied as a symbol of loyalty or love; a true-lovers' knot.

Another divinatory method employed by love-sick maidens is to sleep in a county in which they do not usually reside, and to knit the left garter round the right leg stocking, leaving the other garter and stocking untouched. . . . And if spells fail not, he [the future husband] will appear in a dream with the insignia of his profession. Gay gives a classical example of tying the love-knot, for the purpose of confirming a lover in his passion.

Hampson, Medii Aevi Kalendarium, I. 161.

2. A knot or bow of ribbon given or worn as a sign of loyalty or affection, or as a decoration.

"What is holychurche, friend?" quoth ich. "Charite," he sayde.

"Lyl, and Loue, and Leante in o by-loyne and lawe, A love-knotte of leaute and of feel by-loyne."

Piers Plowman (C), xviii. 127.

Leg and arm with love-knots gay,

About me leapt and laugh'd

The modish Cupid of the day.

Tennyson, Talking Oak.

My light glove on his casque of steel,

My love-knot on his spear!

Whittier, The Hero.

Love¹ (luv'el), n. [ME. level, < OF. level, louvel, louveau, < ML. lupellus, a young wolf, dim. of L. lupus (> F. loup), a wolf: see lupus.] The word love remains as the surname Love.] Wolf: a common name formerly for a dog.

According to Stowe, p. 247, William Collingborne was executed in 1464 for writing the following couplet on the king's ministers:

"The Ratte, the Catte, and Lovell our dogge Rule all England under the hogge."

Halliwell.

love² (luv'el), n. [ME. luface; < love + lace.] A love-knot; a love-token.

Thus, quen pryde schal me pryke, for prowes of armes,

The luke to this luf lace schal lethe my hert.

Sir Gawayne and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), i. 2438.

Love² (luv'lās), n. [So called after Love-lace, the hero of Richardson's novel "Clarissa Harlowe."] A fine-mannered libertine; a rakish but agreeable man of the world.

love-lass (luv'lās), n. A sweetheart.

So soone as Tython's love-lass gan display

Her opall colours in her eastern throne.

Mrs. J. M. M., p. 776.

loveless (luv'les), a. [love + -less.] 1. Void of love; unloving; wanting tenderness or kindness.

Eight years of loveless and uncongenial union.

The American, VI. 263.

2. Not loved; not attracting love; unlovable.

These are ill-favoured to see to; and yet, as loveless as they be, they are not without some medicinable virtues.

Holland.

love-letter (luv'let'er), n. A letter professing love; a letter of courtship; a billet-doux.

love-lies-bleeding (luv'li-blē'ding), n. A name of the red amaranth, Amaranthus caudatus and A. Gangeticus, with crimson spikes and (sometimes) foliage, and small annual roots. Owing to the weak root, they often fall and lie prostrate in the garden.

lovely (luv'li), adv. [< ME. lovely; < lovely + -ly.] In a lovely manner; amiably; in a manner to excite love. [Rare.]

Bot syr Arthure ouone ayeres ther-afyre
Ewyne to the Emperour, with honourable kyngis;
Laughte hym uppe fulle lowly with lurdliche knyghtes,
And lodde hym to the layere, thare the kyng lyges.
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), I. 2328.

loveliness (luv'li-nes), n. The character of being lovely; mental or physical attractiveness; capability of exciting love or strong admiration: as, female loveliness; the loveliness of the rose.

Her gentle limbs did she undress,
And lay down in her loveliness.
Coleridge, Christabel, I.

In loveliness of perfect deeds.
Tennyson, In Memoriam, xxxvi.

loveling (luv'ling), n. [< love¹ + -ling.] A little love; a beloved or lovable being.

These frolics lovelings freighted nests doe make.
Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II. The Magnificence.

love-lock (luv'lok), n. 1. Formerly, a long and flowing lock on a man's head dressed separately from the rest of the hair, curled or tied with a ribbon, sometimes with several bows, and allowed to hang down over the neck and in front of the shoulder. It was usual to wear but one, and this was the mark of a man of careful and elegant dress during the first half of the seventeenth century. In some instances two were worn, one on each side. Also called French lock.

How, sir, will you be trimmed? Will you have . . . your love-locks wreathed with a silken twist, or shaggy to fall on your shoulders?
Twist, Midas, III. 2.

2. Now, a separate lock hanging conspicuously on the head of either a man or a woman.

Her hair . . . escaped in one vagrant love-lock, perfectly curled, that dropped over her left shoulder.
Wilde Collins, Armadale, II. 224.

love-lorn (luv'lorn), a. Forsaken by one's love; forlorn, pining, or suffering from love.

The love-lorn nightingale
Nightly to thee her sad song mourneth well.
Milton, Comus, I. 234.

love-lornness (luv'lorn'nes), n. The state of being love-lorn. [Rare.]

It was the story of that fair Gostanna who in her love-lornness desired to live no longer.
George Eliot, Romola, Ixi.

lovely¹ (luv'li), a. [< ME. lovely, luvlich, lufli, < AS. luflic, lovely, < lufu, love: see love¹, n., and -ly.] The AS. loeflic, dear, pleasant (= OS. lofrik, lobrik = OFries. lofrik, NFries. loefstyk = D. loefstyk = OHG. loblich, loblich, MHG. loblich, G. loblich, lovely, = Dan. loftig, pleasant, = Goth. lobulika, lovely), is a diff. word, < loef, E. loef, dear, + -lic, E. -ly.] 1. Fitted to excite love or emotion; possessing or characterized by engaging qualities; lovable; attractive; charming: as, a lovely woman; a lovely view; a lovely dress.

Lovery or able to be lovyd, amabilis, diligibilis.
Prunty, Parv.

A lusty ladde, a stately man to see,
Beganne to woo my sister, not for wealth,
But for hir face was lowly to behelde.
Geowdine, Steele Glas (ed. Arber), p. 51.

Mr. Can you love a man?
Ld. Yes, if the man be lovely,
That is, be honest, modest.
Fletcher, Wildgoose Chase, I. 3.

Nothing lovelier can be found
In woman than to study household good.
Milton, P. L., ix. 232.

3. Attractive to appetite or desire; enticing; inviting. [Colloq.]

Come, let's to supper. Come, my friend Coridon, this Trout looks lovely.
I. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 85.

4. Loving; tender.

Many a lovely look on him he casts.
Chaucer, Miller's Tale, I. 150.

Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant in their lives.
2 Sam., I. 23.

Seal the title with a lovely kiss!
Shak., T. of the S., III. 2. 125.

lovely² (luv'li), adv. [< ME. lovely, luvliche, luflich, < AS. luflic, lovely, < lufu, a., lovely: see love¹, a.] 1. So as to induce or excite love; very beautifully or pleasantly.

O thou weed,
Who art so lovely fair, and smell'st so sweet.
Shak., Othello, iv. 2. 68.

2. Lovingly; kindly.

List luflich adoun, & lunge, I the praye, & quat so thy wylle is, we schal wyt after.
Str. Geowdine and the Green Knight (E. E. T. S.), I. 264.

lovely², a. [< ME. lovely, praiseworthy; < love² + -ly.] Worthy to be praised. Hallwell.

love-making (luv'mā'king), n. Courtship.

loveman (luv'man), n. [< love¹, v., + obj. man.] The common goosegrass or cleavers, Galium aparine.

love-match (luv'mach), n. A marriage founded upon love; a marriage into which convenience, money considerations, etc., do not enter.

lovemonger (luv'mung'gér), n. [< love¹ + monger.] One who deals in affairs of love; a go-between in courtship. [Rare.]

Thou art an old love-monger, and speakest skilfully.
Shak., L. L. L., II. 1. 253.

Loven's larva. See larva.

love-parrakeet (luv'par'ā-kēt), n. A love-bird.

love-parrot (luv'par'ot), n. A love-bird.

love-plant (luv'plant), n. 1. A name of the showy South African portulacaceous plants of the genus Anacampseros, common in cultivation.—2. The Victorian blue creeper, Comospermum volubile, an evergreen twining plant of Australia.

love-potion (luv'pō'shon), n. A potion or draught designed to excite love; a philter.

We waste our best years in distilling the sweetest flowers of life into love-potions.
Longfellow, Hyperion, III. 3.

lover¹ (luv'ér), n. [Also dial. or obs. lovyer; < ME. lover, lovyer, lufér, < lufen, loven, love: see love¹ and -er, -ier, -yer.] 1. One who loves; one who has a feeling of love or earnest liking for any person or thing; a zealous admirer: as, a lover of good men or of Christianity; a lover of books or of science; a lover of wine.

Thus theas crist harewilde helle,
And ledde hise lovyn to paradys.
Hymns to Virgins, etc. (E. E. T. S.), p. 58.

He of Winchester
Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's.
Shak., Hen. VIII., iv. 1. 104.

2. Specifically, one who is enamored; a person in love: now used in the singular almost exclusively of the man, though formerly also of the woman, while the plural is still commonly used of both: as, a lover and his sweetheart; a pair of lovers.

If I freely may discover
What would please me in a lover,
I would have her fair and witty.
B. Jonson, Postaster, II. 1.

Where is Mark Antony?
The man, my lover, with whom I rode sublime
On Fortune's neck.
Tennyson, Fair Women.

lover², n. An obsolete form of lover.

lover³, a. An obsolete comparative of lof.

loved (luv'éd), a. [< love¹ + -ed.] Provided with or having a lover.

Who, young and simple, would not be so loved?
Shak., Lover's Complaint, I. 320.

love-ribbon (luv'rib'on), n. A narrow gauze ribbon with satin stripes.

lovely (luv'ér-li), a. [< lover + -ly.] Like a lover; suitable for a lover; lover-like. [Rare.]

Said the chief abruptly, "I want only herself." . . . A very lovely way of speaking.
George MacDonald, What's Mine's Mine, p. 300.

lovery¹ (lō'vēr-i), n. Same as lover.

For now he makes no count of perjuries,
Hath drawn false lights from pitch-black loveries,
Glazed his braided ware, oga, swears, and lies.
Marton, Scourge of Villainy, II. 5.

love-scene (luv'sēn), n. A marked exhibition of mutual love; an interview between lovers; a pictured, written, or acted representation of such an interview.

"Mind your own work, my dear," said her husband, gently. Circe resumed a love-scene between Adèle and the tender forger.
Hannay, Singleton Fontenoy, I. 3.

love-shaft (luv'shaft), n. A shaft or dart of love; specifically, Cupid's arrow.

A certain aim he took
At a fair vestal throned by the west,
And loosed his love-shaft smartly from his bow.
Shak., M. N. D., II. 1. 150.

love-sick (luv'sik), a. 1. Sick or languishing with love or amorous desire: as, a love-sick swain.

To the dear mistress of my love-sick mind.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Bolognes, III. 103.

2. Expressive of languishing love.

Where nightingales their love-sick ditty sing.
Dryden.

love-sickness (luv'sik'nes), n. Amorous languor; sickness or longing caused by love.

lovesome (luv'sum), a. [Also dial. loosome, loosom; < ME. lufsom, lufsum, < AS. lufsum, love- ble, < lufu, love: see love¹, n., and -some.] 1. Lovely; winsome.

O lufsum lady bryghte,
How have ye faren syn that ye were here?
Chaucer, Troilus, v. 405.

One praised her anoles, one her eyes,
One her dark hair and loosome mien.
Tennyson, The Beggar Maid.

2. Loving; manifesting love or affection.

The thousand bright-leaved shrubs that twined their arms together in loosome tangles.
Kingslake, Bothan, vii.

lovesomely (luv'sum-li), adv. Lovingly.

See Rosmer took her sister-son,
Set him upon his knee;
He clappit him as lufsumely,
He turned bath blue and bla.
Rosmer Haymand (Child's Ballads, I. 256).

love-song (luv'song), n. A song expressive of love; an amatory poem.

love-spell (luv'spel), n. A spell to induce love.

love-suit (luv'sūt), n. Courtship; solicitation of union in marriage.

Cloten, whose love-suit hath been to me
As fearful as a siege.
Shak., Cymbeline, III. 4. 130.

love-tap (luv'tap), n. A slight blow given as a caress.

love-tick (luv'tik), n. A love-tap.
Lord, if the peevish infant fights and flies
With unpar'd weapons at his mothers eyes,
Her frowns (half mif'd with smiles) may chance to show
An angry love-tick on his arm, or no.
Quarles, Emblems, III. 6.

love-token (luv'tō'kn), n. A gift in memory of or as a sign of love.

love-tooth (luv'tōth), n. An inclination to love.

Believe me, Philautus, I am now old, yet have I in my head a love-tooth.
Livy, Euphues and his England.

love-tree (luv'trē), n. The Judas-tree, Cercis Siliquastrum.

love-trout (luv'trout), n. The pilchard.

It has been termed a love trout when impressed on a token struck at Love in the reign of Charles II.
Day.

love-worth (luv'wérth), n. Worthiness of love.

Homer for himself should be belov'd,
Who ev'ry sort of love-worth did contain.
Chapman, Iliad, To the Reader, I. 73.

love-worthy (luv'wér'wēl), a. Lovable; fitted to inspire love.

loving¹ (luv'ing), p. a. 1. Feeling love or tender regard; affectionate: as, a loving friend.—2. Expressing or manifesting love or kindness: as, loving words; a loving caress.

loving², n. [< ME. lovyng, < AS. lofung, praising, appraising, verbal n. of lofan, praise: see love², v.] Praise; honor.

For to wyne me lovyng
Bothe of emperoure and of kynges.
M. Cantab. Fl., II. 38, I. 132. (Hallwell.)

loving-cup (luv'ing-kup), n. A wine-cup intended for several persons to drink from and to pass from hand to hand. It is commonly made with several handles. See parting-cup.

loving-kindness (luv'ing-kind'nes), n. Kindness which springs from and manifests personal love: used in Scripture to describe God's favor to his people.

My loving-kindness will I not utterly take from him.
Ps. lxxix., 33.

lovingly (luv'ing-li), adv. With love or affection; affectionately.

lovingness (luv'ing-nes), n. A loving manner; affectionate bearing or conduct.

The only two bands of good-will, loveliness and loveliness.
Str. P. Sidney, Arcadia, II.

lovyer (luv'yér), n. An obsolete or dialectal form of lover. Chaucer.

low¹ (lō), v. i. [< ME. lowen, < AS. lōwan = D. lofen = MLG. loien, lügen = OHG. lōjan, lōwan, MHG. lügen, lügen, lügen, lügen = Icel. lōa, bellow, low; prob. of imitative origin.] To utter the soft bellow peculiar to animals of the cow kind; moo.

I'd rather hear that cow to low,
Than he's a' the kine in Fyvie.
Andrew Lammie (Child's Ballads, II. 156).

The sober herd that low'd to meet their young.
Goldsmith, Des. VII., I. 118.

low¹ (lō), n. [< low¹, v.] The bellow of cattle; a moo.

Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable low.
Shak., Much Ado, v. 4. 48.

low² (lō), a. and n. [< ME. lowe, lough, lough, loh, lōge, lawe, lagh, lah (not in AS., and prob. < Scand.; = OFries. loge, lech = D. laag = MLG. lōch, lōge = MD. laegh, laegh = LG. lag, lege, leech = Icel. lgr = Sw. låg = Dan. lov, low; lit. 'lying' (low), from the verb, AS. lōpan (pret. lōp) = Icel. lappa, pret. pl. lāga, etc.), lit: see low¹. Cf. low¹ and log¹, from the same ult. source.

Hence lower, below, etc.] I. a. 1. Lying or being below the general or natural level or plane; depressed in place or position; at some depth or distance downward; deep: as, low ground; a low valley; the lower regions.

I . . . shall set thee in the low parts of the earth.

Book. xxvi. 30.

The lowest bottom shoo.

Of Erebus. Milton, P. L., li. 383.

2. Below the usual standard of height; falling below the customary level or position: as, a low bow; a low tide (that is, an ebb-tide unusually depressed); low tide or low water (used absolutely, without an article, for the state of the tide or the water at its greatest normal depression of level).

Giving place to flexure and low bending.

Shak., Hon. V., iv. 1.

In considering any tide we find, especially in estuaries, that the interval from high to low water is longer than that from low to high water. Encyc. Brit., XXIII. 353.

3. Not high in position; not far above a natural or generally recognized plane or level: as, the sun is low (that is, not far above the horizon); a bird of low flight; a low shelf.

The weakness of our ship, the badness of our sayers, and our ignorance of the coast, caused us carry but a low sail.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I. 105.

A glimmering land,

Lit with a low large moon. Tennyson, Palace of Art.

4. Not high in upward extent; having little vertical extension; of no great height; moderate or deficient in altitude or stature; not lofty: opposed to high, lofty, and tall: as, low hills, plants, or trees; a low house or wall; a man of low stature; a low forehead.

Longes all at layers, and lokes one the wallys

Where they were layeste the lodes to assaile.

Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), I. 2430.

He was rather low than tall.

C. Mather, Mag. Chris., III. 1.

A low, lean, swarthy man he is.

Whittier, Mogg Megone, I.

Low knolls

That dimpling died into each other. Tennyson, Aylmer's Field.

5. Not high in a scale of reckoning; below the usual rate, reckoning, or value; moderate; meager; cheap: as, low wages, rates, prices; a low estimate; wheat was low.

The salaries were too low to afford even those indulgences which are necessary to the health and comfort of Europeans in a tropical climate. Macaulay, Lord Clive.

6. Not high in number; indicating or indicated by a small number; expressed by numerals indicating few: as, a low number; low latitudes (those expressed in low numbers, and therefore near the equator).—7. Not high in grade, position, station, state, or account; of inferior grade; humble in rank; lowly: as, people of low estate; the lower classes; the lower walks of life.

Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels.

Ps. viii. 5.

Both low and high, rich and poor, together. Ps. xlix. 2.

Why then was this forbid? why, but to awe? Why, but to keep ye low and ignorant?

Milton, P. L., ix. 704.

8. Not high in character or condition. (a) Not full or strong; lacking in fullness, strength, or force; weak; feeble; depressed: as, low fortune; low hopes; a low pulse or state of health; low spirits; his affairs are at a low ebb.

This exceeding postling day and night

Must wear your spirits low.

Shak., All's Well, v. 1. 2.

Their sinking state and low affairs

Can move your pity, and provoke your cares.

Addison, tr. of Virgil's Georgics, iv.

(b) Not haughty or proud; meek; lowly. For love of her (their) low hertis our lord hath them granted

Here penance and her purgatorie here on this erthe.

Piers Plowman (B), vii. 104.

My Lord Palmouth, . . . his generosity, good-nature, desire of public good, and low thoughts of his own wisdom.

Pepper, Diary, Aug. 30, 1669.

(c) Lacking in dignity, refinement, or principle; vulgar; grovelling; abject; mean; base: as, low associates; low tastes; a low companion; low life; a low trick.

If they are obliged to stop by day, the boatmen frequently pass away the time in acting some low farces.

Pococke, Description of the East, I. 16.

As if nine tenths of the calamities which have befallen the human race had any other origin than the union of high intelligence with low desires.

Macaulay, Lord Bacon.

9. Not high in quality or degree. (a) Not excessive or intense; not violent; moderate: as, low heat; low temperature; a low fever.

That acceptance of the inevitable which is the lowest form of content. Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xiv.

(b) In optics, of slight refrangibility (that is, having a relatively great wave-length). (c) In logic, having little logical extension; narrow; predicable of few objects. (d) Not rich or highly seasoned; plain; simple: as, low diet. (e) Holding low-church views. See Low-churchman.

That variety of evangelical clergyman to which the late Mr. Conybeare gave the name of "low and slow"—a variety which, we believe, flourishes chiefly in the midland counties. Quarterly Rev., Oct., 1860, p. 49.

(f) In bot., of lowly, simple, or generalised structure; not high in the scale of organization; not highly differentiated or specialized: as, low protozoan animals; low cryptogamic plants.

10. Of sounds: (a) Not loud; gentle; soft.

Her voice was over soft,

Gentle, and low—an excellent thing in woman.

Shak., Lear, v. 3. 273.

The low moan of an unknown sea.

Tennyson, Palace of Art.

(b) Relatively grave in pitch; produced by relatively slow vibrations; depressed; flat: opposed to high.

You would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass. Shak., Hamlet, III. 2. 383.

High and low. See high.—In or for high and low. See high.—Low area, in meteor., a region where the atmospheric pressure is lower than over the surrounding region.—Low bass, soprano, tenor, either a voice or a voice-part of one of these varieties that extends to an unusually low pitch, or the lower of two basses, soprano, tenors, etc., in a given piece.—Low blast, in smelting and other metallurgical operations, a blast delivered to the furnace at low pressure, as compared with the pressure of the blast required when the temperature of the furnace-charge approaches the melting-point.—Low boat, in sporting, the boat whose occupants kill the least game or the fewest fish.

—Low caste. See caste.—Low caste. See caste. 1.—Low celebration, in the usage of many Anglican churches, a celebration of the eucharist without music or other adjuncts: opposed to high celebration. See high.—Low church. See Low-church, and Episcopal Church, under episcopal.—Low color. See color.—Low comedian, an actor of farcical comic parts.—Low Countries, the Netherlands.—Low dawn. See dawn.—Low Dutch. See Dutch. 5.—Low embroidery, embroidery which is not in high relief or padded, and is without filices or applications.

—Lower case. See case. 6.—Lower chalk, in geol., the name given to a member of the Chalk formation, distinguished by the absence of flints and by the superior hardness of the chalk, which is sometimes used for building-stone.—Lower criticism, culmination, house, etc. See the nouns.—Lower Empire, a name sometimes given to the Byzantine empire.—Lower greensand, in Eng. geol., a division of the Lower Cretaceous. It lies between the Gault and the Wealden. In the south of England it consists of clays, sandstones, and limestones, and is in part fluviatile and in part marine. In the northern counties it is exclusively marine. It is generally considered as being the equivalent of the Upper Neocomian (which see) of continental geologists.—Lower masts, the principal masts.—Lower rigging, the rigging belonging to the lower masts and yards.—Lower Silurian. See Silurian.—Lower table. Same as culet. 2.—Lower yards, the lowermost yards of a vessel.—Low fever, German Latin. See the nouns.—Low grounds. See ground.—Low latitude, latitude near the equator.—Low mass, millage, etc. See the nouns.—Low-potential system, low-resistance system. See multiple art. (under multiple), potential, and resistance.—Low relief. Same as bas-relief.—Low steam, steam having a low pressure or expansive force.—Low Sunday, the Sunday next after Easter: so called because, while included within the limits of the highest of all festivals, that of Easter, it is by comparison lower or less exalted than Easter day itself. It has been the custom since very early times to repeat most of the Easter Sunday service on this day. Officially called in the Roman Catholic Church Dominica in Albis—that is, the Sunday in white garments, from the white robes worn in early times by those who had been baptized just before Easter. Also called Alb Sunday, Quinquagesima, and in the Greek Church Antipascha, the Trochiva of St. Thomas or the Sunday of St. Thomas (the gospel being John xx. 19–31), and sometimes New Sunday, ἡ δευτερογεννη Κυριακή, literally the second-first Sunday, an expression similar to the 'second-first Sabbath' (translated 'second Sabbath after the first') of Luke vi. 1.—Low to paper, in printing, below the standard height; said of type.—Low water. See water.—Low wine. See wine.—To lie low. See lie.—Syn. 8 (c). Mean, Grovelling, etc. (see abject), base, ignoble, vile, vulgar, common, dishonourable, cheap, plebeian, shabby. See list under mean.

II. n. 1. In card-playing, a certain card, often, but not always, the lowest trump, the holding or taking of which confers certain advantages. See all-fours.—2. In meteor., same as low area.—3. pl. Low level land. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

low² (lō), adv. [ME. lowe, lowe, loge, lake (= D. laag = Dan. lavt, adv.; low², a.)] 1. Near the ground; not aloft; not high: as, to fly low; to aim low.

Art thou the last of all mankind to know That party fights are won by aiming low!

O. W. Holmes, The Disappointed Statesman.

2. In a mean condition: in composition: as, a low-born fellow or lass.—3. Late, or in time approaching the present.

In that part of the world which was first inhabited, even as low down as Abraham's time, they wandered with their flocks and herds.

Locke.

4. With a depressed voice; not loudly: as, speak low.—5. In music: (a) Not loudly; quietly; softly. (b) At a low or grave pitch.

low² (lō), v. [ME. lowen, lawen, loghen (= Ice. leggja = D. laagen), make low, humble; low², a. Cf. lower².] I. trans. 1. To lower.

The value of guineas was lowered from one-and-twenty shillings and sixpence to one-and-twenty shillings. Scott.

2. To bring low; humble.

Lowland thame-salle to the Sacramentes of haly kyrke.

Hampole, Prose Treatises (E. E. T. S.), p. 42.

For the lone of oure lordes loweth hym to be poure.

He shal haue an hundredfolde of heuene-ryche blisse.

Piers Plowman (C), xiii. 157.

II. intrans. To go low; descend; fall.

Fortune hath ever be mutable,

And made no while stonde stable;

For nowe it hieth, nowe it loweth,

Now stant vpright, now onerthroweth.

Gower, Conf. Amant., viii.

low³ (lō), n. [Also dial. lough, law; ME. low, lowe, lawe, AS. lāw, lāwō, a hill, mound, = OS. lāw = OHG. lāw, lāw, MHG. lā = Goth. lāw, a mound (grave); perhaps = L. clivus, a hill, slope: see clivus, acclivity, declivity.] A hill; a small eminence; a mound, either natural or artificial. The word is now only in provincial use. It is found as an element of several place-names in low or -law, as in Ludlow, Lammerlaw, etc.

Not sated wate bot Segor that sat on a lawe, The thre lodes ther-in, Loth and his doger.

Alliterative Poems (ed. Morris), II. 902.

I've been to the top of the Caidon Low, The midsummer-night to see.

Mary Howitt, Fairies of the Caidon Low.

low³ (lō), v. t. [low³, n.] To heap or pile up. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

low⁴ (lou), n. [ME. lowe, loghe, loghe, Ice. logi = Sw. läga = Dan. læg, a fire, = *OHG. loho, MHG. G. lohe = MLG. lo, lowe = OFries. loga, a flame; akin to AS. lēg, lēg, > ME. ley, lete, etc., a fire (see lay³); from the root, luh*, of light¹, etc.: see light¹.] Flame; fire; blaze. [Obsolete or prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

His ene flammet as the fire, or a fuisse low. Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 5582.

There sat a bottle in a bole Beyond the ingle lowe.

Burns, The Weary Pund o' Tow.

low⁴ (lou), v. t. [ME. lowen, flame; low⁴, n.] To flame; blaze. [Obsolete or prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

A vast, unbottom'd, boundless pit, Fill'd fou o' lowen brunstane.

Burns, Holy Fair.

low⁴ (lou), v. t. An obsolete preterit of laugh. low⁵ (lou), v. A dialectal form of allow¹.

lowbell (lou'bel), n. [low⁴ + bell¹.] 1. A bell used in a certain kind of fowling by night, the birds being made to lie close by the sound of the bell and blinded by a light, so as to be easily taken by a net which is thrown over them.

The fowler's lowbell robs the lark of sleep. W. King, Art of Love, I. 47.

2. A bell hung on the necks of sheep or other animals.

Maria. And I am worse, a woman that can fear Neither Petruchio Furia, nor his fame. . . .

Petrus. If you can carry 't so, 'tis very well. Bianca. No, you shall carry 't, sir.

Petrus. Peace, gentle low-bell. Fletcher, Tamer Tamed, I. 3.

Now commonly he who desires to be a Minister, looks not at the Work, but at the Wages; and by that Lure or Lowbell, may be told from Parish to Parish all the Town over.

Milton, Considerations.

lowbell (lou'bel), v. t. [lowbell, n.] To scare with a lowbell, as birds in fowling.

lowbelling (lou'bel'ing), n. [Verbal n. of lowbell, v.] Fowling with a lowbell.

This sport [fowling with nets] . . . some call . . . low-belling; and the use of it is to go with a great light, . . . with a bell in your other hand, . . . and you must ring it always after one order.

Quoted in Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, p. 98.

low-boy (lō'boi), n. 1. A Whig and Low-churchman. Davies.

No fire and faggot! no wooden shoes! no trade-sellers! a low-boy, a low-boy! Mrs. O'Connell, Gotham Election.

2. A chest of drawers supported on short legs. See high-boy, 2. [New Eng.]

Low-church (lō'chērch), n. Laying little stress on church authority and usage; evangelical: used specifically of those in the Anglican Church who are known as Low-churchmen, and of their principles.

Low-churchism (lō'chērch'izm), n. [Low-church + -ism.] Low-church principles.

Low-churchman (lō'chērch'man), n. One of those members of the Anglican Church who do not consider possession of the apostolic succession essential to constitute a valid ministry, regard the sacraments and sacramental rites rather as signs or symbols of grace than as having grace necessarily contained in them, and oppose sacerdotalism and ornate ritual. Low-churchmen sympathize with non-episcopal denominations rather than with the Roman Catholic and Greek churches. Opposed to High-churchman. Also called Evangelical. low-day (lô'dâ), n. [low + day]. Cf. high-day.] A day that is not a church-festival.

Such days as wear the badge of holy red
Are for Devotion marked and Sage Delights,
The vulgar Low-days undistinguished
Are left for Labour, Games, and Sportful Sights.
Campton (Arber's Eng. Garner, III. 285).

low-dilutionist (lô'di-lû'shûn-ist), n. See dilutionist.

low-down (lô'down), a. Far down in the social scale; degraded; mean. [Colloq.]

Her archaic speech was perhaps a shade better than the low-down language of Broad Run.
R. E. Appleton, The Graysons, xviii.

low-down (lô'down), n. A ravine, or gully, such as is frequented by the sea-elephant of California. C. M. Scammon.

low-downer (lô'dou'nér), n. [low-down + -er]. A person who is low down in the scale of existence; a very rude or mean person. [Local, U. S.]

They are at least known by a generic byword as Poor Whites, or Low-downers.
R. L. Stevenson, Silverado Squatters, p. 151.

Lowell battery-gun. See machine-gun.

lower¹, low (lou'ér, lûr), v. i. [ME. lowren, lowren, luren (= MD. loeren), frown; appar. lure, the face (E. leer), and thus ult. a var. of *leer*¹, v. q. v.] 1. To frown; scowl; look sulley; watch in sullen silence.

If his knave kneels that shal his cuppe brynge,
He loweth on hym and axeth hym who tawte hym curtelaye?
Piers Plowman (B), x. 811.

This son of anger lowered at the whole assembly.
Steele, Spectator, No. 482.

2. To appear dark or gloomy; be clouded; threaten a storm.

Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds that low'd upon our house
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Shak., Rich. III., i. 1. 3.

The dawn is overcast, the morning lowers,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day.
Addison, Cato, l. 1.

3†. To look bad; appear in bad condition.

Yf this tree lowre (tr. L. tristis etc.), an horsecomb wul him chere.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 144.

4†. To lurk; crouch; skulk.

We lurked undyr lee as lowrands wretches!
Morte Arthure (E. E. T. S.), l. 1442.

5. To strike, as a clock, with a low prolonged sound; toll the curfew. Halliwel. [Prov. Eng.]

lower², lowr (lou'ér, lûr), n. [*lower*¹, v.] 1. A frown; scowl; frowning; sullenness.

Philoclea was jealous for Zelmaue, not without so mighty a lower as that face could yield.
Sir P. Sidney.

What women know it not . . .
How blisse or bale lyes in their laugh or lowre,
Whilst they enjoy their happy blooming flower?
Daniel, Complaint of Rosamond, l. 187.

2. Cloudiness; gloominess.

lower³ (lô'ér), v. [lower, compar. of *low*², a. Cf. higher, v.] 1. trans. 1. To cause to descend; let down; take or bring down: as, to lower the sail of a ship; to lower cargo into the hold.—2. To reduce or bring down, as in height, amount, value, estimation, condition, degree, etc.; make low or lower: as, to lower a wall (by removing a part of the top); to lower the water in a canal (by allowing some to run off); to lower the temperature of a room or the quality of goods; to lower the point of a spear or the muzzle of a gun; to lower prices or the rate of interest.—3. To bring down in spirit; humble; humiliate: as, to lower one's pride; to lower one in the estimation of others.—4. In relief-engraving, (a) to scrape or cut away, as the surface of a block, in such manner as to leave it highest in the middle; or (b) to depress, as any part of the surface which it is desired shall print lightly from being exposed to a diminished pressure. The lowering of the block from the middle to the sides causes the pressure on its whole surface in the press to be practically equal, and thus admits of printing from it without overlay.

5. In music, to change from a high to a low pitch; specifically, in musical notation, to depress; flat: said of changing the significance of a staff-degree or of a note on such a degree by attaching a flat to it either in the signature or as an accidental.—To lower the flag. See flag.

II. intrans. To fall; sink; grow less; become lower in any way.

Thou shalt lower to his level day by day.

Tennyson, Locksley Hall.

lower^{3†}, n. [ME., < OF. lower, let, hire, < L. locare, place, let: see locate.] Hire; reward.

A knyght axed his body when he was deed upon the silde crosse, and it was graunted hym of Pilate in lower of his service.
Morte (E. E. T. S.), l. 59.

lower-case (lô'ér-kās), a. and n. [lower case, used attributively.] 1. a. In printing, pertaining to or belonging in the lower case (see *case*², n., 6): as, the lower-case boxes; lower-case type or letters. Usually abbreviated l. c.

II. n. In printing, the kind of type that is placed in the boxes of the lower case (see *case*², 6); small letters collectively, as opposed to capitals: as, roman or italic lower-case; the title-words of this dictionary are set in condensed antique lower-case (with capital initials when these are ordinarily used).

lowering (lou'ér-ing), p. a. Threatening a storm; cloudy; overcast: as, a lowering sky.

It will be foul weather to day; for the sky is red and lowering.
Mat. xvi. 3.

loweringly (lou'ér-ing-li), adv. In a lowering manner; with cloudiness or threatening gloom.

lowermost (lô'ér-môst), a. superl. [lower, compar. of *low*², + -most.] Lower than any other; being at the bottom; occupying the lowest place, as one of a number or series of things: opposed to uppermost: as, the lowermost stones in a foundation; the lowermost stratum of a geological formation.

lowery, loury (lou'ér-i, lou'ri), a. [*lower*¹ + -y]. Cloudy; threatening: said of weather. [Colloq.]

Low-German (lô'jér'man), a. Or or pertaining to the language known as Low German (see German); also, in philol., applied to that class of tongues of which Low German is a member, and which includes in addition Dutch, Flemish, Frisian, Old Saxon, Anglo-Saxon, and English.

lowing (lô'ing), n. [ME. lowyng; verbal n. of *low*¹, v.] The ordinary bellowing cry of cattle.

Nor is Oairis seen
In Memphis grove or green,
Trampling the unshower'd grass with lowings loud.
Milton, Nativity, st. 24.

low¹, v. i. See *low*².

low², v. i. See *low*³.

lowland (lô'land), n. and a. I. n. [Sc. also lawland, lallan; = Sw. lågland = Dan. lavland (cf. Laaland, the name of a Danish island); as *low*² + land.] Land which is low with respect to the neighboring country; a low or level tract of land: most commonly used in the plural.—The Lowlands, a name applied specifically to the southern and eastern part of Scotland; also sometimes to other smaller regions, generally as a common noun.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the Lowlands, or to a low or level country: as, Lowland Scotch; a lowland race; lowland plants or animals.

A Highland lad my love was born,
The Lowland laws he held in scorn.
Burns, Jolly Beggars, song iv.

Lowlander (lô'lan-dér), n. An inhabitant of the Lowlands, especially of Scotland: opposed to Highlander.

lowlihead (lô'li-hed), n. [ME. lowlyhede; < lowly + -head.] Same as lowlihood. [Archaic.]

The stately flower of female fortitude,
Of perfect wifehood, and pure lowlihead.
Tennyson, Isabel.

lowlihood (lô'li-hûd), n. [lowly + -hood.] The state of being lowly; meekness; humility.

lowly (lô'li), adv. In a lowly manner; humbly. Johnson.

low-line (lô'lin), n. The fisherman who catches the fewest fishes on a trip. Also low-liner.

lowliness (lô'li-nés), n. 1. The state of being lowly in mind or disposition; freedom from pride; humility.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves.
Phil. ii. 3.

And she hath turned from the pride of sin to the lowliness of truth.
Whittier, The Vandal Teacher.

2. Low state or condition; abjectness; meanness. [Rare.]

The lowliness of my fortune has not brought me to fainter vice.
Dryden.

low-lived (lô'lîvd), a. 1. Leading a low or mean life; vulgar.

She shall choose better company than such low-lived fellows as he.
Goldsmith, Vicar, xiii.

2. Pertaining to or characteristic of low or vulgar life; mean; shabby: as, low-lived manners; a low-lived trick. [Colloq.]

low-living¹, a. [ME. lowe-lyvynge.] Lowly.

To lowe-lyvynge men the larks is resembled,
And to leelde and to lyt-holy that lounen alle brenthe.
Piers Plowman (C), xv. 122.

lowly (lô'li), a. [ME. lowely; < *low*² + -ly.] 1. Not high or elevated; depressed in altitude, situation, or position; lying or being low.

As looks the mother on her lowly babe,
When death doth close his tender lowly eyes.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., iii. 2. 47.

Where Ufens glides along the lowly lands.
Dryden, Æneid, vii. 1072.

The flower of sweetest smell is shy and lowly.
Wordsworth, Sonnets, ii. 2.

2. Not of a high order or degree; of humble rank or kind; hence, unpretending; rude; mean: as, a lowly swain; a lowly cottage.

These rural poems and their lowly strains.
Dryden, tr. of Virgil's Eclogues, vi. 11.

That Imperator, Caesar, and Augustus, once titles low- lier than that of King, had now become, as they have since remained, titles far loftier. E. A. Freeman, Venice, p. 122.

3. Humble in manner or spirit; free from pride; modest; meek.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart.
Mat. xi. 29.

= Syn. 3. Modest, resigned, submissive, mild.

lowly (lô'li), adv. [ME. lowely; < lowly, a.] 1. In a humble manner or condition; humbly; meekly; modestly.

Christ full lowly and meekly washed his disciples feet.
Frost, Works, p. 93.

Heaven is for thee too high
To know what passes there; be lowly wise.
Milton, P. L., viii. 173.

2. Without distinction or dignity; meanly.

I will show myself highly fed and lowly taught.
Shak., All's Well, ii. 2. 2.

lowlyhede, n. See lowlihead.

low-men (lô'men), n. pl. False dice so loaded as always to turn up low numbers. See fullam and high-men.

low-minded (lô'min'ded), a. Having a mind or spirit animated by no lofty or noble aspirations or thoughts; groveling; uninspiring; cowardly; mean.

lowmost, a. superl. Lowermost; lowest.

low¹, n. A variant of low¹.

low² (loun), a. [Also loun, and lownd, lound; < leel. logn, a calm.] Calm; low and sheltered; still; serene; tranquil: as, a low place. [Scotch.]

The night is wondrous low.
Sir Roland (Child's Ballads, I. 224).

low-necked (lô'nekt), a. Cut low in the neck, as a garment; décolleté: applied particularly to a woman's dress cut low on the shoulders: opposed to high-necked.

lowness (lô'nes), n. [ME. lownesse; < *low*² + -ness.] The state or quality of being low, in any sense of the word.

lowpe¹, v. An obsolete variant of *lowp*¹, *lope*¹.

lowpe², n. An obsolete form of *loop*¹.

low-pressure (lô'presh'jûr), a. Working with a low degree of steam-pressure: as, a low-pressure engine. See low pressure, under pressure.

lowre¹, v. i. An obsolete form of *lower*¹.

lowre², n. [Origin obscure.] Money. [Old cant.]

What are they but drunken Beggars? all that they beg being either Lowre or Bowse (money or drinks).
Dekker, English Villanies (1632), sig. M.

lowry¹, n. [Cf. lorry, laurel.] Spurge-laurel.

Cotgrave.

lowry² (lou'ri), n.; pl. lowries (-rîz). [Cf. lorry.] An open railroad box-car. E. H. Knight.

lowse¹, n. An obsolete spelling of *louse*¹.

lowse², v. An obsolete form of loose.

low-spirited (lô'spir'î-ted), a. Having low spirits; without animation and courage; dejected; depressed; not lively or sprightly.—Syn. Dispirited, disheartened, discouraged, desponding, cast down, downhearted.

low-spiritedness (lô'spir'î-ted-nés), n. A state of depression; dejection of mind.

low-studded (lô'stud'ed), a. Having low or short studs; built low: said of a house or room.

lowt¹, v. i. See *lowt*².

lowth (lôth), n. [*low*² + -th. Cf. height.] 1†. Lowness. Bacon, Works, p. 272.—2. pl. Lowlands. Halliwell. [Prov. Eng.]

low-warp (lô'wârp), a. Same as basse-voce.

low-worm (lô'wôrm), n. [*low*² (?) + worm.] In farriery, a disease of horses resembling shingles.

Loxa bark. See *bark*².

loxarthrus (lok-sâr'thrus), n. [NL., < Gr. λόγος, slanting, oblique (see loxia), + άρθρον, a joint.]

In pathol., an obliquity of a joint without dislocation or sprain, as in clubfoot.

loxia (lok'-si-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. λοξός, slanting, crosswise, oblique, indirect, ambiguous (> L. lusus, dislocated); prob. akin to λοκρίς, crosswise, and to L. obliquus, slanting; see lox- and oblique.] 1. In pathol., a distortion of the head toward one side; wryneck; torticollis.—2. [cop.] A genus of fringilline birds. (a) A group containing a great number of Fringillidae whose bills are stout, crooked, or otherwise notable. (b) In a restricted sense, the crossbills, or those Fringillidae whose bills are metagnathous. In this sense Cuculix is a synonym. The common red crossbill is Loxia curvirostris; the white-winged crossbill is L. leucoptera; the parrot-crossbill of Europe is L. pylopittacus. There are several others, mostly boreal or alpine birds, of North America, Asia, and Europe. See cut under crossbill.

Loxiadae, Loxiidae (lok-si'-ä-dä, -i-dä), n. pl. [NL., < Loxia + -ada, -ida.] Same as Loxiinae.

loxian (lok'-si-an), a. and n. [< Loxia + -an.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to the Loxiinae. Also loxiane.

II. n. A crossbill or some other member of the Loxiinae.

Loxiinae, Loxiinae (lok-si-i-nä, -ä-nä), n. pl. [NL., < Loxia + -ina, -ana.] A subfamily of Fringillidae, named from the genus Loxia, containing a number of grosbeaks, crossbills, and other finches agreeing in no definable particulars. Also Loxiadae, Loxiidae. See Cuculix.

loxine (lok'-si-in), a. Same as loxian.

loxoclase (lok'-sö-kläs), n. [< Gr. λοξός, slanting, & κλάσις, fracture.] A variety of orthoclase occurring in grayish-white or yellowish crystals at Hammond, St. Lawrence county, New York. Named on the supposition that it was peculiar in having orthodagonal cleavage.

loxocosm (lok'-sö-közm), n. [< Gr. λοξός, slanting, & κόσμος, world.] An instrument to illustrate the effect of the obliquity of the earth's axis in different seasons upon the length of the day.

Loxodon (lok'-sö-don), n. [NL.: see loxodont.] 1. A genus of sharks. Müller and Henle, 1841.—2. A genus of living and fossil proboscidean mammals, of which the African elephant, Elephas or Loxodon africanus, is the type, distinguished from the Asiatic elephant, Elephas or Elephas indicus, by the shallow and open intervals between the ridges of the teeth, the cement forming merely a thin coat. See Elephas, elephant. Falconer, 1857. Also Loxodontia.

loxodont (lok'-sö-dont), a. and n. [< Gr. λοξός, slanting, & ὀδόν (odont-) = E. tooth.] 1. a. Having teeth like those of elephants of the genus Loxodon.

II. n. An elephant with loxodont dentition, as the living African species or any fossil one.

Loxodonta (lok'-sö-don'tä), n. [NL.: see Loxodon.] Same as Loxodon, 2. F. Cuvier.

loxodrome (lok'-sö-drom), n. [< Gr. λοξός, slanting, oblique, & δρόμος, a running, course, & δρομή, run.] A loxodromic line.

loxodromic (lok'-sö-drom'ik), a. [As loxodrome + -ic.] Pertaining to oblique sailing, or sailing by the rhumb; as, loxodromic tables.—Loxodromic chart or projection, a chart or projection having the property (among others) that a straight line drawn on it corresponds to a spiral on the sphere which intersects the meridian at the same constant angle. Commonly called Mercator projection.—Loxodromic curve, line, or spiral, the path of a ship when her course is directed constantly toward the same point of the compass, in a direction oblique to the equator, so as to cut all the meridians at equal angles; a rhumb-line. Its stereographic projection is a logarithmic spiral, provided the center of projection is taken in the axis of the sphere. It always approaches the pole, but never reaches it; so that a ship, by following always the same oblique course, would continually approach nearer and nearer to the pole of the earth without ever arriving at it. See rhumb. Also called loxodromic line.

loxodromy (lok'-sö-drom'i), n. [Pl. of loxodromic; see -ia.] The art of oblique sailing by the loxodrome or rhumb, which makes an equal angle with each meridian.

loxodromism (lok'-sö-drom'izm), n. [As loxodrome + -ism.] The tracing of a loxodromic curve or line; the act of moving as if in a loxodromic curve.

loxodromy (lok'-sö-drom'i), n. [As loxodrome + -y.] Loxodromies.

Loxolophodon (lok'-sö-lof'ö-don), n. [NL.: see loxolophodont.] A genus of huge extinct mammals with loxolophodont dentition, of the order Amblypoda (Cope) or Dinocerata (Marsh). See Dinatheriidae.

loxolophodont (lok'-sö-lof'ö-dont), a. [< Gr. λοξός, slanting, oblique, & λόφος, a crest, & ὀδόν (odont-) = E. tooth.] In odontog., obliquely lophodont; applied to a form of dentition, as in Loxolophodon or Urdinotherium, in which the upper molars have the anterior internal tubercle connected by oblique crests with two external tubercles, the posterior internal one being rudimentary or wanting.

Loxops (lok'-sops), n. [NL., < Gr. λοξός, slanting, oblique, & ὤψ, eye, face.] 1. A genus of birds peculiar to the Sandwich Islands, belonging to the family Diaceidae, having the bill like that of a linnet. L. coelestis is called the scarlet creeper. It is a small bird, $\frac{1}{4}$ inches long, of an orange and rufous coloration. L. rosea and L. eurus are other species. The bird of Bow Island, formerly named Loxops inornata is now known as Pinaroloxius inornatus. J. Cabanis, 1847.—2. A genus of plant-bugs of the family Capsidae, having the head undilated and the beak extending to the hind border of the metapleuron. They are all European. Nöder, 1858.

Loxosoma (lok'-sö-sö-mä), n. [NL., < Gr. λοξός, slanting, oblique, & σώμα, body.] A remarkable genus of entoproctous Polyzoa, species of which, as L. neapolitanum, are parasitic upon other polyzoans and upon acellularians, being fixed by the narrow end of the stalked body.

Loxosomatidae (lok'-sö-sö-mat'i-dä), n. pl. [NL., < Loxosoma (Loxosomat-) + -idae.] A family of parasitic entoproctous Polyzoa, of solitary habit and long-stalked form, having numerous tentacles, a cement-gland in the stalk, and no partition between the stalk and the cell. Reproduction is by gemmation, the buds separating from the parent and no colonies being formed.

loy (loi), n. [Origin obscure.] In agri., a long narrow spade used in stony lands. Farmer's Encyc. [Prov. Eng.]

loyal (loi), n. [By spherism from alloy.] Same as alloy.

Carato [It.], the touching or refining or loye of gold; a weight or degree called a carat. Florio.

loyal (loi'al), a. [< F. loyal, OF. lial (also leal, leal, > E. leal) = Sp. leg. leal = It. leale, faithful, loyal (Sp. leg. legal = It. legale, legal), < L. legalis, pertaining to law; see legal, of which loyal (with leal) is a doublet. Cf. royal, real, regal, similarly related.] 1. True or faithful in allegiance; keeping faith or truth; constant in service, devotion, or regard; not false or treacherous; used especially of allegiance to the sovereign, government, or law, but applied to all other relations of trust or confidence: as, a loyal subject; a loyal friend; to be loyal to one's cause.

The citizens on their part shewed themselves stout and loyal subjects. Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII., p. 180.

There Laodamia with Evadne moves, Unhappy both! but loyal in their loves. Dryden, Æneid, vi.

2. Pertaining to or marked by allegiance or good faith; manifesting fidelity or devotion: as, loyal professions; loyal adherence to a principle. Write loyal cantons of contemned love. Shak., T. N., i. 5. 289.

The loyal warmth of Florian is not cold. Tennyson, Princess, ii.

= Syn. See allegiance.

loyalism (loi'al-izm), n. [= F. loyalisme; as loyal + -ism.] Devotion to a government or cause; the animating principle of loyalists.

The sharpness of the collision with the mother country and with domestic loyalism. N. A. Rev., CXXVII. 185.

loyalist (loi'al-ist), n. [= F. loyaliste; as loyal + -ist.] 1. A partizan supporter of an existing government; one who opposes insurrection or revolution.—2. Specifically, in the American Revolution, a Tory.

loyalness (loi'al-iz), v. t.; pret. and pp. loyalised, ppr. loyalising. [< loyal + -ise.] To impart a loyal spirit to; restore to loyalty.

The work of loyalising that . . . locality has fairly begun. New York Tribune, May 22, 1862.

loyally (loi'al-i), adv. In a loyal manner; faithfully.

loyalness (loi'al-nes), n. Loyalty. [Rare.] loyalty (loi'al-ti), n. [*< ME. lotalie, < OF. lotalie, loyauté (also lealie, leante, > E. lealty), loyalty, F. loyauté = Fr. loyalist, lealtat, lealtat = Sp. lealtad = Pg. lealdade = It. lealtà, < ML. loqalitat (-s), loyalty, also legality; < legalis, loyal, legal; see loyal. Cf. lealty, legality.] The state or quality of being loyal; devotion to a sovereign or a superior; fidelity in duty, service, love, etc.; firm allegiance; constancy.

Master, go on, and I will follow thee To the last gasp, with truth and loyalty. Shak., As you like it, ii. 4. 70.

Upon your loyalty to the state and me, I do command you, sir, not depart Candy. Beau. and Fl., Laws of Candy, ii. 1.

The conformity of our actions to our engagements, whether express or implied, is fidelity. . . . Thus a subject is faithful to the engagement which binds him to the sovereign of the state. If, in such a case, love is added to fidelity, it becomes loyalty.

Howell, Elements of Morality, p. 88.

= Syn. Allegiance, Loyalty, Faith. See allegiance. Loyalist (lö-yö'list), n. [< Loyola + -ist.] A follower of the Spaniard Ignatius of Loyola (1491-1556), founder of the order of Jesuits; a Jesuit. [Rare.]

Of late years that super-politick and irrefragable society of the Loyalists have sprung up the ivy.

Howell, Dodona's Grove, p. 60.

lozel, n. and a. See lozel.

lozenge (lös'enj), n. and a. [Early mod. E. lo-senge; < ME. losenge, losenge, loysenge; < OF. lo-senge, lozange, lozenge, a lozenge, a quadrilateral, a window-pane, also a little square cake of preserved herbs, flowers, etc., F. losange (> ML. losengia, losengia, > It. losangia = Sp. losanje, a rhombus), < OF. losange, losenge, lozenge, flat-tery, guile, deceit (whence, from the notion of 'flattery', 'praise', its use for 'an epitaph, a gravestone, square slab,' and finally 'a window-pane, flat square cake,' etc.), < los, praise.] 1. n. 1. A plane figure with four equal sides, having two acute and two obtuse angles, also called a diamond; a rhomb; also, formerly, any oblique parallelogram.

The rhombus or lozenge figure so visible in this order was also a remarkable form of battle in the Grecian cavalry. Sir T. Browne, Garden of Cyrus, i. 2.

2. Something resembling such a figure in form. (a) In her.: (1) A common bearing of this form; it is always set with the acute angles above and below. (2) The escutcheon appropriated to women, usually of more or less regular lozenge shape. On a hatchment the bearings of a widow are so displayed.

With courounes wrought ful of loysenges. Chaucer, House of Fame, i. 1317.

(b) A small cake of sugar, or confection, often modicated, originally in the form of a rhomb, but now variously shaped.

For to make lozenges to comfort the stomach. Pathway to Health, bl. 1. (Nares.)

(c) A pane of glass for window-glazing, either lozenge-shaped or square, but intended to be set diagonally; a quarrel. (d) An envelop-blank cut out by a punching-machine. (e) In the cutting of brilliants, one of the four quins of the upper surface or crown. See quins. (f) A spangle. Prompt. Parv., p. 313.—Lozenges in cross, in her., a cross usually of four lozenges. When, more rarely, five or a larger number of lozenges are used, one lozenge forms the center of the cross.

II. a. In decorative art, divided by diagonal lines into diamonds or lozenges: a common distribution of decorative design in the fourteenth century: as, a lozenge pattern. Tapestries of this epoch are often so divided, each lozenge being filled with some heraldic bearing, and the background of miniatures in manuscripts often has the same pattern.

lozenge-coach (lös'enj-kösh), n. A dowager's carriage, as bearing a widow's arms on a lozenge.

I am retired hither like an old summer-dowager; only that I have no toad-eater to take the air with me in the back part of my lozenge-coach, and be accided.

Walpole, To Mann (1746), II. 62.

lozenged (lös'enjd), a. [< lozenge + -ed.] 1. Formed in the shape of a lozenge.

The lozenged panes of a very small latticed window. Charlotta Brontë, Jane Eyre, xviii.

2. In soöl.: (a) Rhomboidal or rhombic. (b) Divided by raised lines into rhomboidal or lozenge-shaped spaces.

lozengee, a. See lozengey.

lozenge-fret (lös'enj-fret), n. See fret.

lozenge-goad (lös'enj-göd), n. A goad-spur the point of which is approximately lozenge-shaped. Also lozenge-spur.

lozenge-graver (lös'enj-grä'ver), n. A graving-tool having a rhomb- or diamond-shaped cross-section. The belly of the graver is formed by two faces intersecting at an angle of less than 90°.

lozenge-machine (lös'enj-mä-shén'), n. A confectioner's machine for rolling dough, paste, or confections into thin sheets which are cut by means of stamps into lozenge-shaped cakes or pieces.

lozenge-molding (lös'enj-möl'ding), n. Same as lozenge-fret (which see, under fret).

lozenge-shaped (lös'enj-shäpt), a. Having the form of a lozenge or rhomb; by extension, square but set diagonally. Compare lozengey.

lozenge-spur (lös'enj-spér), n. Same as lozenge-goad.

lozenge-tool (lös'enj-töl), n. Same as lozenge-graver.

losengewise (los'enj-wis), adv. In her., arranged in the form of a losenge.

losengy, losengee (los'en-jī, -jē), a. [< OF. losenge, < losenge, losenge: see losenge.] In her., having the whole surface covered with losenges or formed into losenge-shaped divisions. This is very often depicted with exact squares set cornerwise.—Losengy barry, in her., having the whole surface occupied with losenges which are divided again barwise or horizontally, therefore divided into triangles of which those of one tincture point up and the others down.

L. S. An abbreviation of Latin locus sigilli, 'place of the seal'; usually inserted within brackets in copies of documents to indicate the position of the seal in the originals.

L. S. D., l. s. d. An abbreviation of Latin (Middle or New Latin) libra, solidi, denarii—that is, pounds, shillings, pence; hence, colloquially, money; cash; funds. Also £ s. d. [Eng.]

Lt. A contraction of Lieutenant or of its abbreviation Lieut.

lu (lū), n. and v. Same as loo.

lubber (lub'ér), n. and a. [Formerly also lubberd; a var., with substituted suffix -ard, of lubber.] I. n. Same as lubber.

Thou slovenly lubber, and tosyah fellow, what idle toys goest thou fantasicating!

Benvenuto, Passengers' Dialogues (1612).

It was now the part of the huge porter to step forward; but the lubberd was . . . overwhelmed with confusion of spirit.

Scott, Kenilworth, xxx.

II. a. Lubberly.

Conscious how much the hand
Of lubberd Labour needs his watchful eye.

Cooper, Task, III. 400.

lubber (lub'ér), n. [Formerly also lubbar, lubberd, and lubbard; < ME. lobre, lobur, akin to loby, E. looby, < W. llob, a dolt, lubber: see lobi.] A heavy, clumsy fellow; a sturdy, awkward dolt; applied especially by sailors to any one of the crew who is deficient in seamanship.

Grete lobres and longe that loth weore to swynke
Clotheden hem in copes to beo known for bretheren.

Piers Plowman (A), ProL, l. 52.

They went to the Grammar schole little children; they came from thence great lubbers.

Aecham, The Scholemaster, p. 82.

"It will be long," said the master then,
"Ere this great lubber do thrive on the sea."

The Noble Fisherman (Child's Ballads, V. 331).

Lubber's hole (naut.), the vacant space between the head of a lower mast and the edge of the top, through which Rigging of Ship's Top.

f, f, top; g, g, lubber's holes; A, A, futtock-shrouds.

sailors may mount without going over the rim by the futtock-shrouds. Formerly, when tops were differently constructed, it was regarded by seamen as fit to be used only by lubbers and greenhorns.—Lubber's point (naut.). Same as lubber's hole.

lubber (lub'ér), v. i. [< lubber, n.] To sail in a lubberly or clumsy manner. [Rare.]

We set our primitive sail; and . . . soon found ourselves lubbering over the beautiful lake at a speed of from two to two and a half miles an hour.

The Century, XXX. 742.

lubber-cock (lub'ér-kok), n. A turkey-cock. [Prov. Eng.] lubber-grasshopper (lub'ér-grās'hop-ér), n. 1. The clumsy locust, Brachystola magna, a very large lubberly insect common on the great plains of the western United States. See cut under Brachystola.—2. The large short-winged insect Romalea microptera, which abounds in the Gulf States and feeds on all succulent plants. It is notable as having no known natural enemies. It is from 2.75 to 3.15 inches long, very thick-bodied, and clumsy in its movements.

lubberhead (lub'ér-hed), n. A stupid fellow. [Prov. Eng.] lubber-hole (lub'ér-hól), n. Same as lubber's hole (which see, under lubber).

Lubberland (lub'ér-land), n. The land of Cockayne.

Good mother, how shall we find a pig if we do not look about for it? will it run off o' the spit into our mouths, think you, as in Lubberland, and cry we, we?

B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, III. 2, Peter's Prophecy.

lubber-line (lub'ér-līn), n. Naut., a black vertical line drawn on the inside of the compass-box, which represents the vessel's head in steering. Also called lubber's point.

lubberliness (lub'ér-lī-nēs), n. The state or condition of being lubberly; sturdy clumsiness.

You, like a lazy hulk, whose stupendous magnitude is full big enough to load an elephant with lubberliness.

Tom Brown, Works, II. 179.

lubberly (lub'ér-lī), a. [< lubber + -ly.] Like a lubber; clumsy; awkward.

By my Soul, the Girl is spudd already—d'ye think she'll ever endure a great lubberly Tar-pawlin?

Congress, Love for Love, II. 10. (Darwin.)

lubberly (lub'ér-lī), adv. [< lubberly, a.] Clumsily; awkwardly.

lubberwort (lub'ér-wért), n. Any food or drink which makes one idle and stupid. [Prov. Eng.] lubric (lū'brik), a. [< OF. lubrique, slippery, lascivious, F. lubrique, lascivious, = Sp. lubrico = Pg. It. lubrico, slippery, lascivious, < L. lubricus, slippery, uncertain, deceitful.] 1. Having a smooth surface; slippery; hence, voluble; glib.

Then starts she suddenly into a throng
Of short thick sobs, whose thundering volleys float,
And roul themselves over her lubric throat,
In panting murmurs.

Crashaw, Musick's Duel.

2. Unsteady; wavering.

Through the deep and lubric waves of state and court.

Sir H. Wotton, Reliquie, p. 202.

3. Lascivious; wanton; lewd.

Why were we hurried down
This lubric and pollute age
(Nay, added fat pollutions of our own)
To increase the steaming ordures of the stage?

Dryden, Ode to the Memory of Mrs. Anne Killgrew, l. 63.

[Obsolete or rare in all uses.] lubrical (lū'bri-kəl), a. [< lubric + -al.] Same as lubric.

What, shall thy lubrical and glibbery muse Live!

B. Jonson, Poetaster, v. 1.

lubricant (lū'bri-kən), n. Same as leprechaun.

By the mandrake's dreadful groans,
By the Lubrican's sad moans,
By the noise of dead men's bones
In charnel-dungeons rattling.

Drayton, Nymphidia, l. 418.

lubricant (lū'bri-kən), a. and n. [< L. lubricant(-a), pp. of lubricare, make smooth: see lubricate.] I. a. Lubricating.

II. n. Any natural or artificial material that may be used to lubricate the rubbing surfaces of machinery, in order to lessen their friction upon each other. Natural non-volatile oils and greases are the typical lubricants; but the variety of materials and compounds used is very great, including some metallic alloys.

lubricant-tester (lū'bri-kən-tes'tér), n. A form of testing-machine for determining the lubricating values of oils. This tester acts by recording the friction developed under a given power.

lubricate (lū'bri-kāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. lubricated, pp. lubricating. [< L. lubricatus, pp. of lubricare (> It. lubicare = Sp. Pg. lubicar, make slippery, < lubricus, slippery: see lubric.)]

1. To make smooth or slippery; supply or smear with some substance, especially one of an oily or greasy nature, for the purpose of diminishing friction: as, to lubricate the bearings of a machine.

There seemed a pool of honey about his heart, which lubricated all his speech and action with fine jets of mead.

Emerson, English Traits, p. 291.

2. In photog., to coat or smear (a print) with some glazing agent, as Castile soap dissolved in alcohol, or a compound of beeswax and Venice turpentine, as a preliminary to burnishing.

lubricate (lū'bri-kāt), a. [< L. lubricatus, pp. of lubricare, make slippery: see lubricate, v.] Slippery. [Rare.] lubricating-oil (lū'bri-kāt-ing-oil), n. Any oil that is used or is suitable for lubrication; specifically, a thick oil produced in the process of refining paraffin-oil and petroleum.

lubrication (lū'bri-kā'shon), n. [*< L. as if lubricatio(-n), < lubricare, make slippery: see lubricate, v.] The act of lubricating, or the state of being lubricated.

There is a sort of previous lubrication, such as the boar-constrictor applies to any subject of digestion, which is requisite to familiarise the mind with a startling or a complex novelty.

De Quincey, Style, l.

lubricative (lū'bri-kā-tiv), a. [< lubricate + -ive.] Capable of lubricating; supplying lubrication. [Rare.]

What he desires is that the prig should be good in some oily and lubricative way, so as not to jar the nerves of those who are less good.

S. Lander, The English Novel, p. 297.

lubricator (lū'bri-kā-tor), n. [< lubricate + -or.]

One who or that which lubricates. Specifically—(a) A device or contrivance for keeping the rubbing parts of machines, bearings, shafting, etc., supplied with some lubricant to diminish friction. These appliances are made in a great variety of forms, and may be divided into three classes—those for lubricating the cylinders of motors, those for lubricating the axles of cars and road-vehicles, and those for shafting and machinery in general. In all the aim is the same, to furnish a limited but constant supply of the lubricant to the moving parts. See empermeator. (b) A machine for waxing bullets, so that when fired they will clean the gun; also, a wad containing a lubricant and followed by a felt washer, attached to the projectile in a rifled gun that the operation of firing may clean the piece. (c) In photog., a glazing agent, as a solution of Castile soap in spirit, or a compound of beeswax and turpentine, with which prints are smeared before burnishing to improve the gloss.—Lubricator alarm-signal, in nauc., a device for giving an alarm when, from failure of lubrication, a journal becomes heated.

lubricity (lū'bri-sī-tī), n. [< F. lubricité = Sp. lubricidad = Pg. lubricidade = It. lubricità, slipperiness, lasciviousness, < ML. lubricitas(-is), slipperiness, < L. lubricus, slippery: see lubric.]

1. The state or quality of being lubric or slippery; slipperiness of surface, literal or figurative; hence, instability; transitoriness; evanescence; evasiveness.

There cannot be two more pregnant instances of the Lubricity, and instableness of Mankind than the Decay of these two ancient Nations [the Greeks and the Jews].

Howell, Letters, II. 57.

I take this evanescence and lubricity of all things . . . to be the most unhandsome part of our condition.

Emerson, Experience.

That learned jurisconsult, with characteristic lubricity, had evaded the dangerous honor.

Molay, Dutch Republic, II. 122.

2. Capacity for lubrication.

The mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oyl, and the oyl preserves the mucilage from inspissation, and contracting the consistency of a jelly.

Ray, Works of Creation, II.

3. Lasciviousness; lewdness; salacity.

Wantonness and lubricity.

Dryden.

Of these [symbols of Priapus] the goat is one that most frequently occurs . . . as this animal has always been distinguished for its lubricity.

Knight, Anc. Art and Myth (1876), p. 21.

When one looks at the popular literature of the French at this moment . . . and at the life of which this literature of theirs is the index, one is tempted to make a goddess out of a word of their own, and then, like the town clerk of Ephesus, to ask: "What man is there that knoweth not that the city of the French is a worshipping of the great goddess Lubricity?"

M. Arnold, Nineteenth Century, XV. 672.

lubricous (lū'bri-kus), a. [< L. lubricus, slippery: see lubric.] 1. Same as lubric.

Much less shall I positively determine anything in matters so lubricous and uncertain.

Glennville, Pre-existence of Souls, xii.

2. Having a smooth, slippery surface, appearing as if oiled or varnished, as certain algae and the elytra of certain Coleoptera.

lubrifaction (lū'bri-fak'shon), n. [Irreg. < L. lubricus, slippery, + factio(-n), a making, < facio, pp. of facere, make: see -fy.] The act or operation of lubricating, or of making slippery.

The sixth cause is lubrifaction and relaxation; as we see in medicines emollient, such as are milk, honey, mallowes, etc.

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 41.

lubrification (lū'bri-fī-kā'shon), n. [= F. lubrification; as lubrify + -ation: see -fy, -fation.] Same as lubrifaction.

lubrify, v. t. [< OF. lubrifier, make slippery, contr. < L. lubricus, slippery, + -ficare, make: see -fy.] To make slippery. [Colgrave.]

Lucanids (lū-kan'ī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucanus + -ids.] A family of lamellicorn coleopterous insects, the lamellae of whose antennal club are incapable of close apposition, and whose mandibles are large and powerful in the male; the stag-beetles. The form of the lucanids is generally elongate, and the elytra cover the pygidium; in some there are stridulating organs. They are usually of plain dark colors, but some, such as species of Lucanus in Australia and of Chlorocnema in Chile, are brilliant. Upward of 600 species are described. They most abound in warm wooded countries, and live during the day in trunks of trees, logs, etc., taking flight at dusk. The larvae of the European species live in willow and oak, where they remain untransformed for years. See Lucanus.

The same or a corresponding group is called Lucanids, Lucanidae, Lucanidæ, etc.

Lucanus (lū-kan'us), n. [NL., so called in allusion to the glistering elytral surface, < ML. lucanus, sunrise, < L. lucere, shine: see lucant.] The typical genus of Lucanids; stag-beetles proper, with emarginate eyes, geniculate antennae, mentum entire, covering the ligula and maxilla, and fore tibiae pectinate. The branching antler-like mandibles of the North American L. elaphus are sometimes three fourths of an inch long. L. cervus is the corresponding European species. L. lama is a large stag-beetle of the United States, from 9 to 13 lines long, with smaller piner-like mandibles with a single snag. See Lucanidae and stag-beetle.

lucarne (lū-kār'n'), n. [F. lucarne, OF. lucarne, a roof-window (= Goth. lucarn, a light, lamp), < L. lucerna, a lamp; see lucern.] A dormer- or roof-window; also, a light or small window in a spire.

lucanite (lū-kās-īt'), n. [Named after Dr. H. S. Lucas.] A variety of vermiculite occurring with corundum in Macon county, Georgia.

lucaynet (lū-kān'), n. [Also dial. lowcome; an orig. error for lucarne (?).] In arch., same as lucarne.

Lucchese (lū-kēs' or -kēs'), a. and n. [It. Lucchese, < Luca (see def.).] I. a. Of or pertaining to the city of Luca in Italy, or to its inhabitants.

The most precious of the Lucchese relics, a cedar-wood crucifix, carved, according to the legend, by Nicodemus, and miraculously conveyed to Luca in 752.

Encyc. Brit., XV. 38.

II. n. sing. and pl. An inhabitant or inhabitants of the city or province (formerly a republic, afterward a duchy) of Luca, on the north-west coast of Italy.

luc¹ (lūs), n. [Formerly also lucic, lucy; < ME. luc, lucose, < OF. luc, luz (dim. lucol and luot) = Fg. lucio, a luce, < LL. lucius, a fish, perhaps the pike.] The pike (a fish), especially when full-grown.

In heraldry the luc or pike occurs in the arms of the Lacy or Lucie family so far back as the reign of Henry II.

Stand. They [the Shallows] may give the dowsen white luc in their coat.

Shel. The luc is the fresh fish.

Shak. M. W. of W., I. 1. 22.

The mighty luc or pike is taken to be the tyrant, as the salmon is the king of the fresh waters.

J. Walton, Complete Angler, I. 8.

A pike, first a Hurling pike, then a Pickerel, then a Pike, then a Luc or Lucie.

luc² (lūs), n. [Origin obscure.] A rut. [Prov. Eng.] lucenot, n. [ME. lucenot, < OF. lucenot* = Sp. lucenot, < L. lucen (t)-s, shining; see lucen.] The state or quality of being lucen; light.

O lux vera, grauit us gowr lucenot,
That with the spryte of error I nat seduct be.

Digby Mysteries, p. 90. (Hallivell.)

lucency (lū-sen-si), n. [See lucenot.] The state or quality of being lucen; brightness; luster; splendor. [Rare.]

A name of some note and lucency, but lucency of the Mother-fire sort.

Carlyle, French Rev., III. I. 6.

lucen¹ (lū-sen'), a. [= F. luisant = Sp. luciente, < L. lucen (t)-s, ppr. of lucere, shine; connected with luc (luc), light, lumen, a light, luna, the moon, etc.; < √ luc, shine, = Teut. √ luh, shine, in AS. leohit, etc., light; see further under light.] From L. lucere are also ult. E. lucen¹, lucid, elucidate, translucent, etc.] Bright; shining; lustrous; resplendent.

I meant the day-stars should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucen seat.

E. Jonson, Epigrams, LXV.

Lucen styrops tinct with cinnamon.

Keats, Eve of St. Agnes.

lucern¹ (lū-sēr'n), n. [< ME. lucern, < OF. lucerne, lucerne, lucarne, lucarne, a lamp, also glow-worm, also, like F. lucerne, a roof-window (see lucarne), = Sp. lucerna, < L. lucerna, a lamp, < lucere, shine; see lucen.] A lamp.

A multitude of wreaths, tablets, masks, festoons, lucerna, [and] genti holding lyres.

C. G. Perkins, Italian Sculpture, p. 375.

lucern² (lū-sēr'n), n. [Also lucerna, lucerne, lucorn, lucerne, lucarne, lucerno; appar. < OF. lucerne, lucerne, lucarne, fem. of lucernier, a lynx (see lucernier), confused with OF. lucerna, lucerne, lucarne, a female leopard or panther, and its hide.] 1. A lynx; also, the fur of the lynx, formerly in great esteem.

The Lucerne, the Banner, the Sable, the Marton, the black and dunn fox.

Baltick's Voyages, I. 479.

St. A sort of hunting-dog.

Let me have My Lucerne too, or dogs I need to hunt
Beasts of most rapine.

Chapman, Busy D'Ambola, III. 1.

lucern³, n. See lucerne.

lucerna (lū-sēr'n), n. [L.: see lucern.] 1. An ancient lamp. See lucern.—2. A quasi-popular name for the lantern-gurnard, Trigla lucerna, given in allusion to the brilliant silvery band along the side of this fish.—3. [cap.] A genus of pulmonate gastropods, of the family Helicidae, having the aperture toothed and more or less twisted. Humphreys, 1797.

lucernal (lū-sēr'nāl), a. [< lucern + -al.] Of or pertaining to a lamp or other artificial light.—Lucernal microscope. See microscope.

Lucernaria (lū-sēr-nā-rī-ā), n. [NL., < L. lucerna, a lamp; see lucern.] The typical genus of Lucernaridae. These animals are small, gelatinous, semi-transparent, and variously colored or phosphorescent marine organisms (jellyfishes), either swimming freely by rhythmic contraction and expansion of the umbrella, or fixed to some submerged object by means of a stalk or peduncle which grows out of the back (aboral surface) of the disk and constitutes a hydrochela or rootstalk. In this latter state the animal is trumpet- or bell-shaped, resembling a little hand-bell standing on the end of its handle, with the other end expanded into an eight-rayed limb or disk, each ray ending in a little bundle or tuft of tentacles, and the center of the disk being occupied by a single polypite with a four-lobed mouth leading into the body-cavity. See Lucernaridae.

Lucernariade (lū-sēr-nā-rī-ā-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucernaria + -ade.] An order of the subclass Lucernarida, class Hydrozoa, including those discophorans or jellyfishes whose polypite is single and may be fixed by a proximal aboral hydrochela. The umbrella margin has short tentacular processes, and the reproductive elements are developed in the primitive hydrosome without the intervention of free zooids. The genus Lucernaria may be regarded as the type, and the group itself is by some considered a synthetic or generalized type of structure, like that from which various specialized forms of scaphopoda may have been derived.

lucernarian (lū-sēr-nā-rī-ān), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the genus Lucernaria or the Lucernaridae; calycozoan.

II. n. A member of the genus Lucernaria or of the family Lucernaridae; a calycozoan. See cut at Hydrozoa (fig. 5).

Lucernarida (lū-sēr-nā-rī-ā-dā), n. pl. [NL., < Lucernaria + -ida.] A subclass of Hydrozoa, in which the base of the hydrosome is developed into an umbrella in the walls of which are the reproductive organs. It is a prime division of Hydrozoa, equivalent to Discophora in a common acceptation of that term, and has been divided like the latter into three orders: Rhizostoma or Rhizostomida, free and with multiple polypites; Monostoma or Polypida, free and with single polypite; and Lucernarida, free or fixed and with single polypite. The last consists of one family, co-extensive with the order, and is also called Calycozoa. See Discophora.

lucernaridan (lū-sēr-nā-rī-ā-dān), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Lucernarida.

II. n. A member of the Lucernarida; a discophoran; an acraspedote medusan or jellyfish.

Lucernaridæ (lū-sēr-nā-rī-ā-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucernaria + -idæ.] The typical family of Lucernarida. It contains discophorans with the umbrella margin simple and undivided, without hollow arms or margin-laps, and with simple tentacles, and having on the exumbrella a prolongation by means of which they affix themselves to foreign bodies. Genera referred to this family are Lucernaria, Dopatrium, and Carduella.

lucernaroid (lū-sēr-nā-rī-ōid), n. [< Lucernaria + -oid.] The reproductive zooid of any of the Lucernarida. Nicholson, Zool., 1878, p. 133.

lucerne, lucern (lū-sēr'n), n. [< F. lucerne, formerly lucerne, lucerne.] A leguminous plant, Medicago sativa, a highly valuable pasture- and forage-plant, cultivated from ancient times, now widely spread in temperate climates. In the United States it has been cultivated with especial success in southern California. It is greatly relished by animals, and under favorable conditions yields several crops in a year. It is also an improver of soil. In the western United States it is best known under the Spanish name alfalfa, having been introduced into California from South America. Also called Spanish trefoil, French, breastnut, or Chilian clover, and in British usage medic or purple medick.

Lucerne hammer. See hammer.

Lucianist (lū-si-ān-ist), n. [< Lucian (see def.) + -ist.] 1. One of the followers of Lucian or Lucan, a Marcionite leader in the second century, who taught that the actual soul and body of a man would not come forth in the resurrection, but some representative of them.—2. Same as Collucianist.

lucid (lū-sid), a. [= F. lucide = Sp. lucido = Pg. It. lucido, < L. lucidus, light, bright, clear, < lucere, shine; see lucen.] 1. Emitting light; shining; bright; resplendent; as, the lucid orbs of heaven. [Poetical, except in some technical uses. See second quotation, and def. 5.]

A court

Compact of lucid marbles.

Tennyson, Princess, II.

Lucid stars are those which are visible without a telescope. Newcomb and Holden, Astronomy, p. 45.

2. Transmitting or reflecting light; clear; transparent; pellucid; as, a lucid stream.

Before each lucid panel fuming stood

A censor fed with myrrh and spiced wood.

Keats, Lamia, II.

So wide the loneliness, so lucid the air.

Lowell, Appledore.

3. Marked by intellectual clearness or brightness; free from obscurity or confusion of thought, or, specifically, from delirium; clear-headed; sane; as, a lucid mind; lucid perceptions; lucid intervals in insanity.

After some gentle slumbers, and unusual Dreams, about the dawns of the Day, I had a lucid interval.

Howell, Letters, II. 22.

4. Presenting a clear view; easily understood; distinct; as, a lucid order or arrangement; a lucid style of writing.

A singularly lucid and interesting abstract of the debate.

Macaulay.

5. In entom.: (a) Smooth and very shining; reflecting light like polished metal. (b) Giving light; phosphorescent; luciferous.—6. In bot., having a shining surface.—Lucid interval, in insanity, a period of sanity occurring in the midst of insane behavior; an intermission resembling restoration of health, as distinguished from a mere diminution of the disease.

lucida (lū-sī-dā), n.; pl. lucidae (-dē). [NL. (se. stella, star), fem. of lucidus, bright; see lucid.] A star easily seen by the naked eye, as opposed to a telescopic star; also, the brightest star of a constellation, or the brightest component of a double or multiple star.

lucidity (lū-sī-dī-tī), n. [= F. lucidité = It. lucidità, < L. as if luciditas* (t)-s, < lucidus, light, bright, clear; see lucid.] The state of being lucid, in any sense of that word; lucidness; especially, clearness of conception or expression; intellectual transparency.

He [Voltaire] looked on things straight; and he had a marvelous logic and lucidity.

M. Arnold, Mixed Essays, p. 160.

Thought-transference is out of the question, and M. Richet has recourse to the theory of a sort of clairvoyance to which he gives the generic name of lucidity, a vision in which the ordinary optical impediments no longer act as such.

Science, XII. 47.

=Eyn. Clearness, plainness, etc. See perspicuity.

lucidly (lū-sī-dī-tī), adv. In a lucid manner; with brightness; clearly.

He argued the matter during two hours, and no doubt lucidly and forcibly.

Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xiv.

lucidness (lū-sī-dī-nēs), n. The quality or state of being lucid; lucidity; transparency.

The lucidness was constant, though the vial that contained it was kept stopp'd.

Boyle, Works, p. 332.

Lucifer (lū-sī-fēr), n. [= F. Lucifer = Sp. Lucifero = Pg. Lucifero = It. Lucifero, < L. lucifer, light-bringing, applied to the moon (Diana), and to the morning star (Venus), and poet. to day, < luc (luc), light, & ferre = E. bear: see lucen, light, and bear.] The equiv. Gr. word is phosphoros; see phosphorus.] 1. The morning star; the planet Venus when she appears in the morning before sunrise: when she follows the sun, or appears in the evening, she is called Hesperus, or the evening star. Applied by Isaiah figuratively to a king of Babylon.

How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations!

Is. xiv. 12.

2. The prince of darkness; Satan. [This use arises from an early opinion that in the above passage from Isaiah reference was made to Satan.]

And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,

Never to hope again.

Shak., Ham. VIII., III. 2. 371.

Pandemonium, city and proud seat

Of Lucifer; so by allusion call'd

Of that bright star to Satan paragon'd.

Milton, P. L., x. 425.

3. [L. c.] A match ignitable by friction with any surface, or with a specially prepared surface. It is usually made of a small splint of wood tipped with some inflammable substance, as a mixture of potassium chlorate and antimony sulphid, or more commonly of phosphorus and potassium nitrate. Also called lucifer match.

Flowering Branch of Lucerne (Medicago sativa). a, flower; b, fruit.

Every traveller should provide himself with a good handy steel, proper flint, and unfailing tinder, because Lucifers are liable to accidents. J. T. Fields, Underbrush, p. 180.

4. The typical genus of Luciferidae.—5. (a) A genus of humming-birds. A species of northern Mexico and adjoining parts of the United States is Trochilus or Calothorus lucifer, having the gorget prolonged into a ruff. (b) [I. c.] Any humming-bird of the genus Calothorus or Lucifer, of which there are several species.

Luciferian¹ (lū-si-fē-ri-an), a. [Lucifer (see def.) + -ian.] Of or pertaining to Lucifer or Satan; devilish.

That all that luciferian exorcism be blotted out.

Jer. Taylor, Dissuasive from Popery, II. § 12.

Luciferian² (lū-si-fē-ri-an), a. and n. [Lucifer (see def.) + -ian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Lucifer, Bishop of Cagliari in the island of Sardinia during the fourth century, or to his followers. II. n. One of the followers of Lucifer, Bishop of Cagliari. The Luciferians were vehement upholders of the Nicene faith, and separated themselves from their fellow-Catholics solely on the ground that the latter showed undue leniency to those who had been received back into the church after forsaking Arianism. Also Luciferia.

Luciferidae (lū-si-fē-ri-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucifer, 4, + -idae.] A family of thoracostracous or podophthalmic crustaceans, typified by the Devil Shrimp, a species of Lucifer.

genus Lucifer, and characterized by the absence of the last pair of thoracic legs. They are consequently excluded from Decapoda, and are either placed with the opossum-shrimps and mantis-shrimps in Stomatopoda, or made a separate tribe, Luciferida, as by Dana.

Luciferite (lū-si-fēr-it), n. [Lucifer (see Luciferian) + -ite.] Same as *Luciferian*².

Luciferous (lū-si-fē-rus), a. [Lucifer, light-bringing (see Lucifer), + -ous.] 1. Giving light; affording light or means of discovery. Boyle, Works, IV. 394. [Rare.]—2. In entom., having phosphorescent organs; applied to insects which emit light, as the glow-worm.—3. [cap.] Of or pertaining to Lucifer or Satan; Luciferian; Satanic. [Rare.]

This Luciferous and glutinous heart.

J. Bradford, Letters (Parker Soc., 1855), II. 32.

Luciferously (lū-si-fē-rus-ly), adv. 1. In a luciferous manner; so as to enlighten or illuminate. Sir T. Browne, Christ. Mor., III. 8. [Rare.]—2. [cap.] Satantically; diabolically.

Every vulgarly-esteemed upstart dares break the dreadful dignity of ancient and autocratic Poets, and presume Luciferously to proclaim in place thereof repugnant precepts of their own spume.

Chapman, Masque of Middle Temple.

Lucific (lū-si-fik), a. [LL. lucifous, light-making, < L. lux (luc), light, + facere, make.] Producing light. N. Grew, Cosmologia Sacra, II. II. § 14. [Rare.]

Luciform (lū-si-fōrm), a. [L. lux (luc), light, + forma, form.] Having the form or nature of light; resembling light.

Plato speaketh of the mind, or soul, as a driver that guides and governs a chariot, which is, not unaptly, styled aiyevēdē, a luciform ethereal vehicle.

By Berkeley, Siris, § 171.

Lucifrant, a. An improper form of *Luciferian*¹. Marston.

Lucifugous (lū-si-fū-gus), a. [L. lucifugus, shunning the light, < lux (luc), light, + fugere, flee.] Shunning light; avoiding daylight; applied to various animals, as bats, cockroaches, etc.

Lucigen (lū-si-jen), n. and a. [L. lux (luc), light, + gen, produce; see -gen.] I. n. A modern lamp of great illuminating power, in which oil is burned under conditions which produce and maintain for probably the longest possible time in an illuminating flame a white heat in the carbon particles. The principle upon which the lamp operates is the atomization of the oil by the action of escaping compressed air heated during its passage to the atomizing jet. The oil and air are thus intimately mingled, at a high temperature at the instant of ignition, in such proportions as to gain the maximum illuminating effect.

II. a. A term applied to a system of lighting by lucigena.

The new system of lighting known as lucigen permits of obtaining an intense light of great brilliancy under very remarkable conditions. Sci. Amer., N. Y., LIX. 147.

Lucidae (lū-si-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucius + -idae.] The pikes, as a family of fishes; same as Esocidae. C. L. Bonaparte.

Lucimeter (lū-sim'e-tēr), n. [L. lux (luc), light, + Gr. μέτρον, measure.] 1. A photometer.—2. A sunshine-recorder designed to measure the combined effect of the duration and intensity of sunshine in promoting evaporation.

Lucina (lū-si-nē), n. [L., the goddess of childbirth, prop. fem. of lucinus, < lux (luc), light; see lucens.] 1. In Rom. myth., the goddess who presided over childbirth, considered as a daughter of Jupiter and Juno, but frequently confused with Juno or with Diana. She corresponded more or less closely to the Greek goddess Eileithyia.—2. [NL.] In zool.: (a) The typical genus of Lucinidae, having both lateral and cardinal teeth. L. dentata is a species whose white shell shows concentric lines of growth overlaid with oblique radiate striation. Bruguière, 1791. (b) A genus of flies of the family Sciomyzidae, containing two large gray European species resembling members of the genus Scatophaga. Meigen, 1830. (c) A genus of orthopterous insects. Walker, 1870.

Lucina pennsylvanica.

Lucinacea (lū-si-nē-sē-ā), n. pl. [NL., < Lucina, 2, + -acea.] A superfamily of integropalliate dimyarian mollusks, represented by the Lucinidae and related families.

Lucinacean (lū-si-nē-sē-an), a. and n. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Lucinacea. II. n. A member of the Lucinacea.

Lucinidae (lū-si-ni-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lucina, 2, + -idae.] A family of integropalliate siphonate bivalve mollusks. The anal and branchial orifices are well defined but scarcely siphonate; the mouth is very small, and the labial palpi are rudimentary; the branchiae are large and double, and the foot is vermiform. The shell is subcircular and equivalve, the hinge typically with two cardinal and two lateral teeth in each valve, but variable and sometimes edentulous; the ligament is marginal and subinternal, and the anterior muscular impression elongated. The genera and species are numerous; the living ones are found in temperate and tropical seas; fossil forms go back to the Silurian. See Lucina.

Lucioid (lū-si-oid), n. and a. [LL. lucius, a pike (see Lucius), + Gr. ειδός, form.] I. n. A fish of the family Esocidae; a pike. Sir J. Richardson.

II. a. Like a pike; esocine.

Luciola (lū-si-ō-lā), n. [NL. (Laporte, 1833), < It. luciola, a firefly, formerly also a glow-worm, < luc, < L. lux (luc), light; see light.] A genus of fireflies of the family Lampyridae, having a short transverse prothorax, carinate, and narrowly margined. It is widely distributed, with over 20 species, usually dark brown and yellow. L. lusitanica is a highly luminous species, which may emit flashes every two or three seconds.

Lucioperca (lū-si-ō-per'kē), n. [NL., < LL. lucius, a pike, + L. perca, perch.] A Cuvierian genus of percoid fishes, synonymous with Silasotellum; the pike-perches. L. andrea is the giant pike-perch of Europe, 8 or 4 feet long, of voracious habits and valuable as a food-fish.

Lucius (lū-si-us), n. [NL., < LL. lucius, a fish, supposed to be the pike; cf. Gr. λύκος, a kind of fish, lit. 'wolf' = L. lupus, wolf; see Lupus. Hence ult. (< LL. lucius) E. luc.] A genus of fishes, the pikes; same as Esoc.

luck¹ (luk), n. [ME. luk, lukke (not found in AS.) = OFries. luk = D. luk, geluk = MLG. lücke, LG. luk (= Iscl. lukka = Sw. lycka = Dan. lykke, < G.) = *OHG. giluocht (not recorded), MHG. gelücke, glücke, G. glück, good fortune, luck, happiness; prob. orig. only HG., the LG. forms being prob., like the Scand., from the HG. Connection with D. lokken = OHG. locchōn, MHG. G. locken = Iscl. lokka = Sw. locka = Dan. lokke, allure, entice, seems improbable, on account of the difference of meaning.] 1. Fortune; hap; that which happens to a person by chance, conceived as having a real tendency to be favorable or unfavorable, or as if there were an inward connection between a succession of fortuitous occurrences having the same character as favorable or unfavorable. Thus gamblers say that one ought to continue to play while the luck is in one's favor and leave off when the luck turns against one.

To tell of good or evil luck.

Of plagues, of dearths, or seasons' quality.

Shak., Sonnets, xiv.

Here's a Trout has taken my fly: I had rather have lost a crown. What luck's this! he was a lovely fish, and turned up a side like a salmon.

Otton, in Walton's Angler, II. 351.

Gay luck to our hunters!—how nobly they ride!

Whittier, Hunters of Men.

2. Good fortune; favorable hap; a supposed something, pertaining to a person, at least for a time, giving to fortuitous events a favorable character; also, in a weakened sense, a fortuitous combination of favorable occurrences.

His tests best become him because they come from him rudely and unvisited: and hee has the lucks commonly to have them favorably.

Dr. Barlow, Micro-cosmographie, A Hunt Man.

They [young men who gamble] think they are "trying their luck" as the phrase is; but if they are convinced that it is not their luck which they are trying, but only a fraction of it, their opponent having the rest in his pocket, they would show themselves . . . averse to risks in which it is more than an even chance against them.

Dr. Morgan, Probabilities, I.

Luck may, and often does, have some share in ephemeral successes, as in a gambler's winnings spent as soon as got, but not in any lasting triumph over time.

Loudell, Study Windows, p. 117.

3. An object with which good fortune is thought to be connected; especially, a vessel for holding liquid, as a drinking-cup. There are several such vessels surviving in England, as the Luck of Edenhall, preserved in a manor-house in the county of Cumberland.

The drinking-glass of crystal tall;

They call it the Luck of Edenhall.

Longfellow, The Luck of Edenhall.

Fisherman's luck. See fisherman.—Greasy luck. See greasy, 9.—To be down on one's luck, to be in bad luck. [Colloq.]

They say that when Mrs. C. was particularly down on her luck, she gave concerts and lessons in music here and there.

Thackeray, Vanity Fair, liv.

=Syn. See happy. luck¹ (luk), v. [ME. lukken (= MLG. lücken); from the noun.] I. intrans. To be lucky. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]

II. trans. To make lucky. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]

luck² (luk), n. [A var. of lock.] A lock of wool twisted on the finger of a spinner.

She straight alipp'd off the Wall and Band,

And laid aside her Lucks and Twitches.

Bloomfield, Richard and Kate, I. 30.

Miss Gisborne's fannel is promised the last of the week — there is a bunch of lucks down cellar; bring them up.

S. Judd, Margaret, I. 2.

Luckenbooth brooch. A brooch of a fashion formerly sold in the Luckenbooths in Edinburgh, usually heart-shaped and of silver, sometimes of more elaborate pattern, as of two hearts conjoined, and often bearing inscriptions. These brooches were used as gifts of love and betrothal.

luckie, n. See *lucky*².

luckily (luk'i-ly), adv. In a lucky manner; fortunately; by good fortune; with a favorable issue: as, luckily we escaped injury.

luckiness (luk'i-nes), n. The state or quality of being lucky or fortunate; good fortune; favorable issue or event.

luckite (luk'it), n. [Lucy (Boy) (see def.) + -ite.] A variety of the mineral melanterite, or hydrous ferrous sulphate, containing a small amount of manganese. It is found at the "Lucky Boy" silver-mine in Utah.

luckless (luk'les), a. [*luck*¹ + -less.] 1. Having no luck; suffering mischance; unlucky; unsuccessful: as, a luckless gambler.

Ah, luckless poet! stretch thy lungs and roar.

Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. l. 334.

2. Unattended by luck; bringing or marked by ill luck or misfortune; unfortunate; unfavorable: as, a luckless adventure.

The night-crow cried, abiding luckless time.

Shak., 3 Hen. VI., v. c. 25.

=Syn. Unlucky, ill-starred, ill-fated.

lucklessly (luk'les-ly), adv. In a luckless manner; unfortunately; unsuccessfully.

lucklessness (luk'les-nes), n. The state of being luckless or unfortunate. Imp. Dict.

luck-penny (luk'pen-i), n. 1. A small sum given back "for luck" to the purchaser or payer by the person who receives money in a bargain or other transaction. [Scotch and Irish.]—2. A copper tossed overboard "for luck."

lucky¹ (luk'i), a. and n. [*luck*¹ + -y.] I. a. 1. Favored by luck; fortunate; meeting with good success: as, a lucky adventurer.

This is fairy gold, boy . . . We are lucky.

Shak., W. T., III. 2. 120.

2. Producing good by chance or unexpectedly; favorable; auspicious: as, a lucky adventure; a lucky time; a lucky cast.

So may some gentle Muse

With lucky words favour my destined ear;

And, as he pines, turn,

And bid fair peace be to my lucky dream.

Atkins, Epitaph, 2.

Well met, gentlemen; this is lucky that we meet so just together at this very day.

J. Walton, Complete Angler, p. 173.

Mr. Chivery, who was a man of few words, had, on Sunday morning given his boy what he termed "a lucky touch" on the shoulder, signifying that he considered such commendation of him to Good Fortune, preparatory to his that day declaring his passion and becoming triumphant.

Deane, Little Dorrit, xviii.

3. Bulky; full; superabundant; as, bulky measure. [Scotch.]—4. Handy. [Colloq.]

Bella. Perhaps I may have occasion to use you; you used to be a lucky rogue upon a pinch.

Mert. Ay, master, and I have not forgot it yet.

Mrs. Centlivre, Love's Contrivance, I.

Lucky money, coins worn or carried by way of a charm—sometimes ancient or foreign money.—Syn. 1 and 2. Fortune, etc. See Happy.

II. n. See the phrase.—To cut one's lucky, make one's lucky, to get away; escape. [Low.]

Charley and I made our lucky up the wash-up chimney.

Deane, Oliver Twist.

lucky¹ (luk'i), adv. [< lucky, a.] More than enough; too: as, lucky severe; lucky long. [Scotch.] lucky², luekie (luk'i), n. [Prob. a particular use of lucky¹, in a sense like that of goodly.] An elderly woman; a grandam; goody; prefixed to a person's name: as, Lucky M'Laren. [Scotch.] lucky-bag (luk'i-bag), n. A receptacle on a man-of-war for all clothes and other articles of private property carelessly left by their owners.

Have the master-at-arms with you in this inspection, to gather up all articles of private property and put them in the lucky bag.

Lucas, Seamanship, p. 310.

lucky-dad, lucky-daddie (luk'i-dad, -dad'i), n. A grandfather. [Scotch.] lucky-hands (luk'i-hands), n. A widely distributed fern, Aspidium Filix-mas: so named from the resemblance of the young unexpanded frond to a hand. The fronds, as well as the roots, were used by ignorant and superstitious people as preservatives against witchcraft and enchantment.

lucky-minnie (luk'i-min'i), n. A grandmother. [Scotch.] lucky-proach (luk'i-pröch), n. A fish, the father-lasher. [Scotch.] lucky-stone (luk'i-stön), n. An ear-stone or otolith of a fish, superstitiously regarded as bringing luck to the owner or wearer.

lucrative (lü'krä-tiv), a. [< F. lucratis = Sp. Pg. It. lucrativo, < L. lucratus, profitable, < lucrari, pp. lucratus, gain: see lucre, v.] 1. Yielding lucre or gain; gainful; highly profitable: as, a lucrative transaction; a lucrative business or office.—2. Greedy of gain; self-seeking.

Let not thy prayer be lucrative, nor vindictive, pray not for temporal superfluities.

Donne, Sermons, xi.

Lucrative office, an office to which compensation is attached, or perquisites.—Lucrative succession, in Socia law, a passive title whereby an heir apparent who accepts a gratuitous grant from his ancestor of any part of the estate to which he is to succeed as heir may be subjected to the payment of all the debts of the ancestor contracted prior to the grant.—Syn. 1. Paying, remunerative.

lucratively (lü'krä-tiv-ly), adv. In a lucrative manner; profitably.

lucre (lü'ker), n. [Early mod. E. also luker; < ME. "lukre (erroneously lukre, luk, Prompt. Parv.), < OF. (and F.) lucre = Sp. Pg. It. luoro, < L. luorum, gain, with formative -crum, from a √ lu, which appears also in Ir. luach, price, wages, Gr. λυα, λυη, booty (see Leates), O.Bulg. lovü, booty (Russ. lovüth, lake as booty); AS. leán = OS. OFries. lön = D. loon = MLG. lön = OHG. MHG. lön, G. lön = Icel. laun = Sw. Dan. lön = Goth. laun, reward.] Gain in money or goods; profit: often, in a restricted sense, base or unworthy gain; money or wealth as the object of sordid greed; hence, greed.

Not greedy of filthy lucre.

1 Tim. iii. 3.

Love to my child, and lucre of the portion, Provoked me.

B. Jonson, Magnetic Lady, v. 4.

Until I gave one of them a small knife to cut betel nuts, he would not go with us; but for the lucre of that he conducted us to a town.

Rob. Knox (Arber's Eng. Garner, I. 424).

lucret, v. t. [Early mod. E. also luker; < OF. luorer, < L. lucrari, gain, < luorum, gain: see luore, n.] To gain. Levins, Manip. Vocab., col. 182, l. 85.

Lucretian (lü'krä-shian), a. [< Lucretius (see def.) + -an.] Of or pertaining to any member of the ancient Roman gens of the Lucretii; especially, relating to or characteristic of the Roman poet and philosopher Titus Lucretius Carus (about 98–55 B. C.), eminent as a poet, and as the most important exponent of the Epicurean philosophy.

lucriferous (lü'krif'g-rus), a. [< L. luorum, gain, + ferre = E. bear¹.] Gainful; profitable.

The grand thing that is like to keep this experiment from being as generally useful as perhaps it will prove lucriferous is the dearth of sal ammoniac.

Boyle, Works, III. 148.

lucriferousness (lü'krif'g-rus-ness), n. Profitableness. Boyle, Works, II. 30.

lucriferous (lü'krif'ik), a. [< L. luoriferous, gainful, < luorum, gain, + facere, make.] Producing profit; gainful. Asa.

lucious, a. An obsolete variant of lucrous.

lucrons (lü'krus), a. [Early mod. E. also erroneously lucious; = Sp. Pg. It. luoroso, < L. luoroso, gainful, < luorum, gain: see luore.] Of or pertaining to lucre or gain. [Rare.]

Free from the muck-worm miser's lucrous rage, In calm contentment's cottage'd vale of life.

Cooper, Tomb of Shakespeare.

lucration (luk-tä'shon), n. [< L. lucratio(n)-, a wrestling, < lucrare, pp. lucratum, wrestle, strive. Cf. elucate, reluct, reluctant.] Effort to overcome in a contest; struggle; contest. [Rare.] luciferous (luk-tif'g-rus), a. [< L. lucifer, < lucus, sorrow, + ferre = E. bear¹.] Causing or bringing sorrow or mourning. Bailey, 1731.

luctual (luk'tü-shl), a. [< L. luctus, sorrow, < lugere, pp. luctus, mourn.] Relating to or producing grief.

luctuous (luk'tü-us), a. [= Sp. Pg. luctuose, < L. luctuosus, sorrowful, < luctus, sorrow: see luctual.] Sorrowful; full of sorrow. Bailey, 1731.

lucubrate (lü'kü-brät), v.; pret. and pp. lucubrated, pp. lucubration. [< L. lucubratus, pp. of lucubrare (> It. lucubrare = Pg. Sp. lucubrar = F. lucubrer), work by candle-light, < (L.) lucubrum (ML. lucubrum, a faint light), < L. lux (luc-), light: see lucent. Cf. elucubrate.] 1. Intrans. To study earnestly or laboriously, as by candle-light; think closely or seriously; meditate.

I like to speak and lucubrate my will.

Byron, Beppo, st. 47.

II. trans. To elaborate, as by laborious night study.

lucubration (lü'kü-brä'shon), n. [= F. lucubration = Sp. lucubración = Pg. lucubração = It. lucubrazione, < L. lucubratio(n)-, working by candle-light, < lucubrare, pp. lucubratum, work by candle-light: see lucubrate, v.] 1. The act of lucubrating; close study or thought; careful consideration; meditation.—2. A product of thought or study; a written composition; an essay or treatise.

Your monthly lucubrations are widely diffused over all the dominions of Great Britain.

Goldsmith, Essay, National Concord.

The most trifling lucubration was denominated "a work."

Irving.

lucubrador (lü'kü-brä-tör), n. [< lucubrate + -or.] One who lucubrates.

lucubratory (lü'kü-brä-tör-ri), a. [< L. lucubrativus, working by candle-light, < lucubrare, pp. lucubratum, work by candle-light: see lucubrate, light.] Composed by candle-light; pertaining to nocturnal study or serious thought.

You must have a dish of coffee and a solitary candle at your side, to write an epistle lucubratory to your friend.

Pope, to Mr. Cromwell, Dec. 21, 1711.

lucubrum (lü'kü-brum), n. [ML.: see lucubrate.] Same as ocresset, 1.

lucule (lü'kü), n. [= F. lucule, < NL. as if "lucula, dim. of L. lux (luc-), light: see lucent, light.] 1. In astron., a luminous spot on the sun.

luculent (lü'kü-lent), a. [ME. luculent = It. luculento, < L. luculentus, full of light, bright, splendid, < lux (luc-), light: see lucent, light.] 1. Bright; luminous; transparent.

Trye oute the grape unhurt, neither to ripe, Neither to soire, as gemmes luculent.

Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 186.

It emitted a luculent flame as bright and large as a small wax candle.

Swyn, Diary, May 4, 1645.

2. Clear; evident; unmistakable.

The most luculent testimonies that the Christian religion hath.

Hooker, Eccles. Polity, v. 40.

luculently (lü'kü-lent-ly), adv. In a luculent manner; lucidly; clearly; luminously.

Nowhere has the transition . . . been so luculently shown as here.

Man Müller, Science of Lang., N. S., p. 642.

Luculia (lü'kü-li-ä), n. [NL. (Robert Sweet, 1826), from the Nepalese name, Luculia swa, of one of the species, L. gratissima.] A genus of plants of the natural order Rubiaceae and of the tribe Cinckoneae, distinguished by the imbricated lobes of the corolla, on the throat or tube of which the included stamens are inserted. There are two species, one found in the Himalaya and the other in the Khada mountains. The best-known species is L. gratissima, a small tree with opposite ovate-lanceolate leaves, and very fragrant cymes of showy pink flowers. It is a highly ornamental greenhouse plant.

Lucuma (lü'kü-mä), n. [NL. (Jussieu, 1789), from the Peruv. name.] A genus of dicotyledonous gamopetalous plants of the natural order Sapotaceae, the soapberry family. It is characterized by four- or five-parted flowers, coriaceous exstipulate leaves, the stamens or abortive stamens alternate with the fertile ones (although sometimes few or wanting), and seeds without albumen. It embraces about 50 species, chiefly South American, but extending from Chili to Mexico and the West Indies; a very few, however, occur in Australia and New Caledonia. They are trees or shrubs with milky juice and clusters of small or middle-sized flowers in the axils of the leaves or on the older joints. L. mammosa and L. multiflora of the West Indies are called bully-trees, the former of which is the mammeo-aspota or marmalade-tree. The fruit contains a pleasant-flavored pulp, resembling quince marmalade in appearance and taste. L. Cuscuta of Peru has a smaller fruit, which is said to be superior in flavor to the last-named. L. obovata, also of Peru, is cultivated in Chili under the name of Lucuma de Coquimbo. In a recent revision of the Sapotaceae by Radlkofsky this genus has been reduced to two Chilean species, the West Indian plants being referred to Vitellaria, but they are best known by the name Lucuma.

Lucumo (lü'kü-mö), n. [L., also luomo, luomo, an inspired person, an Etruscan prince or priest; a word of Etruscan origin.] Among the ancient Etruscans, the head of a patrician or noble family uniting in himself the characters of priest and prince; in general, one of the Etruscan nobility. To this class the kings also seem to have belonged.

And plainly and more plainly
Now might the burghers know,
By port and vest, by horse and crest,
Each warlike Lucumo.

Macaulay, Horatius, st. 22.

lucus a non lucendo (lü'kus ä non lü-sen'dö), [*L.: lucus, a wood or grove, esp. one sacred to a deity; a, from; non, not; lucendo, abl. gerund of lucere, shine (see leat, a-10, non, lucens); that is, a grove is called lucus (which is in form like lucus (luc-), a light, lucere, be light, shine, lucidus, light) because it is not light: in allusion to the attempt of an ancient grammarian mentioned by Quintilian to derive lucus, a grove, from lucere, shine. The two words are in fact connected, lucus (like grove) being orig. an open light space in a wood.] An absurd etymology or derivation; hence, anything inconsequent or illogical. Sometimes shortened to lucus a non.*

lud¹, a. A Middle English form of loud.

lud², n. A Middle English form of lede³.

Lud³ (lud), n. A minced form of Lord, in petty oaths; also vulgarly in address: as, my lud.

Lud! Sir Peter, I hope you haven't been quarrelling with Maria?

Sheridan, School for Scandal, III. 1.

ludby, n. Same as loteby.

Luddism (lü'dizm), n. [< Ludd (lud) + -ism.] The practices or opinions of the Luddites.

Luddite (lü'dit), n. and a. 1. n. A member of a conspiracy of workmen in England (1811–1816) banded together for the destruction of improved machines, under the delusion that these diminished employment: said to have called themselves Luddites from an imbecile named Ned Lud, who broke two stocking-frames from anger. The disturbances created by them were called Luddite riots, and required stern measures for their repression.

Who makes the quartern loaf and Luddite rise?
J. and H. Smith, Rejected Addresses, No. 1.

II. a. Of or pertaining to the Luddites: as, Luddite riots.

luddock, n. [ME. luddock, luddok.] Loin. Li-ber Cure Cocorum, p. 43.

ludent, n. Same as luden.

ludibrious (lü'dib-ri-us), a. [= Pg. ludibrio, < L.L. ludibrio, scornful, < L. ludibrium, a mockery, < ludere, play, sport: see ludicrous.] Ridiculous; sportive; wanton. [Rare.]

Needless it shall be to refute this phantasm, which falleth to the ground of itself as a ludibrious fable of the man.

Traker, Fabric of the Church (1804), p. 119.

ludibundness (lü'di-bund-ness), n. [< "ludibund (not recorded) (< L. ludibundus, sportive, < ludere, play) + -ness.] Sportiveness; playfulness.

That ludibundness of nature in her gamaisons, and such like sportful and ludicrous productions.

Dr. H. More, Mystery of Iniquity, I. xv. § 14.

ludicrous (lü'di-krus), a. [= OF. ludore = Pg. It. ludoro, < L. ludorus, sportive, < ludus, play, < ludere, play, sport. Cf. allude, collude, delude, elude, illude, prelude.] Serving for or exciting sport; laughable from singularity or grotesqueness; adapted to cause sportive laughter or ridicule; absurd.

He has, therefore, in his whole volume, nothing burlesque, and seldom anything indiculous or familiar.

Johnson, Waller.

The Duke [of Newcastle] was in a state of indiculous distress. He ran about chattering and crying, asking advice and listening to none.

Macaulay, William Pitt.

Indiculous (in-'di-krus-ŭ), adv. In a indiculous manner; sportively; grotesquely.

You wrong me in thinking I quoted a text from my saint indiculously.

Walpole, To Lady Harvery, Nov. 21, 1766.

Indiculousness (in-'di-krus-nes), n. The state or character of being indiculous.

Indication (in-'di-ſi-kā-shŭn), n. [= It. indicatione, < L. indicatione (n-), derivation, < indicare, pp. indicatus, make sport of, < ludus, play (< ludere, play), + facere, make.] The act of making sport of anything; ridicule; mockery.

The Lords . . . swear by the holy Altar to be revenged for this indication and injurious Dealing.

Baker, Chronicles, p. 72.

Some [Puritans] are of a linsay-woolsey disposition, . . . all like Ethiopians, white in the teeth only; full of indication, and injurious dealing, and cruelty.

Johnson (Tyler's Hist. Amer. Lit., I. 181).

Indicatory (in-'di-ſi-kā-ſhŭ-ri), a. [L. indicatorius, mocking, < L. indicator, a mocker, < indicare, pp. indicatus, make sport of: see indication.] Making sport; tending to excite derision.

In the sacraments of the Church there is nothing empty or vain, nothing indicatory, but all thoroughly true.

Barrow, Works, III. xxxix.

Indilamite (in-'di-lam-it), n. [After Mr. Ludlam, an English mineralogist.] A hydrous phosphate of iron, occurring in bright-green monoclinic crystals. It is found near Truro in Cornwall, and is associated with vivianite in cavities in pyrite.

Ludlow group. In geol., in England, a series of rocks, consisting chiefly of shales, with occasionally an intercalated belt of limestone, belonging to the Upper Silurian and lying above the Wenlock group, into which it graduates downward, and with whose fauna it has a large number of species in common. The group is typically developed between Ludlow in Shropshire and Aymestrey in Hereford, and the name was given by Murchison because the town of Ludlow stands on beds of this age.

Ludlow's code. See code.

Ludolphian, Ludolphian (lū-'dol-fā-an), a. [L. Ludolph (see def.) + -ian.] Pertaining to the mathematician Ludolph van Ceulen (died 1610), who calculated the ratio of the circumference of a circle to the diameter to many places of decimals, and caused the value to be engraved upon his tombstone.

Ludus Helimontii (lū-'dus hel-mon-'ti-i), [NL., 'Helmont's amusement,' so called from Jan Baptista van Helmont, a Belgian chemist and physician of the 17th century (died 1644), who believed in the efficacy of such stones (and who gave gas the name it bears: see gas); L. ludus, play, sport, amusement.] 1. A calcareous stone, the precise nature of which is not known, used by the ancients as a remedy in calculous affections.—2. A calculous concretion occurring in an animal body.—3. A variety of septaria in which the sparry veins are frequent and anastomosing.

Ludwigia (lud-'wij-i-ſi), n. [NL. (Linnaeus), named after C. G. Ludwig, professor of botany at Leipzig, and contemporary with Linnaeus.] A genus of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants of the natural order Onagraceae; the false or bastard loosestrife. It is characterized by having from three to six petals, entire or two-lobed, sometimes wanting; from three to six stamens; and a three- to six-celled ovary, which becomes, in fruit, a septical capsule. They are herbs with opposite or alternate leaves, usually lanceolate in shape, and with the flowers almost always solitary in the axils of the leaves, sometimes in terminal heads. About 20 species are known, natives of Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America. L. altissima of the eastern United States, on account of its cubical pod, is called seedbox, and it is also called bowman's-root. L. palustris, the water-purlane, is a common weed in ditches and shallow ponds both in Europe and in North America. Ludwigite (lud-'wig-it), n. [Named after E. Ludwig, a chemist of Vienna.] A borate of iron and magnesium, occurring in dark-green to black masses with a fine fibrous structure.

lue (lū), v. t.; pret. and pp. lued, ppr. luing. [Origin obscure.] To sift: a miners' term.

[Prov. Eng.]

I had new models made of the sieves for luing, the box and trough, the bundle, wreck, and tool.

Miss Edgeworth, Lame Jervas, II. (Davies.)

Lues (lū-'ēs), n. [L., a plague, pestilence.] A plague or pestilence: used with adjectives to designate various specific or contagious affections.—Lues venerea, venereal disease; syphilis.

lue (lū-'ēk), a. [Irreg. < L. lues, plague, + -tic as in pyretic, etc.] Diseased; plague-stricken; specifically, affected with syphilis; syphilitic.

luff, n. An obsolete form of *love*¹.

luff¹, v. and n. An obsolete form of *love*¹.

luff², n. An obsolete or dialectal form of *loof*¹.

luff³, n. An obsolete form of *loof*², *luff*².

luff⁴, n. An obsolete form of *loof*³.

luff¹ (luf), n. 1. A variant of *loof*¹.—2. The wooden case in which the light is carried in the sport of lowbelling. Hallwell.

luff² (luf), n. [A later form of *loof*², q. v.] Naut.: (a) The fullest and broadest part of a vessel's bow; the loof.

Schiffe-mene sharply sohtens thaire portes, Launches lede [cast the lead] spones luffs, laccheens ther depes.

Lukkes to the lade-sterne where the lyghte fallens.

Morris Arthurs (E. E. T. S.), I. 750.

(b) The weather-gage, or part of a ship toward the wind. (c) The sailing of a ship close to the wind. (d) The weather part of a fore-and-aft sail, or the side next the mast or stay to which it is attached. (e) A luff-tackle.—Luff upon luff, one luff-tackle applied to the fall of another to afford an increase of purchase.—To keep the luff. See keep.—To spring her luff, to answer the helm by sailing nearer the wind: said of a ship.

luff² (luf), v. [A later form of *loof*², formerly also loof (see Dan. luffe), < D. loeven, loof, luff; from the noun: see *luff*², *loof*², n. Cf. lavor, from the same source.] I. trans. Naut., to bring the head of (a vessel) nearer to the wind.

She once being *loof*d.

The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,

Claps on his sea-wing.

Shak., A. and C., III. 10. 18.

II. intrans. To steer or come nearer to the wind.

For hauling mountaineers of fleeting yoe on every side, we went roomer for one, and loofed for another; some scraped vs, and some happily escaped vs.

Habington's Voyages, III. 65.

The other tacked after him, and came close up to his netter quarter, gave his broad side, and so loofed up to windward.

Capt. John Smith, True Travels, I. 62.

Luff round, or luff also, the extreme of this movement, intended to throw the ship's head into the wind.

luff³ (luf), n. [Abbr. of luffenant* for lieutenant, now spelled lieutenant.] Lieutenant: as, he is first luff. [Naval slang.]

Luffa (luf-'ſi), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1706), < Ar. lūfa, the name of one of the species.] A genus of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants of the natural order Cucurbitaceae, the gourd family, and of the tribe Cucumerineae, characterized by the staminate flowers growing in racemes, the petioles without glands, and the large fruits dry, fibrous, and opening by a lid at the apex. They are climbing herbs, with monocotyledonous leaves, which are large and white, and five- or seven-lobed leaves. Seven species are known, natives of the tropics. The fruit is dry and oblong or cylindrical in shape, the numerous seeds being located in a network of coarse and strong fibers, which in some species are capable of being detached entire, cleansed of all other matters, and used like a coarse, tough fabric. L. zippelliana is the washing- or towel-gourd, so called because its dried fruit is cut up and used as a wash-brush. The fibrous interior of these gourds is known in commerce under the various names loof, loof, loofs, luff, and luff. See strawberry.

luff-board (luf-'er-board), n. A corruption of lower-board. See lower-board.

luff-board (luf-'er-bōr-ding), n. See board-ing.

luff-hook (luf-'hūk), n. Naut., one of the hooks of a luff-tackle.

luff-tackle (luf-'tak-ſi), n. Naut., a purchase composed of a double and a single block, the standing end of the rope being fastened to the single block, and the fall coming from the double: variously used as occasion may require.

luffant, a. An obsolete variant of lovesome.

luff, a. A Middle English form of left.

luff¹ (lug), v.; pret. and pp. lugged, ppr. lugging.

[< ME. luggen (not in AS., the alleged AS. golu-gian* being an invention of Sommer's), < Sw. lugg = Norw. lugga, pull (by the hair), a secondar form (depending on Sw. lugg, the forehead, = Norw. lugg, the hair of the head: see *lugg*²) < luka*, pull, pull up, = Dan. luge, pull up (weeds, = AS. lūcan (not lycan*, as cited by Skeat), pu up (weeds), > E. dial. lout, lout, look, pull up (weeds): see *lout*², *lout*², *look*². Cf. *lugg*².]

trans. 1. To pull with force or effort, as something that is heavy or resists; haul; drag [Now chiefly colloq.]

With myche wepyng & wo, weghis of his aune Luggit hym out to the land, lets hym for ded; And fore agayne to the lyght thaire feris to help.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), I. 606

Why, this

Will lug your priests and servants from your siden.

Shak., T. of A., IV. 2. 2

To tread on his corns, or lug him thrice by both ears, pinch his arm black and blue.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels, Laputa, v

2. To carry, as something heavy or burden some; bear laboriously.

He lugged her along like a pedlar's pack.

Former's Old W's (Child's Ballads, VIII. 255)

To lug the ponderous volume off in state.

Pope, Dunciad, IV. 11

Ragged urchins were lugging home sticks of cordwood.

G. W. Cable, Old Creole Days, p. 1

Especially—3. To drag or pull about by the ears or head, as a bear or a bull, to excite it to action; bait; worry.

Like a common Garden-bull, I do but take breath to be lugg'd again.

Middleton, Changeling, II. 4

4. To geld.

'S blood, I am as melancholy as a gib-cat or a lugg bear.

Shak., I Hen. IV., I. 2. 2

His ears hang laving like a new lugg'd swine.

Sp. Hall, Retires, IV. 1. 7

To lug in, to introduce by main force, or without appatence. [Colloq.]

He could not tell that story (of Crompton's), which begged him to do, and which would not have been lugg in neck and shoulders, because everybody was telling ju such stories.

Greville, Memoirs, Feb. 27, 188

To lug out, to draw (a sword). [Colloq.]

Their cause they to an easier issue put, They will be heard, or they lug out and out.

Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, xvi. 7

II. intrans. 1. To pull with effort: follows by at.

This huge and monstrous galliame, wherein were contained three hundred slaves to lug at the oars.

Habington's Voyages, I. 60

He would let Caroline lug at his hair till his dim winking grey eyes winked and watered again with pain.

W. Collins, Family Secret, p. 22

2. To move heavily, or with resistance; drag

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch, Like fowl in air too damp, and lugs along, As if she were a body in a body.

Dryden, Don Sebastian, IV. 1

When rollers are tacky or stick together they are said to lug.

C. T. Jacob, Printers' Vocal

lug¹ (lug), n. [< *lug*¹, v.] 1. Anything that moves slowly or with difficulty; something (a heavy, lumpy, or sluggish nature. Spoken only.—(2) A slug: a sluggish. (3) A worm used for bait. (4) The bib (a fish). [Prov. Eng.] (5) heavy or slow-acting bow.

The same reason I find true in two bows that I have whereof the one is quick of cast, . . . the other is lug, slow of cast, following the string, more sure for last than pleasant for to use.

Ascham, Toxophilus (ed. Giles), p. 1

2. Same as lug-sail.

They have not got to dip their sail as we have, even time we tack: . . . now you go to the helm, and I and the boy will dip the lug.

C. Roade, Love me Little, xvi

3. pl. Affected manners; "airs": as, to put on lugs. [Slang.]—Axis of lug, that position of instantaneous axis of rotation of a body turning about fixed point in which the direction of pressure coincides with that of the axis.

lug² (lug), n. [Partly < Sw. lugg, the forehead = Norw. lugg, the hair of the head; partly *lug*¹, v., the orig. verb.] 1. The lobe of the ear.—2. The ear. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

A fine round head when those two lugs are off, To trundle through a pailory!

J. Johnson, Staple of News, v. 1

I wad like ill to wait till Mr. Harrison and Mr. lug came to put us out by the lug and the hory.

Scott, Old Manse, II. 11

2. A projecting part of some object resembling more or less in form or position the human ear. (a) A projecting piece or ear on a vessel or other object to serve as a handle, or on a tile or the like to afford it a hold when used in roofing.

The first (tile) is moulded with a lug, which secures itself in position by catching above the lath of the roof; the second shows a tile moulded with two lugs, by which it engages the tiles of the courses above and below.

C. T. Davis, Bricks and Tiles, p. 380.

Projecting lugs, to which the copper bars are attached.

S. P. Thompson, Dynamo-Elect. Mach., p. 143.

(b) In mach., a projecting piece; specifically, a short flange by or to which something is fastened.

The ring is fastened to the plug, and held to the breech by the lugs and boss.

Mitchell, tr. of Montheys's Krupp and De Bange, p. 86.

(c) A projecting piece upon a foundry's flask or mold. (d) In single harness, one of the two loops of leather dependent from the saddle, one on each side, through which the shafts are passed for support. (e) The arm of a bee-frame.

4. A jamb or side wall of a recess, as a fireplace.

And for him who sat by the chimney lug,
Dozing and grumbling o'er pipe and mug.

Whittier, Maud Muller.

5. A grade of tobacco.

In this condition the leaves [of tobacco] are stripped from the stems, sorted into qualities, such as lugs, or lower leaves, "firsts," and "seconds." Encyc. Brit., XXIII, 424.

To blow in one's lug. See blow.

*lug*² (lug), v. t. [*lug*², n.] To form with a lug or projection; as, to lug a door-sill (that is, to hollow out or chamfer off the upper and outer angle of the stone to within a short distance of each end, the parts not cut away forming the lugs).

*lug*³ (lug), n. [Perhaps < *lug*¹, v., pull (pluck); but cf. *log*¹.] 1. A rod or pole.—2. A pliable rod or twig such as is used in thatching.—3. A measure of length, properly 15 feet 1 inch, but sometimes 16½, 18, or 20 feet (a lug of coppice-wood in Herefordshire was 49 square yards); a pole or perch. [Prov. Eng. in all senses.]

And eke that ample Pitt, yet far renowned
For the large lease which Debon did compell Coulde make, being eight lugs of ground,
Into the which returning luche he fell.

Spenser, F. Q., II, x, 11.

lug-a-leaf (lug'-a-lēf), n. The brill. Willoughby. [Cornwall, Eng.]

lugbait (lug'-bāt), n. Same as lugworm.

lug-bolt (lug'-bōlt), n. A cylindrical bolt to which is welded a flat iron bar. The head is usually a hook which is received by a lug, or it passes through the lug and is held by a nut. Sometimes the flat bar has holes by which it is fastened to a timber by separate bolts or screws. Also called strap-bolt.

lugdoret, n. Same as loklore.

luger, n. and v. A Middle English form of lodge.

lug-foresail (lug'-fōr-sāl or -sī), n. In a schooner, a foresail set without any boom.

luggage (lug'-āj), n. [*lug*² + -age.] 1. Anything to be carried that is cumbersome and heavy.

What do you mean,
To dote thus on such luggage?

Shak., Tempest, iv, 1, 231.

My misfortune made me think before
My life a tedious and painful trouble,
My very soul a luggage, and too heavy
For me to carry.

Shirley, The Wedding, v, 2.

2. Baggage; especially, a traveler's baggage.

[In this special sense chiefly in Great Britain.]

The luggage is too great that follows your camp.

Milton, On Def. of Humb. Remonst.

I am gathering up my luggage and preparing for my journey.

Swift.

I left my servant at the railway looking after the luggage—very heavy train and vast quantity of it in the van.

Dickens, Hard Times, II, 1.

luggage-saddle (lug'-āj-sad'-l), n. A pad on which goods or personal effects are carried on a led horse.

luggage-van (lug'-āj-van), n. A railway-car for luggage; a baggage-car. [British.]

luggatoo (lug'-a-tō), n. The turbot. [Prov. Eng.]

lugged (lug'-ed, lugd), a. [*lug*²

+ -ed.] Having ears, or appendages resembling ears.

The long fool's

ear, the huge slop,

the lug'd boat.

Merrill, Scourge of (Villain), I, 10.

O me! to see thee and fresh

the lug'd boat!

James, Scotch Drink.

*lugger*¹ (lug'-er),

n. [A var. of lug

(D. lugger)

or < *lug*², n., lug sail, + *-er*¹ (f). Hence F. lougre, Sp. Pg. lugre.] A vessel carrying either two or three masts, often with a running bowsprit and always with lug-sails. On the bowsprit are set two or three jibs, and the lug-sails hang obliquely to the masts.

It appears that the Fair Rosamond had captured a lugger with one hundred and sixty Africans, and shortly after saw the Black Joke in chase of two other luggers.

Everett, Orations and Speeches, I, 333.

*lugger*² (lug'-er), n. [*lug*² + -er.] Same as jigger.
luggie (lug'-i), n. [*lug*² + -ie, -y.] A little dish having lugs or ears. [Scotch.]

In order, on the clean hearthstone,
The luggies three are ranged. Burns, Halloween.

luggun (lug'-un), n. Same as luggan.

luggur falcon. Same as jigger.

lug-mark (lug'-mārk), n. An ear-mark for identification, as on a sheep or a dog.

lug-perch (lug'-pērch), n. A long measure: same as *lug*³, 3.

lug-sail (lug'-sāl), n. [*lug*¹ + sail; or perhaps < *lug*² (with ref. to the upper corner or 'ear' of

1. Dipping Lug-sail; 2. Standing Lug-sail; 3. Split Lug-sail.

the sail?) + sail.] A quadrilateral sail bent upon a yard that hangs obliquely to the mast at about one third of its length; a common rig for boats of men-of-war. Also lug.—Lug-sail boat, a boat rigged with a lug-sail; a lugger.

lugubriousness (lū-gū-bri-ous'-ness), n. [As lugubrious + -ity.] Lugubriousness. Imp. Dict.

lugubrious (lū-gū-bri-ous), a. [Formerly also lugubrious; with suffix -ous (cf. F. Sp. Pg. It. lugubre), < L. lugubris, mournful, mourning, < lugere, mourn; cf. Gr. λυγρός, sad, λνγρός, destruction.] 1. Characterized by or expressing mourning or sorrow; mournful; doleful; funeral; dejected; as, lugubrious wailing; a lugubrious look or voice.

Act no passionate, lugubrious, tragical part, whatever secular provocation cross us on the stage.

Hammond, Works, IV, 546.

2. Exciting mournful feelings; pitiful; dismal; depressing; as, a lugubrious spectacle or event.

Beppo dived deep down into the lugubrious and obscure regions of Rascaldom.

Carlyle.

—Syn. Sorrowful, melancholy, doleful.

lugubriously (lū-gū-bri-ous-ly), adv. In a lugubrious manner; mournfully; sadly.

lugubriousness (lū-gū-bri-ous-ness), n. The state or quality of being lugubrious; sorrowfulness; sadness.

lugworm (lug'-wērm), n. [*lug*¹ + worm. Cf. lobworm.] An annelid of the family Arenicolidae, inhabiting the sea-shore. A common species is Arenicola placatorum, a large worm, 8 or 10 inches long, much used for bait. It belongs to a different order from the earthworm proper, though its habits are similar. It crawls through sandy and muddy soil, eating its way as it goes, and leaving in its wake coiled casts of the soil thus passed through its body. The head is large, eyeless and jawless, with a proboscis; the gills are thirteen pairs of gaily colored tufts, and the rings of the body are furnished with bristles like those of other chaptod worms. Also called lobworm and lugboat.

luif (lūf), n. A Scotch spelling of *loaf*¹.

luing, n. [Gael.] A short plaintive song or lament sung in western Scotland and the Hebrides.

*luke*¹ (lūk), a. [ME. luke, louke, lewke (= D. leuk in leukwarm = E. lukewarm), appar. an unexplained var. or extension of low, warm (see *low*²); perhaps due to confusion with A.S. lucan, tepid. The history and connections have not been cleared up.] Slightly warm; lukewarm; tepid.

If it be coole in heete and luke in coole,

The better may thowe with that water holde.

Palladius, Husbondrie (E. E. T. A.), p. 2.

Let me have nine penny'orth o' brandy and water luke.

Dickens, Pickwick, xxxiii.

*luke*², v. A Middle English or dialectal form of *look*¹.

lukeness (lūk'-nes), n. Lukewarmness.

luker, n. A former spelling of lucre.

lukewarm (lūk'-wārm), a. [*ME. lukewarm (= D. leukwarm = LG. lukewarm (equiv. to slukwarm); < *luke*¹ + warm. Cf. leuwarm.] 1. Only moderately warm; tepid; neither cold nor hot.

There is difference Between lukewarm and boiling, madam.

B. Jonson, Catlines, II, 1.

Their lukewarm dinner, served up between two powder plates from a cook's shop.

Goldsmith, Citizen of the World, xxxii.

2. Not ardent; not zealous; cool; indifferent; as, lukewarm obedience.

Because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.

Rev. III, 16.

lukewarmly (lūk'-wārm-ly), adv. In a lukewarm degree or manner. (a) With moderate warmth. (b) With indifference; coolly.

lukewarmness (lūk'-wārm-nes), n. The state or character of being lukewarm, literally or figuratively; tepidness; indifference.

lukewarmth (lūk'-wārmth), n. [*luke*¹ + warmth.] Lukewarmness. [Rare.]

Passionately offended at the falsehood and perfidiousness of certain faithless men, and at the lukewarmth and indifference of others.

Addison, Ladies' Association.

lull (lul), v. [ME. lullen, lollen, lull, = MD. lollen, hum, sing, D. lollen, sing badly, caterwaul, lullen, chatter, prate, also deceive, cheat, = LG. G. lullen, lull, = Iscl. Sw. lulla = Dan. lulle, lull, sing to sleep (cf. lull); prob., like L. lallare, sing to sleep, imitative, a redupl. of the syllable la or lu used in singing a child to sleep. Cf. loll, lulla-by.] I. trans. 1. To quiet; compose; assuage; caress; cause to rest or subside by gentle, soothing means; as, to lull a child or a feverish patient; to lull grief, pain, or suspicion.

In her barme the litel childe she leide
With ful swete face, and gan the childe to blesse,
And lulled it, and after gan to kisse.

Chaucer, Clerk's Tale, I, 497.

Feet and fayre hondes

That non ben croised I curse hem ofte,

I lulled hem, I leid hem softe.

Legend of the Holy Rood, p. 123.

Antonio, your mistress will never wake while you sing so dolefully; love, like a cradled infant, is lulled by a sad melody.

Sheridan, The Duenna, I, 1.

The Roman was not without crosses that could lull his moral feelings to repose.

Locky, Europ. Morals, I, 301.

2. To deceive.

When some this sort men [sawed] his soule,
And oueral lulled him with heretikes workes!

Piers Plowman's Crede (E. E. T. A.), I, 532.

—Syn. 1. To calm, hush, tranquillize.

II. intrans. To subside; cease; become calm; as, the wind lulls.

lull (lul), n. [cf. lull, v.] 1. That which lulls; a quieting or soothing influence. [Poetical.]

Yonder lull

Of falling waters tempted me to rest.

Young, The Revenge, v, 2.

2. Temporary quiet and rest; suspension of activity or turmoil, as in a storm or any kind of excessive action.

With returning silence, with the hull of the chime, . . . she still resumed the dream.

Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xiii.

lulla, lully (lul'-a, -i), interj. [ME. lully, lulla, lullay, etc.: see lull, lullaby.] A common burden in nursery songs.

Lully lulla thow litell tyme child;

By, by, lully, lullay, thow litell tyme child.

Country Mysteries (ed. Halliwell), p. 414.

lullaby (lul'-a-bi), n.; pl. lullabies (-bis). [cf. lull, lulla, + -by, a meaningless addition. Cf. rockaby.] 1. A song sung to lull children to sleep; a cradle-song.

Philomel, with melody

Sing in our sweet lullaby;

Lulla, lulla, lullaby.

Shak., M. N. D., II, 2, 14.

Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children.

Locke, Education.

2. A cradle-song, or an instrumental piece in the style of a cradle-song; a berceuse.

lullaby (lul'-a-bi), v. t.; pret. and pp. lullabied, prp. lullabying. [cf. lullaby, n.] To lull to sleep; hush with a lullaby.

Silence fell upon them, the gliding water lapping the bruised face and lullabying the perturbed spirit, the soft hand of the girl weaving a spell for the wounded warrior.

The Century, XXXVI, 301.

luller (lul'-er), n. One who lulls or fondles.

lullingy (lul'-ing-ly), adv. In a lulling manner; so as to quiet or soothe.

The gentle sway of his measure . . . seats you lullingy along from picture to picture.

Lowell, Among my Books, 2d ser., p. 173.

Lugger.

lullist (lul'ist), n. A follower of Raymond Lully, a scholastic, who died in 1315.

lully, interj. See lulla.

lulworth skipper. See skipper.

luma (lum), n. [cf. AS. lūm.] 1. A wooded valley.—2. A deep pool.

luma (lum), n. [cf. W. lūmon, a chimney, < lūm, that shoots up or projects (?).] 1. A chimney. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

He set his foot in the black creak-shell, . . .

And out at the lum flew he.

Hogg, Queen's Wake, The Witch of Fife.

2. In coal-mining, a chimney placed on the top of the upcast-shaft to increase the draft and carry off the smoke. [North. Eng.] lunachella (lū-ma-kel'ē), n. [It.: see lunachello.] Same as lunachello.

lunachelle, lunachell (lū-ma-kel), n. [cf. lunachello, lunachella (named from the shells it contains), < lunachello, a little snail, dim. of lunaca, a snail, < l. lūm (lūm), a snail: see lūm.] A variety of compact limestone or marble containing fragments of shells, ennerites, and other fossils, which are sometimes iridescent, displaying a variety of brilliant colors.

Some of the most beautiful and rarest varieties of antique ornamental marbles belong to the lunachelles. The colors of the limestone base vary greatly in the different varieties. Also called fire-marble.

lumbaginous (lum-baj'i-nus), a. [cf. LL. lumbago (lumbagin), lumbago: see lumbago.] Of, pertaining to, or afflicted with lumbago.

lumbago (lum-bā'gō), n. [NL., < LL. lumbago, disease or weakness of the loins, < l. lūm, loin: see loin.] In pathol., myalgia in the lumbar region.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

lumbal (lum'bal), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + -al.] Same as lumbal.

sounds, the word has been appar. regarded as imitative, and has also been confused more or less with unrelated words, as with lumber, lump, etc.] 1. To make a heavy rumbling noise; rumble: chiefly in the present participle.

A boisterous gush of wind lumbering amongst it.

Chapman.

When a lumbering noise from behind made him start.

Barham, Ingoldsby Legends, I. 66.

2. To move heavily or cumbrously: chiefly in the present participle.

The post-boy's horse right glad to miss

The lumbering of the wheels.

Cowper, John Gilpin.

You pause, as you trudge before the lumbering coach.

H. James, Jr., Trans. Sketches, p. 249.

Alison listened in amazement, and with a little fear, to this lumbering lad, whose small, twinkling, shrewd eyes seemed to suggest that he was not quite such a fool as he looked.

W. Black, Harper's Mag., LXXVI. 302.

3. To stumble. Also lumper. [Prov. Eng.] get comen lodly to that lode, as lazars ful monye,

Summe lepre, summe lome (lame), & lomerande blynde,

Poysoned & parlayt & pynd in tyres.

Aliterations Poems (ed. Morris), II. 1004.

lumber (lum'ber), n. [Usually explained as orig. the contents of the lumber-room, this being explained as "orig. the Lombard-room, or room where the Lombard banker and broker stowed away his pledges" (Trench, following Blount, and followed by Skeat), and asserted to have been transferred to any unused chamber where furniture was stored; but of Lombard-room there is no evidence, and if existent it would rather have meant 'a room where Lombards or brokers were kept.' More prob. lumber is < lumber, v., as being orig. heavy, 'lumbering' articles. Some confusion with lump is prob. involved; cf. G. lumpen-kammer, lumber-room, Sw. lumpor, rags, old clothes: see lump.] 1. Things, more or less bulky and cumbersome, thrown aside (or which may be thrown aside) as of no present use or value. Lumber usually includes old or broken boards, barrels, boxes, and other articles of possible future use, as distinguished from mere useless rubbish or refuse. Often used figuratively.

So that with Provision, Chests, Hencoops, and Parrot-Cages, our Ships were full of Lumber, with which we intended to sail.

Dampier, Voyages, II. II. 129.

It was his glory to free the world from the lumber of a thousand vulgar errors.

Stearns, Tristram Rhandy, III., Author's Pref.

The bookish blockhead, ignorantly read,

With loads of learned lumber in his head.

Pope, Essay on Criticism, I. 618.

2. Timber sawed or split for use, as beams, joists, boards, planks, staves, hoops, and the like. [U. S.]—3. Useless and cumbersome weight, bulk, etc.

A fine slashing dog, of good size, possessing plenty of bone without lumber, and excellent legs and feet.

Dogs of Great Britain and America, p. 104.

4. Foolish or ribald talk. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.]

5. Harm; mischief. Hallwell. [Prov. Eng.] lumber (lum'ber), v. [cf. lumber, n.] I. trans.

1. To heap together in disorder.

How in matters they be rawe,

They lumber forth the laws.

Skeaton, Colin Clout, I. 95.

Deep in the darkness of dull authors bred,

With all their refuse lumber'd in his head.

Mallet, Verbal Criticism.

2. To fill with lumber; encumber with anything useless: as, to lumber a room: often with up.

I could not, in any honesty, lumber my pages with descriptions or speculations which would be idle to most readers.

Howells, Venetian Life, xi.

II. intrans. To cut timber in the forest and prepare it for market. [U. S.]

In Maine so much harm was done to the general interests of the State by reckless lumbering.

The American, VII. 220.

lumber (lum'ber), n. [A corruption of earlier lumbard, lumbard: see lumbard.] 1. A pawnbroker's shop.

They put all the little plate they had in the lumber, which is pawning it, till the ships came.

Lady Murray, quoted by Trench.

2. A pledge; a pawn.

The lumber for their poorer goods recovery.

Buller, Upon Critica. (Mayer, Dict.)

lumber-car (lum'ber-kär), n. A railroad-car of extra length, usually 34 feet, particularly intended for carrying lumber. Car-Builders' Dict.

lumberdar (lum'ber-där), n. [Hind.] The registered representative of a village community for the payment of the government dues. [Anglo-Indian.] lumber-drier (lum'ber-dri'er), n. See lumber-kiln.

lumberer (lum'ber-er), n. [cf. lumber, v., + -er.] A person employed or concerned in cutting timber and getting it from the forest. Also lumberman. [U. S.]

The lumberer finds it indispensable, in the operations of his woodcraft, to learn to chop timber right and left handed.

Science, IX. 148.

lumber-kiln (lum'ber-kil), n. An inclosed chamber, artificially warmed, in which sawn lumber may be rapidly heated, to free it from moisture and prevent warping. Such rooms are usually warmed by coils of steam-pipes, and are often arranged with tracks for cars on which the green lumber is piled and run into the building, to be drawn out again when dried. In various forms of driers, the moisture from the wood is condensed and drawn out of the chamber without disturbing the inclosed air; or the air charged with moisture is drawn out and replaced by dry air; or a condenser formed of cold-water pipes is hung in the room, and the moisture which condenses on the pipes drips off and is conducted out of the room.

lumberly (lum'ber-li), a. [cf. lumber + -ly.] Lumbering; heavy-stopping; unwieldy.

But England is stirring in a slow, lumberly, and timorous fashion.

J. A. H. Murray, 9th An. Add. to Philol. Soc.

lumberman (lum'ber-man), n.; pl. lumbermen (-men). 1. Same as lumberer.—2. One who deals in lumber. [U. S.] lumber-measure (lum'ber-mesh'ür), n. A device for ascertaining the number of superficial feet in boards of different lengths. It consists of a case containing a disk placed vertically, which as it passes over the surface of the boards shows on a dial their superficial contents. The apparatus is adjustable for boards of different lengths. [U. S.] lumber-port (lum'ber-pört), n. A port-hole cut in the bow or stern of vessels for the passage of long pieces of timber. [U. S.] lumber-room (lum'ber-röm), n. [cf. lumber + room.] Said to be orig. Lombard-room, but this form is not found in use: see lumber, lumber. A room or place for the reception of useless or unused things; a room occupied by lumber.

The world lies no longer a dull miscellany and lumber-room, but has form and order.

Emerson, The American Scholar.

Lumbert, n. An obsolete form of Lombard, Lombard.

lumber-wagon (lum'ber-wag'qn), n. Any large box-wagon, used especially by farmers for the transportation of miscellaneous heavy articles; also, a heavy wagon used in hauling lumber. [U. S.] lumber-yard (lum'ber-yärd), n. A yard or inclosure where wood and timber are stored for sale. [U. S.] lumbi, n. Plural of lumbus.

lumbiplex (lum'bi-pleks), n. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + LL. plexus, a plaiting: see plexus.] The lumbar plexus (which see, under lumbard).

lumbiplexal (lum-bi-plek'sal), a. [cf. lumbiplex + -al.] Of or pertaining to the lumbiplex, or lumbar plexus of nerves. Cowles.

lumbocotomy (lum'bō-kōt'ō-mi), n. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + Gr. κότο, colon, + τομή, a cutting.] In surg., incision into the colon in the lumbar region.

lumbodinia (lum-bō-din'i-ä), n. [NL., < l. lūm, loin, + Gr. δύνη, pain.] In pathol., myalgia in the lumbar region; lumbago.

lumbo-inguinal (lum'bō-ing'wi-näl), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + inguen, groin.] Pertaining to the loin and the groin: as, a lumbo-inguinal nerve.

lumbosacral (lum'bō-sä'kräl), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + NL. sacrum.] Pertaining to the lumbar and the sacral region of the spine.—Lumbosacral cord, the nerve formed by the union of the fifth lumbar nerve and the branch from the fourth.—Lumbosacral ligament, a ligament passing from the transverse process of the last lumbar vertebra to become attached to the lateral surface of the base of the sacrum.

lumbrik (lum'brik), n. [cf. ME. lumbrike = F. lombric = Sp. lombric = Pg. lombrigo = It. lombrico.]

Row of Vessel Unloading Lumber through Lumber-port.

in the bow or stern of vessels for the passage of long pieces of timber. [U. S.] lumber-room (lum'ber-röm), n. [cf. lumber + room.] Said to be orig. Lombard-room, but this form is not found in use: see lumber, lumber. A room or place for the reception of useless or unused things; a room occupied by lumber.

The world lies no longer a dull miscellany and lumber-room, but has form and order.

Emerson, The American Scholar.

Lumbert, n. An obsolete form of Lombard, Lombard.

lumber-wagon (lum'ber-wag'qn), n. Any large box-wagon, used especially by farmers for the transportation of miscellaneous heavy articles; also, a heavy wagon used in hauling lumber. [U. S.] lumber-yard (lum'ber-yärd), n. A yard or inclosure where wood and timber are stored for sale. [U. S.] lumbi, n. Plural of lumbus.

lumbiplex (lum'bi-pleks), n. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + LL. plexus, a plaiting: see plexus.] The lumbar plexus (which see, under lumbard).

lumbiplexal (lum-bi-plek'sal), a. [cf. lumbiplex + -al.] Of or pertaining to the lumbiplex, or lumbar plexus of nerves. Cowles.

lumbocotomy (lum'bō-kōt'ō-mi), n. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + Gr. κότο, colon, + τομή, a cutting.] In surg., incision into the colon in the lumbar region.

lumbodinia (lum-bō-din'i-ä), n. [NL., < l. lūm, loin, + Gr. δύνη, pain.] In pathol., myalgia in the lumbar region; lumbago.

lumbo-inguinal (lum'bō-ing'wi-näl), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + inguen, groin.] Pertaining to the loin and the groin: as, a lumbo-inguinal nerve.

lumbosacral (lum'bō-sä'kräl), a. [cf. l. lūm, loin, + NL. sacrum.] Pertaining to the lumbar and the sacral region of the spine.—Lumbosacral cord, the nerve formed by the union of the fifth lumbar nerve and the branch from the fourth.—Lumbosacral ligament, a ligament passing from the transverse process of the last lumbar vertebra to become attached to the lateral surface of the base of the sacrum.

lumbrik (lum'brik), n. [cf. ME. lumbrike = F. lombric = Sp. lombric = Pg. lombrigo = It. lombrico.]

Row of Vessel Unloading Lumber through Lumber-port.

in the bow or stern of vessels for the passage of long pieces of timber. [U. S.] lumber-room (lum'ber-röm), n. [cf. lumber + room.] Said to be orig. Lombard-room, but this form is not found in use: see lumber, lumber. A room or place for the reception of useless or unused things; a room occupied by lumber.

The world lies no longer a dull miscellany and lumber-room, but has form and order.

Emerson, The American Scholar.

Lumbert, n. An obsolete form of Lombard, Lombard.

lumber-wagon (lum'ber-wag'qn), n. Any large box-w brico, < L. lumbrius, an intestinal worm, an earthworm. [A worm. Clarke. [Rare.]

lumbri-cal (lum'brī-kal), a. and n. [= F. Pg. lumbri-cal = Sp. lombri-cal = It. lombri-cal, < NL. lumbri-cal, < L. lumbrius, an intestinal worm, an earthworm: see lumbrio.] I. a. Pertaining to or resembling a worm; lumbri-form; vermiform: specifically applied in anatomy to the lumbri-form.

II. n. A lumbri-form muscle. See lumbri-form. lumbri-form (lum-bri-kā'lis), n.; pl. lumbri-formes (-lēs). [NL.: see lumbri-cal.] In anat., a lumbri-form muscle: so called from its resemblance in size and shape to a worm. There are four of these small muscles in the palm of the hand and four in the sole of the foot, sometimes distinguished as lumbri-formes manus and lumbri-formes pedis: the former are also called adductores, or adductor muscles, because they contribute to the quick movements of the muscular fingers. They are ancillary to the deep flexor muscles. Each lumbri-form arises from one of the tendons of a deep flexor muscle, whether of hand or foot, and is inserted into the side of the base of that finger or toe which those tendons supplies. Neither the thumb nor the great toe has a lumbri-form. Similar muscles occur in some mammals besides man.

Lumbri-cide (lum-bri-sīd), n. pl. [NL., < Lumbri-cus + -ida.] A family of terri-colous annelids of the order Oligochaeta, typified by the genus Lumbri-cus; earthworms. The body is long, cylindric, or nearly so, with numerous rings or segments, bearing bristly parapodia which assist in progression, some of the segments being modified into a cingulum or clitellus. There are no eyes, ears, or oral armature. See earthworm.

lumbri-cide (lum'brī-sīd), n. [Contr. of lumbri-cide*, < L. lumbri-cus, an intestinal worm, + -ida, a killer, < cadere, kill.] A vermifuge or anthelmintic which destroys the roundworm, Ascaris lumbri-coides.

lumbri-ciform (lum-bri-sī'fōrm), a. [< L. lumbri-cus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm (see lumbrio), + forma, form.] Like an earthworm in form; lumbri-cine; lumbri-coid; vermiform. Lumbri-cina (lum-bri-sī'nā), n. pl. [NL., < Lumbri-cus + -ina.] A tribe of annelids, the terri-colous oligochaetous worms, such as earthworms. lumbri-cine (lum'brī-sīn), a. [< NL. lumbri-cinus, < L. lumbri-cus, an intestinal worm: see lumbrio.] Lumbri-ciform; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lumbri-cina.

lumbri-coid (lum'brī-sīd), a. and n. [< L. lumbri-cus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm (see lumbrio), + Gr. eidōs, form.] I. a. Resembling an earthworm: specifically applied to the internal parasite Ascaris lumbri-coides, a nematoid, one of the commonest of the worms which infest man. See Ascaris.

II. n. The worm Ascaris lumbri-coides. Lumbri-comorpha (lum-bri-kō-mōr'fā), n. pl. [NL., < L. lumbri-cus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm (see lumbrio), + Gr. mōrphē, form.] The earthworms and their allies, regarded as one of four orders of oligochaetous annelids.

Lumbri-culide (lum-bri-kū'lī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lumbri-culus + -ide.] A family of oligochaetous annelids, taking name from the genus Lumbri-culus.

Lumbri-culus (lum-bri-kū'lus), n. [NL., dim. of L. lumbri-cus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm: see lumbrio.] A genus of aquatic or limicolous oligochaetous annelids, the type of the family Lumbri-culidae. It is remarkable for the power of reproduction by transverse fission which its members possess. The worm breaks in two, and proceeds to develop a new head for one of its pieces and a new tail for the other.

Lumbri-cus (lum-bri'kus), n. [NL., < L. lumbri-cus, an intestinal worm, an earthworm: see lumbrio.] The typical genus of Lumbri-cidae, and together with Peri-cata composing that family; the earthworms proper, as L. terrestris.

lumbus (lum'bus), n.; pl. lumbi (lum'bi). [L., loin: see loin.] In anat., the loin; the lumbar region of the body.—Quadratus lumborum, the square muscle of the loin, a stout thick muscle of quadrilateral shape extending from the twelfth rib to the crest of the ilium on each side of the spinal column.

lumen, v. t. An obsolete form of loom.

lumen (lū'men), n.; pl. lumina (mī-nā). [NL., < L. lumen, light, a light, a window: see luminous.] 1. An opening or passageway, as, in anat., of a hollow tubular organ: as, the lumen of the intestine or of a blood-vessel.

Tracheotomy was resorted to, the larger lumen of the tube affording a freer vent. Lancet, No. 3454, p. 949.

2. In bot., the internal cavity, or space within the wall, of a cell.

In this section of the sclerotic thin lumina appear in all possible forms. De Bary, Fungi (trans.), p. 331.

lum-head (lum'hed), n. A chimney-top. [Scottish.]

The . . . blue reek that came out of the lum-head. Scott, Heart of Mid-Lothian, xxvii.

lumi-ère (F. pron. lū-mī-ēr'), n. [F., < LL. luminare, < L. lumen, light: see lumen.] In armor, the opening in the visor, whether of the large helm of the thirteenth century, of the basinet, or of the armet of the fifteenth century.

lumina, n. Plural of lumen.

luminant (lū'mī-nānt), a. and n. [< LL. luminant (-s), pp. of luminare, brighten: see luminare.] I. a. Emitting light; shining; luminous. II. n. An illuminating agent. [Rare.]

Public institutions and factories are very much in favour of the new luminant. Elect. Rev. (Eng.), XXIV, 384.

luminarist (lū'mī-nā-ris-t), n. [< luminar (y) + -ist.] In painting, a master of light and shade; one skilful in rendering gradations and effects of light or of shadow.

The finest works of that great and subtle luminarist Adrian van Ostade. The Academy, Jan. 31, 1880, p. 48.

luminar-y (lū'mī-nā-rī), n.; pl. luminaries (-rīz). [< OF. luminarie, F. luminare, a light, = Pg. Sp. luminar, luminaria = It. luminare, luminara, luminaria, < LL. luminare, a lamp, a light, L. luminare, a window, < lumen (lū'mīn), light: see luminous.] 1. A light-giver; a body that illuminates or gives out light: applied especially to the sun and moon.

Where the great luminary . . . Dispenses light from far. Milton, P. L., iii. 576.

Hence—2. One who is a source of intellectual light; a person who illustrates any subject, or enlightens mankind: as, the great luminaries of an age; a luminary of literature or science.

It will not be necessary to bring under review the minor luminaries of this period. Francis, Ferd. and Isa., l. 1.

3. An illumination.

There were Luminaries of Joy lately here for the Victory that Don Gonzales de Cordova got over Count Mansfelt in the Netherlands. Howell, Letters, l. iii. 14.

luminat-e (lū'mī-nāt), v. t. [< LL. luminatus, pp. of luminare, illumine, < L. lumen (lū'mīn), light: see luminous. Cf. illuminate, illumine, illumine, illumine, etc.] To illuminate.

luminat-ion (lū'mī-nā'shōn), n. [< LL. as if luminatio* (-n), < luminare, shine: see illuminate.] 1. Illumination. Johnson.—2. A lighting up; a flashing out, as of light or energy; an illuminating outburst. [Rare.]

The liberty of the Netherlands, notwithstanding several brilliant but brief luminations, occurring at irregular intervals, seemed to remain in almost perpetual eclipse. Molloy, Dutch Republic, l. 48.

luminet (lū'mīn), v. t. [< ME. luminen, < LL. luminare, shine: see illuminate and loom. Cf. illumine.] To illumine; to enlighten. See illumine.

Thus the outward parts of the place illumined the eyes of the beholders, by reason of y^e symptomatic works. Hall, Hist. Hen. VIII., an. 12.

lumine (lū'mīn), n. [< L. lumen (lū'mīn), light: see lumen, luminous.] The principle or the medium of light; the luminiferous ether. London Jour. Arts, Sci., and Manuf., 1848.

luminer, n. An obsolete form of luminer. lumineret, n. A Middle English form of luminer. luminescence (lū'mī-nēs'ens), n. [< luminescent (-i) + -ce.] See the quotation. [Rare.]

In a former paper I have ventured to employ the term luminescence for all those phenomena of light which are more intense than corresponds to the actual temperature. E. Weidemann, Philosophical Mag., 5th ser., XXVIII, 151.

luminescent (lū'mī-nēs'ent), a. [< L. luminare, shine, + -escent.] Characterized by luminescence. [Rare.]

Luminescent light is in a high degree dependent in colour and intensity upon the mode of production. E. Weidemann, Philosophical Mag., 5th ser., XXVIII, 155.

luminiferous (lū'mī-nīf'ē-rus), a. [< L. lumen (lū'mīn), light, + ferre = E. bear.] 1. In physics, producing or bearing light; yielding light: as, the luminiferous ether. See ether, 2.

The luminiferous motions are only components of the whole motion. Sir W. Thomson, Reprint of Papers, p. 419.

2. Serving as a medium for conveying light.

luminologist (lū'mī-nol'ō-jist), n. 1. One who is versed in the study of illuminations (of manuscripts).—2. One who studies the luminous phenomena of living organisms.

He incorporates manuscript notes placed at his disposal by our veteran Goese, and by luminologists such as Giglioli, Dubois, and others. Nature, XXXVII, 411.

luminosity (lū'mī-nos'ī-tī), n. [= F. luminosité = It. luminosità, < ML. luminosita (-t-s), splendor, < L. luminosus, luminous: see luminous.] 1. The quality of being luminous or bright; luminousness; the radiation or reflection of light.

The luminosity of ordinary flames depends on the pressure of the supporting medium.

E. Frankland, Exper. in Chem., p. 904.

2. Specifically, the intensity of light in a color, measured photometrically. That is to say, a standard light has its intensity, or vis viva, altered until it produces the impression of being equally bright with the color whose luminosity is to be determined; and the measure of the vis viva of the altered light relatively to its standard intensity is then taken as the luminosity of the color in question.

It is evident, then, that brightness or luminosity is one of the properties by which we can define colour; it is our second colour constant. This word luminosity is also often used by artists in an entirely different sense; they call colour in a painting luminous simply because it recalls to the mind the impression of light, not because it actually reflects much light to the eye.

O. W. Rood, Modern Chromatics.

3. In bot., phosphorescence.

luminous (lū'mī-nūs), a. [< F. lumineux = Sp. Pg. It. luminoso, < L. luminosus, luminous, shining, < lumen (lū'mīn), light, for lumen*, < lucere, shine: see lucet, light.] 1. Radiating or reflecting light; giving out light, whether as an original or as a secondary source; illuminating; shining; radiant; bright.—2. Producing or adapted to produce light; having the power of yielding light.

The admission of luminous waves gives a perfectly satisfactory explanation . . . of the great majority of the phenomena of light. Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 212.

3. Lighted up; illuminated; bright; clear; resplendent; rendering an effect of lightness or brightness, as a work of art or a color.

The church of St. Justina, designed by Palladio, is the most handsome, luminous, disencumbered building in the inside that I have ever seen.

Addison, Remarks on Italy (ed. Bohn), l. 384.

Making the dusk and silence of the woods Glad with the laughter of the chasing floods, And luminous with blown spray and silver gleams. Whittier, Franconia from the Penicillaria.

4. Figuratively, brilliant; bright or resplendent to the mind. [Rare.]

He [Bunsen] is really luminous, and his conversation equally amusing and instructive. Greenleaf, Memoirs, April 9, 1830.

5. Clear or evident to the mind, as if emitting light or as if illuminated; of such a nature as to be readily apprehended by the understanding.

None of his critics has refused him [Boscovich] the praise of the most luminous perspicuity.

D. Stewart, Philos. Essays, l. 2.

6. Characterized by perspicuity of thought; as, a luminous intellect.—Luminous animals or plants, those animals or plants which emit light from the whole or some part of the body.—Luminous currents, a term sometimes applied to electric currents through rarefied gases (see Catheter's tubes, under tubes).—Luminous point. See point.

luminously (lū'mī-nūs-lī), adv. In a luminous manner; with brightness or clearness. Smart. luminousness (lū'mī-nūs-nēs), n. The quality of being luminous, in any sense; brightness; clearness.

lummak-in (lum'g-kin), a. [Cf. lummock.] Heavy; awkward. [Prov. Eng.]

lumme (lum), n. A variant of loom.

lummock (lum'ok), n. [Cf. lummak-in; prob. ult. connected with lump.] An unwieldy, clumsy, stupid fellow. [Prov. Eng. and U. S.]

lummy (lum'i), a. [Origin obscure.] Knowing; cute. [Thieves' slang.]

To think of Jack Dawkins—lummy Jack—the Dodger, the Artful Dodger, going abroad for a common twopenny-halfpenny sneeze-box! Dickens, Oliver Twist, xiii.

lump (lump), n. [< ME. lompe, lump, < Sw. dial. and Norw. lump, a stump, a piece cut off from a log; cf. OD. lompe, D. lomp, a rag, tatter, = late MHG. lump, G. lumpen, a rag, tatter, lump, a ragamuffin, curmudgeon; prob. ult. akin (as a nasalized form) to lap. Cf. lunch, clump.] 1. A small mass; a relatively small aggregation or conglomeration of solid matter without regular form: as, a lump of ore, clay, or dough; to melt a number of coins into one lump.

A loaf other half a loaf, other a lompe of cheese.

Piers Plowman (O), x. 150.

A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump. Gal. v. 9. "Deborah, my dear," cried I to my wife, "give those boys a lump of sugar each." Goldsmith, Vicar, vi.

2. A protuberant part; a knob, bunch, or swelling: as, a lump raised on the head by a blow.—3. A blow.

Hittes hym on the hede, that the helme briste; Hurdes his herte-pane an haunde-brede large! Thus he layes one the lumps, and lordly theme served, Wondre worthily wirchfulle knyghtes! Morris Arthur (R. L. T. S.), l. 230.

A dull, stolid person.

Did you mark the gentleman
How boldly and how audaciously he talked,
And how unlike the lump I took him for,
The piece of ignorant dough?
Fletcher, Rule a Wife, III. 1.

5. In firearms: (a) The nipple-seat on the barrel. (b) In a break-joint breech-loader, an iron block on the barrel which descends into a recess in the action.—6. A bloom or loupe of malleable iron.—In the lump, as a whole; in the entirety; in gross.

He dwells altogether in general. He praises or dispraises in the lump. Addison, Sir Timothy Tittle.

Lump sum, a sum of money paid at one time, so as to cover several charges or items.—Lump work, work undertaken to be done in the aggregate, so as to include all the parts of it, for a stipulated payment, as by contract.

lump¹ (lump), v. [< lump¹, n.] I. trans. 1. To make into a mass; combine in a body or gross sum without distinction of particulars.

Therefore is Space, and therefore Time, that men may know that all things are not huddled and lumped, but numbered and individual. Emerson, Discipline.

2. To take in the lump, or collectively in the gross; consider or dispose of in the gross.

Not forgetting all others, whom for brevity, but out of no resentment to you, I lump all together. Sterne.

3. To beat severely. [Prov. Eng.]

II. intrans. To act as a lump; be employed in loading or unloading ships, as a stevedore.

lump² (lump), n. [Appar. a particular use of lump¹; the D. lump, G. lump (lumpfisch, also klumpfisch), F. lumpo, It. lumpo, lumpo, the fish so called, are appar. from E.] The lump-fish.

Lumps are of two sorts, the one as round almost as a bowl, the other resembling the fillets of a calf; either of them is deformed, shapeless, and ugly. . . . Being flayed they resemble a soft and galled substance. Maffei, quoted in Baboon (E. E. T. S.), II. 44.

lump³ (lump), v. t. [Prob. < lump¹, with some addition of sense from glum and glump, which mean the same.] To look sullen or glum; sulk.

It did so gaul her at the harts, that now she beganne to froune, lumps, and lowre at her housebands. Riche, His Farewell (1581). (Nares.)

lump⁴ (lump), v. t. [A vague slang use, an indefinite antithesis to like, but prob. orig. identical with lump¹, v. t., 2, 'take in the lump', i. e. swallow whole. There is no necessary connection with lump³.] To take without choice; take "anyhow": a word in itself of no definite signification, used in the expression "if you don't like it, you may lump it." [Slang.]

And I told him, if he didn't like it he might lump it, and he travelled off on his left ear, you bet!

Bret Harte, Five o'Clock in the Morning.

lumpent, Past participle of lump³.

lumper (lum'pér), n. 1. In some places, a laborer employed to load and unload vessels in port; a dock-hand; a longshoreman; a stevedore.—2. A militiaman. [Prov. Eng.]

He hath a cursed spite to us, because we shot his father. He was going to bring the lumpers upon us, only he was scared, last winter.

R. D. Blackmore, Lorna Doone, xxxviii.

3. In soil, one who lumps several described species, genera, etc., in one: opposed to splitter. [Can't.]

The second paper contains, first, a discussion of some principles of zoological classification, being an answer to Dr. Seeborn's reproach of having . . . aimed at "hitting the happy medium between lumpers and splitters." Nature, XXXIX. 155.

lump-fish (lum'fish), n. [= G. lumpfisch (also klumpfisch); < lump² + fish¹.] An acanthopterygian fish, Cyclopterus lumpus, of the family Cyclopteridae. It is of uncouth form, with a high ridged back and a hump in which is concealed the small spinous dorsal fin, a fleshy abdomen, a thick loose skin with a median dorsal and three lateral rows of spinous plates and small intervening tubercles, and a thoracic circular notorial disk constituted by the united ventral fins, by means of which it adheres with great force to any substance to which it applies itself. Before the spawning season it is of a brilliant crimson color, mingled with orange, purple, and blue, but afterward changes to a dull blue or lead color. It sometimes weighs seven pounds and its flesh is very fine at some seasons, though insipid at others. It frequents the northern seas, and is often brought to the Edinburgh and London markets. A Scotch name for it is oolipuddle. Also called lump-sucker, from its power of adhesion, and sea-out, from its uncouth appearance. See Cyclopterus.

lumpiness (lum'pi-ness), n. The quality or condition of being lumpy or full of lumps.

lumping (lum'ping), p. a. [< lump¹ + -ing².] Bulky; chunky; heavy. Arbutnot.

He gives what is called the lumping ha'p'orth—that is, seven or eight pieces.

Maples, London Labour and London Poor, I. 170.

lumpish (lum'pish), a. [Formerly also lompish; < MD. lumpisch; < lump¹ + -ish¹.] 1. Like a lump; unformed; gross; dense.

And, lifting up his lompish head, with blame
Half angry asked him, for what he came.

Spenser, P. Q., I. i. 43.

He [Chaucer] found our language lumpish, stiff, unwilling.

Lowell, Study Windows, p. 255.

2. Clumsy; dull; stolid; stupid.

A lumpish blockhead churl, . . . which hath no more wit than an ass.

Sir T. More, Utopia (tr. by Robinson), II. 6.

When the enormous growth of personality has quite rolled away the old lumpish terror that stood before the cave of the physical and darkened it.

S. Lanier, The English Novel, p. 95.

lumpishly (lum'pish-ly), adv. [< ME. lumpisch-ly; < lumpish + -ly².] In lumps; in a lumpish or awkward manner; heavily; with dullness or stupidity.

Who-so speke to thee in any manner place,
Lumpishly caste not thin head a-doun.

Baboon Book (E. E. T. S.), p. 27.

Men came of all sorts: the intelligent well-paid artisan, . . . huge carters and draymen, the boy attached to each by the laws of the profession often struggling lumpishly behind his master. Mrs. E. Ward, Robert Elamero, xlix.

lumpishness (lum'pish-ness), n. The quality of being lumpish; heaviness; dullness; stolidity.

Methinks, I dwell in a kind of discololate darkness, and a sad lumpishness of unbelief, wanting that lightsome assurance which others profess to find in themselves.

Sp. Hall, The Comforter.

lump-sucker (lum'puk'er), n. Same as lump-fish.

lump-sugar (lum'pshug'ér), n. Loaf-sugar broken into lumps, or cut into small cubes.

lumpus (lum'pus), n. [NL. (Aldrovandi, 1648), < E. lump².] The lump-fish: now its technical specific name.

lumpy (lum'pi), a. [< lump¹ + -y¹.] 1. Abounding in lumps or small aggregated masses; consisting of or formed into lumps. Specifically applied by boatmen to rough water in which the waves do not break, but run in small, irregular, roundish swells.

One of the best spades to dig hard lumpy clays, but too small for light garden mould. Mortimer, Husbandry.

The bow end is immersed with a view of doing away with the "spanking" of the flat floor when the boats are driven in lumpy water. Qualtrough, Boat Sailer's Manual, p. 85.

2. Heavy; clumsy; dense; dull.

lumpy-jaw (lum'pi-já), n. In pathol., actinomycosis affecting the jaw.

luna (lū'nā), n. [L., the moon, orig. luona*, < lucere, shine: see lucet.] 1. The moon: personified as a Roman goddess, Luna, answering to the Greek goddess Selene.—2. An occasional form of crescent-headed arrow with the concave side outermost and sharpened. Arrows of this form, like the rarer ones with a chisel-shaped head, were intended to cut the hamstring of horses and of animals of the chase.

3. In alchemy, silver.—4. The luna-moth.—Luna cornuta, horn-silver: an alchemistic name for fused silver chlorid.

lunacy (lū'nā-si), n.; pl. lunacies (-siz). [Irreg. < luna(tic) + -cy.] 1. The kind of intermittent insanity formerly supposed to be subject to the changes of the moon; hence, madness in general; any unsoundness of mind. See insanity.

The terms of our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shak., Hamlet, III. 2. 7.

2. In law, unsoundness of mind sufficient to incapacitate for civil transactions. The usual test is incapacity to manage one's own property and affairs.—Commissioner in lunacy, a commissioner appointed pursuant to law to visit and inspect asylums and grant licenses to persons who undertake to receive and provide for patients.—Commission of lunacy. See commission.—Master in lunacy, a judicial or quasi-judicial officer chosen to investigate the mental condition of persons supposed to be insane, or to supervise the administration of asylums or both.—Syn. Derangement, Craziness, etc. See insanity.

luna-moth (lū'nā-moth), n. A large bombycid moth, Actias luna, the most beautiful of North American insects, of a light-green color relieved by luniform eye-spots and by a broad purplish-brown or lilaceous anterior border. The body is whitish, with a brown bar across the thorax. The full-grown moth expands about 5 inches, and the hinder wings are tailed to the length of an inch or more. The larva is greenish, and feeds on walnut, hickory, sweet-gum, beech, birch, willow, and plum. The eggs are laid in small batches on the twigs. The cocoon is formed within a leaf, and in autumn drops to the ground, where it remains through the winter. The caterpillar is known as the luna-silkworm.

lunar (lū'nār), a. and n. [= F. lunaire = Pr. Sp. Pg. lunar = It. lunare, < L. lunaris, of the moon, lunar, < luna, the moon: see luna.] 1. a. 1. Of, pertaining, or relating to the moon: as, the lunar changes; lunar observations.—2. Situated or moving like the moon; acting as a moon.—3. Measured by the revolutions of the moon: as, lunar months or years.—4. Resembling the moon; round: as, a lunar shield. Specifically, in anat. and zool.: (a) Resembling a half-moon; semilunar; crescentic; lunate: as, lunar markings; a lunar bone. (b) In entom., marked with crescentic or luniform spots; lunated.

5. Supposed to be affected by or due to the influence of the moon: as, lunar madness.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

6. In anat., of or pertaining to the lunare, or semilunar bone of the carpus.—7. Pertaining to silver: from the moon being the alchemical symbol of that metal: as, lunar caustic (nitrate of silver).—Lunar bone, a certain bone of the wrist or carpus. See lunare.—Lunar caustic. See caustic.—Lunar cycle. Same as Metonic cycle (which see, under cycle).—Lunar distance, in navt. astron., the distance of the moon from the sun, or from a fixed star or planet lying nearly in the line of its path, by means of which the longitude of a ship at sea may be calculated.—Lunar equation. See equation.—Lunar hornet-moth, Actias bombyciformis, a hornet-moth having a crescentic yellow spot on the thorax, and a black crescent on each fore wing: an English collector's name.—Lunar macula. See macula.—Lunar mansion, one of 28 (or 27) parts into which the ecliptic was or is divided by various oriental peoples, as the Hindus, Chinese, and Arabians, their mean length being the path of the moon in one day among the stars. Each mansion is determined by certain stars occupying it.—Lunar method, in navt. astron., the method of determining longitude from observation of lunar distances.—Lunar month. See month.—Lunar nodes. See nodes.—Lunar observation, an observation of the moon's distance from a star for the purpose of finding the longitude.—Lunar stars, certain stars and other celestial objects whose geocentric distance from the moon is given in the Nautical Almanac for certain hours, so that by measuring the apparent distance of the moon from one or more of them the longitude can be found.

He knew every lunar star in both hemispheres.

R. H. Dana, Jr., Before the Mast, p. 222.

Lunar tables. (a) In astron., tables of the moon's motions for computing the moon's true place at any time, past or future. (b) In navigation, tables for correcting the apparent distance of the moon from the sun, or from a fixed star, on account of refraction and parallax, and for deducing the longitude of the observer from the lunar data given in the almanac.—Lunar theory, the deduction of the moon's motion from the law of gravitation.—Lunar underwing, Anchoecia lunosa, a small noctuid moth of ochre-brown color, whose underwings are marked with a crescentic darker spot: an English collector's name.—Lunar year. See year.

II. n. In navigation, lunar distance, or an observation for lunar distance: as, to take a lunar.

These trials were partly made at Greenwich by Maskelyne, who, as we shall see, was a great advocate of lunars, and was not ready to admit more than a subsidiary value to the watch. Encyc. Brit., XVII. 252.

lunare (lū'nārē), n.; pl. lunaria (-ri-ā). [NL., neut. (sc. os) of L. lunaris, lunar: see lunar.] A bone of the carpus, more fully named os lunare, and also called semilunare, or the semilunar bone: supposed to represent the bone of the typical carpus called intermedium by Gegenbaur. It is sometimes fused with the scaphoid, forming a single scapholunar bone, as in carnivores. When distinct, as in man, it is the middle bone of the proximal row, between the scaphoid and the cuneiform.

Lunaria (lū'nārī-ā), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), < L. lunaris, of the moon: see lunar.] 1. A genus of cruciferous herbs of the tribe Alsinoideae, characterized by entire cordate leaves and a very broad siliqua on a long stipite, the seeds being attached by long stalks. There are two species, found in Europe and western Asia. L. annua (including L. biennis) is the common honesty, also called cash-flower and bolbone, cultivated for its racemes of large purple flowers and the silvery partitions of the fruit. L. rediviva, the perennial honesty, is also cultivated, but less commonly.

2. [I. c.] Plural of lunare and lunarium.

lunarium (lū'nārī-an), n. [< L. lunaris, of the moon (see lunar), + -an.] 1. One of the (supposed) inhabitants of the moon.—2. One versed in knowledge of the moon; a student of lunar phenomena. Also lunarist.—3. An advocate of the lunar method of finding longitude at sea: a term which has lost its significance since the chronometer has reached its present state of perfection.

There were powerful competitors who hoped to gain it [a reward offered for the best method of finding longitude at sea] by lunars, and a bill was passed through the House in 1728 which left an open chance for a lunarium during four years.

Encyc. Brit., XVII. 252.

lunarist (lū'nār-ist), n. [< lunar + -ist.] Same as lunarian, 2.

In such grand disturbances as these [storms], the Lunarist should endeavour to trace influences of moon, and the Astro-meteorologist even those of planets.

Fitz Roy, Weather Book, p. 222.

lunarium (lū-nā'ri-um), n.; pl. lunariums, lunaria (-ums, -i). [N.L., < L. lunaris, of the moon: see lunar.] A mechanical representation of the moon and its phases.

What is become of the Lunarium for the King?

Jefferson, Correspondence, II, 303.

lunary¹ (lū'nā-ri), a. [< L. lunaris, of the moon: see lunar.] Same as lunar.

The Greeks observed the lunary year—that is, twelve revolutions of the moon, 354 days.

Str. T. Bruma, Vulg. Err., iv, 12.

lunary² (lū'nā-ri), n.; pl. lunaries (-rix). [< ME. lunarie = OF. lunaire, < ML. lunaria, moonwort (in N.L. the specific name of the plant), < L. lunaris, of the moon: see lunar.] 1. The garden-flower Lunaria annua. See honesty, 5, and Lunaria.—2. The moonwort, Botrychium Lunaria. This herb was formerly supposed to have the power of opening locks and drawing the shoes from the feet of horses. (See quotation under lunatic, a., 3.) The name was formerly applied to various other real or imaginary plants having superstitious associations.

luna-silkworm (lū'nā-silk'werm), n. The caterpillar of the luna-moth, Actias luna.

Luna-silkworm (Actias luna), natural size.

lunata, n. Plural of lunatum.

lunate (lū'nāt), a. [< L. lunatus, crescent-shaped, pp. of lunare, bend like a crescent, < luna, the moon: see luna.] 1. Crescent-shaped, or like the moon in its first quarter; having a figure formed by a part of a circle cut off by the segment of a larger circle.—2. In zool., same as lunated.—2.—Lunate palpi, in entom., palpi having the last joint crescent-shaped.

lunated (lū'nāt-ed), a. 1. Formed like a crescent.

A sort of cross, which our heralds do not dream of; which is a cross lunated after this manner.

E. Bruma, Travels (1685), p. 54.

2. In zool., having crescentiform markings: as, the lunated broadbill, Scolopagus lunatus.—Lunated falcon. See falcon.

lunatellus (lū'nā-tel'us), n.; pl. lunatelli (-i). [< L. luna, the moon, & tellus, earth. Cf. telluricus.] An orrery showing the astronomical relations of the earth and the moon. E. H. Knight.

lunately (lū'nāt-ly), adv. In the form of a crescent.

More or less lunately curved.

H. C. Wood, Fresh-Water Algae, p. 100.

Lunatic (lū'nā-tī-ĭ), n. Same as Nathoa.

lunatic (lū'nā-tīk), a. and n. [< ME. lunatik, < OF. lunatique (vernacularly lunage), F. lunatique = Sp. lunático = Pg. It. lunatico, < LL. lunaticus, mad, moonstruck, insane, < L. luna, the moon: see luna.] 1. a. 1. Moonstruck; affected by lunacy; periodically insane, with lucid intervals; crazy.

Persuade him that he hath been lunatic.

Shak., T. of the 3, Ind., I, 63.

It pleased God to restore him again to life, but so drunk and affrighted that he seemed lunatic.

Quoted in Capt. John Smith's Works, I, 230.

2. Indicating lunacy; in the nature of lunacy.

Sometime with lunatic bans, sometime with prayers.

Shak., Learn., II, 3, 10.

Of a most lunatic conscience and spleen, and affects the violence of singularity in all he does.

B. Jonson, Bartholomew Fair, I, 1.

3. Of or like the moon. [An erroneous use.]

That ferrum equinum (lunary) . . . hath a vertice attractive of iron, a power to break lockes, and draw off the chains of a horse that presseth over it. . . . Which strange and magicall effects comes unto me to have no deeper root in reason than the figure of its seed, for therein indeed it somewhat resembles an horseshoe, which notwithstanding Baptista Porta hath too low a signation, and raised the same unto a Lunatic representation.

Str. T. Bruma, Pseud. Apid., II, 6 (1644, p. 100).

II. n. 1. A person affected with lunacy; specifically, an insane person who has lucid intervals, or one whose unsoundness of mind is acquired, not congenital, as distinguished from an idiot.

I must convince you, not only that the unhappy prisoner was a lunatic, within my own definition of lunacy, but that the act in question was the immediate, unqualified offspring of the disease.

Brutus, Speech for James Hadfield.

A lunatic is one who has had understanding, but by disease, grief, or other accident has lost the use of his reason, which yet the law presumes that he may recover.

Minor, Inst. (3d ed.), I, 82.

2. More generally (and in law), any person of unsound mind. See further under lunacy and insanity.

The lunatic, the lover, and the poet
Are of imagination all compact;
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold—
That is, the madman. Shak., M. N. D., v, 1, 2.

'Tis time to take the monarch's power in hand:
Authority and force to join the skill,
And save the lunatic against their will.

Titus (7), in Dryden's Abs. and Achit., xii, 780.

Adjudicated lunatic, one whose incompetency to manage his own property and affairs, by reason of mental unsoundness, has been judicially established by a commission or inquest, and who is thereby interdicted from making contracts and dispositions of property.—Criminal lunatic, a convict, or one in custody under accusation of crime, who has been found to be unfit for trial or for punishment by reason of unsoundness of mind; sometimes used to include also persons not amenable to criminal punishment by reason of having been of unsound mind at the time of committing the crime.—Lunatic asylum, a house or hospital established for the reception and treatment of lunatics.—Id. See insanity.

lunatic (lū-nā-tī-kal), a. [< lunatic + -al.] Affected by or manifesting madness or lunacy; lunatic. [Rare.]

At any rate, he was of a most lunatic deportment.

Hovell, Venetian Life, vii.

lunation (lū-nā'shon), n. [< ME. lunacion = F. lunaison = Sp. lunacion = Pg. lunação = It. lunazione, < ML. lunatio (-n-), the revolution of the moon; in form as if < L. lunare, pp. lunatus, bend like a crescent (see lunate), but in sense directly < luna, the moon: see luna.] The period of a synodic revolution of the moon, or the time from one new moon to the next.

And there is not the Mone seyn in alle the Lunacion, but only the seconde quarteroon.

Mandeville, Travels, p. 301.

When it is stated that during four lunations twelve series of observations only were secured, some idea of the amount of cloudy weather can be formed.

C. F. Hall, Polar Expedition, p. 323.

lunatum (lū-nā'tum), n.; pl. lunata (-tū). [L., neut. of lunatus, crescent-shaped: see lunate.] A bone of the proximal row of the carpus of some animals, as batrachians, on the radial side of the wrist, probably homologous with the radiale.

lunch (lunch), n. [A var. of lump, as bunch of bump and hunch of hump. In def. 2 lunch is commonly regarded as an abbr. of luncheon, which is therefore by some preferred as the more correct or "elegant" form; but lunch, 2, is derivable as well from lunch, 1, directly; cf. piece in the sense of 'a slight repast.' See luncheon.] 1. A large lump or piece, as of bread. [Prov. Eng. and Scotch.]

An cheese and bread, frae women's laps,
Was dealt about in lunches. Burns, Holy Fair.

2. A slight repast or meal between breakfast and dinner, or, as formerly, between dinner and supper, or between dinner or supper and bedtime; luncheon.

As for the lunches, the one is pure Sicilian, of the fruits of the orchard and the vine; the other, pure Briton, smacking of the cook and the larder.

Sedman, Vict. Poets, p. 231.

lunch (lunch), v. t. [< lunch, n.] To take a lunch or luncheon.

I have breakfasted with Bolivar—I have lunched with Napoleon—I have dined with Wellington—and now, blessed be the stars above, here am I drinking tea with North and Ticker. Notes Ambrosiana, Sept. 1, 1852.

We lunched fairly upon little dishes of rose leaves delicately preserved.

Hovell, Venetian Life, xiii.

lunch-counter (lunch'koun'tēr), n. A counter or long elevated table in an eating-house or other house of entertainment, at which persons sit on high stools or stand while taking a lunch: also, colloquially, a standee. [U. S.]

luncheon (lun'chun), n. [Formerly also luncheon, lunshin, a dial. word, prob. for lunshin*, lunching*, < lunch + -ing.] The termination, like that of the unrelated nuncheon, simulates a F. origin.] 1. A large lump or piece, as of bread: same as lunch, 1. Cotgrave.

I sliced the luncheon from the barley-loaf.

Gay, Shepherd's Week, Tuesday, I, 70.

I instantly borrowed the old man's knife, and, taking up the loaf, cut myself a hearty luncheon.

Stowe, Sentimental Journey, p. 115.

2. A slight repast: same as lunch, 2. The form luncheon is now regarded as more "elegant" than lunch.

He was introduced to the early dinner, where all the children sat in their high chairs, and where the food was more wholesome than delicate—a meal which was too plainly dinner to be disguised under the name of luncheon. Mrs. Oliphant, Poor Gentleman, xiv.

luncheon (lun'chun), v. t. [< luncheon, n.] To take lunch or luncheon. [Rare.]

While ladies are luncheoning on Perford pie, or courting in whirling britalkas, performing all the singular ceremonies of a London morning in the heart of the season. Dunbar.

luncheon-bar (lun'chun-bär), n. In Great Britain, a part of an inn or public house where luncheon can be had. Compare lunch-counter.

lunda (lun'dg), n. [A native name.] 1. The common puffin, Fratercula arctica. Montagu.—2. [cap.] [N.L.] A genus of Alcidae, having the bill much as in Fratercula, but the head adorned with a long curly crest on each side; the tufted puffins. L. cirrata is a common species of the North Pacific ocean from California to Kamchatka. See Fratercula and puffin.

lundress (lun'dres), n. [< F. Londres, London.] A sterling silver penny formerly coined in London. Encyc. Dict.

lune¹ (lün), n. [< F. lune = Sp. Pg. It. luna, < L. luna, the moon: see luna.] 1. Anything in the shape of a crescent or half-moon. [Rare.]

Some faithful janisaries strew'd the field,
Fall'n in just ranks or wedges, lunes or squares,
Firm as they stood.

Watts, Lyric Poems, II. (Encyc. Dict.)

2. In geom., a figure formed on a sphere or on a plane by two arcs of circles which inclose a space. Hippocrates, probably a contemporary of the celebrated physician of that name, squared those lunes (lunivores) which are contained by two arcs standing on the same chord, the central angles of the arcs being to one another as 1:2 or 1:3 or 2:3.

The lune of Hippocrates is famous as being the first curvilinear space whose area was exactly determined. Davies.

3. A fit of lunacy or madness; a mad freak or tantrum.

Yes, watch
His pettish lunes, his ebbs, his flows, as if
The passage and whole carriage of this action Rode on his tide. Shak., T. and C., II, 3, 130.

lune² (lün), n. [Prob. another form of lune.] A leash: as, the lune of a hawk.

The lunes, or small thongs of leather, might be fastened to them with two tyrrits, or rings; and the lunes were loosely wound round the little finger. Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, p. 91.

lune³ (lün), n. Another spelling of *loon*².

Lunel (lū-nel'), n. [F.] A sweet and rich white muscat wine, similar to Frontignan, produced in the south of France, in the department of Hérault.

lunet (lū-net), n. [< F. lunette, OF. lunete, dim. of lune, the moon: see *lune*¹. Cf. lunette.] A little moon; a satellite.

Our predecessors could never have believed that there were such lunets about some of the planets as our late perspectives have described. Sp. Hall, Peace-Maker, § 10.

lunette (lū-net'), n. [< F. lunette, dim. of lune, the moon: see *lune*¹.] 1. In fort., a detached work with flanks, presenting a salient angle to the enemy, intended for the protection of avenues, bridges, and the curtains of field-works.—2. In farriery, a half-horseshoe, having only the front.—

3. A blinder for the eye of a horse.—4. In arch.: (a) The aperture formed by the intersection of any vault by a vault of smaller dimensions; particularly, such an aperture in a vaulted ceiling for the admission of light. Of this class are the upper lights of the naves of St. Peter's at Rome and St. Paul's in London.

The effigy is placed under a Gothic arch whose lunette once contained a fresco by the Bleseno painter Pietro Lorenzetti.

C. C. Perkins, Italian Sculpture, p. 50.

(b) A small aperture or window, especially if curved or circular, in a roof.—5. In a glass-lunette, the fine connecting the fire-chamber and the pot-chamber. E. H. Knight.—6. A watch-crystal flattened in the center; also, a kind of concavo-convex lens for spectacles.—7. In archaeol., a crescent ornament made of thin gold and intended as a diadem or gorget, found in ancient tombs of various epochs.—8. A work of art of such a shape as to fill a lunette, especially a painting or panel of such shape: as, the lunettes of Correggio.

Lunette, def. 1.

A lunette for an altar of the Church of Saint Agostino. The Porphyro, March, 1888, p. 82.

9. One of the two open loops of steel which constitute the guard of the ordinary fleuret or foil used in fencing.—10. In artillery, an iron ring at the end of the trail-plate of a gun-carriage, to be placed over the pintle-hook of the limber in limbering up.—11. In the Rom. Cath. Ch., a crescent-shaped or circular case of crystal fitted into the monstrance for the purpose of receiving the consecrated host for solemn exposition.

lung (lung), n. [ME. lunge, longe (pl. lunges), < AS. lungen (not lunga*), pl. lungena (not lungan*) = OFries. lungen, lungene = *MD. longe, D. long = OHG. lungana, lungina, lungina, lungd, MHG. lungene, G. lunge = Icel. lungu, pl. lungu = Sw. lunga = Dan. lunga, lung; akin to AS. lungor (= OHG. lungar, MHG. lungen), quick (orig. light), lungre, quickly (orig. lightly), and to AS. leht, lht (orig. lht*), light: see light, a., and cf. light, n., in pl., lungs (of an animal); cf. also Pg. leve, lung, < leve, light, < L. levis, light, akin to E. light, a., and thus ult. to lung.] 1. One of the two spongy or saccular organs, occupying the thorax or upper part of the body-cavity, which communicate with the pharynx through the trachea, and are the organs of respiration in air-breathing vertebrates. The corresponding organs of those animals that breathe under water are the gills or branchiae; in ordinary fishes the homologue of a lung is the air-bladder or sound, whose varying conditions* divided into an upper, a middle, and a lower lobe; the left simply into an upper and a lower. At the inner side of each lung, a little above the middle, the bronchus and blood-vessels enter, forming the root of the lung; and except for this attachment the lung lies free in its pleural cavity, which it completely fills. The lung is elastic and always on the stretch. The blood, in passing through the lungs, gives off carbon dioxide to the air in the alveoli, and receives oxygen. This absorption and elimination seems to be a simple mechanical process, and independent of any secreting or other activity of the epithelial cells. In the lower vertebrates there may be but one lung, or one may be much larger than the other. A lung may lie in the general cavity of the body and be of great extent, as in serpents. The lungs are fixed and molded to the ribs in birds, and in this class the air-passages through the lungs expand into great sac-like sacs which occupy most parts of the body and extend into the hollow bones.

With his sword the bore he stonage
Thorough the liver and the lungs.
MS. Cantab. Fl. II. 88, l. 100. (Halliwell.)

And the kynge Ban smote Acolas, that the shoulder dis-severed from the body so depe that the longe apored.
Merlin (E. E. T. S.), II. 357.

2. In entom., one of the respiratory organs peculiar to those Arachnida whose tracheal system is modified into a number of lamellae superimposed upon one another like the leaves of a book. They are also called pulmonary lamellae and respiratory leaflets.—3. In pulmonate mollusks, a modification of the integument subserving aerial respiration; more fully called external lung. Huxley.—4. pl. A bellows-blower; a chemist's servant.

That is his fire-drake,
His Lunge, his Zephyrus, that puffs his coils.
B. Jonson, Alchemist, II. 1.

At the top of one's lungs, with the utmost strength of one's voice.—Brown induration of the lungs. See induration.—Collins's lung, in pathol., anthracosis.—To try one's lungs, to raise one's voice to its utmost pitch. I once had the good luck to hear old Christopher North try his lungs in the open air in Scotland. Such laughter and such hill-shaking merry-heartedness I may never listen to again in the Lochea. J. T. Fields, Underbrush, p. 190.

lunged (lun), v. [Formerly longe, lunge; by spherism from alonge, allonge (appar. taken as a longe): see allonge.] 1. In fencing, a thrust.

In a desperate lunge, which Leicester successfully put aside, Tremilian exposed himself at disadvantage.
Scott, Kenilworth, xxxix.

2. Any sudden forward movement of a person or thing resembling the lunge of a fencer; a plunge; a lurch: as, the lunge of a coach. [Colloq.]

He . . . made so sudden a lunge forward that he threatened to upset the boat.
Harper's Mag., LXXIX. 111.

lunged (lun), v.; pret. and pp. lunged, ppr. lunging. [< lunge, n.] 1. Intrans. 1. To thrust, as in fencing, with the sword or foil; make a thrust forward; plunge.

When the grenadiers were lunging,
And like hail fell the plunging Cannon shot.
G. H. McMaster, The Old Continentals.

He . . . caught up the snuffers, and before applying them to the cabbage-headed candle, lunged at the sleeper.
Dieters, Little Dorrit, IV.

2. To hide; skulk. [Prov. Eng.]
II. trans. To cause to move in a plunging or jumping manner, as a horse held by a long rein, for exercise or training.

The coachman was lunging Georgy round the lawn on the gray pony.
Thackeray, Vanity Fair, xvi.

The place [a watercourse] should be widened gradually, and the water dammed up, the colt being always lunged over it before being ridden.
Snape, Brit., XII. 180.

lunged (lun), n. Same as longe.
lunged (lung), a. [< lung + -ed.] 1. Having lungs; technically, in soöl., pulmonate: common in compounds, as strong- or weak-lunged.—2. Drawing in and expelling air like the lungs. [Poetical.]

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lunged bellows hissing fire provoke.
Dryden, tr. of Juvenal's Satires, x.

lunger (lun'jer), n. One who lunges or thrusts. To do him justice . . . a swifter lunger never crossed a sword.
Bulwer, Zanoni, II. 1.

lung-fever (lung'fè'vèr), n. Pneumonia.

lung-fish (lung'fsh), n. A dipnoan; any fish of the order Dipnoi.

How difficult a matter it is to decide whether the lung-fish of Brazil and Senegambia belongs to the amphibia or to the fishes.
Pap. Sci. M., XXX. 678.

lung-flower (lung'fion'èr), n. The marsh-gentian, Gentiana Pneumonanthe: a translation of its specific name.

lung-grown (lung'grön), a. In med., having lungs that adhere to the pleura.

lungi, n. See longhos.

lungie, n. See longie.

lungist, n. [Also lungies; < OF. longie, an idle, stupid, dreaming fellow, appar. adopted and associated with long, long, from Longie, a proper name, < L. Longius or Longinus, the name in the old mystery plays, and in the apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus, of the centurion who thrust his spear into the body of Christ, the name being appar. suggested by Gr. λύγξ, a lance, in John xix. 34: see lawee.] Hence perhaps lungie.] A long, awkward fellow; a dull, drowsy man.

If he be cleanlye, then terme thee him proude; if meane in apparell, a slouen; if talke, a lungie.
Livy, Euphues, Anat. of Wit, p. 118.

How dost thou, Ralph? Art thou not shrewdly hurt? the foul great lungies laid unmercifully on thee.
Beau. and Fl., Knight of Burning Pestle, II. 4.

lungless (lung'les), a. [< lung + -less.] Having no lungs; not pulmonate, as certain inferior animals.

lung-liohen (lung'li'ken), n. Same as lungwort, 3.

lung-moss (lung'mös), n. Same as lungwort, 3. lungoor (lung'gör), n. [E. Ind.] A monkey of northern India, Semnopithecus schistaceus, resembling and related to the entellus monkey or hanuman; the white-bearded ape. Also lungoor, langhur.

lung-strongie (lung'ströng'gl), n. The strongie which infests the human lungs, Strongylus bronchialis.

lung-struck (lung'strök), a. Suffering from disease of the lungs. [Colloq.]

Aix-les-Bains and Matlock, where the lung-struck world passes July and August.
Pall Mall Gazette, Oct. 13, 1882. (Maye, Dict.)

lung-tester (lung'tes'tèr), n. An instrument for testing the capacity of the chest; a spirometer. E. H. Knight.

lung-woot, n. [ME. longe-woot; < lung + woot.] Consumption; phthisis.

The longe-woot cometh ofte of yvel eate,
The stomake eke of eire is overtake.
Palladius, Husbandrie (E. E. T. S.), p. 12.

lung-worm (lung'wèrm), n. A worm parasitic in the lungs.

lungwort (lung'wèrt), n. 1. A European boraginaceous plant, Pulmonaria officinalis. It is named from a supposed resemblance of its spotted leaves to the appearance of the human lungs, on account of which it was formerly used in pulmonary diseases.

2. An American plant, Mertensia Virginica, of the same family, at first referred to Pulmonaria. M. maritima is the sea-lungwort.—3. A lichen, Sticta pulmonaria, somewhat resembling in shape a human lung, and formerly regarded as a lung-remedy: same as havel-crofties.—Bullock's or cow's lungwort, the mullen, Verbascum Thapsus, formerly used as a remedy for lung-disease in cattle, because its leaf resembles a dewlap.—(Crown's lungwort.) (a) Same as Bullock's lungwort. (b) The toothwort, Lathraea squamaria, a reputed remedy for disease of the lungs.—French or golden lungwort, the wall-hawwood, Hieracium murorum.—Sea-lungwort. See def. 2.—Smooth lungwort, a plant of the genus Mertensia, as distinguished from Pulmonaria, which is rough.—Tree-lungwort, Sticta pulmonaria. See def. 2.

luniförm (lū-ni-förm), a. [< L. luna, the moon, + forma, form.] Resembling the moon in form; especially, crescentic; lunate or lunulate: said of parts the longitudinal section of which is between crescentiform and semiglobose.

lunisolar (lū-ni-sö'lär), a. [< L. luna, the moon, + sol, the sun; see solar.] Depending jointly on the motions or actions of the moon and the sun: as, the lunisolar cycle.—Lunisolar period, any one of the periods in the reckoning of time which depend on the relative motions of the sun and moon.—Lunisolar precession, in astron., that part of the annual precession of the equinoxes which depends on the joint action of the sun and moon.—Lunisolar year, a period of 532 years, found by multiplying the cycle of the sun (360 years) by the cycle of the moon (12 years), and characterized by the recurrence of eclipses in the same order as in the previous lunisolar period. Also called Diogenian period.

lunistice (lū-nis-tis), n. [< NL. lunistitium, < L. luna, the moon, + status, a standing, < stare, pp. status, stand: see stare. Cf. solstice, aristice.] In astron., the moment of the moon's greatest northing and southing in her monthly revolution.

lunistitial (lū-nis-tish'äl), a. [< lunistice (cf. lunistitium) + -al.] Pertaining to a lunistice.—Lunistitial points, the points of the moon's orbit furthest from the equinoctial.

lunulal (lū-ni-lä'l), a. [< L. luna, the moon, + E. lide + -al: see lidal.] Relating to that part of the tidal movement which is independent on the moon.—Lunulal interval, the interval between the moon's passage over the time of high water at any place, and the next reference to the moon's passage. See lunulal.

Structure of Lungs.

A, larynx; B, trachea; C, C, bronchi, right and left; D, D, D, ramifications of bronchial tubes or air-passages in lungs; E, E, smooth surface.

are important in classification. (See physocistous, physocistous, and sound.) Except in their least-developed condition, the lungs are formed by the repeated subdivision of the branches of their bronchi which finally end in sacular dilatations called infundibula. The infundibula and the air-passages immediately leading to them are beset with air-cells. These air-cells or alveoli are from $\frac{1}{16}$ to $\frac{1}{8}$ of an inch in diameter. They are furnished with a close capillary network in which the branches from the pulmonary artery terminate and the blood is separated from the air only by the capillary wall and the thin alveolar epithelium of the air-cells. This assemblage of minute sacular organs and air-bearing tubes is bound up by connective tissue into the comparatively compact lung. The bronchial arteries and veins provide for the nutrition of the pulmonary structures. Lymphatics abound, and there are numerous lymphatic glands. The vagus and sympathetic supply nerves. In man each lung is pyramidal in form, its base resting on the diaphragm and its apex rising about an inch above the collar-bone. The right lung is ment" of any part, uncorrected for the half-monthly inequality due to the sun's action. The lunifidial interval thus corrected is the mean or corrected "establishment" of the port.

Human Lungs, Heart, and Great Vessels, front view (great vessels except of lungs cut off).

A, right lung; B, left lung; C, right auricle; D, left auricle; E, right ventricle; F, left ventricle; G and H, right and left bronchi; I, trachea; J, arch of aorta; K, pulmonary artery; L and M, right and left subclavian arteries; N, right and left carotid arteries; O, right and left innominate arteries; P, right and left innominate veins; Q, right and left innominate veins; R, right and left innominate veins; S, right and left innominate veins; T, right and left innominate veins; U, right and left innominate veins; V, right and left innominate veins; W, right and left innominate veins; X, right and left innominate veins; Y, right and left innominate veins; Z, right and left innominate veins.

lunkhead (lunk'hed), n. A heavy, stupid fellow. Burdett. [Colloq., U. S.]

lunite (lun'it), n. [Named after Rev. F. Lunn, who analysed it.] A name sometimes used collectively to include the related copper phosphates dihydrite, ehlite, pseudomalachite, etc.

lunstock, n. An obsolete form of lunstock.

lunt (lunt), n. [D. lunt, a match, = G. lunte, a match, formerly a lamp-wick, = Sw. lunta = Dan. lunte, a match. Cf. Waks.] 1. A match, torch, or port-fire anciently used for discharging cannon.—2. The lock and appurtenances of a match-lock gun. See quotation under map-work.—3. A lively combustion; fire and smoke in general. [Scotch and North. Eng.]

She put her pipe w' a lunt. Burns, Halloween.

lunt (lunt), v. t. [lunt, n. Cf. Waks, v.] To emit smoke; flame; be on fire. [Scotch.]

The lunt pipe an' sneechin mill
Are handed round w' right guid will.

Burns, The Two Dogs.

lunula (lū'nū-lā), n.; pl. lunulae (-lā). [L., dim. of luna, the moon: see luna. Cf. lunule.] Something which is shaped like a little moon or narrow crescent; a lunule or lunulet.

The palmarian order wore shoes of black leather (calceus palmaris), ornamented with an ivory crescent, and hence called lunula. Bryce, Brit., VI. 487.

Specifically:—(a) The free crescentic edge and adjoining thin part of a semilunar valve of the heart. (b) The small white semilunar mark at the base of the human fingernail. (c) A crescentic impression on some bivalve shells; a lunule. (d) A small semicircular or crescentic spot of color; a lunulet. (e) [esp.] A generic name given by Hitchcock to ichneumonids of uncertain character. (f) In met., a lunc.

lunular (lū'nū-lār), a. [L. lunula + -ar.] Having a form like that of the new moon; shaped like a small crescent; lunulate.

Lunularia (lū'nū-lār'ī-ā), n. [NL. (Michell, 1799), so called in allusion to the lunate form of the gemme-bearing receptacles, L. lunula, a little moon: see lunule.] A genus of Hepatica or liverworts, typical of the tribe Lunulariaceae. The thallus is oblong, with rounded lobes, distinctly areolate and porose. The carposophium is cruciately divided into one to six, usually four, horizontal segments, which are tubular and one-fruited; the capsule is exerted on a long pedicel, and is four to eight-valved. The only species, L. crocata, is introduced into greenhouses.

Lunularia (lū'nū-lār'ī-ā), n. [NL., L. lunula + -ar.] A former tribe of Hepatica or liverworts, established by Nees von Eusebeck, 1838-8, and typified by the genus Lunularia.

lunulate (lū'nū-lāt), a. [NL. lunulatus, L. lunula, a little moon, new moon: see lunule.] 1. Shaped like a new moon; narrowly crescentic.—2. In soöl., having one or several small crescentic markings. P. L. Solater.

lunulated (lū'nū-lāt-ed), a. Same as lunulate.

lunule (lū'nū-lū), n. [L. lunula, a little moon, dim. of luna, the moon: see luna, lunol.] Something in the shape of a little moon or crescent. (a) In conch., the lunula, a crescentic impression on each valve of many bivalve shells, in front of the umbo, forming with its fellow an oval or somewhat cordate figure; it is conspicuous in the Veneridae and many related forms. (b) In entom., a lunulate mark or line on the center of the lower wing, found in many moths. (c) In geom., a lunc. See lunol. 1. (d) A crescent-shaped mark at the root of a nail.—Frontal lunule, in entom., a curved space immediately above the antennae, characteristic of the flies of the suborder Cyclorhapha, wanting in the Orthorhapha. It is related to the bladder infestation of the front by means of which these flies force open the larval envelop.

lunulet (lū'nū-lēt), n. [lunule + -et.] In entom., a small crescent-shaped spot or mark on a surface.

lunulite (lū'nū-līt), n. [NL. Lunulites, q. v.] A fossil polyzoan of the genus Lunulites.

Lunulites (lū'nū-līt'es), n. [NL., L. lunula, a little moon: see lunule.] A genus of fossil Polyzoa. Several species range from the Upper Cretaceous to the coralline crag.

lunny (lū'nū), a. [Abbr. from lunatic, and often spelled loony, with ref. to loon. Cf. lunol, 3.] Lunatic; crazy; silly and erratic: usually applied to partial or temporary aberration, and to persons afflicted with partial lunacy. Used also as a noun. [Colloq.]

His fits (epileptic) were nocturnal, and he had frequent "lunny spells," as he called them.

E. G. Mann, Psychol. Med., p. 434.

Lupa (lū'pā), n. [NL. (Leach, 1814), L. lupa, a she-wolf, fem. of lupus, a wolf: see Lupus.] A genus of crabs of the family Portunidae. The common white crab of the United States has been called L. domus; it is now known as Callinectes hexastichus.

Lupercal (lū'pēr-kāl), a. and n. [L. Lupercalia, pertaining to Lupercus (neut. pl. Luperci), the feast of Lupercus; neut. sing. as noun Lupercal, a grotto on the Palatine hill sacred to Lupercus) or Inuus, regarded, under the name Lupercus, as a protecting deity of shepherds, as 'he who wards off the wolves,' Lupus, a wolf, + aroere, ward off, keep off.] L. a. Pertaining to Lupercus or to the Lupercalia.

II. n. Same as Lupercalia. [An erroneous use.]

You all did see that on the Lupercal
I thrice presented him a kingly crown,
Which he did thrice refuse.

Shak., J. C., III. 2. 100.

Lupercalia (lū'pēr-kāl'ī-ā), n. pl. [L.: see Lupercal.] One of the most ancient of Roman festivals, celebrated every year in the middle of February. The origin of the festival is older than the legend of Romulus and the wolf, with which, as with the Greek cult of Pan, it was sought later to connect it. It was originally a local purification ceremony of the Palatine city, in which human victims were sacrificed in the Lupercal cave near the Porta Romana, after having been conducted around the walls. In historic times the victims were goats and a dog, and the celebrants ran around the old line of the Palatine walls, striking all whom they met with thongs cut from the skins of the slaughtered animals. These blows were reputed to preserve women from sterility. The divinity of the Lupercalia was the old Esurian god Inuus, akin to Mars.

Lupercalian (lū'pēr-kāl'ī-an), a. [Lupercalia + -an.] Of or pertaining to the ancient Roman festival of the Lupercalia.

Lupinus (lū'pī-nūs), n. pl. [NL., Lupus + -inus.] A subfamily of Canidae, distinguished from Fulvinae or foxes; wolves. It corresponds to Caninae in a narrow sense.

lupinaster (lū'pī-nās'tēr), n. The bastard lupine, Trifolium lupinaster, a Siberian plant with purple or white flowers, very large for the genus, and lupine-like leaves. The species has sometimes been regarded as forming a separate genus (Lupinaster).

lupina (lū'pī-nā or -pī-nā), a. [= F. lupin = Sp. Fg. It. lupino, L. lupinus, belonging to a wolf, Lupus, a wolf: see Lupus. Cf. lupinol, 2. n.] 1. Like a wolf; wolfish; ravenous.—2. In soöl., pertaining to the series or group of canine animals which contains the wolves, jackals, and dogs, as distinguished from the foxes; thobid. In lupine animals the skull has frontal sinuses which affect the profile of the head and the contour of the cranial cavity, and the pupil of the eye is usually round. See lupinus, alopecoid, and thobid.

lupine (lū'pī-nā), n. [= D. lupijn = G. lupine, L. lupinus = Sp. It. lupino = Russ. lupinā, L. lupinus, lupinus, a lupine, orig. mass, and neut. respectively of lupinus, belonging to a wolf: see lupinol, 2. a. The reason of the name is unknown.] A plant of the genus Lupinus. The white lupine, L. albus, of southern Europe and the Orient, has been cultivated from antiquity. Its seeds serve as a pulse, and its herbage is valuable for fodder and green manure. In Portugal it is used, under the name of trunco, to choke out obstinate weeds. The scented yellow lupine, L. luteus, of the Mediterranean region, is used in central Europe to improve sandy soils.

Various other species have similar uses, among them the Egyptian L. termis, resembling L. albus, and L. varius, with flowers chiefly blue. The tree-lupine, L. arboreus, of Pacific North America, has been used with success to bind shifting sand. It is a shrub growing 10 feet high, and sending its roots more than 30 feet deep. The ornamental lupines are extremely numerous. L. albus, L. luteus, and L. varius, mentioned above, were formerly common in gardens, but have been somewhat superseded by species from western America. Among these are the tree-lupine and the many-leaved lupine (L. polyphyllus) of North America and L. serotinus of Peru. The wild lupine of the eastern United States is L. perennans, a plant with a long showy raceme of purple flowers, common in sandy soil.—Bastard lupine. See lupinaster.

lupin (lū'pī-nū), n. [Lupinus + -in.] A bitter glucoside extracted from the leaves of Lupinus albus.

lupinite (lū'pī-nīt), n. [Lupinus + -ite.] Same as lupin.

Lupinus (lū'pī-nūs), n. [NL. (Tournesfort, 1700), Lupus, a wolf, in allusion to its destroying or exhausting land.] A large genus of legumi-nous plants of the suborder Papilionaceae and the tribe Gonistoeae. It is characterized by having the leaves simple or digitately many-foliate; the divisions of the calyx longer than the tube; the wings of the corolla often united at the apex, the beak beaked; and a compressed coriaceous or fleshy legume. More than 95 species have been described, but they may be somewhat reduced; they occur in North and South America, the Mediterranean region, and tropical Africa, being especially abundant on the western coast of America. They are herbs or undershrubs with terminal or axillary racemes of showy blue or purple flowers, rarely yellow or white, and often fragrant. Numerous species are cultivated for their beauty and for use. See lupinol.

Flowering Plant of Lupinus (Lupinus albus). a, flower; b, fruit, showing the caliculus.

lupous (lū'pus), a. [L. lupus, a wolf (see Lupus), + -ous.] Wolfish; like a wolf. [Rare.] luppa (lup'pā), n. [E. Ind.] A cloth made in India of silk, or silk and cotton, with gold and silver thread used so abundantly that the surface seems to be wholly of metal. Compare Minob.

luppan (lup'pā), a. A dialectal (Scotch) perfect participle of leap.

lupulin, lupuline (lū'pū-līn), n. [Lupulus + -in, -ine.] 1. The peculiar bitter aromatic principle of the hop. Also called lupulite.—2. An alkaloid found in hops.—3. The fine yellow powder of hops, which contains the bitter principle. It consists of the little round glands found upon the stipples and fruit, and is obtained by drying, heating, and then sifting the hops. It is used in medicine.

Also humulin, humuline.

lupuline (lū'pū-līn), a. [NL. lupulus, hop, + -ine.] In bot., resembling a head of the hop. lupulinic (lū'pū-līn'īk), a. [Lupulin + -ic.] Of or pertaining to lupulin; consisting of or containing lupulin.

It is almost impossible to free them [scales of the hop] entirely from the lupulinic grains. Ure, Dict., I. 308.

lupulinous (lū'pū-lī'nūs), a. [Lupuline + -ous.] Same as lupuline.

lupulite (lū'pū-līt), n. [NL. lupulus, hop (see lupulin), + -ite.] Same as lupulin.

lupulus (lū'pū-lūs), n. [NL. (Tournesfort), a fish, a hook, lit. the hop-plant, etc., also a skin-disease; dim. of L. lupus, the hop-plant, a particular use of lupus, a wolf (so called perhaps because it 'strangles' the shrubbery upon which it may climb).] The hop-plant, Humulus Lupulus: still occasionally used.

Lupus (lū'pus), n. [NL., L. lupus, a wolf, = Gr. λύκος = Goth. wulfs, etc., = E. wolf: see wolf.]

1. (a) A genus of Canidae, comprising the wolves, but having no characters by which it can be distinguished from Canis. In this nomenclature the common gray wolf of North America is called Lupus occidentalis.

(b) [L. c.] The specific designation of the common wolf, Canis lupus.—2. An ancient southern constellation, the Wolf, representing a beast held by the hand of the Centaur. It has two stars of the third magnitude.—3. [L. c.] In pathol.: (a) Lupus vulgaris, a tuberculous of the skin, presenting clinically reddish-brown patches made up of papules, tubercles, and flat infiltrations. These patches proceed to ulceration and subsequent cicatrization. They occur mostly on the face, but may occur on mucous surfaces as well as on the skin of the extremities, or even (rarely) of the trunk. Anatomically there is tubercular tissue containing tubercle bacilli. (b) Lupus erythematosus, a chronic dermatitis, beginning in one or more papules which grow so as to cover a large patch. The color is pinkish to violaceous, and the surface is scaly. It does not ulcerate, but heals with central cicatrization and atrophy. It occurs most frequently on the face, but also elsewhere. It is more frequent in women than in men.—Lupus speulargum, the alchemical name of nitrite, or sulphid of antimony.

lupus (lū'pus), n. [Var. of glupus*, Russ. glupuskā, a petrel.] The Pacific fulmar petrel, Fulmarus glacialis rogersi. H. W. Elliott.

lura (lū'pā), n.; pl. lurae (-rā). [NL., L. lura, the mouth of a bag or bottle.] In anat., the contracted foramen of the infundibulum of the brain. [Recent.]

The removal of the hypophysis leaves the orifice which I have called lura.

Wilder, N. Y. Med. Jour., March 31, 1885, p. 322.

lural (lū'pāl), a. [lura + -al.] Pertaining to the lura.

The Constellation Lupus.

lure¹ (lér'eh), v. t. [An assimilated form of lurt, as obscure of lurt, lurt of lurt, etc.: see lurt.] 1. To lie in concealment; lurk; move stealthily.

The wolf I've seen, a fiercer game, . . .
With luring step around me prowls,
And stop, against the moon to howl.
Scott, Marmion, II, Int.

Fond of prowling and luring out at night after their own sinful pleasures.
Kingsley.

2. To sulk; pout.

For when he is merry, the lurcheth and she lours,
When he is sad she sings, or laughs it out by hours.
Pattenham, Arts of Eng. Poets, p. 176.

3. To shift; dodge; play tricks.

I myself sometimes, leaving the fear of God on the left hand and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch.
Shak., M. W. of W., II, 2. 30.

4. To roll or sway suddenly to one side, or from side to side, as a ship in a heavy sea or a carriage on a rough road.

The left side of the wagon lured downwards, the horse having, in the darkness, taken them from the side of the road.
J. Hawthorne, Dust, p. 211.

5. To walk with an uneven or shifting gait; stagger: as, he went lurching down the street.
lurch¹ (lér'eh), n. [*lurch*¹, v.] 1. A sudden lateral movement or swaying to one side, as of a ship, a carriage, or a staggering person.

A slight lurch of the steamer caused her to lose her hold of the garment.
B. Taylor, Lands of the Barren, p. 156.

As the carriage swayed from side to side, I expected, at every lurch, that the whole party would be upset.

J. Grant, Adventures of an Aide-de-Camp, 1st ser., IV. Hence—2. Any sudden or unexpected shift or change of position.

Would it be desirable to have the policy of the nation settled in this sense for four years by a lurch of the Irish vote in the last two weeks of the campaign?
The Nation, Nov. 8, 1893.

3. An inclination; disposition; leaning. [U.S.]

She has a natural lurch for it, and it comes easy to her.
Miss Cummins, Lamp-lighter. (Eng. Dict.)

Lee lurch, a sudden jerky roll of a ship to the leeward, as when a heavy sea strikes her on the weather side.—To lie upon the lurch or at lurch, to lie in ambush; lurk; be on the watch.

He chiefly laboured to be thought a sayer of good things; and by frequent attempts was now and then successful, for he ever lay upon the lurch.
Goldsmith, Richard Nash.

lurch² (lér'eh), v. t. [OF. lurcher, < L. lurore, lurore, ML. also lurchari, eat voraciously, devour (> lurore, lurcha, a glutton, gormand.)] To swallow or devour; eat up; consume.

Too far from great cities, which may hinder business; or too near them, which lurcheth all provisions, and maketh everything dear.
Bacon, Building (ed. 1887).

lurch³ (lér'eh), n. [Formerly also lurch; = G. lurch, lurs = It. lurch, < OF. louchre, a game so called, also written Fourche, as if < l, def. art., + ourche, given by Cotgrave in the same sense, and entered as ourche by Godefroy, who there gives the same example (Rabelais, III, 12: see first quot. under def. 1) with the word written louchre, that he gives under louchre with the word written louchre. The proper form is doubtless louchre; it is prob. connected with OF. louchre, insuared, deceived, duped.] 1. An old game, the nature of which is unknown.

My mind was only running upon the lurch and trio-trac.
Urbankert, tr. of Rabelais, III, 12.

Whose inn is a bowling-alley, whose books are bowls, and whose law-cases are lurches and rubbers.
Decker, Belman of London (Works, ed. Grosart, III, 138).

2. In orbidge, the position of a player when his opponent has won every point (61 holes) before he himself has made 80 holes; also, the state of the game under these circumstances; a double game.

By two of my table-men in the corner-point I have gained the lurch.
Urbankert, tr. of Rabelais, II, 12.

Lady — has cried her eyes out on losing a lurch, and almost her wig.
Walpole, Letters, IV, 371.

3. [*lurch*³, v.] A cheat; a swindle.

All such lurches, grips, and squeezes as may be wrung out by the fist of extortion.
Middletown, Black Book.

To leave in the lurch. (v.) Originally, to leave (a person) playing at cribbage in the position called the lurch. See def. 1.

It demurs louchre (F.), he was left in the lurch.
Cotgrave.

(b) To leave suddenly or unexpectedly in an embarrassing predicament.

Robin made them haste away,
And left the tinkler in the lurch,
For the great host to pay.
Robin Hood and the Friar (Child's Ballads, V, 235).

Wenny will be the latter half of my pilgrimage, if you leave me in the lurch! Sydney Smith, in Lady Holland, xiv.

lurch³ (lér'eh), v. t. [*lurch*³, n. In def. 2, 3, 4, perhaps in part of other origin; cf. OF. louchre, insuared, deceived, duped. Some confusion also with *lurch*¹, v., has prob. affected the uses of this verb.] 1. To win a double game in cribbage, piquet, etc.—2. To leave in the lurch; disappoint.

This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant.
South, Sermons.

Each words (me thought) did wound me so,
Each looks did lurch my heart.
Turberville, Tragicall Tales (1567). (Norse.)

3. To forestall; rob; swindle; cheat. [Archaic.]

You have lured your friends of the better half of the garland by concealing this part of the plot.
B. Jonson, Epicoene, v. 1.

Like villainous cheating bowlers, they lured me of two of my best limbs, viz. my right arm and right leg.
Middletown, Father Hubbard's Tales.

And 'tis right of his office poor laymen to lurch,
Who infringe the domains of our good mother Church.
Scott, L. of the I., VI, 5.

4. To capture criminally or dishonestly; appropriate; steal.

The fond conceit of something like a Duke of Venice, put lately into many men's heads by some one or other subtly driving on under that notion his own ambitious ends to lurch a crown.
Milton, Free Commonwealth.

lurcher¹ (lér'chér), n. [*lurch*¹ + -er.] 1. One who lies in wait or lurks; one who watches, as to entrap or steal; a poacher.

Swift from his prey the scudding lurcher flies.
Gay, Trivia, III, 64.

Some, however, with outward bravado, but inward tremblings, went searching along the walls and behind the posts for some lurcher.
Brooks, Fall of Quality, I, 101.

2. A sort of hunting-dog, said to be a cross between the shepherd's dog and the greyhound, much used by poachers, because it hunts both by sight and by scent.

Shaggy, and lean, and shrewd, with pointed ears
And tall cropp'd short, half lurcher and half cur,
His dog attends him.
Cowper, Task, v. 46.

On the drawbridge the warders stout
Saw a terrier and lurcher pouncing out.
Scott, L. of L. M., III, 12.

lurcher² (lér'chér), n. [*Cf. equiv. ME. lurore, luroard (Prompt. Parv.); < lurch*² + -er.] A glutton; a gormandizer. Palegrave.

lurch-line (lér'chín), n. In a bird-net, the line by which the net is drawn over the bird.

But when he heard with whom I had to deal,
Well done (quoth he), let him go beat the bush;
I and my men to the lurch-line will steal,
And pluck the net even at the present push.
M. R. for Mege, p. 242.

lurdan, lurden (lér'dan, -den), a. and n. [Also lurdane, lurdain, lourdaine, lourdane, lourden, < ME. lurdan, lurdain, lurdain, lourdaine, < OF. lurdain, lurdain, dull, blockish, < lurd, heavy, dull: see lurd.] 1. a. Blockish; heavy; stupid; useless. [Archaic.]

In one (chamber),
Red after revel, droned her lurdane knight Slumbering.
Tennyson, Pelleas and Ettarre.

II. n. A blockhead; a stupid or useless person. [Archaic.]

As yet, for lack of good oiliness and wholesome doctrines, there was greater store of lurdane lurdanes than of wise and learned Lorde.
Pattenham, Arts of Eng. Poets, p. 24.

This lubberly lurdan,
Ill shap'd and ill fac'd,
Greene, Frier Bacon and Frier Bungay.

I found the careless lurdane feeding her with unwashed flesh, and she an eye.
Scott, Abbot, IV.

lurdanry (lér'dan-ri), n. [lurdan + -ry.] Robbery; crime.

Lays, lurdanry, and lust are pure laid sterner.
Gavin Douglas, tr. of Virgil, p. 228.

lure¹ (lür), n. [*ME. lure (= MD. lure, loer, loeyer), < OF. loerre, lure, earlier loirre, loirre, F. lure = Pr. loir = It. logoro, a falconer's lure, < MHG. ludor, G. luder (> D. luder), bait, decoy, lure.] 1. In falconry, a decoy used to recall the hawk to its perch on the fist. An artificial lure is composed of wings or feathers so arranged as to resemble a bird, secured to a long thong. Some kind of food is sometimes attached to the lure, and the hawk is strongly attracted by it when it is tossed or swung in the air by the falconer with a peculiar whistle or call.*

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty;
And till she stoop she must not be full-gorged,
For then she never looks upon her lure.
Shak., T. of the S., IV, 1. 126.

The falconer casts out the lure, which may be either a dead pigeon or an artificial lure garnished with breadstuck tied to a string.
Bacon, Arts, IX, 2.

2. In her., the representation of a lure with a line or leash at the end of which is a hawk's bell.—3. In angling, an artificial as distinguished from a natural bait; something to attract a fish which the fish cannot eat. Thus, an artificial fly or minnow, a spoon, red rag, etc., are lures, while a fly, worm, frog, etc., are baits.

[The barber] whose bow-windowed shop is full of lures for fish.
Mark Lemon, Christmas Hammer, p. 66.

4. Any means of enticement; anything that attracts by the prospect of pleasure or profit.

Lace and ribbons, silver and gold galleons, with the like glittering gew-gaws, are so many lures to women of weak minds or low educations.
Spectator, No. 18.

5. An enticing action or display; allurements; enticement; temptation.

How many have with a smile made small account
Of beauty and her lures.
Milton, P. R., II, 124.

There is an unexpected, an unexplained lure and attraction in the landscape.
The Century, XXVII, 102.

lure² (lür), v.; pret. and pp. lured, ppr. luring. [*ME. luren (= MD. leuren, loren), < OF. lurrer, loirrer (= Pr. loirar), lure, < lure, a lure: see lure*¹, n.] 1. Intrans. To call; utter a peculiar call or cry, as in attracting an animal.

Standing near one that lured loud and shrill.
Bacon.
The falconer when feeding them [young hawks] should use his voice as in luring.
Bacon, Arts, IX, 2.

II. trans. 1. To attract as by a falconer's lure and call; decoy; entice by the display of something.

For I have and have had some deal [somewhat] hautes maneres.
Ich am nat lured with lous bote onht [unless something] lygge vnder thombe.
Piers Plowman (C), viii, 64.

O, for a falconer's voice,
To lure this tassel-gentle back again!
Shak., R. and J., II, 2. 160.

As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl . . . come flying, lured
With scent of living carcases design'd
For death.
Milton, P. L., x, 372.

2. To allure; entice; invite by anything that promises pleasure or profit.

And various science lures the learned eye.
Gay, Trivia, II, 552.

That fatal bait hath lured thee back,
In deathful hour o'er dangerous track.
Scott, L. of the I., IV, 17.

The proffered toleration was merely a bait intended to lure the Puritan party to destruction.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vii.

=Syn. 2. Bait, Decoy, etc. See allure.

lure³ (lür), n. [In Shetland looder (= horn); < Icel. lúdr = Norw. Dan. lur, a trumpet.] An ancient form of trumpet still in use in Scandinavia, having a curved tube several feet long, used for calling cattle, and by traveling parties as a signal.

She made up her bundle of clothes, took in her hand her lure, with which to call home the cattle in the evenings, bade her mistress farewell privately, and stole away.
H. Martineau, Fauna on the Fjord, ix.

lure⁴, n. Same as *lore*³.

lure⁵, n. A Middle English form of *loer*¹.

lure⁶ (lür), n. In hat-manuf., same as loer.

lurer (lür'ér), n. One who or that which lures, entices, or decoys.

lurg (lér'g), n. [Origin obscure.] An errant marine worm, Nephtys caeca, found on the coasts of Great Britain; also called white-rag worm. It is about 8 inches long, of a pearly-whitish color, and lives in the sand.

lurgulary, lourgulary (lür'-, lür'gü-lä-ri), n. In early Eng. law, the offense of dealing or poisoning waters. Cowel.

luri (lür'i), n. Same as lory.

lurid (lür'id), a. [= Sp. lurido = Pg. It. lurido, < L. luridus, pale-yellow, wan, ghastly; connected with luror, a yellowish color; cf. Gr. χλωρός, green; see chlorine. Hence ult. (< L. luridus) E. lurid, g. v.] 1. Pale; wan; ghastly; of the color or appearance of dull smoky flames; having the character of a light which does not show the colors of objects.

The fire-bolts leap to the world below,
And food the skies with a lurid glow.
Bryant, The Harp.

The sun went lurid down Into the smoke-wrapt sea, and night came on.
H. Arnold, Balder Dead.

2. Lighted up with a ghastly glare; combining light and gloom.

Slow settling o'er the lurid grove,
Unusual darkness broods.
Thomson, Summer, I, 622.

The narrative of what I know about that lurid episode of the battle of Sedan that occurred in the village of the Red Fort, Souvenirs of some Continents, p. 26.

3. In bot. and soil., having a dirty-brown color slightly clouded.

Institute thistles, tyrants of the plains,
And lurid hemlock thorns with poisonous stains.
W. Harte, Reminiscences of the Pacific.

Luscinia (lu-sin'i-ä), n. [NL., < L. luscinia, the nightingale, perhaps for lusciocinia (?), 'the twi-made (chiefly at Luxemburg) in imitation of an appar. \sqrt{lus} , which can hardly be identical with the lus of loose, lose, etc., but is perhaps ult. akin to Gr. λάλειν, Skt. √ lash, desire. Hence lust, v., lust, v. and n., lusty, etc.: see these words.] 1†. Desire, inclination, or wish in general.

Your commandment to kepe, as my kynd brother,
And my lord, that is tell, my lust shal be ay!
Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 6140.
There be commonly prepared certain sauces, which shall give men a great lust and appetite to their meats.

Latimer, Misc. Select.
We act our mimic tricks with that free licence,
That lust, that pleasure, that security,
As if we practised in a paste-board case.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, l. 1.
2. Intense longing desire; eagerness for possession or enjoyment: as, the lust of gain.

The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them.

Ex. xv. 9.
Ill men have a lust to hear others' sins.
B. Jonson, Apol. to Postaster.
Yet still insatiate, still with rage on flame;
Such is the lust of never-dying fame!

Pope, Iliad, xx. 590.
Specifically—3. Evil propensity; depraved affection or desire.

"Thanne artow inpartit," quod he, "and one of Prydes knyghtes;
For such a luste and lykynge Lucifer fel fram heuene."

Piers Plowman (B), xv. 51.
They [my Sponsors] did promise and vow . . . that I should renounce the devil and all his works, the pumps and vanity of this wicked world, and all the sinful lusts of the flesh.

Book of Common Prayer, Catechism.
The ambitious conqueror had trodden whole nations under his feet, to satisfy the lust of power.

Story, Cambridge, Aug. 31, 1823.
4. In absolute use, carnal desire; sexual appetite; unlawful desire of sexual pleasure; concupiscence.

No lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.

Shak., Hamlet, l. 5. 55.
In lust the permanent end is the mastering of the sensuous objects which excite appetite.

F. H. Bradley, Ethical Studies, p. 253, note.
*lust*¹ (lust), v. i. [ME. lusten; < *lust*¹, n. The older form of the verb is *lust*², q. v.] 1. To desire eagerly; long: with after or for.

Thou mayest kill and eat flesh in all thy gates, whatsoever thy soul lusteth after.

Deut. xii. 15.
2†. To take pleasure; delight; like.

Noght forful, ne furse, fauaret full wele,
Lout he no lede that lustide in wrange.

Destruction of Troy (E. E. T. S.), l. 1860.
We tauked of their to moch liberte, to lue as they lust.

Aecham, The Scholemaster, p. 20.
They rate the goods without reason as they lust themselves.

Hakluyt's Voyages, II. 271.
Specifically—3. To have evil desire.

The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy.

Jas. iv. 5.
4. To have carnal desire: with after.

Whoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart.

Mat. v. 28.
lust^{2†} (lust), v. A Middle English form of *lust*¹.

lust-breathed (lust'bretht), a. Animated by lust. Schmidt.

Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host.

Shak., Lucrece, l. 1. 3.
lust-dieted (lust'di'e-ted), a. Faring voluptuously. Schmidt.

Let the superfluous and lust-dieted man
That slaves your ordinance, that will not see Because he does not feel, feel your power quickly.

Shak., Lear, iv. 1. 70.
*luster*¹ (lus'tér), n. [*< lust*¹ + *-er*¹.] One who lusts; one inflamed with lust.

Hear, and fear, all lusters after strange women!
Dr. Clarke, Sermons (1687), p. 499. (Latham.)

*luster*², *lustre*¹ (lus'tér), n. [< F. lustre = Sp. lustre (after F. l) = It. lustro, splendor, brilliancy, luster, < ML. lustrum* (f), splendor; cf. lustrum, a window, < L. lustrus*, shining (in lustrare, shine, illustare, shine upon, illustis, lighted up, etc.), for orig. lustrus*, < luere, shine: see lucent.] 1. The quality of shining; brilliancy or refugence, from inherent constitution or artificial polish; splendor; glow; sheen; gloss: as, the luster of the stars, or of gold.

So have I seen the brightest Stars deny'd
To shew their Lustre in some gloomy Night.

Hood, Letters, l. v. 22.
A mien majestic, with dark brows, that show
The tranquil lustre of a lofty mind.

Cowper, Sonnet to Diodati.
We have formerly remarked on the great charm of Lustre. It seems to have a power to redeem bad combinations of colours. Red-yellow is unharmonious as colour, but red-gold is a resplendent effect. The blue lake with its green banks would not be agreeable, but for the lustre of the watery expanse. A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 227.

2. In mineral, a variation in the nature of the reflecting surface of minerals. In this sense the word designates, first, the kind or quality of the light reflected; second, the degree of intensity. The principal kinds of lustre are: metallic, as in pyrites and galena; adamantine, as in the diamond; vitreous, as in glass; resinous, as in kieselblende; greasy, as in euscrite; pearly, as in gypsum; and silky, as in amiantus.

But he by good use and experience, hath in his eye the righte mark and very trewe lustre of the dyamonte.

Sir T. More, Works, p. 73.
3. The state or quality of being illustrious or famous; brilliant distinction; brilliancy, as of a person, a deed, an event, or the like.

Pompey did so conquer, as he always arose againe with great lustre and with greater terror.

Purchas, Pilgrimage, p. 222.
His ancestors continued about four hundred years, rather without obscurity than with any great lustre.

Sir W. Wotton.
It will appear that this quality [courage] has a peculiar lustre, which it derives wholly from itself, and from that noble elevation inseparable from it.

Hume, Of Morals, § 7.
No doubt the suppers of wits and philosophers acquire much lustre by time and renown.

Emerson, Clubs.
4. A branched candelabrum or chandelier ornamented with prisms or pendants of glass.

Double rows of lusters lighted up the nave.

Rustace.
We were . . . in the dining-room; the lustre, which had been lit for dinner, filled the room with a feastal breadth of light.

Charlotte Brontë, Jane Eyre, xiv.
5. The quality of glossiness or brilliancy in a textile material or in a finished fabric: as, the lustre of wool or of satin.

The superior value of these [long wools] lies in what is known in the wool trade as lustre: that is, a peculiar silvery brightness of hair which it does not lose in process of manufacture.

Ure, Dict., IV. 976.
6. A thin and light kind of poplin.—Cantharid luster, in ceram., a name given to luster showing the green and blue iridescence of the insect cantharid.—Cupreous luster, a luster like that of a fresh surface of metallic copper.—Gold luster. See gold.—Madrepere luster, a luster having a reflection showing like that of mother-of-pearl.—Mohair luster. See mohair.—Platinum luster, a variety of metallic luster produced by means of a platinum glass, and somewhat resembling burnished silver. Hence its more common name, silver luster.—Syn. l. Refugence.—3. Glory, celebrity.—1 and 3. Effulgence, Brilliance, etc. See radiance.

*luster*², *lustre*² (lus'tér), v. t.; pret. and pp. lustered, lustred, ppr. lustering, lustring. [*< luster*², *lustre*¹, n. Cf. lustrate.] To impart luster or gloss to.

Plush goods can be wholly lustered or delicately embossed [with a lustering-machine].

U. S. Cons. Rep., No. lxvi. (1886), p. 316.
*luster*³, *lustre*³ (lus'tér), n. [< OF. (and F.) lustre = Sp. lustr, It. lustro, < L. lustrum, a purificatory sacrifice, an expiatory offering, such as was made by the consors for the whole people every five years; hence, a period of five years, any definite period; < luere, wash, cleanse, akin to lavare, wash: see *lav*².] Same as lustrum.

When fine lustres of his age expr'd,
Feeling his stomach and his strength aspir'd
To worthier wars.

Sylvestre, tr. of Du Bartas's Weeks, II., Babylon.
The next ten years . . . [Longfellow's] sixth and seventh lustres—are the period of his best work.

Princeton Rev., II. 290.
*luster*⁴, n. [< L. lustrum, a slough, bog, den of wild beasts, an evil haunt; a diff. word from lustrum, a purification, but of like formation; < luere, wash, = Gr. λοειν, wash: see *lav*².] The den or abode of a wild beast.

But turning to his luster, calves and dam
He shows abhorred death.

Chapman.
lustered, lustred (lus'tér), p. a. Having a luster; especially, in ceram., (a) having a thin glaze as in ancient Greek pottery (see lustrous glaze, under glaze); (b) having a metallic luster, like majolica, etc.; painted in luster-colors.

Lustred pieces are very rare in Portugal, and are mostly rough in glaze, and clumsy in design.

The Academy, No. 877, p. 139.
The plate (Majolica) with a profile of Caesar on grisaille, on a gold ground, with a border of grotesques lustred with ruby on deep blue, . . . the plate lustred in gold and ruby.

Art Journal, VIII. 108.
lustering, *lustring*¹ (lus'tér-ing, -tring), n. [Verbal n. of *luster*², v.] 1. The process of making lustrous or glossy.—2. In metal-working, same as brightening, 1.—3. A process for giving to woolen cloth a permanent gloss and smooth surface which will not roughen with wear.

This is accomplished by stretching the cloth tightly on a perforated copper cylinder, which is then placed in a steam-chest and the steam turned on.

4. A treatment of furs to render them smooth.

5. A polishing material, as the black polish used for stoves.

lusterless, lustreless (lus'tér-less), a. [*< luster*² + -less.] Without luster.

luster-ware (lus'tér-wär), n. Stoneware or crockery having surface ornamentations in metallic colors: a trade-name. Such ware is said to be decorated with luster, gold luster, platinum luster, copper luster, etc. It is to be distinguished from lustered pottery of the decorative sort.

luster-wash (lus'tér-wash), n. In ceram., a thin wash of the metallic pigment used to produce any luster.

lustful (lust'fúl), a. [< ME. lustful, < AS. lustfull, desirous, < lust, desire, + full, full: see *lust*¹ and -ful.] 1. Having prurient lust; incontinent; libidinous.

Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours.
Shak., 1 Hen. VI., III. 2. 53.

2. Marked by or pertaining to lust; exciting or manifesting lust.

And Cupid still amongst them kindled lustful fires.
Spenser, F. Q., III. l. 89.

Thence his lustful orgies he enlarged.
Milton, P. L., l. 415.

3†. Vigorous; robust; stout; lusty.

The want of lustful health
Could not be half so grievous to your grace
As these most wretched tidings that I bring.

Sackville, Gorboduc, III. 1.
=Syn. See list under lascivious.

lustfully (lust'fúl-i), adv. In a lustful manner.

lustfulness (lust'fúl-ness), n. [< ME. lustfulness, < AS. lustfulness, < lustful, desirous: see lustful.] The state of being lustful; libidinousness.

lustic (lus'tik), a. [Irreg. < lust + -ic.] Lusty; vigorous; jovial.

As lustic and frolic as lords in their bowers.

Brown.
lustihed, n. [ME. lustihede, lustihed; < lust + -hed. Cf. lusthood.] Same as lusthood.

Defaute of slepe and hevinnes,
Hath aleyne my spirite of quyknesse,
That I have lost at lustihede.

Chaucer, Death of Blanche, l. 27.
lustihood (lus'ti-húd), n. [= D. lustigheid = MLG. lusticheit = MHG. lusticheit (cf. G. lustigkeit) = Sw. lustighet = Dan. lystighed; as lust + -hood. Cf. lustihed.] The quality of being lusty; vigor of body. [Archaic.]

He is so full of lustihood, he will ride
Joust for it, and win.

Tennyson, Lancelot and Elaine.
lustily (lus'ti-li), adv. In a lusty manner; vigorously; strongly.

I determine to fight lustily for him.

Shak., Hen. V., iv. 1. 201.
lustiness (lus'ti-ness), n. [< ME. lustynesse; < lust + -ness.] 1. The state of being lusty; vigor; robustness.

Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lustiness.

Dryden, tr. of Persius's Satires, vi., note.
2†. Pleasure; delight; enjoyment.

For sothly at the mount of Citharoun,
Ther Venus hath hire principal dwelling,
Was schewed on the wal in portreyng,
With all the gardyn and the lustynesse.

Chaucer, Knight's Tale, l. 1081.
*lustless*¹ (lust'les), a. [*< lust*¹, n., + -less. Cf. lustless.] Listless; languid; lifeless; indifferent.

Indeed, in slepe
The slouthfull body that doth love to steepe
His lustless limbes, and drowne his baser mind, Dost praise thee oft.

Spenser, F. Q., III. iv. 56.
lustra, n. Latin plural of lustrum.

lustral (lus'tral), a. [= F. Sp. lustral = It. lustrale, < L. lustralis, < lustrum, purificatory sacrifice: see lustrum.] 1. Used in purification.

His better parts by lustral waves refined,
More pure, and nearer to ethereal mind.

Garié.
Aztec life ended as it had begun, with ceremonial lustration: it was one of the funeral ceremonies to sprinkle the head of the corpse with the lustral water of this life.

E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, II. 393.
2. Pertaining to purification: as, lustral days.

Bloodshed demanded the lustral ceremony.

E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, II. 393.
3. Of or pertaining to or occurring in a lustrum.

As this general tax upon industry was collected every fourth year, it was styled the lustral contribution.

Gibbon, Decline and Fall, xvi.
*lustrate*¹ (lus'trát), v. t.; pret. and pp. lustrated, ppr. lustrating. [< L. lustratus, pp. of lustrare (> It. lustrare = Pg. Sp. lustrar = F. lustrer), purify by means of a propitiatory offering, < lustrum, a purificatory sacrifice: see lustrum.] To make clear or pure; purify by or as if by the ceremony of lustration. See lustrum.

When we have found this execrable thing, which hath brought all our plagues on us, then must we purge and cleanse and lustrate the whole city for its sins.

Hammond, Weeks, IV. 293.

Medieval Tatar tribes, some of whom had conscientious scruples against bathing, have found passing through fire or between two fires a sufficient purification, and the household stuff of the dead was lustrated in this latter way.
E. B. Tylor, Prim. Culture, II. 393.

lustrate¹ (lus'trát), v. i. [L. lustratus, pp. of lustrare, review, survey, go around, wander, deflected use of lustrare, purify by means of a propitiatory offering: see *lustrate*², *luster*⁴.] To go about; wander.
Thrice through Aventines mount he doth lustrate.
Vicars, tr. of Virgil (1682). (Nares.)

lustrate² (lus'trát), v. t. [ML. lustratus, pp. of lustrare, illustrate, adorn, < lustrum*, splendor: see *luster*², *lustre*¹. Cf. illustrate.] To luster. Making, dressing, and lustrating of plain black almodos, renfores, and lustrings.
Act of Parliament (1698), quoted in Drapers' Dict., p. 210.

lustration (lus-trá'shon), n. [= F. lustration = Sp. lustracion = Pg. lustração = It. lustrazione, < L. lustratio (n-), an expiation, < lustrare, pp. lustratus, purify: see *lustrate*¹.] Ceremonial purification; especially, a religious act of purification or cleansing by the use of water or certain sacrifices or ceremonies, or both, performed among the ancients upon persons, armies, cities, localities, animals, etc. The ceremony was practised by the Greeks chiefly to free its subjects from the pollution of crime, but by the Romans as a general means of securing a divine blessing, and in some cases at regular fixed intervals, as of the whole people every five years.
This was the sense of the old world in their lustrations, and of the Jews in their preparatory baptisms.
Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), I. 633.
Let his baptismal drops for us atone;
Lustrations for offences not his own;
Dryden, Britannia Rediviva, I. 189.

lustre¹, lusted, etc. See *luster*², etc.
lustre², n. See *luster*³.

lustrical (lus'tri-kál), a. [L. lustricus, of or belonging to purification, < lustrum, a purificatory sacrifice: see lustrum.] Pertaining to purification by lustration: said of the day on which a Roman infant was purified and named.
This name was properly personal, equivalent to that of baptism with us, and imposed with ceremonies somewhat analogous to it on the ninth day, called the lustrical, or day of purification.
Middleton, Cicerio, I. § 1.

lustrine (lus'trin), n. [L. lustrine, < It. lustrino, a shining silk tinsel, < lustrum, luster: see *luster*².] Same as *lustring*².
lustring¹, n. See lustering.

lustring² (lus'tring), n. [A corruption (still further corrupted in *lustering*²), simulating string, of lustrine: see lustrine.] A species of glossy silk fabric: a term more used in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries than now, and denoting generally plain solid silk, neither figured nor corded, nor having a satin surface.
The fraudulent importation of foreign almodos and lustrings.
Act of Parliament (1698), quoted in Drapers' Dict., p. 209.

lustrous (lus'trus), a. [OF. lustreux = Sp. Pg. It. lustrato, lustrous, < *ML. lustrum, luster: see *luster*².] 1. Giving out or shedding light, as the sun or a fire; bright; brilliant; luminous: chiefly used figuratively.
The more lustrous the imagination is, it fillets and fixeth the better.
Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 956.
Some sparks of a lustrous spirit will shine through the disguisements.
Lamb, Decay of Beggars.

2. Reflecting light; having a brilliant surface.
My sword and yours are kin. Good sparks and lustrous.
Shak., All's Well, II. 1. 41.

A lustrous surface reflects the light of the surrounding objects, and gives rise to the play of a thin radiance, as of a slight film or gauze, softening without obscuring the colour beneath.
A. Bain, Emotions and Will, p. 227.

Lustrous glass. See glass. = Syn. Radiant, brilliant.
lustrously (lus'trus-li), adv. In a lustrous manner; brilliantly; luminously.

lustrum (lus'trum), n.; pl. lustrums or lustra (-trumz, -trá). [= F. lustrum = Sp. Pg. It. lustra, < L. lustrum, a purificatory sacrifice, a period of five years: see *luster*³.] 1. A lustration or purification; particularly, the ceremonial purification of the whole Roman people, performed at the end of every five years. Hence—2. A space of five years.

lustwort (lust'wért), n. The sundew, a plant of the genus Drosera, especially the common D. rotundifolia.

lusty (lus'ti), a. [ME. lusty (= D. G. Sw. lustig = Dan. lystig), pleasant, merry; < lust + -y.] 1. Exciting desire; pleasant; agreeable; attractive; handsome.

That was or might be lusty to his herte. Lydgate.
So lovedst thou the lusty Hyacinth;
So lovedst thou the faire Coronis deare.
Spenner, F. Q., III. xl. 37.

2. Full of or characterized by life, spirit, vigor, or health; stout; vigorous; robust; healthy; strong; lively.

Who satisfeth thy mouth with good things, making thee young and lusty as an eagle.
Book of Common Prayer, Psalter, Ps. ciii. 5.
Give me a bowl of lusty wine. B. Jonson, Volpone, v. 1.
Our two boys are lusty travellers.
Winthrop, Hist. New England, I. 417.

3†. Impudent; saucy.

Cassius's soldiers did shew themselves verie stubborne and lustie in the camp. North, tr. of Plutarch. (Latham.)

4. Bulky; large; of great size.

A thriving gamester, that doth chance to win
A lusty sum, while the good hand doth play him.
Ford, Fancies, Prol.

5. Full-bodied or stout from pregnancy. [Colloq.]—6†. Lustful; hot-blooded.

Before the flood thou with thy lusty crew,
False titled sons of God, roaming the earth,
Cast wanton eyes on the daughters of men.
Milton, P. R., II. 173.

= Syn. 2. Strong, sturdy, etc. See robust.

lusty-gallant, n. The name of an old dance and probably of a popular ballad in the sixteenth century. Nares.

After all they danc'd lustie gallant, and a drunken Danish lavalto or two, and so departed.
Nash, Terrors of the Night (1594). (Nares.)

lustyhead, n. See lustihead.

lusus naturæ (lú'sus ná-tú'rè). [L. lusus, a play, < ludere, pp. lusus, play (see ludicrous); natura, gen. of natura, nature: see nature.] A freak of nature; anything of a monstrous or unnatural kind; specifically, in nat. hist. and phys. geog., an isolated and curious growth or form, including, in natural history, mere unusual variations as well as pronounced monstrosities.

lutanist (lú'ta-nist), n. [Also lutenist, lutinist; < ML. lutanista, a player on the lute, < lutana, a lute: see *lute*¹.] A person who plays on a lute.

If he never learn'd and practis'd on the lute, he will not be able . . . to make any music upon that instrument, even after he sees plainly and comprehends fully all that the cunning lutenist doth.
Sir E. Digby, Nature of Man's Soul, xi.

As music follows the finger
Of the dreaming lutanist.
Lowell, Telepathy.

lutarious (lú-tá'ri-us), a. [L. lutarius, of or belonging to mud, < lutum, mud: see *lute*², n.] Pertaining to, living in, or of the color of mud.

A scaly tortoise-shell, of the lutarious kind [Emys lutaria].
N. Grex, Museum.

lutation (lú-tá'shon), n. [F. lutation = Sp. lutacion, < L. lutatio (n-), < lutare, pp. lutatus, daub with mud, < lutum, mud: see *lute*², n.] The act or method of luting vessels.

lute¹ (lút), n. [ME. lute (= D. luit = MLG. lüte = MHG. lüte, G. laute = Sw. luta = Dan. luth), < OF. lut, leut, F. luth = It. luto, leuto, ludo (> NGR. ludrov; ML. lutana), < Sp. laúd, orig. alaúd* = Pg. alaude, a lute, < Ar. alūd, a lute, < al, the, + ūd, a lute, harp, lit. wood, timber, whence also the senses 'stick,' 'staff,' etc.] A mediæval musical instrument, the type of the class which has strings stretched over a resonant body and a long fretted neck, and which is played by twanging or snapping the strings with the fingers. The back of the body was either flat, as in the modern guitar, or more often, rounded or pear-shaped, like that of a mandolin. The front of the body, or belly, had one or more sound-holes. The strings were usually of catgut, arranged in pairs of unisons, and divided into two groups, one of which lay over the finger-board, so as to be stopped upon the frets, while the other lay beside the finger-board, so as to be played unstopped for the bass. The number of strings varied considerably, as did the tuning or accordatura; a common tuning for the six upper pairs of strings was and for the bass strings

The frets were arranged so as to yield semitones. The tone was sweet, but light and incapable of much variation. The construction of the instrument was not strong enough to make the tuning sure or stable. In the effort to obtain varied and striking effects, many modifications were attempted, such as the archlute, the chitarrone, the harp-lute, and the theorbo, in which the number of strings was increased, the bass strings attached to a second neck above the first one, or metal strings introduced. A group or family of lutes of different sizes was also elaborated for concerted music; but the mechanical and acoustical feebleness of the type prevented the results from being permanently satisfactory. Great care was often expended, however, upon the wood and the decoration of lutes, so that many of them were very beautiful in appearance. Music for the lute was written in a peculiar system of letters or numerals called tabatur. Historically the lute is connected with the Egyptian nefer, and perhaps with the Hebrew nebel, and it continued in use in Europe till about 1750; its existing relatives are the guitar, the mandolin, and the banjo.

lute¹ (lút), v.; pret. and pp. luted, ppr. luting. [ME. luten; < *lute*², n.] 1. trans. To play on or as on a lute.

Knaves are men
That lute and fute fantastic tenderness.
Temnyson, Princeps, iv.

II. intrans. 1. To play the lute.

Truth's trompede thou, and song "Te deum landamus";
And then lutede Loue in a lowd note.
Piers Plowman (C), xxi. 470.

2. To sound sweetly, like a lute. [Poetical.]

And in the air, her new voice luting soft, Cried, "Lydius! gentle Lydius!" Keats, Lamia, I.

lute² (lút), n. [OF. lut, clay, mold, loam, dirt, F. lut, lute (in chem. sense), = It. luto, clay, mud, mire, lute, < L. lutum, mud, lit. 'that which is washed down,' < luere, wash, = Gr. labein, wash. Cf. *luster*⁴.] 1. A composition of clay or other tenacious substance used for stopping the joints of vessels, as in chemical operations or in founding, so closely as to prevent the escape or entrance of air.—2. An external coating of clay, sand, or other substance applied to a glass retort, to enable it to support a high temperature without fusing or cracking.—3. A brickmakers' straight-edge, a tool used to strike off surplus clay from a brick-mold, and to level the molding-floor.—4. A rubber packing-ring compressed between the lip and the lid of a jar to exclude the air.—Copper-smiths' lute, bullocks' blood thickened with finely powdered quoklime. Spon's Encey. Manuf., p. 629.

lute³ (lút), v. t.; pret. and pp. luted, ppr. luting. [= F. luter; from the noun: see *lute*², n.] To close or coat with lute; smear with any adhesive substance for the purpose of closing cracks or joints. A glass retort is said to be luted when it is smeared over with clay to enable it to resist more perfectly the effects of heat, and thus guard it against fusion.

Lute me up in a glass with my own seals.
B. Jonson, Mercury Vindicated.

Small boats, made of the barks of trees, sowed with bark and well luted with gumme.
Capt. John Smith, Works, I. 185.

lute⁴, a., n., and adv. A Middle English form of *lute*¹.

lute⁵, v. A Middle English form of *lout*¹.

lute-backed (lút'bakt), a. Having a curved spine. Holland.

lutenist (lút'e-nist), n. See lutanist.

luteoline, luteoline (lú-té-ó-lín, or lú'té-ó-lín), n. [F. luteoline, luteoline, < L. luteolus, yellowish, dim. of luteus, golden-yellow: see *luteous*¹.] The yellow coloring matter of weld or dyer's-weed (C₂₀H₁₄O₈). When sublimed it crystallizes in needles.

luteolous (lú-té-ó-lus), a. [L. luteolus, dim. of luteus, golden-yellow: see luteous.] Yellowish; faintly luteous.

The microgonidia indefinite in number, much the smaller, pale or dirty green or luteolous.
H. C. Wood, Fresh-Water Algae, p. 99.

luteous¹ (lú'té-us), a. [L. luteus, golden-yellow, flame-colored, rose-colored, < lutum, a weed used in dyeing yellow, weld.] Of a golden-yellow color; also, more generally, yellow with a tinge of red, somewhat approaching the color of saffron or the yolk of an egg.

luteous² (lú'té-us), a. [L. luteus, muddy, < lutum, mud: see *lute*², n.] Like mud or clay.

luter (lú'tér), n. A lutist. Levin's; Baret. [Rare.]

lutescent (lú'tes-ént), a. [*lut(eous)*¹ + -escent.] The form was appar. suggested by L. lutescen(-)s, ppr. of lutescere, turn to mud, < lutum, mud: see *lute*², n.] Yellow-tinged; tending to be or become luteous.

lustering¹ (lút'string), n. [*lute*¹ + string.]

1. A string such as was used on a lute.—2. One of certain noctuid moths: so called from the lines on the fore wings, likened to lute-strings: as, the poplar-lustering, Cymatophora or; the lesser lustering, C. diluta.

lustering² (lút'string), n. [*lute*¹ + string, q. v.] 1. A plain glossy kind of silk formerly used for women's dresses.—2. A ribbon of such silk.—To speak in lustering, to speak in an affected manner.

I was led to trouble you with these observations by a passage which, to speak in lustering, I met with this morning in the course of my reading.
Junius, Letters.

Lutetia (lú-té'shi-á), n. [NL. < L. Lutetia, a city of Gaul (also called Lutetia Parisiorum), now Paris.] 1. The twenty-first planetoid, discovered by Goldschmidt at Paris in 1852.—2. In soci., a genus of mollusks. Deshayes.

Lutetian (lū-tē-shān), a. [< L. Lutetia (also called Lutetia Parisiorum, Paris) + -ian.] Relating or pertaining to ancient Lutetia in Gaul, or poetically to Paris in France, its modern representative; Parisian.

luth (lūth), n. A name of the soft turtle, Dermatochelys (Sphargis) coriacea. See out under leatherback.

luthert, a. A Middle English form of *lither*¹.

Lutheran (lū'ther-ən), a. and n. [= Sp. It. Luterano = Pg. Luthero (cf. F. Luthérien, G. Lutheranisch, etc.), < NL. Lutheranus, of Luther, < Lutherus, G. Luther, Luther.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to Martin Luther, the reformer (1483–1546), or to the Evangelical Protestant Church of Germany which bears his name, or to the doctrines taught by Luther or held by the Evangelical Lutheran Church.—Lutheran Bible. See Bible, 1.—Lutheran Church. the Protestant Church of Germany, established by Martin Luther and other reformers in the sixteenth century. It was named the Evangelical Church by Luther, to designate it as the ancient Christian church reformed and reorganized according to the Gospel. Protestants were at first called Lutherans in reproach by the opponents of the Reformation, and the name was generally accepted, notwithstanding the protestations of Luther against it. The church is historically known as the Evangelical Lutheran Church, in distinction from the Roman Catholic Church and from the Reformed or Calvinistic Church and other Protestant churches. The dogmatic symbols of the Lutheran Church are nine in number. Three of them are those of the early Christian church, namely the Apostle's Creed, the Nicene Creed, and the Athanasian Creed. The six others are the products of the Reformation. These are the Augsburg Confession (1530), the Apology of the Augsburg Confession (1530), the Schmalkald Articles (1537), the two Catechisms of Luther (1529), and the Formula of Concord (1577). These Confessions, together with the ecumenical creeds above mentioned, form the Book of Concord of 1580, and constitute the symbolical books of the Lutheran Church. The Augsburg Confession, however, is the only symbol which has been universally adopted by all branches of the Lutheran Church, some of which accept no other as binding. The creed of the church includes the doctrines of justification by faith alone, universal depravity, the vicarious atonement, regeneration, progressive sanctification, a true sacramental but not a material presence of Christ in the Lord's Supper, and the use of both the Bible and the sacraments as means of grace. In its manner of worship the Lutheran Church is liturgical, but it recognizes no organized hierarchy, with different ranks of ministry, jure divino. In the established churches of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, which are Lutheran in doctrine, there are bishops or superintendents (see episcopacy), and in Sweden there is an archbishop; but their authority is derived from the bodies which appoint them, and their powers are very limited. Where Lutheranism is the established religion the sovereign is recognized as the head of the church, which is governed by consistories appointed by the government and composed of both clergymen and laymen. Throughout most of Germany (in Prussia and in some other countries) the Protestant state establishment is the United Evangelical Church, a union of former Lutheran and Reformed (Calvinistic) churches, and dissenting Lutherans are commonly called Old Lutherans. In the United States the Lutheran Church at present consists of four general independent organizations. Each of these is governed by a general representative body, named respectively the General Synod, the General Council, the United Synod of the South, and the Synodical Conference (Missouri Lutherans). These general bodies consist of both clerical and lay delegates, elected by the district synods of which they are composed. There are also fourteen independent Lutheran synods in the United States.

II. n. A disciple or follower of Luther; one who adheres to the doctrines of Luther; a member of the Lutheran Church.

I know her [Anne Bullen] for A spleeny Lutheran. Shak., Hen. VIII., III. 2. 90.

Lutheranism (lū'ther-ən-izm), n. [= F. Lutheranisme = Sp. It. Luteranismo = Pg. Lutheranismo, < NL. Lutheranismus, < Lutheranus, Lutheran: see Lutheran and -ism.] The principles of the Reformation as represented by Luther; the doctrines and ecclesiastical system of the Lutheran Church.

Lutherism (lū'ther-izm), n. [< Luther (see Lutheran) + -ism.] 1. That which is characteristic of or peculiar to Luther; also, an imitation of Luther.—2. Lutheranism.

Lutherist (lū'ther-ist), n. [< Luther (see Lutheran) + -ist.] A student of Luther; one versed in or devoted to the study of Luther's life and works.

The first of living Lutherists. The American, VII. 121.

lutherly, a. and adv. A Middle English form of *litherly*¹.

luting (lū'ting), n. [Verbal n. of *lute*², v.] Same as *lute*².

lutist (lū'tist), n. [*< lute*¹ + -ist.] A lute-player.

lutose (lū'tōs), a. [= It. lutoso, < L. lutosus, muddy, < lutum, mud: see *lute*², n.] Miry; covered with clay; specifically, in entom., covered with a powdery substance resembling mud, which easily rubs off.

Lutra (lū'trā), n. [NL., < L. lutra, lytra, an otter, perhaps < luere, wash: see *lute*².] 1. The leading genus of Lutrine, formerly including the sea-otters as well as the land-otters, now confined to land-otters in which the claws are well formed and the tail is terete. Compare Pteronura. The dental formula is: 3 incisors and 1 canine above and below on each side, 4 premolars in each upper and 3 in each lower half-jaw, and 1 molar above and 2 below on each side—in all, 36 teeth, of which the upper molar is large and quadrate. The skull is flat, and greatly contracted between the orbits, with a short blunt rostrum and turgid occipital portion, the palate produced far back of the molars, the ante-orbital foramen large, and the pterygoids hamulate. The body is elongate, cylindrical, with long, stout, terete, tapering tail, short limbs, broad webbed feet, obtuse muzzle, and very small ears; the pelage is whole-colored. The common European otter is L. vulgaris; that of North America, L. canadensis; that of South America, L. brasiliensis; and there are others. See otter.

2. [i. c.] In her. See loutre.

Lutraría (lū'trā-ri-ā), n. [NL., so called with some reference to otters, < L. lutra, an otter: see Lutra.] A genus of siphonate bivalve mollusks of the family Macridae; the otter's - shells.

The oblong gaping shell resembles that of a common cob or clam (Mya), but is more porcellaneous, and has a prominent spoon-shaped cartilage plate on each valve, in front of which are one or two teeth.

Otter's shell (Lutraría oblonga), right valve.

Lutremyina (lū'trē-mi-i-nā), n. pl. [NL., < Lutremys + *-ina*².] A subfamily of Cistudinidae, typified by the genus Lutremys, having a well-defined zygomatich arch over the temporal muscle. It includes a number of Old World species, of 5 genera. J. E. Gray.

Lutremys (lū'trē-mis), n. [NL., < L. lutra, otter, + Gr. μύς, a tortoise.] A genus of box-tortoises, by many called Emys, giving name to the Lutremyina.

Lutridæ (lū'trī-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lutra + -idæ.] Same as Lutrine (a.).

Lutrine (lū'trī-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lutra + -inæ.] A subfamily of Mustelidae; the otters. (a.) The sea-otters as well as the land-otters, both having 36 teeth, and the same number of teeth in both jaws, though the formulas are different. (b.) Land-otters, as distinguished from Enhydryna or sea-otters, having the dental formula as in Lutra, the teeth of ordinary or normal carnivorous type, and the hind feet not peculiarly modified. There are several genera, of most parts of the world, as Lutra, Leptomys or Barangia, Aonyx, Hydrogale, and Pteronura. See Enhydryna.

Lutrine (lū'trin), a. [< L. lutra, otter, + *-ine*¹.] Otter-like; of or pertaining to the Lutrine.

lutulent (lū'tū-lent), a. [= It. lutulento, < L. lutulentus, muddy, < lutum, mud: see *lute*², n.] Muddy; turbid; thick.

These then are the waters, . . . the lutulent, spumy, maculatory waters of sin.

Rev. T. Adams, Works, I. 166. (Devies.)

Luaridae (lū-vār-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Luvarus + -idæ.] A family of acanthopterygian fishes, typified by the genus Luvarus. It embraces scombroids with a compressed-oblong body covered with minute scales, small mouth, thoracic vent, a single dorsal and anal fin, and ventrals reduced and closing over the anus. Only one genus and species is known. Danidæ is a synonym.

Luvarus (lū-vā-rus), n. [NL.] The only genus of Luvaridae. Only a single rare species is known, L. imperialis, of the Mediterranean and adjoining parts of the Luvarus imperialis (immature form).

Atlantic, attaining a length of 3 feet or more, and remarkable for the atrophy to which the dorsal and anal fins are subjected by age.

luwack (lū'wak), n. [Native name: said to be Javanese.] The common paradoxure or palm-cat, Paradoxurus typus.

lux¹ (lūks), v. t. [< F. luxer = Sp. hujar = Pg. luxar = It. lusso, < L. luxare, put out of joint, dislocate, luxus, out of joint, dislocated, lit.

oblique, < Gr. λοξός, oblique, slanting: see loxis.] To put out of joint; luxate. Pope, Odyssey, xi. lux² (lūks), n. [< F. luxer = Sp. hujar = Pg. luxar = It. lusso, < L. luxus, extravagance, excess, splendor, pomp, magnificence, luxury.] 1. Luxury.

The Pow'r of Wealth I try'd,
And all the various Luxes of costly Pride.
Prior, Solomon, II.

2. Richness; superfine quality; elegance: said of material objects. Also luxer, as mere French.

The lux and magnificence of the two.
Boswell, Letters (1650).

Paper and type are the very acme of refinement and luxer, and the work is embellished by five full-page illustrations of considerable beauty. Westminster Rev., CXXV. 501.

lux³ (lūks), n. [L., light: see *light*¹.] Light: a Latin word occurring in some phrases used more or less in English.—Corona lucis. See corona.

luxate (lūk'sāt), v. t.; pret. and pp. luxated, ppr. luxating. [< L. luxatus, pp. of luxare, dislocate: see lux².] To displace or remove from its proper place, as a joint; put out of joint; dislocate.

luxation (lūk-sā-shōn), n. [= F. luxation = Sp. luxacion = Pg. luxação = It. lussazione, < LL. luxatio (n.), a dislocation, < L. luxare, pp. luxatus, dislocate: see lux² and luxate.] 1. The act of luxating (a bone), or forcing it from its proper place or articulation.

There needs some little luxation to strain this latter reading to a good sense.

Jer. Taylor, Works (ed. 1835), II. 236.

2. The state of being luxated; a dislocation, as of a joint.

When therefore two bones, which being naturally united make up a joint, are separated from each other, we call it a luxation.
Wise, Surgery, vii. 2.

luxé (F. pron. lūks), n. [F.: see lux².] Same as lux².—Édition de Luxe. See édition.

Luxemburgia (lūk-sem-bēr-jī-ā), n. [NL. (A. St. Hilaire, 1818), named after the Duke of Luxembourg, under whose patronage St. Hilaire began his botanical researches in Brazil.] A genus of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants of the natural order Ochnaceæ and tribe Luxemburgieæ. There are 7 species, found only in Brazil, characterized by having five equal, spreading sepals, naked within, eight stamens, and no staminodia. They are handsome trees or shrubs, with alternate, sharply serrate leaves, and terminal racemes of showy yellow flowers. They are apparently scarce in collections.

Luxemburgieæ (lūk-sem-bēr-jī-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1862), < Luxemburgia + -ææ.] A tribe of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants of the natural order Ochnaceæ, characterized by an oecentric ovary, which is from 2- to 5-celled, or 1-celled with incomplete placenta, and an indefinite number of ovules. The capsule is many-seeded, and the seeds are albuminous. The tribe includes 6 genera, all South American, of which Luxemburgia is the type.

luxullianite (lūk-sul-i-an-it), n. [< Luxullian (see def.) + *-ite*².] A rock consisting of a fine-grained mixture of schorl, feldspar, and quartz, through which are distributed large crystals of red orthoclase, found at Luxullian or Luxullian in Cornwall, England. From this rock was made the sarcophagus of the Duke of Wellington, in St. Paul's Cathedral, London.

luxurt, n. [Irreg. < luxury.] A lecher. [Rare.]

The torment to a luxur due.

Middleton, Father Hubbard's Tales.

luxure, n. [ME., < OF. luxure, < L. luxuria, luxury: see luxury.] Luxury.

He the forfeit of luxure Shall tempt. Gower, Conf. Amant., vii.

luxuriance (lūg-gū-ri-āns), n. [< F. luxuriance; as luxuriant (t) + -ce.] The state of being luxuriant; abundant or excessive growth or quantity; strong, vigorous growth; exuberance.

The whole leafy forest stands display'd
In full luxuriance to the sighing gales.
Thomson, Spring, I. 93.

= Syn. Profusion, superabundance. See luxurious.

luxuriacy (lūg-gū-ri-ān-sī), n. [As luxuriance: see -cy.] Same as luxuriance.

luxuriant (lūg-gū-ri-ānt), a. [= F. luxuriant = Sp. luxuriante = Pg. luxuriante = It. lussuriente, < L. luxuriant (t), ppr. of luxuriare, be rank or luxuriant: see luxuriare.] 1. Exuberant in growth; abundant: as, luxuriant foliage.

See vines luxuriant verdur'd leaves display,
Supporting tendrils curling all the way.
Parnell, Gift of Poetry.

2. Exuberant in quantity; superfluous in abundance.

Prune the luxuriant, the uncouth redne,
But show no mercy to an empty line.
Pope, Imit. of Horace, II. 4. 174.

English poetry . . . is nothing at present but a combination of luxuriant images. Goldsmith, Vicar, vii.

3. Supplied in great abundance; replete.

To the north-east spreads St. Leonard's Forest, luxuriant with beech and birch and pine, sinking and rising to woody dingles and slopes. E. Dowden, Shelley, I. 6.

4. In bot., having the floral envelop so multiplied as to destroy the essential parts: said of a flower: opposed to mitigated. = Syn. 1 and 2. Luxuriant, luxuriant. See luxuriant.

luxuriantly (lū-gū'ri-ant-li), adv. In a luxuriant manner or degree; exuberantly.

luxuriate (lū-gū'ri-āt), v. t. & pret. and pp. luxuriated, ppr. luxuriating. [L. luxuriatus, pp. of luxuriare (> It. luxuriare = Sp. lujuriar = Pg. luxuriar = OF. luxurier), be rank or luxurious, indulge in luxury, < luxuria, luxury: see luxury.] 1. To grow exuberantly or in superfluous abundance.—2. To feed or live luxuriously: as, the herds luxuriate in the pastures.—3. Figuratively, to indulge without stint; revel in luxury or abundance; take delight: as, to luxuriate in description.

During the whole time of their being together, they luxuriate in telling one another their minds on whatever subject turns up. T. Hughes, Tom Brown at Rugby, I. 1.

luxuriation (lū-gū'ri-ā-shən), n. [Luxuriatio + -ion.] The act of luxuriating; the process of growing exuberantly.

luxuriety (lū-gū'ri-ē-ti), n. [luxuri(ous) + -ety.] Same as luxuriance. [Rare.]

One may observe a kind of luxuriety in the description which the holy historian gives of the transport of the men of Judah upon this occasion. Sterne, Works, IV. xi.

luxurious (lū-gū'ri-us), a. [F. luxurieux = Pr. luxurioso = Sp. lujurioso = Pg. luxurioso = It. lussurioso, < L. luxuriosus, rank, luxuriant, profuse, excessive, immoderate, < luxuria, rankness, luxury: see luxury.] 1. Luxuriant; exuberant.

The work under our labour grows, luxurious by restraint: what we by day
Lop overgrown, or prune, or prop, or bind,
One night or two with wanton growth derides. Milton, P. L., l. 200.

2. Characterized by indulgence in luxury; given to luxury; voluptuous; indulging freely or excessively in material pleasures or objects of desire: as, a luxurious life; luxurious cities.

All these the Parthian . . . holds,
From the luxurious kings of Antioch won. Milton, P. R., III. 297.

3. Ministering to luxury; contributing to free or extravagant indulgence.

Those whom last thou saw'st
In triumph and luxurious wealth. Milton, P. L., xi. 788.

4. Abounding in that which gratifies the senses; exuberant in means of indulgence or enjoyment; affording abundant material pleasure.

Venus . . . rose not now, as of old, in exposed and luxurious loveliness. Macaulay, Petrarch.

Soothed by the sweet luxurious summer time,
And by the cadence of that ancient rhyme. William Morris, Earthly Paradise, I. 362.

5. Characterized by lust; libidinous.

She knows the heat of a luxurious bed. Shak., Much Ado, iv. 1. 42.

—Syn. 2. Epicurean, self-indulgent, sensual.—2. Luxurious, luxuriant. These words are now never synonymous. Luxurious means given to luxury or characterized by luxury: as, luxurious people; a luxurious life; a luxurious table. Luxuriant means exuberant in growth: as, the luxuriant vegetation of the tropics; by figure, a luxuriant style in composition. Luxurious implies blame, except where it is used by hyperbole for that which is exceedingly comfortable, etc.: as, a luxurious bed. Luxuriant does not come enough into the field of the moral for either praise or blame.

luxuriously (lū-gū'ri-us-li), adv. In a luxuriant manner; deliciously; voluptuously.

luxuriousness (lū-gū'ri-us-ness), n. The state or quality of being luxurious.

luxurist (lū-gū'rist), n. [Luxury + -ist.] One who is given to luxury. Temple.

luxury (lū-gū'ri), n.; pl. luxuries (-riz). [L. ME. luxurie (also luxure, q. v.) < OF. luxurie, luxure, F. luxure = Pr. luxuria = Sp. lujuria = Pg. luxuria = It. lussuria, < L. luxuria, rankness, luxuriance (of vegetation), friskiness, wantonness (of animals), profuse or extravagant living, < luxus, extravagance, luxury: see lux.] 1. Luxuriance; exuberance of growth.—2. A free or extravagant indulgence in pleasure, as of the table; voluptuousness in the gratification of any appetite; also, the free expenditure of wealth for the gratification of one's own desires, as in costly dress and equipage.

Luxury does not consist in the innocent enjoyment of any of the good things which God has created to be received with thankfulness, but in the wasteful abuse of them to vicious purposes, in ways inconsistent with sobriety, justice, or charity. Clarke, Works, II. cxiv.

First Necessity invented stools,
Convenience next suggested elbow chairs,
And Luxury th' accomplish'd Sofa last. Cowper, Task, I. 88.

3. That which is delightful to the senses, the feelings, etc.; especially, that which gratifies a nice and fastidious appetite or taste; a daintiness: as, a house filled with luxuries; the luxuries of the table.

Rhyme, that luxury of recurrent sound. Prof. Blackie.

4. Exuberant enjoyment; complete gratification or satisfaction, either physical or intellectual.

Learn the luxury of doing good. Goldsmith, Traveller, I. 22.

The luxury of returning to bread again can hardly be imagined by those who have never been deprived of it. Lady Holland, Sydney Smith, vii.

5. Lust; lewd desire; lasciviousness; indulgence in lust.

File on sinful fantasy!
File on lust and luxury!
Shak., M. W. of W., v. 5 (song).

I fear no strumpet's drugs, nor ruffian's stab, Should I detect their hateful luxuries. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour, Ind.

—Syn. 2 and 4. Epicurism, effeminacy, sensuality, delicacy, gratification, pleasure, enjoyment, delight. See luxurious.

lus (luz), n. [Heb.] A bone in the human body which the Rabbinical writers affirmed to be indestructible, and which is variously said to have been one of the lumbar vertebrae, the sacrum, the coccyx, a sesamoid bone of the great toe, or one of the trigonous or Wormian bones of the cranium. It is probable that this superstition is the origin of the technical name of the sacrum or "sacred" bone.

luserat, luzernet, n. Same as lucern.²

lusionite (lū'zən-ī-ti), n. [Luzon (see def.) + -ite.] A mineral closely related to enargite, found in the island of Luzon in the Philippines.

Luzula (lū'zū-lī), n. [NL., < Olt. luczola, luciola, a glow-worm (cf. It. luciola, a firefly, luciolato, a glow-worm): see Luciola.] A genus of monocotyledonous plants of the natural order Juncaceae, the rush family, and the tribe Ejuncaceae. It is characterized by the stems growing in tufts; linear, grass-like, radical leaves, or sometimes with a few on the stem; a 1-celled ovary, with 3 erect ovules in the center; and a style which is 3-cleft at the apex. There are about 40 species, growing everywhere in temperate regions, and in the mountainous parts of the tropics. They grow in drier ground than the ordinary rushes, and have in general a more grassy aspect. See wood-rush.

Luzuriaga (lū'zū-ri-ā'gā), n. [NL. (Ruiz and Pavon, 1802), named after D. Ign. de Luzuriaga, a Spanish botanist.] A genus of liliaceous plants, type of the tribe Luzuriageae, characterized by sessile alternate leaves with numerous fine nerves, and flowers of medium size, usually solitary in the axils, the segments of the perianth distinct and spreading, and a 3-celled ovary with light-colored seeds. The stems are woody and branching, and the flowers white on delicate pedicels, at length producing a berry-like fruit. There are 8 species, of which 2 are Chilean, and the third grows in Magellan's Land and New Zealand.

Luzuriaga (lū'zū-ri-ā'jē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1883), < Luzuriaga + -ae.] A tribe of liliaceous plants, typified by the genus Luzuriaga. They have an erect, branching, woody stem, sometimes climbing above; flowers in the axils of the leaves, in fasciculate cymes, or solitary at the tips of the branches; the anther-cells distinct; and the ovules few or many, either anisotropous or half-anisotropous. The tribe includes 7 genera and about 12 species, of which the majority are from Chili and the southern part of South America, and the rest are from Australia and southern Africa.

ly, v. i. An obsolete form of lie.¹

-ly. [ME. -ly, -li, -lich, -liche, earliest ME. -lic < AS. -lic = OS. -lik = OFries. -lik = MD. D. -lyk = MLG. -lik, -lich = OHG. -lih, MHG. -lich, -līch, G. -lich = Ice. -likr, -legr = Dan. -lig = Sw. -lik = Goth. -leika; a common Teut. adj. suffix, 'like,' 'having the form of,' orig. an independent word, namely AS. lic, etc., body, form: see like.¹ Cf. *like*², adj., as used in composition, of similar effect, but etymologically different, manly, e. g., being ult. < *AS. manlik (in adv. manlike), < mann, man, + lic, body, form, while manlike (with similar compounds) is not found in AS., but corresponds to AS. mann, man, + geltic, like, < lic, body: see *like*¹, *like*².] A common adjective suffix, forming, from nouns, adjectives signifying 'of the form or nature of' or 'like' the thing denoted by the noun: as in manly, womanly, godly, lordly, princely, of the nature of, like, or suited to a man, woman, etc.; bodily, earthly, daily, weekly, monthly, yearly, etc., belonging to or being of the body, the earth, a day, etc.; lovely, heartily (obs.), etc. Such adjectives, implying 'like,' are often accompanied by more definite adjectives in -like: as, manlike, womanlike, etc. The suffix is also used with some adjectives, as godly, lordly, etc., and with some verbs, as comely, seemly, etc. They are usually accompanied by adverbs now of the same form. See *-ly*².

-ly. [ME. -ly, -li, -lich, -liche, < AS. -lice = OS. -liko = OFries. -like, -like = MD. D. -lyk = MLG. -like, -liche = OHG. -lihho, MHG. -liche, G. -lich = Ice. -lika, -lija = Sw. -ligen = Dan. -ligt = Goth. -leiko; a common Teut. adverbial suffix, meaning 'in a manner' indicated by the adj. in -lic (-ly) from which the adverb is derived, being the instr. case of the adj.; e. g., AS. manlike, in a manly manner, instr. case of manlik*, manly. Thus, while the adj. suffix *-ly*¹ and the adverb suffix *-ly*² are now identical in form, they are orig. distinct, the adverb suffix being derived, with a case-ending now lost, from the adj. suffix.] A common adverbial suffix, forming from adjectives adverbs signifying 'in a manner' denoted by the adjective: as, quickly, slowly, coldly, hotly, etc., loudly, harshly, etc. It is the most common adverbial suffix. In adverbs from nouns, as manly, womanly, etc., the adverb has the same form as the adjective in -ly, from which it is derived. The suffix is sometimes used with adjectives in -ly, as in seemingly, surely, godly, etc. Its use with primary adjectives, with no current adjective in -ly intervening (quickly, etc.), is more recent, but is now the prevalent one.

lyam, n. See lyme.⁴

lyart, a. and n. See lyard.¹

Lycana (li-sē'nā), n. [NL., < Gr. λυκαίνα, a she-wolf, fem. of λύκος = L. lupus, a wolf, = E. wolf, q. v.] The typical genus of Lycanidae. There are upward of 300 species, distributed all over the world. They are small, delicate creatures, some of much beauty of form and coloring, known as coppers and blues.

Lycanides (li-sen-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lycana + -ides.] A family of butterflies, represented by such genera as Lycana, Chrysophanes, and Thecla. They are generally of small size, delicate form, and very beautiful colors. Some are known as blues or coppers, and others as hairstrakes. The technical characters are: minute tarsal claws, fore legs ambulatorial, hind tibiae with one pair of spurs, antennae scarcely looked at the tip, and the last joint of the palpi small and naked. The caterpillars have minute feet and retractile head, and resemble wood-lice. The chrysalis is short, obtuse at each end, girt about the middle, and attached by the tail. There are about 40 genera and upward of 1,200 species.

Lycalopex (li-ka-lō'pek), n. [NL., < Gr. λύκος, a wolf, + ἀλώπης, a fox: see alopex.] A genus of Canidae established by Burmeister, containing most of the neotropical canines; the South American fox-wolves. These animals have the structural characters of dogs and wolves, but their tails are long and bushy, and they otherwise resemble foxes in general appearance. Several species are described, as L. antarcticus, L. azarae, L. canis, etc. The last-named is the mink or crab-eating fox-wolf.

lycanthrop (li-kan'thrōp), n. [ML. lycanthropus, lycanthropos, < Gr. λυκανθρωπος, a 'wolf-man,' or man-wolf, were-wolf, < λύκος, a wolf, + ἄνθρωπος, a man. Cf. werewolf.] 1. A man superstitiously supposed to be possessed of the power of transforming himself at pleasure into a wolf, and to be endowed while in that shape with its savage propensities; a were-wolf.

A French judge named Bogue, at the end of the sixteenth century, devoted himself especially to the subject [the assuming of animal forms], burnt multitudes of lycanthropes, wrote a book about them, and drew up a code in which he permitted ordinary witches to be strangled before they were burnt, but excepted lycanthropes, who were to be burned alive. Lecky, Rationalism, I. 97.

2. A person affected with lycanthropy; one who imagines himself to be a wolf, and acts in conformity with his delusion.

lycanthropi, n. Plural of lycanthropus.

lycanthropia (li-kan-thrō'pi-ā), n. [ML.: see lycanthrop-y.] Same as lycanthropy.

This kind is called lycanthropia, viz: when men conceive themselves wolves. Ford, Lover's Melancholy, III. 8.

lycanthropic (li-kan-thrōp'ik), a. [lycanthrop-y + -ic.] Of or pertaining to lycanthropy; characteristic of lycanthropy.

In a fit of lycanthropic madness, she came upon two children. E. Baring-Gould, Were-wolves, vi.

lycanthropist (li-kan'thrōp'ist), n. [lycanthrop-y + -ist.] Same as lycanthrope.

In mediæval times . . . persons named Garnier or Grenier were generally assumed to be lycanthropists. Enyc. Brit., XV. 91.

lycanthropus (li-kan'thrō-pus), a. [lycanthrop-y + -ous.] Relating or pertaining to lycanthropy.

lycanthropus (li-kan'thrō'pus), n.; pl. lycanthropi (-pi). [ML., also lycanthropos: see lycanthrope.] Same as lycanthrope.

The swift lycanthrope that walks the round, We'll tear their wolfish skins, and save the sheep. Middleton and Rowley, Changeling, III. 2.

lycanthropy (li-kan'thrō-pi), n. [< ML. lycanthropia, < Gr. λυκανθρωπία, a madness in which one imagines himself a wolf, < λυκάνθρωπος, a man-wolf: see lycanthrope.] 1. The supposed power of certain human beings to change themselves or others temporarily or permanently into wolves or other savage animals. See were-wolf.—2. The belief that certain persons change themselves into wolves or other wild beasts. This belief is common among savage races, and still lingers among the ignorant of some civilized peoples. 3. A kind of erratic melancholy or madness, in which the patient supposes himself to be a wolf. See lycanthrope.

Lycaon¹ (li-kā'on), n. [NL., < L. Lycaon, < Gr. Λυκάων, a mythical king of Arcadia, father of Callisto, who was transferred to the sky as the constellation of the Bear.] A name of the constellation Boötes (which see).

Lycaon² (li-kā'on), n. [NL., < L. lycaon, < Gr. λυκάων, an animal of the wolf kind, < λύκος = L. lupus, a wolf: see Lupus.] A genus of canine quadrupeds of the family Canidae, having but four toes on the fore feet, instead of five as in the rest of the Canidae, resembling the hyenas in this respect; the South African hunting-dogs, hyena-dogs, or painted hyenas. L. pictus or venustus is a fierce animal as large as a mastiff, with oval erect ears, bushy tail, and long limbs, and spotted with white, black, and yellow in an irregular manner. It hunts its prey in packs.

Painted Hyena, or Hunting-dog (Lycaon pictus).

Lycaste (li-kas'tē), n. [NL. (Lindley, 1843), < Lycaste, < Gr. Λυκάστη, a fem. name.] A genus of orchideaceous plants of the tribe Vandae and the subtribe Cyrtopodiaceae. It is characterized by having erect, partially spreading sepals, and the lateral lobes of the lip broad or sickle-shaped, attached to the base or apex of the claw, the middle one small or elongated, often ciliate. The column is rather long, and the stalks of the pollen-masses are long and linear. They are epiphytes with the short few-leaved stems sheathing at the base, forming a fleshy pseudobulb from which rise the erect scapes, bearing one, rarely two or three, large and showy flowers. There are about 25 species, natives of tropical America, and ranging from Peru to Mexico and the West Indies; many are very beautiful, and are common in cultivation.

lyceum (li-sē'um), n. [= F. lycée = Sp. liceo = Pg. lyceo = It. liceo, < L. lycēum, lycium, < Gr. Λύκειον, the Lyceum: so named from the neighboring temple of Apollo, < Λύκος, an epithet of Apollo, either as the 'wolf-slayer,' < λύκος, a wolf; or as the 'Lycian god,' < Λύκιος, Lycian, < Λυκία, Lycia; or as the 'god of light,' < λύκη, light; cf. λευκός, light, white, L. lux, light: see light.] 1. [cap.] An ancient public gymnasium with covered walks outside of Athens, near the river Ilissus, where Aristotle taught philosophy; hence, the Peripatetic school of philosophy. See Aristotelian.—2. A school for higher education preparatory to a university course. Compare college, 2 (f).

There are two lyceums for boys and girls, a realschule, a military school for cadets, a theological seminary, and two girls' colleges. Encyc. Brit., XIX. 410.

3. A public building or hall appropriated to instruction by lectures or disquisitions.—4. An association for literary improvement.

lycht, lyche¹, n. Variants of *like*¹.

lyche², a. and adv. An obsolete assimilated form of *like*².

lych-gate (lich'gāt), n. An archaic spelling of lich-gate.

lychnapsia (lik-nap'si-ā), n. [< Gr. λυχνάψια, lamp-lighting, < λυχνάρης, a lamp-lighter, < λυχνος, a lamp, + ἀπτεiv, touch.] In the Gr. Ch., a series of seven prayers for pardon and protection during the night, forming part of the office called lychnis.

The Priest, standing before the holy doors, with the lychnapsia. J. M. Neale, Eastern Church, I. 366.

lychnis (lik'nik), n. [< LGr. λυχνύς, the time of lamp-lighting, < Gr. λυχνος, lamp: see light.] In the Gr. Ch., an office, consisting of psalms and prayers, accompanying the lighting of the lamps or candles, originally introductory to, but now incorporated in, vespers on occasion of a vigil.

lychnides, n. Plural of lychnis, 1.

lychnidiate (lik-nid'i-āt), a. [< lychnis (lychnid-) + -ate.] In entom., giving out light; phosphorescent: formerly used of the head of the lantern-fly and certain allied insects, from the erroneous supposition that this is luminous at night.

lychnis (lik'nis), n. [L. lychnis, a rose of a bright-red color, also a gem, < Gr. λυχνίς, a lamp.] 1. Pl. lychnides (-nt-dēz). A ruby, sapphire, or carbuncle.—2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of Caryophyllaceous plants of the tribe Sileneae, characterized by a 10-nerved calyx, or rarely one with many parallel nerves, and commonly 3 styles and a 3- or 6-valved capsule. They are usually erect herbs with opposite leaves and terminal cymes of showy flowers. About 40 species have been described, natives of the warm and temperate regions of the northern hemisphere. The names campan and lampflower are common to all plants of this genus. Several species are pretty wild flowers of the Old World, and several are common garden-flowers. L. Chalcedonica, the scarlet lychnis, is perhaps the best-known: it is a rather coarse plant with dense fascicles of deep-scarlet flowers, also called Jerusalem or Mallows cross, etc., and in the United States sometimes sweet-william. Another garden species is L. coronaria, the rose-campion or mullen-pink. L. Viscaria, from its glutinous stem, shares with plants of the genus Silene the name of catchfly. L. Flos-cuculi, the cuckoo-flower, crow-flower, or ragged-robin, with dissected petals, common in Europe, is also cultivated, at least in double forms. L. vespertina, with white flowers opening in the evening, is sparingly introduced from Europe into the United States; and from the same source, L. Githago, the corn-cockle, with purple flowers, has become too common in American grain-fields. L. diurna, the red campion, adder's-flower, etc., is a common British species. See campan.

3. A plant of the genus Lychnis, especially L. Chalcedonica.

lychnites (lik-ni'tēz), n. [L., < Gr. λυχνίτης (sc. λίθος), Parian marble (see def.), < λυχνος, a lamp: see lychnis: so called, according to a notion ascribed by Pliny to Varro, because it was quarried (underground) by lamplight.] Parian marble: so called by Pliny. What rock or mineral was really meant by Pliny is not known, and there have been various theories in regard to it. Some think that selenite was the mineral intended; others that the name had reference to the brilliancy of the marble.

Lychnophora (lik-nof'ō-rā), n. [NL. (Martius, 1822), < Gr. λυχνος, a lamp, + φέρω, bearing.] A genus of Brazilian shrubs belonging to the order Compositae and the tribe Vernoniaceae, and type of the subtribe Lychnophoreae, characterized by having the heads aggregated into compound terminal clusters on a common fleshy receptacle, and the pappus with two rows of chaff, the outer short and persistent, the inner narrow, partially twisted, and caducous. The genus contains 17 species of branching shrubs, with a resinous wood, and alternate entire leaves with revolute margins, the glomerule of heads sessile at the tips of the branches.

Lychnophoreae (lik-nō-fō'rē-ā), n. pl. [NL. (Bentham and Hooker, 1873), < Lychnophora + -eae.] A subtribe of composite plants under the tribe Vernoniaceae, characterized by having the one- or few-flowered heads aggregated to form a dense cluster, and the pappus chaffy, either single or double, or rarely bristly. It includes 11 genera, of which the type is Lychnophora, and 58 species, 42 of which are confined to Brazil, and the majority of the others to tropical America.

lychnoscope (lik'nō-skōp), n. [< Gr. λυχνος, a lamp, a light, + σκοπεiv, view.] In arch., a small opening like a window, usually placed in the south chancel-wall of a church, and lower than the other windows, for what purpose is not strictly known. Also called low side window. Guill. "This is generally a small window in a church under a larger one. . . . The term itself is (like hagioscope) only of this [19th] century, and may have been coined on the erroneous idea that the windows were constructed that lepers (or anchorites) might behold the altar lights. On the other hand, that idea may be correct. Another theory is that of a confessional." N. and Q., 6th ser., IX. 259.

Lycian (li'si-an), a. and n. [< L. Lycia, < Gr. Λυκία, Lycia (Λύκιος, L. Lycius, Lycian, pl. Λύκιοι, L. Lycii, the Lycians) (see def.), + -an.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to Lycia, a mountainous district in southwestern Asia Minor, projecting into the Mediterranean sea, and inhabited in ancient times by a distinct race. See II.—Lycian architecture, the ancient architecture characteristic of Lycia, preserved especially in abundant series of rock-cut tombs, in which the assemblage of a system of construction in wood is closely reproduced in stone. Quadrangular obelisks, such as the hairy tomb of Xanthos, also abound, as well as stone sarcophagi, in which, as in the examples first mentioned, carpenter's work is faithfully copied. Later examples present imitations of Greek temple-facades, etc. The early architecture is of especial importance as throwing a probable light upon some of the forms through which Greek architecture was developed.

II. n. An inhabitant of Lycia; especially, one of a race inhabiting ancient Lycia, Aryan or Indo-European in language, as is shown by important inscriptions in a peculiar character recently recovered and elucidated. The Lycians seem to have exerted considerable influence in early days on the Greeks, especially through their worship of Apollo. Interesting monuments of their architecture and sculpture have been brought together in European museums, notably in the British Museum. Some sculptures found in Lycia vie in refinement with the riper archaic art of Attica. See harry monument, under harry.

Lycian Architecture. Tomb now in the British Museum.

Lycine (li-si-nē), n. pl. [NL., < Lycus + -inae.] A subfamily of Lampyridae having the middle coxae distant and no epipleurae, typified by the genus Lycus.

Lycium (lis'i-um), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1737), neut. of L. Lycius, Lycian.] A genus of solanaceous plants of the tribe Atropeae, characterized by a 3- to 5-toothed or lobed calyx, a funnel-shaped, campanulate, or urn-shaped corolla, stamens which are either exserted or included, and a slightly juicy and usually few-seeded berry. They are shrubs, often spine-bearing at the nodes, with entire leaves, the latter usually small; and they bear white, purple, rose-colored, sometimes scarlet or yellowish flowers, solitary in the axils or rarely fasciated. About 70 species have been described, but this number may be much reduced; they are found throughout warm and temperate regions, and many are cultivated. The common name of plants of the genus is box-thorn, applying especially to L. barbarum, a plant with lilac flowers and scarlet or orange berries, well adapted for training on walls or trellises. The leaves of this plant having been recommended for use as tea, it receives also the names Barbery tea-plant and Duke of Argyll's tea-tree. L. Afrum, the African tea-tree, is a spiny species with violet flowers. L. vulgare of the Mediterranean region, slightly thorny with lilac branches, and having green-purple flowers and bright-red berries, is the matrimony-vine, often cultivated, and sometimes becoming wild in America. L. Europaeum is sometimes utilized for hedges, as may be also other species.

Lycodes (li-kō'dēz), n. [NL. (Reinhardt, 1838), < Gr. λυκάδης, wolfish, < λύκος, a wolf, + εἶδος, form.] The typical genus of Lycodidae, with numerous species, of northern seas, as L. vahl of the North Atlantic. They are among various fishes known as eel-pouts.

lycodid (li-kō'did), n. and a. I. n. A fish of the family Lycodidae. II. a. Relating or belonging to the Lycodidae; lycodoid.

Lycodidae (li-kod'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lycodes + -idae.] A family of teleostcephalous fishes, typified by the genus Lycodes; the eel-pouts. They are characterized by a more or less anguilliform shape, tapering backward, elongated dorsal and anal fins confluent with the caudal and invested with a thick skin, ventral jugular and rudimentary or suppressed, and branchial apertures lateral, not confluent. They inhabit arctic and cold temperate seas, mostly at considerable depths. Some of them, probably all, are viviparous, as Zoarces viviparus. The genera are about 6, the species 80. The family is also called Zoaridae.

lycodoid (li-kō'doid), a. and n. [< NL. Lycodes + -oid.] I. a. Pertaining to the Lycodidae or Lycodoidea, or having their characters.

II. n. A fish of the family Lycodidae or superfamily Lycodoidea.

Lycodoidea (li-kō-doi'dē-ō), n. pl. [NL. (Gill), < Lycodes + -oidea.] The Lycodidae rated as a superfamily.

Lycodon (li'kō-don), n. [NL.: see lycodont.] The typical genus of Lycodontidae, having the anterior teeth of both jaws caniniform.

lycodont (li'kō-dont), a. and n. [< Gr. λυκόντωρ (λυκωντήρ), a canine tooth, lit. 'wolf-tooth,' < λύκος, wolf, + δόντωρ (δωντήρ) = E. tooth.] I. a. Having caniniform teeth, as a snake; belonging to the Lycodontidae.

II. n. A snake of the family Lycodontidae.

Lycodontidae (li-kō-don'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lycodon (Lycodont + -idae).] In Günther's system of classification, a family of colubridiform serpents, typified by the genus Lycodon. The body is moderately thick; the head is oblong, with a flat top and generally a flattened and broadly rounded snout; the anterior teeth of both jaws are generally longest, and there are no grooved teeth. It contains 14 genera, mostly of Africa and the East Indies. Some of the commonest snakes of India belong here. Also Lycodontinae, as a subfamily of Colubridae.

lycodontine (li-kō-don'tin), a. and n. [lycodont + -ine]. Same as lycodont.

Lycoperdaceae (li'kō-pēr-dā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Corda, 1842), < Lycoperdon + -aceae.] An order of gasteromycetous fungi, typified by the genus Lycoperdon.

Lycoperdon (li-kō-pēr-don), n. [NL., < Gr. λύκος, a wolf, + πέπρωται, break wind.] A genus of gasteromycetous fungi, founded by Tournefort in 1700, and typical of the order Lycoperdaceae. It is characterized by having the globose, membranaceous peridium double, the outer part of which breaks up into warts, spines, etc., while the inner part is more or less solid. The spores are globose, short-caudate, and variously colored. The species, of which more than 100 are known, are very widely distributed, and sometimes are of very large size. They are popularly known as puffballs. L. gemmatum, the common puffball, acts mechanically as a styptic, by means of its brown spores. L. giganteum, the giant puffball, when dry, stanches slight wounds, and its smoke stupefies bees. In a young state it is edible. See bandium, cut, fig. c. — Lycoperdon nuts, the herbarists' name under which certain subterranean fungi of the genus Blaphomyces were formerly known and sold.

Lycoperdon.

Lycopersicum (li-kō-pēr-si-kum), n. [NL., < Gr. λυκοπερσικόν (as if < λύκος, a wolf, + περσικός, the peach: see peach), a false reading of λυκοπερσίων, an Egyptian plant with a strong-smelling yellow juice.] A genus of plants of the natural order Solanaceae and the tribe Solaneae. It differs from Solanum, with which it is closely allied, by having long, acuminate, connate anthers, opening on the inside by a longitudinal fissure. They are unarmed herbs with irregularly pinnate leaves, weak stems, five- or rarely six-parted flowers, with a rotate corolla, and growing in few-flowered cymes. The fruit is a fleshy globose or pear-shaped berry, usually red or yellow, and with numerous seeds embedded in the pulp. There are three or four species, natives of South America, but now widely cultivated and to some extent naturalized elsewhere. The most important is L. esculentum, the common tomato, formerly called love-apple, which has been very much modified by culture. Its fruit, naturally of two or three cells, is often much complicated by a consolidation of blossoms. See tomato.

lycopod (li'kō-pod), n. [< NL. Lycopodium, q. v.] A plant of the natural order Lycopodiaceae.

lycopode (li'kō-pōd), n. [< NL. Lycopodium, q. v.] A highly inflammable yellow powder made up of the spores of species of Lycopodium, especially L. clavatum and L. Selago; vegetable brimstone.

Lycopodiaceae (li-kō-pō-di-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (A. P. de Candolle, 1815), < Lycopodium + -aceae.] An order of cryptogamous plants, belonging to the class Lycopodiinae, and typified by the genus Lycopodium. The order includes the homosporous Lycopodiaceae, which produce spores of only one kind (subdivided into the Lycopodiales with the genus Lycopodium and the Phylloptoraceae with the genus Phyllopteron), and the heterosporous Lycopodiaceae, which produce spores of two kinds. The latter subdivision, which is typified by the genus Lepidodendron, is found only in a fossil state.

lycopodiaceous (li-kō-pō-di-ā'shius), a. [< NL. Lycopodiaceae + -ous.] Belonging to or resembling the Lycopodiaceae.

Lycopodiales (li'kō-pō-di-ā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Goebel (?), 1882), < Lycopodium + -ales.] A sub-order of Lycopodiaceae, containing the genus Lycopodium.

Lycopodines (li'kō-pō-din'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Swartz, 1806), < Lycopodium + -inae.] A class of cryptogamous plants, including the orders Lycopodiaceae, Psilotaceae, and Liliatae.

lycopodite (li-kop'ō-dit), n. [< NL. Lycopodium, q. v., + -ite.] A fossil plant of the genus Lycopodium.

Lycopodium (li-kō-pō-di-um), n. [NL., so named from the appearance of the roots; < Gr. λύκος, a wolf, + πους (pod) = E. foot.] A genus of vascular cryptogamous plants, the type of the order Lycopodiaceae. They are low plants, usually of moss-like aspect, with evergreen, one-nerved leaves arranged in one to sixteen ranks. The sporangia are coriaceous, reniform, compressed, one-celled, dehiscing transversely, situated in the axils of unaltered leaves or in terminal bracteate spikes. The spores are copious and minute, with three lines radiating from the apex. The genus is very widely distributed, and contains 94 species, of which 12 are found in North America. L. dendroideum is the well-known ground-pine; L. clavatum is the common club-moss, or running pine, which is extensively employed in decorations. This species has also been called stag's-horn, brake's-horn, fox's-claw, foxtail, etc. L. Selago is sometimes called fir-moss, foxtail, and tree-moss. Many fossil species have been found, those occurring in the Paleozoic strata being preferably called lycopodites.

Lycopodium dendroideum.
a, part of the spike, showing the sporangia in the axils of the scale-like leaves, seen from within; b, spore, highly magnified.

with five scales in the throat of the corolla, and fruit of four ovoid, erect nutlets. The flowers are small, violet or blue, and grow in terminal, leafy-bracted, scorpioid racemes. Three or four species are known, natives of Europe, northern Africa, and central and western Asia. One species, L. arvense, the small bugloss, is a common weed in cultivated sandy fields in Europe, and is now established from Canada to Virginia in North America.

Lycopus (li'kō-pus), n. [NL. (Tournefort, 1700), so named from the appearance of the leaves; < Gr. λύκος, wolf, + πους = E. foot.] A genus of labiate plants of the tribe Satureiinae and the subtribe Menthoidae. It is characterized by a four- or five-toothed calyx, a corolla-limb with four divisions, the two anterior stamens perfect with the cells of the anthers at length diverging, and the nutlets sharply angled, and truncate at the apex. They are small herbs, growing in marshy places, with sharply toothed leaves, and small flowers in dense axillary whorls. About 10 species have been enumerated, but some of these are probably only varieties; they are found in North America and in the temperate regions of the Old World. L. Virginicus is a common American species with some medicinal properties, called bugleweed. L. sinuatus, another common American species, was formerly identified with L. Europaeus, the water-horshound or gipsy-herb (gipsywort), which is the ordinary European species, sometimes furnishing a substitute for quinine.

Lycornis (li-kōr'nis), n. [NL., < Gr. λύκος, a wolf, + ὄρνις, a bird.] A genus of South American coots of the family Rallidae and subfamily Fulicinae, having the head carunculate. Bonaparte, 1854. Also spelled Licornis.

Horned Coot (Lycornis cornuta).

Lycosa (li-kō'sā), n. [NL., < Gr. λύκος, a kind of spider, lit. wolf: see Lycena.] The typical genus of Lycosidae. L. piratica is an example. L. tarantula, or Tarantula apulia, is the well-known tarantula of southern Europe.

Lycosidae (li-kō'si-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lycosa + -idae.] A family of citigrade hunting-spiders; the wolf-spiders or tarantulas. They are active predatory spiders, capturing their prey by chasing and spinning no web. The legs are long, especially the hinder pair, and the cephalothorax is narrowed in front; the ocelli are usually in three rows; the spinnerets are three pairs; the falcies are vertical. The leading genera are Lycosa and Dolomedes.

lycotropal (li-kōt'rō-pal), a. [< Gr. λύκος, a wolf, + τροπή, a turning: see trope.] In bot., curved downward like a horseshoe: applied to an orthotropal ovule.

Lycus (li'kus), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1787), < Gr. λύκος, a wolf.] 1. A genus of beetles of the family Malacodermdae, having the head prolonged like a rostrum with the antennae at its base, and the final joints of the antennae as long as the preceding ones. It is a large genus, the species of which are mainly African, although two are found in North America, and a few in the East Indies and Australia.

2. A genus of butterflies. Hübner, 1816. Lyda (li'dā), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1804), < Gr. λύδος, a Lydian: see Lydian.] A genus of sawflies of the hymenopterous family Tenthredinidae, and typical of the subfamily Lydinae, having the fore wings with two marginal cells and the long antennae setaceous in both sexes. The group is large and wide-spread, with 30 European and over 50 North American species.

Lyda nevadensis. (Twice natural size.)

lyddite (lid'it), n. [< Lydd, in Kent, England.] An explosive, consisting of picric acid and gun-cotton, used in shells: the same as melinite.

Lydella (li-del'ē), n. [NL., dim. of Lyda, q. v.] A genus of tachina-flies, of the family Tachinidae, founded by Robineau-Desvoidy in 1830. L. doryphora, the only American species, has been placed in the genus Exorista. It is parasitic upon the Colorado potato-beetle, and is probably more effectual than any other insect in checking this pest in Missouri. It resembles the common house-fly, but is distinguished by its brilliant silvery-white face. Idley, 1st Rep. Ins. Mo., p. 111.

Lydella doryphora. (Cross shows natural size.)

lydent, n. A Middle English form of leden.

Lydian (lid'i-an), a. and n. [< L. Lydian, < Gr. Λυδία, < Λυδός, a Lydian.] I. a. Of or pertaining to Lydia, an ancient country of Asia Minor, bordering on the Aegean sea, or to its inhabitants: as, the Lydian empire (including under Croesus, its last king, famous for his wealth, a large part of Asia Minor); Lydian coins; Lydian luxury. — Lydian mode. See mode. — Lydian stone, the name given by ancient authors to the touchstone. It occurs as early as the time of Bacchylides (about 470 B. C.). The use of the Lydian stone for testing the quality of gold is minutely described by Theophrastus, and is also noticed at some length by Pliny.

II. n. An inhabitant of ancient Lydia.

lye, v. i. An obsolete spelling of lie.

lye, v. and n. An obsolete spelling of lie.

lye (li), n. [Formerly also lie, ley; < ME. ley, < AS. lēah = MD. looghe, D. loog = MLG. LG. loog = OHG. luga, lauga, MHG. louge, G. lauge, lye; prob. akin to Icel. laug, a warm bath, hence also a hot spring (much used in comp., e. g. laugar-dug (Sw. lördag = Dan. lørdag, Saturday), 'bath-day', i. e. Saturday, the day appropriated by the Scandinavians to that exercise; laugar-aptan, laugar-natt, Saturday evening, Saturday night, etc.).] Water impregnated with alkaline salt imbibed from the ashes of wood by the process of leaching; also, some solution of an alkali, as potash, which is itself the product of leached lye concentered by evaporation. Crude lye is used in making some coarse kinds of soap, for cleaning certain things, as inked printing-types and -rollers (though for these benzine is now more common), and for various other purposes. In dilution it is used in a preparation of maize called hulled corn (which see, under hull, v. t.) and also lyed corn.

lye, n. A variant of lay.

lye, n. An obsolete variant of lee.

lyed (lid), a. [< lye + -ed.] Treated or prepared with lye.

The air is to be carefully excluded from the surface of fruits left standing after having been either lyed or washed. Sci. Amer., N. S., LIX, 256.

Lyencephala (li-en-sef'a-lā), n. pl. [NL., irreg. < Gr. lyen, loose, + enkephalos, brain: see encephalon.] In Owen's classification, the lowest of four subclasses of Mammalia, including the marsupials and monotremes, or Didelphia and Ornithodelphia; the implantational mammals. The name indicates the loose or slight connection of the right and left hemispheres of the cerebrum, in consequence of the small size, if not the absence, of the main commissure or corpus callosum. It is correlated with Lienccephala, Gyrencephala, and Archencephala.

lyencephalous (li-en-sef'a-lus), a. [As Lyencephala + -ous.] Pertaining to the Lyencephala, or having their characters.

lyerman, n. See lyreman.

lyest, n. pl. A Middle English variant of lees. See lees. Chaucer.

lyft, lyfyt, etc. Middle English forms of life, lively, etc.

lyft, A Middle English form of *lift*¹, *lift*², *left*¹.

Lygaeidae (li-jē-i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lygaeus + -idae.] A family of heteropterous insects, typified by the genus Lygaeus, belonging to the tribe of land-bugs, or Geocorae. The genera are many, mostly tropical or subtropical, and the family is usually divided into 9 subfamilies. These bugs are small or of moderate size, with 3-jointed tarsi and 4-jointed antennae.

Lygaeus (li-jē'us), n. [NL., < Gr. lygaios, shadowy, gloomy, < lygō, twilight.] The typical genus of Lygaeidae, founded by Fabricius in 1794. It is characterized by a conical head with projecting eyes in contact with the prothorax; between the eyes is a pair of ocelli. Species are numerous, and are widely distributed in temperate and tropical countries, especially in South America. L. fasciatus, a common one, red, banded and dotted with black. L. equestris, L. saxatilis, and L. famularis inhabit Europe.

Lygaeus fasciatus.
(Twice natural size.)

Lygodiaceae (li-gō-di-ā'sō-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Presl, 1845), < Lygodium + -aceae.] A former order of ferns including the genera Lygodium and Hydroglossum, the latter of which is now included under Lygodium also. Lygodium is placed by Hooker in the suborder Schizaeaceae.

Lygodiæ (li-gō-di'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Brongnart, 1843), < Lygodium + -æ.] A former tribe of ferns, typified by the genus Lygodium.

Lygodium (li-gō'di-um), n. [NL. (Swartz, 1801), < Gr. lygōdys, like a willow twig, < lygō, a willow twig, withy, + idos, form.] A widely diffused genus of ferns with climbing stipes. The spore-cases are ovoid, solitary or occasionally in pairs, in the axils of large imbricated scale-like indusia. The fully developed barren fronds are either palmate or pinnate. Of the 16 species known, only one, L. palmatum, the climbing fern, is a native of North America, being found from Massachusetts south to Florida. It has flexible, twining stipes, from 1 to 3 feet long, and short alternate 4-forked branches or petioles, each fork bearing a round-cordate palmately 4- to 7-lobed pinna. Eighteen fossil species have been described, ranging from the Cretaceous to the Miocene. They are common in the Tertiary deposits of western America.

Lygosoma (li-gō-sō'mā), n. [NL., < Gr. lygos, a withy, + σῶμα, body.] A genus of scincoid lizards.

lying¹ (li'ing), n. [Verbal n. of *lie*¹, v.] A place where one lies.

The place for the body to be interred who was deposed over against the lying of Q—Katharine on the right side of the Qnyre.
1866 Register book of Peterborough Cathedral. (N. and Q., 17th ser., IV, 121.)

lying¹ (li'ing), p. a. [Ppr. of *lie*¹, v.] Being prostrate. See *lie*¹.—Lying panel. See panel.—Lying to, adjacent to.

Neither bee there wanting woods here . . . and parkes; for many there are lying to Noblemen's and gentlemen's houses replenished with game.
Holland, tr. of Camden, p. 460. (Davies.)

lying² (li'ing), n. [Verbal n. of *lie*², v.] Falsehood; untruthfulness.

lying³ (li'ing), p. a. [Ppr. of *lie*², v.] Mendacious; false; deceptive: as, a lying rumor.

What was it? A lying trick of the brain!
Tennyson, Maud, xxiii, 2.

lying-down (li'ing-down'), n. Same as lying-in.

lying-in (li'ing-in'), n. and a. [Verbal n. of lie in: see *lie*¹, v.] I. n. Confinement in childbed.

II. a. Pertaining to childbirth; obstetrical: as, a lying-in hospital.

lyingly (li'ing-li), adv. In a lying manner; falsely; by telling lies.

lying-to (li'ing-tō'), n. See to lie to, under lie.

lyket. A Middle English form of *like*¹, *like*², *like*³.

lykwaket, n. See likewake.

lyle gun. See *gun*¹.

lylliet, n. An obsolete form of lily.

lym¹, n. An obsolete form of *limb*¹.

lym², n. See *lime*².

lymallt, n. See limail.

lymbot, n. An obsolete spelling of limbo.

lyme¹, n. An obsolete spelling of *lime*¹.

lyme², n. See *lime*².

lyme-grass (lim'grās), n. [lyme (f obs. spelling of *lime*¹—no obvious application) + grass.] A coarse grass of the genus Elymus, belonging to the tribe Hordeae, having the inflorescence in simple spikes, very rarely branched, the spikelets two or three together, and the glumes two, both on the same side of the spikelet, without awns, inclosing from one to seven florets. The species have an extensive geographical range; nearly all are inhabitants of the temperate zones.

Lymexylon (li-mek'si-lon), n. [NL., < Gr. lymē, maltreatment, ruin, + ξύλον, wood.] The typical genus of Lymexyloidea, having five abdominal segments and entire elytra. The species make cylindrical borings in oak, and L. navale is notorious for the injury it thus causes to ship-timber. Also written Lymexylon, and improperly Limezylon.

Lymexyloidea (li-mek-si-lon'i-dē), n. pl. [NL., < Lymexylon + -idea.] A small but important family of pentamerous Coleoptera, of the series Clavicornia. It is characterized by serrate 11-jointed antennae inserted on the sides of the deflexed and posteriorly narrowed head, slender legs with contiguous coxae (except in Atractodes), prominent ungrooved hind coxae, prominent conical front coxae without trochanter, and the first ventral segment not elongated. Also Limezyloidea.

lymitert, lymitourt, n. Obsolete forms of limiter.

Lymnaea, Lymnea, n. See Limnaea.

lymnite, n. See limnite, 1.

lymno-. For words beginning thus, see Limno-.
lymph (limf), n. [= F. lymphe = Pg. lympa = Sp. It. linfa, < L. lymphā, clear water, a fountain (NL. lymph), also personified, Lympa, a rural deity; a poet. word (so spelled appar. as associated, erroneously, with lympa, < Gr. λύπη, a nymph, esp. a water-nymph, poet. also water, OL. lymphā, a water-nymph), OL. Lympa, orig. lympa* (f) = Ocean dium pa, connected with limpidus, clear, limpid: see limpid.] 1. Pure, clear water, or any fluid similarly transparent. [Poetical.]

A fountain bubbled up, whose lymph serene Nothing of earthy mixture might disdain. Trench.

2. In physiol., a fluid in animal bodies, contained in certain vessels called lymphatics. Lymph is, like the blood, an alkaline fluid, consisting of a plasma and corpuscles, and coagulates by the formation of fibrin. The lymph differs from the blood in its corpuscles being of the colorless kind, and in the very small proportion of its solid constituents, which amount to only about 5 per cent. of its weight. Lymph may, in fact, be regarded as blood minus its red corpuscles and diluted with water so as to be somewhat less dense than the serum of blood, which contains about 8 per cent. of solid matter.—Humanised lymph, vaccine lymph taken from a human being: opposed to bovine lymph, its original source.—Vaccine lymph, the matter collected in a cowpox vesicle. When transferred either from the cow or a person having the disease from being vaccinated, it produces the same disease in others, and gives comparative immunity from smallpox.

lymphad (lim'fad), n. [Prob. a corruption of Gael. limfhada, a galley, < long, a ship, + fada, long.] A galley with one mast and usually a yard upon it. Representations of such a galley, with three or more oars fixed in place for rowing, are common in Scotch heraldry. [Scotcl.]

"Our loch he'er saw the Cammill lymphade," said the bigger Highlander. . . . "She doesna value a 'awmill mair as a Cowan."
Scott, Rob Roy, xxix.

lymphadenitis (lim-fad-e-ni'tis), a. [NL., < lymphā, lymph, + Gr. aden, a gland, + -itis.] Inflammation of a lymphatic gland.

lymphadenoid (lim-fad'e-noid), a. [NL. lymphā, lymph, + Gr. aden, a gland, + idos, form.] Resembling or pertaining to a lymphatic gland: as, lymphadenoid tissue.

lymphadenoma (lim-fad-e-nō'mā), n.; pl. lymphadenomata (-mā-tā). [NL., < lymphā, lymph, + Gr. aden, a gland, + -oma.] 1. A hyperplastic lymphatic gland.—2. Hodgkin's disease; pseudo-leucemia.—3. Lymphosarcoma.

lymphadenomatous (lim-fad-e-nōm'a-tus), a. [NL. lymphā, lymph, + Gr. aden, a gland +

-oma (cf. adenoma); as lymphadenoma (t) + -ous.] Of, pertaining to, or characterized by lymphadenoma.

Lymphadenomatous glands may be hard, and scrofulous ones soft, but the converse is usually found.

Lancet, No. 3448, p. 633.

lymphaduct (lim'fē-duk't), n. [NL. lymphā, gen. of lymphā, lymph, + L. ductus, conveyance, pipe, canal: see duct, and cf. aqueduct.] A lymphatic vessel or duct. Also lymphoduct.

lymphæmia (lim-fē'mi-ā), n. [NL., < lymphā, lymph, + Gr. aima, blood.] In pathol., lymphatic leucæmia.

lymphangitis (lim-fan-jē-f'i'tis), n. Same as lymphangitis.

lymphangiectasis (lim-fan-jī-ek'fā-sis), n. [NL., < lymphā, lymph, + Gr. angion, a vessel, + ectasis, extension, dilatation.] Dilatation of the lymphatic vessels. Also lymphangioectasia.

lymphangiectatic (lim-fan'jī-ek-tat'ik), a. [NL. < lymphangioectasis (-at) + -ic.] Pertaining to lymphangiectasis.

lymphangioitis (lim-fan'jī-ō-f'i'tis), n. Same as lymphangitis.

lymphangioma (lim-fan-jī-ō'mā), n.; pl. lymphangiomata (-mā-tā). [NL., < lymphā, lymph, + Gr. angion, a vessel, + -oma.] A tumor composed of lymphatic vessels.

lymphangitis (lim-fan-jī'tis), n. [NL., < lymphā, lymph, + Gr. angion, a vessel, + -itis.] Inflammation of the lymphatic vessels.

lymphate (lim'fat), a. [NL. lymphatus, pp. of lymphare, drive out of one's senses, distract with fear, craze, < lymphā, water: see lymph.] The connection is uncertain; prob. with ref. to water-nymphs.] Frightened into madness; raving.

lymphated (lim'fā-ted), a. [NL. < lymphate + -ed.] Same as lymphate.

lymphatic¹ (lim-fat'ik), a. and n. [= F. lymphatique = Sp. linfático = Pg. linfático = It. linfatico, < NL. lymphaticus, pertaining to lymph, < lymphā, lymph: see lymph.] I. a. 1. Containing, conveying, or pertaining in any way to lymph or chyle: as, a lymphatic vessel; a lymphatic gland.

—2. Dull; sluggish; slow in thought or action, as if from an excess of lymph in the body.—Lymphatic cachexy, Hodgkin's disease.—Lymphatic cavity. Same as lymph-sinus.—Lymphatic ganglion. Same as lymphatic gland.—Lymphatic gland, one of the glandular bodies, formed mainly of lymphoid tissue, occurring in the course of the lymphatic ducts. They have no proper ducts conveying away a secretion, and their function is probably hematopoietic.

Lymphatics of Front of Right Arm. f, g, h, three lymphatic glands, or ganglia, as they are sometimes called.

Lymphatic heart. Same as lymph-heart.—Lymphatic temperament. See temperament.—Lymphatic vessel. See II.

II. n. A vessel which conveys lymph. The lymphatics are small transparent vessels arising in the various tissues, provided with valves like the veins, and running toward the heart. They are occasionally interrupted by lymphatic glands, and convey the leakage from the blood-vascular system and the waste of the tissues back into the venous system. The place of discharge for the drainage of the right side of the head, right arm, and adjacent regions of the trunk is at the junction of the right subclavian and right jugular veins, while the lymph from all the rest of the body through the thoracic duct pours into the blood at the corresponding place on the left side. That part of the lymphatic system which runs from the intestine takes up some of the products of digestion, and the vessels are here called lacteals.

lymphatic², a. and n. [NL. lymphaticus, distracted, frenzied, < lymphatus, pp. of lymphare, distracted: see lymphate.] I. a. Making or being distracted or frantic.

Horace either is or feigns himself lymphatic, and shows what an effect the vision of the Nymphs and Bacchus had on him.
Shaftesbury, Enthusiasm, § 6.

A Lymphatic Vessel laid open, showing valves, magnified.

Lymphatics of Leg. f, g, lymphatic glands; L, lymphatic vessels.

II. n. A mad enthusiast; a lunatic.

All nations have their lymphatics of some kind or another. Shaftebury, Enthusiasm, § 6.

lymph-cell (limf'sol), n. A leucocyte occurring in lymph; a lymph-corpuscle.

lymph-channel (limf'chan'el), n. Any conduit for lymph.—Lymph-channel of a lymphatic gland, the space left between the lymphoid tissue and the capsule and trabeculae, which is traversed by retiform connective tissue, and in which the lymph circulates. Also called lymph-sinus.

lymph-corpuscle (limf'kôr'pus-l), n. One of the corpuscles of lymph; a lymph-cell.

lymph-heart (limf'härt), n. A lymphatic vessel which is rhythmically contractile. Such vessels are generally enlarged near their opening into veins, where they acquire a muscular investment which enables them to pulsate. They are chiefly developed in the lower vertebrates. Also called lymphatic heart.

lymphoduct (limf'tô-duk't), n. [NL. lymphā, lymph, + L. ductus, a conveyance: see lymphaduct.] Same as lymphaduct.

lymphography (lim-fog'grā-fī), n. [NL. lymphā, lymph, + Gr. -γραφία, < γράφω, write.] A description of the lymphatic vessels, their origin and uses.

lymphoid (lim'foid), a. [< lymph + -oid.] 1. Having the character or nature of lymph; resembling lymph; lacteal.—2. Of or pertaining to lymph.—3. Of the nature of lymphoid tissue.—Lymphoid cells, rounded cells found in lymphoid tissue and resembling white blood-corpuscles, except that the nucleus is larger in comparison with the protoplasm.—Lymphoid cords, the rounded cords of lymphoid tissue presenting themselves in the medullary portions of lymphatic glands.—Lymphoid nodules, any nodules of lymphoid tissue, such as are found, for example, in many mucous membranes.—Lymphoid tissue, a tissue formed of branching cells united into a network, the interstices of which are filled with lymphoid cells. Such tissue forms the greater part of the lymphatic glands and such allied structures as the solitary and agminate glands of the intestine; it envelops the smaller arteries of the spleen, and forms the Malpighian corpuscles; there are masses of it in the tonsils; it forms the thymus in the infant; it occurs extensively in a diffuse form throughout the mucous membrane of the alimentary canal; and it presents itself in serous membranes, on the bronchial mucous membrane, and elsewhere.

lymphoidal (lim-foi'dal), a. [< lymphoid + -al.] Same as lymphoid.

lymphoma (lim-fô'mā), n.; pl. lymphomata (-mā-tā). [NL. < lymphā, lymph, + -oma.] A hyperplastic mass of lymphoid tissue. The name has been applied also to lymphosarcoma, and, as general lymphoma, to Hodgkin's disease.

lymphomatous (lim-fom'ā-tus), a. [< lymphoma(-t) + -ous.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a lymphoma.

lymphosarcoma (lim'fô-sār-kô'mā), n.; pl. lymphosarcomata (-mā-tā). [NL. < lymphā, lymph, + sarcoma, q. v.] A sarcoma which in the combination of retiform cells with lymphoid cells presents the structure of a lymphatic gland.

lymphotomy (lim-fot'ô-mī), n. [< lymph(atic) + Gr. τομή, a cutting.] Dissection of the lymphatics.

lymph-sac (limf'sak), n. Same as lymph-sinus.

lymph-sinus (limf'ei'nus), n. A large or dilated lymphatic vessel. Also called lymph-sac and lymphatic cavity.

lymph-space (limf'espās), n. Any cavity in the tissues containing lymph.

lymph-vessel (limf'ves'el), n. Any lymphatic vessel.

lymph (lim'fi), a. [< lymph + -y.] Containing or like lymph.

lympwtwig (limp'twig), n. A dialectal corruption of lapwing. C. Swainson. [Prov. Eng. (Exmoor).]

lynt, n. An obsolete spelling of *line*¹, *lin*².

lynaget, n. An obsolete variant of lineage.

lynce (lins), n. [< OF. lynce, < L. lynx, lynx: see lynx.] A lynx.

The sharp-eyed lynce.

Greene, Maiden's Dream (Prudence). (Davies.)

lyncean (lin-sē'an), a. [< Gr. λυγκεος, pertaining to a lynx, < λυγέ (λυγκ-), a lynx: see lynx.] 1. Pertaining to the lynx.—2. Lynx-eyed; sharp-sighted.—Lyncean Academy (St. Accademia del Lynce, Academy of the Lynce), lyncean being the plural of L. Lynceus: see lynceus), an association for the promotion of arts and sciences, existing in Rome from 1609 to about 1682. It has since been revived, and is now called the Reale Accademia dei Lynce.

lynceus, a. [< Gr. λυγκεος, sharp-sighted, < λυγέ (λυγκ-), lynx: see lynx.] Sharp-sighted; lynx-eyed.

But yet, in the end, their secret drifts are laid open, and lyncean eyes, that see through stone walls, have made a passage into the close coverings of their hypocrisies. Neske, Pierce Penitence (1862). (Hallwell.)

Lynceus (lin-sē'us), n. [NL., also Lynceus: see lynceus.] A name sometimes given to the constellation Lynx.

lynch¹, n. See *linch*¹.

lynch² (linch), v. t. [< lynch(-law).] To punish by lynch-law; punish summarily, for a crime or public offense of any kind, without authority of law; specifically, to punish with death in this manner. See lynch-law.

The prison was burst open by the mob, and George was lynched, as he deserved. Emerson, English Traits, ix.

lynchet, n. See linchet.

lynch-law (linch'lā), n. [Formerly also Lynch's law; orig. the kind of law administered by Charles Lynch (1736-96), a Virginia planter (afterward a colonel in the army of Gen. Greene), who in the early part of the Revolution, in conjunction with his neighbors, Robert Adams and Thomas Calloway, undertook to protect society and support the revolutionary government in the region where he lived, on the Staunton river, by punishing with stripes or banishment such lawless or disaffected persons as were accused. According to tradition, Tories brought before this informal court were often hung up by their thumbs until they cried, "Liberty forever!" but the penalty of death was never inflicted. Charles Lynch was in early life a Quaker. The origin of the term is often erroneously ascribed to his brother, John Lynch, the founder of Lynchburg in Virginia, who remained a Quaker all his life. The notion that the term originated in the action of a mayor of Galway in Ireland, one James Fitzstephen Lynch, who is said to have executed the law upon his own son by hanging him, in 1493, is erroneous.] The administration of summary punishment, especially death, for a crime or public offense, without authority of law. It implies lawless concert or action among a number of members of the community, to supply the want of criminal justice or to anticipate its delays, or to inflict a penalty demanded by public opinion, though in defiance of the laws.

Such is too often the administration of law on the frontier, Lynch's law, as it is technically termed, in which the plaintiff is apt to be witness, jury, judge, and executioner, and the defendant convicted and punished on mere presumption.

Irving, Tour on the Prairies, p. 35, quoted in Bartlett's (Americanisms).

lyncline (lin'sin), a. [< L. lynx (lynce-), lynx, + -incl-.] Resembling a lynx; pertaining to the genus Lynx; lyncean.

lyndt, lyndet. See lind.

lyndent, n. An obsolete form of linden.

lynce, n. An obsolete spelling of *line*¹, *line*².

Lyngbya (ling'bi-ā), n. [NL. (Agardh, 1824), named after Hans Christian Lyngbye (1782-1837), a Danish botanist.] A large genus of algae, typifying Kuetzing's family Lyngbyeae, which is ordinarily placed in the order Nostochineae. Some of the species inhabit fresh running water, others stagnant, and a few salt water. They consist of delicate threads or filaments, each provided with a distinct sheath, which are simple and destitute of heterocysts. The spores are unknown, and propagation takes place by means of hormogones which slide out of the sheaths. There are 23 fresh-water American species, and about a dozen brackish or salt-water species. Sometimes written Lyngbia.

Lyngbyeae (ling'bi-ā-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Kuetzing, 1843), < Lyngbya + -eae.] A family of algae, typified by the genus Lyngbya. The genus Lyngbya is placed by Thuret and Parlow in the suborder Nostochineae (the Nematogenae of Cohn in part); by Wille and Bennett in the order or tribe Ocellulariaceae; and by Cooke in the family Lyngbyeae, which is made of equal rank with the Nostocaceae. Much confusion of terms prevails in the classification of these plants.

lyngwort (ling'wört), n. Same as lungwort.

lynton, n. An obsolete variant of linet.

lyntquhite, n. An obsolete form of linetwhite.

lynx (lingks), n. [Formerly also lynx; < ME. lynx = OF. lynce, F. lynx = Sp. lynce = Pg. lynce, lynce = It. lynce, < L. lynx, < Gr. λυγξ (λυγκ-), a lynx = Lith. luszis = Sw. lo, a lynx, = (with additional formative -s) Dan. los = AS. los = OS. lohs = D. losch = OHG. MHG. luchs, G. luchs, a lynx; prob. so called with ref. to its bright eyes, < Gr. λυγξ in λυγος, a lamp, λυγος, see, etc., L. λυγξ in λυκερ, shine, lux, light, Teut. luh, be light: see *light*¹. For the Teut. forms, cf. the similar forms of fox.] 1. A wild cat with a short tail, pencilled ears, and 28 teeth, belonging to the family Felidae and genus Lynx, such as the caracal, the loup-cervier, and others. There are a number of species, inhabiting Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America. They are of moderate size among Felidae, but considerably larger than any house-cat, with a short body, a very short tail, large and long limbs, usually bearded cheeks and tufted ears, and spotted, marbled, or clouded coloration. Some have been known from time immemorial, and famed for their supposed sharp-sightedness, which probably is no greater than that of other cats. The common European lynx is L. lynx; L. cervaria, L. pardina, L. isabellina, etc., are other Old World species or varieties. The Persian lynx is the caracal, L. caracal. (See cat under caracal.) The common wildcat of North America is the bay lynx, L. rufus, which runs into several varieties. The Canada lynx, L. canadensis, is a larger, much more robust and shaggy wildcat, resembling the lynx of northern Europe or Siberia; the general complexion is gray or hoary, with clouded or obsolete spotting.

Lynx (Lynx canadensis).

2. [cap.] A genus of Felidae lacking the front upper premolar of the true cats; the lynxes. The dental formula is: 3 Incisors, 1 canine, 2 premolars, and 1 molar in each upper and lower half-jaw—in all, 32 teeth, instead of 30 as in Felis.

3. [cap.] A small northern constellation introduced by Hevelius in 1690, the name being chosen because the sharp-sightedness of a lynx is required to distinguish any of its stars. It is placed between the Great Bear and Auriga, north of the Twins. Its ten brightest stars are of the fifth magnitude.

lynx-eyed (lingks'id), a. Having acute sight.

lyomer (li'ô-mér), n. A fish of the order Lyomeri.

Lyomeri (li-om'ê-ri), n. pl. [NL. pl. of lyomerus: see lyomerous.] An order of ateleocephalous fishes. They have rudimentary branchial arches (none of which are modified as branchiostegal or pharyngeal) situated far behind the skull, deficient especially in nasal and vomerine elements, and articulating with the first vertebra by a haustorial condyle alone; only two cephalic arches, both freely movable, an anterior denticulous one, and a posterior suspensorial one, the latter consisting of hyomandibular and quadrate bones; no opercular elements or maxillary bones; an imperfect scapular arch, limited to a single cartilaginous plate, remote from the skull; and separately ossified but imperfect vertebrae. The order includes a few remarkable deep-sea forms constituting the families Eurypharyngidae and Saccopharyngidae.

lyomerous (li-om'ê-rus), a. [< NL. lyomerus, < Gr. λυμερ, loose, + μερος, part.] Loose-jointed; loosely put together; specifically, pertaining to the Lyomeri, or having their characters.

lyon, n. An obsolete spelling of lion.—Lyon court, a court in Scotland which has jurisdiction in questions regarding coat-armour and precedence. It is presided over by the Lyon king-at-arms, who is virtually supreme in all matters of heraldry in Scotland. The name is derived from the lion on the royal shield.—Lyon dollar. See dollar.—Lyon king-at-arms. See king-at-arms.

Lyonetia (li-ô-net'i-ā), n. [NL., named after P. Lyonet (1707-89), a Dutch naturalist.] The typical genus of Lyonetidae. L. clerckella is an example. Hübner, 1816.

Lyonetidae (li-ô-net'i-dē), n. pl. [NL. (Staudinger, 1871), < Lyonetia + -idae.] A family of microlepidopterous insects of the tineid series, having erect hair on the hinder part of the head, no ocelli or labial palpi, and the antennae long and thin with broadened basal joint. They fly at evening, and rest with the wings roof-shaped, the body elevated in front, and the antennae laid back. The larvae have 16 feet, and are either leaf-miners or live between leaves spun together. The family contains about half a dozen genera, of which Comiotoma and Eucolletia are the most prominent.

lyonnaise (li-ô-nā-z'), a. [F. fem. of Lyonnais: see Lyonnese.] Lyonnese: specifically applied in cookery to a style of serving potatoes, etc., with a sauce of butter, parsley, and sometimes onions.

Lyonnese (li-ô-nēs' or -nēs'), a. and n. [< F. Lyonnais; < Lyon, Lyons.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to the city of Lyons in France, or its inhabitants.

II. n. A native of Lyons.

Lyons blue. See blue.

Lyonomata (li-ô-pô'mā-tā), n. pl. [NL., < Gr. λυον, loose, + πῶμα, lid, cover.] An order of Brachiopoda, one of two into which the class is usually divided, the other being Arthropomata. Formerly called Inarticulata.

lyopomatous (li-ô-pom'ā-tus), a. [As Lyopomata + -ous.] Hingeless, as the valves of a brachiopod; eocardinal or inarticulate; specifically, pertaining to or having the characters of the Lyopomata.

Lyperanthus (li-pē-ran'thus), n. [NL. (R. Brown, 1810), so called in allusion to the somber appearance of the flowers; < Gr. λυπρός, painful, + άνθος, a flower.] An Australian genus of orchidaceous plants of the tribe Neottieae and the subtribe Diurideae, characterized by the posterior sepal being broad and concave and the lateral ones narrow, the claw of the lip broad, and the blade ovate or lanceolate, recurved, and papillose, while the column is quite long and is not winged. Four or six species are known, terrestrial herbs, usually with a short rhizome. The stem in the normal species bears a number of leaves, and the flowers are few and medium-sized, growing in a bracted raceme. The name flower-of-sadness is given to plants of this genus, especially to the species L. nigricans, which is common in cultivation.

Lyperia (li-pé-ri-á), n. [NL. (Bentham, 1835), so called in allusion to the dull color of the flowers, and the fact that they are closed and scentless during the day, and expanded and fragrant at night; < Gr. λυπρός, painful, < λύπη, pain.] A genus of scrophulariaceous plants of the tribe Manuleae, characterized by a five-parted calyx, a corolla-tube which is usually slender at the apex and gibbous or incurved at the base, and four included stamens. They are shrubs or woody herbs, with the lower leaves opposite and the upper alternate, often clustered in the axils. The flowers are axillary or in terminal spikes or racemes; when fresh, they are usually yellow or purple, but turn black in drying. There are about 80 species, indigenous to Africa and the Canary Islands. The flowers of L. crocea, from the Cape of Good Hope, afford a fine orange dye and have a medicinal use. They are known by the name of African saffron.

Lyra (lí-rá), n. [NL., < L. lyra, < Gr. λύρα, a lyre, also a constellation so called: see lyre.] 1. An ancient northern constellation, representing the lyre of Hermes or of Orpheus. Also called the Harp. The brightest star of this constellation is Vega (a Lyra). It is the seventh in order of brightness in the heavens and the third brightest in the northern hemisphere, being half a magnitude brighter than a standard star of the first magnitude. It forms, with two small stars near it, an equilateral triangle, one of the most striking configurations of the summer sky. Vega, Arcturus, and Polaris form a large triangle, nearly right-angled at Vega.

The Constellation Lyra.

2. [l. c.; pl. lyrae (-ræ).] In anat., a tract of the brain beneath the corpus callosum, on the under surface and between the divergent posterior pillars of the fornix. There the fibers are so arranged as to present certain longitudinal and transverse lines, fancifully likened to the strings of a lyre. The lyra is merely the appearance or formation of a surface, not a distinct part of the fornix. It is also known as the pacchierum or corpus pacchierum.

3. In zool.: (a) A genus of fishes. Willoughby, 1686. (b) A genus of brachiopods. Cumberland, 1816.—4. [l. c.] See lyra.
lyraid (lí-rá-id), n. [< Lyra + -id.] One of the meteors sometimes observed about April 20th: so named because they appear to radiate from the constellation Lyra.

lyrate (lí-rát), a. [< NL. lyratus, < L. lyra, a lyre: see lyre.] Resembling a lyre; having the form or curves of a lyre; lyre-shaped. In ornith., applied to the tail of the lyre-bird, Menura superba, and of the blackcock, Tetrao or Lyrurus tetrix: in entom., to insects or parts which approach the form of a lyre or lyrate leaf.

—Lyrate leaf, a leaf of a plant divided transversely into several lobes, which increase in size toward a large terminal one.

lyrated (lí-rá-ted), a. Same as lyrate.

lyrately (lí-rát-li), adv. In the form of a lyre; in a lyrate manner. G. Bentham, Notes on Compositae.

lyra-way (lí-rá-wá), n. The kind of tablature in which lute-music was customarily written. See tablature.

lyrawise (lí-rá-wíz), adv. In the manner customary for lute-music: applied to certain kinds of tablature.

lyre (lí-r), n. [< F. lyre = Sp. It. lira = Pg. lyra, < L. lyra, < Gr. λύρα, a lyre, lute, also lyric poetry and music, the constellation Lyra, a sea-fish.] 1. In music: (a) A stringed instrument of Egyptian origin, which became the national instrument of ancient Greece. It belonged essentially to the harp family. It resembled closely the cith-ara, which was derived from Asia, and, like it, consisted of a hollow body, sometimes made of a tortoise-shell, from which two branching horns projected upward, carrying a cross-piece or yoke; the strings, whose number varied from three to ten or more, but was most characteristically seven, were stretched between the yoke and the body, a bridge being provided on the latter for their attachment. The instrument, held by the left arm, sometimes resting on the knee, was played with a plectrum in the right hand, and also by the fingers of the left hand. The tuning of the strings was probably various, though doubtless tetrachordal from very early times. The strings of an eight-stringed lyre were named hypate, the 'highest' string (probably as the lyre was usually held), which was the longest and gave the lowest sound; parhypate, the next string to hypate; lichanos, the forefinger-string; mesé, the middle string; paramesé, the next string to mesé; trite, the third string (from the bottom); paranete, the next string to nete; and nete, the 'last' or 'lowest' string, which was the shortest and gave the highest sound. From these terms came most of the names of tones in the various Greek tonal systems. (See tetrachord.) The lyre was the instrumental music used by the Greeks for accompanying singing and recitation; hence the terms lyric and lyrical. It is doubtful whether it was used unaccompanied by the voice.

Ancient Greek lyre.—From a cup painted by Durlis. (Berlin Museum.)

To me in vain the bold Mæonian lyre
Awakes the numbers fraught with living fire.
Falconer, Shipwreck, III.

(b) An element in the name of some instruments of the viol class, as the arm-lyre or lira da braccio, and the knee-lyre or lira da gamba. See lira. (c) A kind of metallic harmonies, mounted on a lyre-shaped frame, occasionally used in military music. (d) A kind of rebeck used by the modern Greeks. See rebec.—2. [cap.] A constellation. See Lyra, 1.—3. A verse of the kind commonly used in lyric poetry.—4. The Manx shearwater, Puffinus anglorum. [Orkney and Shetland].—5. A grade of isinglass: a trade-name.—Eolian lyre. See Eolian.—Greek lyre. See def. 1 (a).

lyre², n. An obsolete form of leer.

lyre³, n. See lyre².

lyre-bat (lí-r'bat), n. A kind of bat, Megaderma lyra.

lyre-bird (lí-r'berd), n. An Australian passerine bird of the family Menuridae and genus Menura. There are two species, M. superba and M. alberti, in both of which the male has the beautiful and extraordinary lyrate tail shown in the figure. The tail is raised and displayed when the bird is courting, after the manner of the peacock and the turkey. The plumage is somber, and the bird would not be particularly noticeable were it not for the unique structure of the tail. The body is about as large as that of the domestic hen, and the air of the bird is gallinaceous, though it is a member of the order Passeres. It lives in the scrub, is shy and solitary, has its lurking-places like grouse, nests on the ground, and is said to lay but one egg. Also called lyrated and lyre-pheasant.

Lyre-bird (Menura superba).

lyreman (lí-r'man), n.; pl. lyremen (-men). A cicada or harvest-fly; a homopterous insect of the family Cicadidae, such as Cicada tibicen.

lyre-pheasant (lí-r'fex'ant), n. The lyre-bird.

lyretail (lí-r'tál), n. The lyre-bird.

lyre-tailed (lí-r'táld), a. Having a lyrate tail; as, the lyre-tailed nightjar, Hydropsalis forcipata.

lyre-turtle (lí-r'tér'tl), n. The leatherback or trunk-turtle, Dermochelys coriaceous. See cut under leatherback.

lyric (lí-r'ik), a. and n. [= F. lyrique = Sp. lírico = Pg. lyrico = It. lírico, < L. lyricus, < Gr. λύρικος, lyric, of or for a lyre, as a noun a lyric poet (L. neut. lyricum, a lyric poem), < λύρα, a lyre: see lyre.] 1. Pertaining or adapted to the lyre or harp; fit to be sung to an accompaniment; hence, pertaining to or characteristic of song; suggestive of music or song.

Eolian charms and Dorian lyric odes.
Milton, P. E., iv. 257.

2. Writing for or as if for the lyre, or with musical effect; composing songs, or poems of a song-like character: as, a lyric poet.—Lyric poetry, among the ancients, poetry sung to the lyre; in modern usage, poetry composed for musical recitation, or distinctively that class of poetry which has reference to and delineates the poet's own thoughts and feelings, as opposed to epic or dramatic poetry, which details external circumstances and events.—Lyric stage, the opera; operatic representations collectively.

II. n. 1. A composer of lyric poems.

The greatest conqueror in this nation, after the manner of the old Grecian lyricks, did not only compose the words of his divine odes, but set them to music himself.

Addison.

2. A lyric composition or poem.—3. A verse of the kind commonly used in lyric poetry.

lyric (lí-r'ik), v. t. [< lyric, n.] To sing in a lyrical way. Davies.

Parson Punch makes a very good shift still, and lyrics over his part in an anthem very handsomely.
Tom Brown, Works, II. 249. (Davies.)

lyrical (lí-r'ikal), a. [< lyric + -al.] Same as lyric.

Lyrical emotion of every kind . . . requires the Saxon element of our language.
De Quincey.

lyrichord (lí-r'ikórd), n. [< L. lyra, a lyre, + chorda, a string: see chord, cord.] An upright form of harpsichord.

lyricism (lí-r'isizm), n. [< lyric + -ism.] 1. A lyrical composition.

They must have our lyricisms at their fingers' ends.
Gray.

2. A lyrical utterance or mode of expression. [Rare.]

lyricist (lí-r'isist), n. [< lyric + -ist.] A lyric poet; one versed in lyrical composition. [Rare.]

lyrie (lí-ri), n. The armed bullhead or pogge, Agonus cataphractus.

lyrifer (lí-r'í-fer), n. [< NL. lyrifer: see lyriferous.] A vertebrate of the superclass Lyrifera.

Lyrifera (lí-rif'í-er-á), n. pl. [NL., neut. pl. of lyrifer: see lyriferous.] A superclass of skulled vertebrates distinguished by the development of a scapular arch in the form of a lyrate apparatus curved forward. It includes the classes Pisces proper and Selachii, or typical teleostomous fishes and selachians.

lyriferous (lí-rif'í-er-us), a. [< NL. lyrifer, < L. lyra, a lyre, + ferre = E. bear.] Having a lyrate scapular arch; of or having the characteristics of the Lyrifera.

lyriform (lí-r'í-fórm), a. [< L. lyra, a lyre, + forma, form.] Lyrate; lyre-shaped.

The tail is . . . lyriform. A. Newton.

lyrism (lí-r'izm), n. [< Gr. λύρισμός, playing on the lyre, < λύριον, play on the lyre: see lyrist.] The art or act of playing the lyre; hence, musical performance generally. [Rare.]

The lyrism, which had at first only manifested itself by David's sotto voce performance of "My love's a rose without a thorn," had gradually assumed a rather deafening and complex character. George Eliot, Adam Bede, liii.

lyrist (lí-r'ist), n. [< F. lyriste, < L. lyristes, < Gr. λύριστής, a lyrist, λύριον, play on the lyre, < λύρα, a lyre: see lyre.] A performer on the lyre; a composer, singer, or reciter of lyrics.

From her wilds Ierne sent
The sweetest lyrist of her saddest wrong.
Shelley, Adonais, st. 20.

Lyrurus (lí-r'ús), n. [NL., < Gr. λύρα, a lyre, + οπίς, a tail.] A genus of Tetraoidea, including the blackcock or black grouse, Lyrurus tetrix, in the male of which the tail is lyrate; the lyre-tailed grouse. Swainson, 1831.

lysigenetic (lí-s'i-jé-net'ik), a. [< lysigenous, after genetic.] Same as lysigenous.

In the outer portion of this [the tissue of the squam-tendrils], the vascular bundles already referred to arise, while the inner portion remains as a pith region, and the shrinks away from the center, developing a lysigenetic cavity.
Amer. Jour. Sci., 3d ser., XXXI. 2.

Forms of Lyra.

lyigenous (li-sij'e-nus), a. [Irreg. < Gr. λύειν, a setting free, + -γενής, born, produced: see -gen and -genous.] In bot., produced by the absorption or destruction of contiguous cells: applied to certain cavities or intercellular spaces in plants.

Lysalloma (li-si-lō'mā), n. [NL. (Bentham, 1844), prob. so named in allusion to the inner portion of the pod, which breaks away from the thickened margin; < Gr. λύειν (sigmatic stem λυσι-), loose, + λόμα, a border.] A genus of leguminous plants of the suborder Mimoseae and the tribe Ingeae, characterized by bipinnate leaves, usually a small number of stamens, and the valves of the flat, straight pod breaking away from the persistent sutures. They are trees or shrubs from tropical America and the Antilles, much resembling the acacias of the same region, with small leaflets and numerous small flowers growing in round heads or cylindrical spikes. There are about 10 species, of which the most important economically is L. Sabiceu of Cuba, furnishing an extremely hard and durable timber known as sabiceu-wood, or horse-shoe mahogany. It is used in ship-building and for various structural purposes; also as a substitute for boxwood in making shuttles. L. latifolia, called wild tamarind, extends into Florida, and its wood is locally useful in building boats and ships.

Lysimachia (li-si-mā'ki-ā), n. [NL. < L. lysimachia, < Gr. Λυσιμάχιος, a medicinal herb; latter Λυσιμάχος or Λυσιμάχος βοτάνη, regarded as named from Λυσίμαχος, Lysimachus, King of Thrace, but appar. earlier regarded (as the E. translation loosestrife, and the statement of Pliny that the plant has a soothing effect upon oxen that will not draw in the same yoke, show) as directly (as the proper name indeed is) < Gr. λύειν (sigmatic stem λυσι-), loose, + μάχη, strife.] A large genus of dicotyledonous gamopetalous plants, belonging to the natural order Primulaceae, the primrose family, and to the tribe Lysimachieae, characterized by a capsule which opens longitudinally, a 5- or 6-parted corolla which is longer than the calyx, and stamens affixed to the base of the corolla. They are erect or creeping herbs, with entire leaves, which are opposite, alternate, or whorled, and yellow, white, or rose-colored flowers, generally solitary in the axils or in racemes. About 65 species are known, natives of the temperate and subtropical regions of the northern hemisphere, tropical and southern Africa, Australia, and South America. (See loosestrife.) The European L. nemorosum is the yellow pimpernel. L. Nummularia, the moneywort, also called creeping-jenny, herb-tuopence, etc., is a trailing vine with roundish leaves and bright-yellow flowers, common in Europe, and often planted in baskets, rockwork, etc., in America; L. quadrifolia, sometimes called ornemort, is a delicate and handsome American species. Tournefort, 1700.

Lysimachies (lis'i-mā-ki'ā-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Endlicher, 1836), < Lysimachia + -ae.] A tribe of plants of the order Primulaceae, the primrose family, of which Lysimachia is the type, characterized by the lobes of the regular corolla being convolute in estivation, the stamens inserted on the petals, a superior ovary, and semi-anatropous ovules. The tribe embraces 9 genera and about 110 species, principally natives of temperate and subtropical regions.

lysismachus (li-sim'ā-kus), n. [See Lysimachia.] Loosestrife.

Yellow lysismachus, to give sweet rest
To the faint shepherd, killing, where it comes,
All busy gnats, and every fly that hums.
Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, II. 2.

lysimeter (li-sim'e-tēr), n. [< Gr. λύειν, a dissolving, + μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the natural percolation of rain through a given depth of soil.

Lysippan (li-sip'an), a. [< L. Lysippus, < Gr. Λύσιππος, < λύειν (λυσι-), loose, + ἵππος, a horse.] Of or pertaining to the ancient Greek sculptor Lysippus, of Sicyon, who flourished between 372 and 316 B. C., or to the school of art founded by him. The works of this school are characterized by abandonment of the dignified repose of earlier sculptures, and by the portrayal of action and muscular strain and power and the personal element, or portraiture, as distinguished from the ideal. (See pathos.) Lysippus made the proportions of his statues more slender than those of his predecessors' works, the heads being notably smaller. His figure called the Apoxyomenos, or athlete using the stegil, of which a good copy is preserved in the Vatican, is identified as his celebrated canon, or exemplar of the perfect human figure, and is to be paralleled with the widely different proportions of the Doryphorus, the canon of Polykleitos. The followers of Lysippus exaggerated the faults of his tendency, and leaned toward the extraordinary and pretentious. See Hellenistic, and compare doryphorus.

Lysippan (li-sip'i-an), a. Same as Lysippan.

Lysippic (li-sip'ik), a. Same as Lysippan.

lysis (li'sis), n. [L. < Gr. λύειν, a loosening, < λυσι-, loose: see loose.] 1. In med., the gradual recession of a disease, as distinguished from crisis, in which the change for the better is more abrupt.—2. In arch., a plinth or step above the cornice of the podium of some Roman temples. When present in a columnar edifice, it constitutes the stylobate proper.

Lysodactylus (li-sō-dak'ti-lē), n. pl. [NL., prop. Lysodactylus, < Gr. λύειν (λυσι-), loose, + δάκτυλος, finger, toe.] In Sundevall's classification of birds, a superfamily of scutellipantlar Passerines, represented by the family of tyrant flycatchers or Tyrannidae: a division of the Eza-spideae, as distinguished from those which are called Syndactylae.

Lysopteri (li-sop'te-ri), n. pl. [< Gr. λύειν (λυσι-), loose, + πτερόν, wing.] An order of fishes, containing the platysomids and paleoniscids, characterized as actinopteron fishes with the median fin-rays not joined to the interhemal and interneural bones and not coinciding with them in number, and with no suboperculum. Heterocerat is a synonym. E. D. Cope, Amer. Nat., XIV. 430.

lysopterous (li-sop'te-rus), a. Pertaining to the Lysopteri, or having their characters.

lyssa (li'ssā), n. [NL. < Gr. λύσσα, Attic λύττα, raving, frenzy, madness (of persons and dogs).] Canine madness; rabies; hydrophobia.

Lyssacina (lis-ā-si'nā), n. pl. [NL.] A suborder of hexactinellid silicious sponges with isolated or irregularly cemented spicules: contrasted with Dictyonina. Also Lyssakina.

lyssacine (lis'ā-sin), a. Having isolated spicules, as a sponge; specifically, of or pertaining to the Lyssacina. Also lyssakine.

lysseth, v. An uncertain word, occurring in the following passage. If the form lysseth is correct, it is probably a variant of lysseth, from lyssa, in a sense like 'foul'; otherwise lysseth may be a scribal error for lysseth, 'laugheth.'

She lysseth and scorneth the wepynges of hem the which she hath makyd wepe with hir fre will.
Chaucer, Boethius, II. meter 1.

lyssophobia (lis-ō-fō'bi-ā), n. [NL. < Gr. λύσσα, canine madness, + φόβος, fear.] A nervous state produced by morbid dread of having contracted rabies.

lysti. An obsolete form of lyst, lyst, etc.

Lystra (li'strā), n. [NL. (Fabricius, 1783), < L. Lystra, < Gr. λύστρα, a city in Lycania.] A genus of lantern-flies of the family Pulgoridae,

The Lysippan Canon.—The Apoxyomenos, or Athlete using the Stigil. (Vatican Museum.)

containing about 15 beautiful and highly colored tropical species, as the South American L. lanata, the woolly lantern-fly, so called because it secretes long strings of a waxy substance which looks like wool.

lytel, a. and n. See lytle.

lytel, a. and adv. An obsolete form of lytle.

lyterian (li-tē'ri-an), a. [< Gr. λύτρηος, loosing, delivering, < λύτρη, a deliverer, < λύειν, loose: see lysis.] In med., terminating a disease; indicating the solution of a disease.

lyth, n. See lythe.

lythe, a. and v. An obsolete form of lytle.

lythe (li'th), n. [Also lath, lath; origin obscure.] The coalfish. [Scotch and North. Eng.]

The small boat was cleverly run alongside the jetty, and Miss Sheila, with a heavy string of lythe in her right hand, stepped, laughing and blushing, onto the quay.
W. Black, Princess of Thule, II.

lyther, a. See lyther.

Lythraceae (li-th-rā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1846), < Lythrum + -aceae.] A synonym of Lythriaceae, still employed by some botanists.

lythraceous (li-th-rā'shi-us), a. [NL. Lythrum + -aceus.] Pertaining to the Lythriaceae (Lythraceae), or having their characters.

lythrad (li'th-rad), n. Any plant of the loosestrife family, Lythriaceae.

Lythraeae (li-th-rā-ri'ē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Jussieu, 1823), < Lythrum + -arieae.] The loosestrife family, an order of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants belonging to the cohort Myrtales. It is characterized by valvate calyx-lobes, petals usually wrinkled, and an ovary which is generally free, with from two to an indefinite number of cells, the latter with numerous ovules. They are herbs, shrubs, or trees, with entire leaves, opposite on the stem or rarely alternate. The order embraces 2 tribes, Ammannieae and Lythraeae, about 30 genera and 865 species, the majority of which are natives of the tropics, especially in America; a few are found in temperate regions or dispersed throughout the world. Important genera are Cuphea, Lagerstrœmia, and Lythrum.

Lythrae (li'th-rē-ē), n. pl. [NL. (Lindley, 1846), < Lythrum + -ae.] A tribe of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants of the order Lythraeae, the loosestrife family, consisting of shrubs or trees, rarely herbs, characterized by a herbaceous or coriaceous calyx, which is usually many-ribbed, and flowers generally large and almost always with wrinkled petals. The tribe embraces 27 genera and over 300 species. Most of the important genera of the order belong to this tribe.

Lythrum (li'th-rum), n. [NL. (Linnaeus, 1737), so called in allusion to the purple color of most of the flowers; < Gr. λύθρον, λύθρος, gore.] A genus of dicotyledonous polypetalous plants of the natural order Lythraeae and the tribe Lythraeae. It is characterized by a straight striate calyx having from 8 to 16 teeth, with minute intermediate teeth; from 4 to 8 petals; and a two-celled capsule with longitudinal placentae, both ovary and capsule being wholly included in the tube of the calyx. They are herbs or small shrubs, with entire, generally opposite leaves, and purple or rose-colored, rarely white, flowers, either solitary in the axils of the leaves or in few-flowered cymes. The genus includes about 23 species, found in all parts of the world. It shares with Lysimachia the name of loosestrife, and sometimes with Epilobium the name of willow-herb. The best-known species is L. Salicaria, the purple or spiked loosestrife. See loosestrife.

lytlet, a. and adv. An obsolete form of lytle.

lytta (li'th'), n. [NL. < Gr. λύττα, λύσσα, frenzy, rage, canine madness; also the 'worm' under a dog's tongue, supposed to produce madness: see lyssa.] 1. A long vermiform rod of cartilage or fibrous tissue in the middle line and under surface of the tongue of a carnivore; the glossohyal of a carnivore; the so-called "worm" of a dog's tongue. It is vulgarly supposed to be a parasite, and is often extracted by dog-fanciers. Compare lyssa. 2. [cap.] A Fabrician genus of Coleoptera: same as Cantharis.

lyvert, n. An obsolete form of lyver.

lyverett, n. An obsolete form of lyveret.

lyverey, n. An obsolete form of lyvery.

